
For this is my work and my glory—to bring to pass the immortality and eternal life of man. (Moses 1:39.)

I think that a Mormon elder who expects to pass away his time in the hereafter singing and amusing himself or resting is not worth his salt. God Almighty is ever engaged in the glorious work of bringing to pass the salvation of man.

FAITH IN THE PROMISES OF THE LORD

I have faith that those heroes who sink in death, paying the supreme sacrifice on the field of battle—the faithful young men, trust—ing in God, shall have everything made up to them. They are heirs of the promises; they shall inherit the promises. I do not know in what way God will provide the means by which these splendid men shall reach the celestial kingdom and experience all the promises fulfilled in their lives, but I have firm faith in the Lord, for his words are true; and sometime, somewhere, the power and the glory of God shall rest upon them; for the Creator will finish what he has begun.

The Prophet Joseph told a weeping mother, who had lost her baby in death, that in the resurrection she would have the privilege of rearing that baby up to its full stature, and have more joy in doing that than she could have had in mortality.

An eminent divine, nationally known, said the other day:

But my friends, I could not stand in this radio pulpit, if I did not believe that the good God takes these unfinished lives, with their unfinished work, and somewhere, somehow, in his house of many mansions, gives them the glory of going on. A just and loving Heavenly Father will keep faith with those who keep faith with him.

Thus the glorious light of heaven is spreading. Heaven's morning, with the joy and knowledge of hope and progression beyond the grave, is breaking in upon the lives of men. The notion that in this life only we have hope in Christ, we do not accept, for "if in this life only we have hope in Christ, we are of all men most miserable."

Our grief, by the power of God, the Author and the Finisher of our faith, is lifted from earth to heaven, and the tears are wiped away by a loving God. Glory, majesty, and power be unto Jesus Christ, the resurrection and the life, the Author and the Finisher of our faith, forever and forever. Amen.

ELDER JOSEPH FIELDING SMITH

Of the Council of the Twelve Apostles

As I stand here before you, I seek the guidance of the Spirit of the Lord and your help in what I may say. First of all, I wish to express my appreciation for the timely message that came this morning from President Heber J. Grant. May the Lord continue to bless him; I am likewise grateful for the fine testimonies that we have heard so far, and I hope the powerful words spoken by Elder Mark E. Petersen will sink deeply into our hearts.

COMMANDMENTS GIVEN FOR THE BENEFIT OF THE CHURCH

On the second day of January, in the year 1831, the Lord gave a revelation to the Church and in that revelation commanded them to move from the headquarters then established in New York to the Ohio. He gives the reason for it:

And that ye might escape the power of the enemy and be gathered unto me a righteous people, without spot and blameless—Wherefore, for this cause I gave unto you the commandment that ye should go to the Ohio; and there I will give unto you my law; and there you shall be endowed with power from on high. (Doc. and Cov. 38:31-32.)

In obedience to this commandment the people moved to the Ohio. The law the Lord gave, spoken of here in this promise, is found in Section Forty-two, in large part at least, of the Doctrine and Covenants. In this revelation many things are recorded for our benefit. I am only sorry that we have not always adhered strictly to these commandments. Of course, I cannot mention all of the things recorded in this revelation, for there are many, but I desire to speak of one or two that were given for the benefit of the Church. First of all, let me say that when Adam was driven out of the Garden of Eden, the Lord passed a sentence upon him. Some people have looked upon that sentence as being a dreadful thing. It was not; it was a blessing. I don't know that it can truthfully be considered even as a punishment in disguise. The Lord said to him: "In the sweat of thy face shalt thou eat bread," and all down through the ages the Lord has called upon his people to be diligent, to serve him in faithfulness, to work. And here in verses forty to forty-two in this revelation I read:

And again, thou shalt not be proud in thy heart; let all thy garments be plain, and their beauty the beauty of the work of thine own hands; And let all things be done in cleanliness before me. Thou shalt not be idle; for he that is idle shall not eat the bread nor wear the garments of the laborer. (Doc. and Cov. 42:40-42.)

And to this I wish to speak.

THE SAINTS ADMONISHED TO PRODUCE WHAT THEY NEEDED

In the early days of the Church in these valleys, great stress was placed upon industry by President Brigham Young and the other brethren, and it was necessary because our forefathers came here with nothing. They had to work. They had to be industrious. It was essential that they produce the things they needed, and therefore counsel to that extent and in that direction was given to them constantly that they should be industrious. They were taught not to be proud in their hearts. They came out here where they could worship the Lord their God and keep his commandments. They were told to be humble as well as to be diligent. They were to make their own garments, and they were to be plain. Oh, I wish we could remember that. I am sorry that we have forgotten. And President Brigham Young, Heber C. Kimball, and others of the brethren in those early days taught the people and prevailed upon them to start industries throughout this country, to raise sheep, to gather the wool, to make their own clothes out of that wool, to plant cotton that they might have cotton also to make clothing, to plant flax that they might get linen, to build tanneries that they might tan the hides and make themselves leather, and a thousand other things. We used to have some of these industries here among us, and would still have them if we had been willing to adhere to these counsels that had been given to us in those early days by the authorities of the Church, which we would not do. I used to wear suits that were made at Provo, in the woolen mills. I did that as long as I could get them. The suit I have on now was not made at Provo, nor was it made in Utah—that is the cloth—but the tailor made it here. Last week at a stake conference, I made the statement that I did not believe there was in that building an individual born in this country who knew how to make a suit of clothes. If there was one there, would he please make himself manifest, and nobody made himself manifest. Then I said, "If there's a cobbler in this room, he was not born in this country. If there is a cobbler here, let him stand up." Nobody stood. There was no cobbler. And so we might go on.

Now, the Lord said, "Let all things be done in cleanliness before me." I could spend some time on that, but time will not permit; so I continue, the Lord said, "Thou shalt not be idle for he that is idle shall not eat the bread, nor wear the garments of the laborer." That is good sound sense, isn't it? Why should a man in idleness partake of the industry of the industrious—provided that this man who is idle, is in a physical condition that he can work? I am not at all in sympathy with any kind of movement that tends to destroy manhood by encouraging men to be idle, and I don't care what age that is. It doesn't matter how old he gets; if a man is physically strong and is able to perform services, he should take care of himself; that the Lord expects him to do.

The Lord said in another revelation:

And again, verily I say unto you, that every man who is obliged to provide for his own family, let him provide, and he shall in nowise lose his crown; and let him labor in the Church. Let every man be diligent in all things. And the idler shall not have place in the Church, except he repent and mend his ways. (Doc. and Cov. 75:28, 29.)

So that is the counsel the Lord has given the Church today. And this is not merely to be applied to plowing fields, or to reaping and harvesting and engaging in industry, but it means likewise that a man should be industrious in spiritual things as well as in the temporalities by which he makes his living.

Again, here is another commandment the Lord gave:

And the inhabitants of Zion also shall remember their labors, inasmuch as they are appointed to labor, in all faithfulness; for the idler shall be had in remembrance before the Lord. Now, I, the Lord, am not well pleased with the inhabitants of Zion, for there are idlers among them; and their children are also growing up in wickedness; they also seek not earnestly the riches of eternity, but their eyes are full of greediness. (Doc. and Cov. 68:30, 31.)

If the Lord were speaking to us today, I wonder if he would not put even more emphasis upon this commandment.

And again, the Lord said of his servants who preach the gospel:

... I give unto them a commandment, thus: Thou shalt not idle away thy time, neither shalt thou bury thy talent that it may not be known. (Doc. and Cov. 60:13.)

And that means whatever that talent may be, the man should not bury it. If he is a mechanic, if he is skilled in some other direction, if he has the power and ability to preach the gospel, whatever it is, the Lord expects him to use that talent in His service.

ADVICE FROM LEADERS OF THE CHURCH

Let me present a statement here from President Joseph F. Smith:

There should be no idlers in Zion. Even the poor who have to be assisted should be willing to do all in their power to earn their own living. Not one man or woman should be content to sit down and be fed, clothed, or housed without an exertion on his or her part to compensate for these privileges. All men and women should feel a degree of independence of character that would stimulate them to do something for a living and not be idle; for it is written that the idler shall not eat the bread of the laborer in Zion, and he shall not have place among us. Therefore, it is necessary that we should be industrious, that we should intelligently apply our labor to something that is productive and conducive to the welfare of the human family. (Gospel Doctrine, pp. 235, 236.)

And then, President Brigham Young, out of all the many things that he has said, let me present this:

We want you henceforth to be a self-sustaining people. Hear it, O Israel! hear it, neighbors, friends and enemies, this is what the Lord requires of this people. . . . Ye Latter-day Saints learn to sustain yourselves, produce everything you need to eat, drink or wear; and if you cannot obtain all you wish for today, learn to do without that which you cannot purchase and pay for; and bring your minds into subjection that you must live within your means. . . . Who are deserving of praise? The persons who take care of themselves or the ones who always trust in the great mercies of the Lord to take care of them? It is just as consistent to expect that the Lord will supply us with fruit when we do not plant the trees; or that when we do not plow and sow and are saved the labor of harvesting, we should cry to the Lord to save us from want, as to ask him to save us from the consequences of our own folly, disobedience and waste. . . .

Brethren, learn. You have learned a good deal, it is true, but learn more; learn to sustain yourselves; lay up grain and flour and save it against a day of scarcity. Sisters, do not ask your husbands to sell the last bushel of grain you have to buy something for you out of the stores, but aid your husbands in storing it up against a day of want, and always have a year's or two, provision on hand. (Discourses of Brigham Young, p. 293.)

I hope the time will come when we will not feel restricted and will be able to lay up in store for a year or two in advance. The Lord bless you, I pray, in the name of Jesus Christ. Amen.

ELDER CLIFFORD E. YOUNG

Assistant to the Council of the Twelve Apostles

My brethren, we have just listened to what may be termed the gospel of Jesus Christ in a practical application. We have been told what it means to work and what the Lord expects us to do, and this brings to mind the fact that our forebears who came here learned well those principles and had it not been for the fact that they did work and they did struggle we would not have the commonwealth that we have here, nor would we have the foundation of faith that is a part of this great work. It wasn't in luxury. It wasn't in idleness that was made possible what we have, but it was in poverty and in hard work and in struggle, and these experiences, my brethren, and those who are listening, contributed to other things. They contributed to a richness of faith. Somehow or other the Lord has seen fit, or the human makeup is such, that it is in adversity and sorrow that we grow.

GENERAL McALEXANDER'S VIEW OF WAR

At the close of the first world war there was stationed here at Fort Douglas the thirty-eighth infantry that is credited with having stopped the second battle of the Marne in World War I. The commanding officer who had been a colonel in the infantry, was then General Ulysses G. McAlexander. While stationed here, the general became a friend of both President Ivins and President Grant. Years later he was retired and moved to the Northwest, where his wife passed away. He subsequently married again and coming back here to Salt Lake City with his wife, renewed his acquaintance and friendship with these two churchmen. On one occasion President Grant drove the general down to the stake where I reside and we had the privilege of hearing him speak in one of our school assemblies. He had a very vital message to deliver, and after his speaking there, we invited him to speak in one of our stake union meetings where the general told of his experiences in the second battle of the Marne, and then he gave his reaction to war. At the close of the talk, one of our brethren went up to him and very frankly said, "General, do you not think this a very cruel message to be giving in a religious meeting?" His answer was very significant. "Brother Booth"—he had met him a few hours before—"I want to impress, if possible, upon you people one fundamental thing, as I would like to impress it upon all the world, and that is that war is a terrible, cruel monster, and whenever we speak of it and whenever we deal with it, we speak and deal with terrible things. Until the human family becomes conscious of the tragedy and the sorrow and the terribleness of war we'll always have war. You church people," he said, "have a very vital message and mission; namely, to try to teach the principles of righteousness in the hearts of your people and in the hearts of mankind, that war may be no more."

I have never forgotten that, my brethren, and it seems to me that that, after all, is one of the lessons that we need to learn. If we can bring again righteousness into the hearts of the people, we will be able to outlaw war, and the terribleness and the tragedy of it will be no more, but we can not do it until we put into practical application some of the teachings we have heard here today.

THE GOSPEL A HELP UNDER EVERY CONDITION

We are a practical people; we need to till the soil; we need to make a living; we need to deal with the physical things of life just as our forebears did, for they did a magnificent job in assimilating the two aspects of man's nature. They understood how to harmonize the physical with the spiritual, and in their great faith they were able to bring a harmony out of seeming chaos. God grant that we may be able to do that, that we may outlaw hatred and animosity and so live that the spirit of our Heavenly Father will be a part of us.

Someone the other day, someone who had had great sorrow because of this war, raised this question, "What has the Church to offer in times like these when it seems the very props are taken from under us?" Well, the Church has all of these practical things, and it has more. It brings to you and me faith and hope. When the shepherds stood on those Palestine hills, they heard the voices of the angels declaring the event of the new-born Babe, "Behold . . . [there is] born this day in the city of David a Saviour, which is Christ the Lord." (Luke 2:10-11.) Good tidings of great joy they were told, which were to be for all people. It wasn't merely the event of the Babe of Bethlehem, but it was the ushering in of the message of eternal truth that was to bring comfort and joy through the living of the precepts that he was to teach. That was the message that was to bring joy to the human heart.

When Paul stood before King Agrippa he declared his conversion and told of the appearance of Jesus Christ to him in midday, and King Agrippa being touched in his heart, turned to Paul and said, "Almost thou persuadest me to be a Christian." (Acts 26:28.) "And Paul said, I would to God, that not only thou, but also all that hear me this day, were both almost, and altogether such as I am, except these bonds." (Ibid. 29.) He knew that Jesus was the Christ; he had in his heart and soul what this testimony and the gospel does for us in times of trial and adversity. The Prophet Joseph came in this day and brought the same message, a message that has come through sorrow, privation and tribulation, and yet it brings the same good tidings of great joy that were sung by the shepherds two thousand years ago. It is the translating into our lives, my brethren, not only these practical things, but it is also a stimulating of the faith that comes from God, our Eternal Father, through faithful service to his cause. The lovely thing about the Church to which you and I belong is that it permits of the application of these two, the practical with the spiritual, and thus we grow and become strong.

May the Lord help us that we may appreciate in our everyday affairs the counsel given in this conference. May we appreciate the great message of peace that comes into our hearts even in time of sorrow, and may we have the power through living these eternal truths ultimately to do away with unrighteousness, so that war may be no more. God bless us, I pray in the name of Jesus. Amen.

PRESIDENT J. REUBEN CLARK, JR.

First Counselor in the First Presidency

A part of the obligation of the presiding officer at these conferences is that he shall take his turn in speaking to the people. For that reason I wish to fulfill my duty and try to say something to you that may be helpful and encouraging and to the furtherance of the cause of the Lord. I sincerely trust that while I speak I shall have with me the benefit of that spirit which has been poured out in such rich abundance upon us today. So many themes have been touched, that we might further discuss that it is a bit difficult to know what one might most profitably do.

THE GOLDEN RULE A SAFE GUIDE FOR MANKIND

To the man who says, what has the Church to offer, in times like these, we might perhaps, without being too cruel, say: what is to be offered to the man who jumps off the house and breaks his leg. Well, we can mend his leg, but it will always be a mended leg; but we have also to offer to the man the advice, do not jump off the house again.

And so to this war-torn world, war-torn from the beginning, we have to say to such a questioner: What has the Church to offer? The Church has to offer to you, and to the world, and has offered to you and to the world the principles that had they been accepted would have made this war impossible, and that if now accepted will make a recurrence of war impossible. We bring you that message, the message of the gospel of Jesus Christ, restored in this day and age of the world. Do unto others as thou wouldst be done by contains the rule which ought to guide us as members of a community and as one of the family of nations.

GOD WILL PASS SENTENCE UPON THE GUILTY

In these days of terrible trial and stress the question is frequently repeated by those who lose their dear ones under circumstances that ten years ago were not believed possible. These dear ones sometimes write and say: I hope that God will forgive me for the things I am having to do. The parents want to know what is the answer to that fear. I would like to read to you what the First Presidency said on April 6, 1942, four months after the attack at Pearl Harbor.

In this terrible war now waging thousands of our righteous young men in all parts of the world and in many countries are subject to a call into the military service of their own countries. Some of these, so serving, have already been called back to their heavenly home; others will almost surely be called to follow. But "behold," as Moroni said, the righteous of them who serve and are slain "do enter into the rest of the Lord their God," and of them the Lord has said "those that die in me shall not taste of death, for it shall be sweet unto them." (Doc. and Cov. 42:46.) Their salvation and exaltation in the world to come will be secure. That in their work of destruction they will be striking at their brethren will not be held against them. That sin, as Moroni of old said, is to the condemnation of those who "sit in their places of power in a state of thoughtless stupor," those rulers in the world who in a frenzy of hate and lust for unrighteous power and dominion over their fellow men, have put into motion eternal forces they do not comprehend and cannot control. God, in his own due time, will pass sentence upon them. "Vengeance is mine; I will repay saith the Lord." (Romans 12:19.)

I have no doubt of the truthfulness of the theme developed by Brother Callis, that those who die as described by Moroni, will not be held guilty of the death of their brethren, and they will have the opportunity to go on to salvation and exaltation in the celestial kingdom.

PLANNING FOR THE RETURN OF THE SOLDIERS

I would like to say a word about the returning soldier, that being a question about which we all talk and hear so much. I said something about postwar planning at the last conference and pointed out that we could and should plan to bring our soldiers back to homes of purity, chastity, and of righteousness, and that it took no worldly position, no wealth to carry on that postwar planning. I want to add just a word along that line today.

These boys out in the field have placed before them constantly, achievements and the value of achievement in the destruction of human life. The thing for which they now receive praise, the things for which they work to get commendation, are unknown to us in our lives of peace. When they return they will bring back with them, of necessity, something of those urges that led them to their achievements, and we are going to be cold, however warm we try to be, to those achievements, which do not fit in with the gospel, nor with our methods of life.

To bridge over the time when they return as heroes for achievements in war, until they may resume their peacetime occupations and become heroes in peace and in peaceful occupations, to bridge that over is one of the tasks we shall have to undertake and to which we must give our best effort and best thought. I am not thinking of the temporal side of the bridge-over, I am thinking of the spiritual side, and what that means; and in that connection it seems to me that they who are to play the greatest part are the mothers, the wives, and the sweethearts of those who return.

THE RESPONSIBILITY OF THE WOMEN

When all is said and done it will be our sisters who must take on that great load and that tremendous responsibility. Radio programs, magazines, and newspaper columns are more and more filling with instructions about how to treat our returning soldiers. All the deductions of modern psychology, and its kindred mental sciences are paraded for the guidance of the wives, the mothers, the sweethearts, in meeting, winning, and holding the boy back from the war. But I would not exchange the unerring, inspired instinct of a good woman, fired with mother love, or wife love, or the love of a loyal, chaste sweetheart, for all that men have ever written. The boys say they do not wish to be regarded as problem children. They want to get home and enter again the family circle, and in its sacred precincts again to take up life and forget hate, carnage, and death. I believe their cry will be, "Let us live again in love"; and you mothers, wives, and sweethearts can bring to them this blessing. None other can. So in this crisis we turn to the women of the earth to save them and to save us men from ourselves. So it has been, in reality, in every great world crisis, however much it may have seemed otherwise. Yours, you sisters, has been the loyalty that has never wavered; your courage has not failed, has not been daunted, whatever the odds. You have often recognized a lost cause long before your men folks; you frequently have seen victory long before it came within the vision of those who battled. Your joy and tenderness and fortitude have succored the wounded and eased the passing of those who are called beyond. You never fail in kindness and mercy; your love endures forever. May God bless you, for you are angels of mercy. So, you mothers, wives, sweethearts, take into the sacred precincts of your heart around the altars of your homes these souls wounded in body, in mind, in spirit, and heal them as you alone can.

THE LEADERS OF THE CHURCH INSPIRED OF GOD

I had intended to say something, but my time is past, along the line that Elder Petersen spoke. He used even the scriptures that I had intended using; but I would like to endorse all that he said, and I would like to say to the priesthood of the Church, among whom there are many who are steadiers of the ark—please do not be too much concerned. The Lord will take care of the Church, if we shall but take care of ourselves. He has laid down the appointed way; he is the head of the Church. President Grant is his representative on earth. The Lord declares his will through his representative here.

There is much talk nowadays about democracy. I do not know of any democracy in the world. There are liberal monarchies, and there are republics. We are democratic in our concepts of the Church, but we are not a democracy; we are a kingdom, the Church and kingdom of God on earth; and our guidance and our direction comes and must come through the head of the Church, who always has been possessed of the Spirit of the Lord and of his inspiration, and his revelation. So it will always be.

President Joseph F. Smith said to President Grant, shortly before President Smith died, "the Lord knows whom he wants to be president of the Church, and he never makes a mistake." The Lord has laid down the rule and the regulation by which that president of the Church is chosen.

It is for us of the priesthood and for us the members of the Church to hearken and to obey in matters which the president of the Church directs, and to see to it that we do not modify in any way the holy laws which the Lord has laid down. God grant that we may all be faithful to the end, I humbly pray, in the name of Jesus. Amen.

President Clark:

The congregation will now sing "Now Let Us Rejoice in the Day of Salvation." Song Folder No. 6, L.D.S. Hymns No. 218, Hymn Book No. 182.

The closing prayer will be offered by President Wesley E. Tingey of the South Davis Stake, after which this conference will stand adjourned until 10 o'clock tomorrow morning, Saturday, April 7, 1945. The proceedings of that session will be broadcast over KSL at Salt Lake City, and KSUB at Cedar City.

Singing by the congregation, "Now Let Us Rejoice in the Day of Salvation."

The closing prayer was offered by President Wesley E. Tingey of the South Davis Stake, after which Conference adjourned until Saturday morning, April 7, at 10 a.m.

SECOND DAY

MORNING MEETING

Conference reconvened promptly at 10 o'clock, a.m., Saturday morning, April 7.

President Clark:

This is the third session of the 115th Annual Conference of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints. We are convened in the Assembly Hall on Temple Square, Salt Lake City, Utah.

There are present on the stand this morning all the General Authorities of the Church as sustained yesterday, except President Grant, who is able to listen to the services over a direct wire from the Assembly Hall to his home.

The proceedings of this session will be broadcast over KSL at Salt Lake City, and KSUB at Cedar City.

We will begin the morning services by the congregation singing, "Lord, Accept Our True Devotion," two verses, Song Folder No. 43. Elder J. Spencer Cornwall is conducting the singing; Elder Alexander Schreiner is at the organ.

The opening prayer will be offered by President Edward E. Drury, Jr., of the Denver Stake.

Singing by the congregation, "Lord, Accept Our True Devotion."

Elder Edward E. Drury, Jr., President of the Denver Stake, offered the opening prayer.

The congregation sang the hymn, "Sweet is the Work, My God, My King," L.D.S. Hymns, No. 91, Hymn Book No. 121.

ELDER SPENCER W. KIMBALL

Of the Council of the Twelve Apostles

My beloved brethren here and brethren and sisters of the radio audience: It is a great privilege and inspiration to be here in this conference of the Church of our Lord, Jesus Christ. May the peace of heaven be with you and us.

THE ADVICE OF A BRAHMAN TO A MOTHER

A woman in the Far East who had lost her boy went to the Brahman and said: "You must give me back my boy, you must, you must." The Brahman with calm dignity said to her: "Come, daughter, you must go out and get the leaves of a plant (which was as common as the commonest weeds with us) and make a tea of the leaves, and drink the tea, and I will give you back your boy. But the leaves must be gathered from the dooryard of a family that has never known sorrow."

The woman traveled from village to village, and from province to province, and finally heartsore and footsore, she returned to her leader saying: "Father, I have traveled all over the land, but I cannot find one home where sorrow has not been." She had returned, not to get her son back, but to be content with her lot.

Yesterday we were told in conference that about nine hundred of our stalwart sons had been sacrificed in this diabolical world holocaust. It has seemed to me even more than that, for as I have gone about the Church I have been confronted with such sorrow in all parts of the country.

These tragic stories of sons killed in the training fields and theatres of war have not been limited to any individual, or locality, but everywhere our relatives and friends weep in their loneliness and sorrow.

A LETTER WRITTEN TO A SORROWING MOTHER

May I read to you a letter which I wrote sometime ago to a mother of my acquaintance whose son had just been killed in battle? I do earnestly pray that some thought contained therein might have brought to her and may bring to others a bit of hope and comfort and courage.

Dear Sister—

Very recently I have been entertained in the homes of parents who have lost young sons, still in their teens and early twenties; sons who were as clean and sweet in their lives as their mothers; sons who had ability and had developed their talents and possessed also the spirit and desire to use them for the advancement of the work of the Lord. It has caused me to ponder deeply.

One particular mother who poured out her soul to me was inclined to be bitter. She said:

Why would the Lord take my son from me? Why didn't the Lord answer my prayers and save him? I know my son has remained clean; why should he be taken? Not only he, but the entire family has always been faithful; why is our worthiness not recognized? Why should he die so young when he was so righteous?

Well, you know the responsibility I felt in attempting to answer her. With all my soul I prayed that the Father would help me to bring her comfort.

As I sat in meditation my mind went back to a little hill, far away, on which were silhouetted against the deepening shadows of a black, tragic day, three crosses on which were human beings writhing in the agonies of death, and the central One cried out:

My God, my God, why hast thou forsaken me! (Matt. 27:46.)

And I seem to see at the foot of the heavy cross the crouching figure of a mother torn in agony, saying:

Why should he die? So young, so pure, so able to teach the world a better way? Why, oh, why?

Then I seem to see another more modern picture of a mother grief-stricken, watching the approaching caravan which was bringing two beloved sons home from a foul martyrdom in a jail some distance away, and I can almost hear her through her sobs:

Why should they be killed? Why should they be taken from the infant Church which needs them so much? Why must they die, so young, so pure, so strong?

Then I realize that God does not take these lives. It is permitted because men have their free agency.

Woe unto the world because of offences! for it must needs be that offences come; but woe to that man by whom the offence cometh! (Matt. 18:7.)

Was there frustration in the martyrdom of Joseph Smith? Joseph was protected and his life saved in every instance of persecution until his work was finished and he had done his part in the restoration of the gospel and the priesthood and all other keys of the dispensation, and until the organization of the kingdom was effected. He could not be killed before that time, though all hell raged against him. He wanted to live. Life was sweet to him. It held promise of sweet associations with his family, his brethren, and the satisfaction of seeing the work blossom into a full-blown flower. But his work was done; other strong leaders could now carry on; he was needed in other fields. Only in his thirties, a very young man, he died, and commenced his work in other realms.

Was there defeat in the crucifixion of Jesus the Christ? If so, all creation were doomed and man would have remained in sin. If so, the crucifixion would not have taken place until a later date—until his hour had come. His life was not taken from him—he gave his life. To Peter, who smote off the ear of one of the mob, he said:

... the cup which my Father hath given me, shall I not drink it? (John 18:11) and thinkest thou that I cannot now pray to my Father, and he shall presently give me more than twelve legions of angels? (Matt. 26:53.)

He was young, only 33. He loved life also. He wanted to live for the richness that he could see in it—his friends, his growing kingdom, his brethren, his mother. Life was sweet to him. Did he not pray in Gethsemane:

... O my Father, if it be possible, let this cup pass from me; nevertheless not as I will, but as thou wilt. (Matt. 26:39.)

Then as the time passed, and no positive answer came to his supplication, he cried out again in his torture:

O my Father, if this cup may not pass away from me, except I drink it, thy will be done. (Matt. 26:42.)

In the first prayer he still seemed to have a glimmer of hope that something could be done about it, but in the latter it seemed to have been definitely settled in his mind that no adjustment could be made, and in order that the purposes of God might not fail he must drink the bitter cup.

He was taken from his mother, though it broke her heart. His prayer, perhaps the most sincere and worthy ever uttered, was not answered as she would have had it. His was the perfect life, clean, guileless, divine, and yet he passed. His mother was devout as also were some of his people, yet his life ebbed. He was young and had not had time to establish himself in life. His first thirty years were spent in preparation; his next three years in originating and developing his program, and now when he could have turned over to his followers much of the detail of the work, and could have perhaps enjoyed family and other associations, he was crucified. Why? There was a definite reason. Being divine and mortal, he had a work to do which could not be done in mortality, which required his transfer to other spheres of activity. Was his work frustrated? It did leave a sorrowing mother. There were brethren who were numbed. There were perhaps many loved ones who doubted and questioned. But in his death, and in his resurrection, came a boon to mankind that only this Son of God could bring. Would we have had it different? Would we have saved his life, if we could, now that we know that he through this very circumstance brought redemption to the world? Would his agonized mother today have it otherwise as she looks back on the entire program? Would the apostles on whom the burden of the kingdom fell have it otherwise?

And I am sure that the thousands of our Latter-day Saint mothers, who like Mary, the mother of the Lord, today stand grieving helplessly at the foot of a heavy cross, shall come in time to see clearly and may even bless the day when their clean, talented, stalwart sons went forward into other spheres.

In death do we grieve for the one who passes on, or is it self-pity? To doubt the wisdom and justice of the passing of a loved one is to place a limitation on the term of life. It is to say that it is more important to continue to live here than to go into other fields. Do we grieve when our son is graduated from the local high school and is sent away from home to a university of higher learning? Do we grieve inconsolably when our son is called away from our daily embrace to distant lands to preach the gospel? To continue to grieve without faith and understanding and trust when a son goes into another world is to question the long-range program of God, life eternal with all its opportunities and blessings.

God is good, so good in fact that we can hardly conceive the depth and richness of his goodness. He is just; so just that we mortals cannot comprehend the fairness of his justice. I am sure that no mortal will ever fail to receive every blessing and glory which he merits. Mortal death cannot rob him. There will be a way, and every promise of God will be fulfilled. A virtuous, progressive, active young man will sacrifice no blessing to which he was entitled by his (to us) premature passing into eternity. We may not understand fully just how it will be accomplished, but we may know that it will be. Remember what the Lord himself said:

... Eye hath not seen, nor ear heard, neither have entered into the heart of man, the things which God hath prepared for them that love him. (1 Cor. 2:9.)

Can we not trust in the goodness of the Lord? Remember that he is the Father also of this son. He is the Parent of the living part, you of the tabernacle only. Will he not be infinitely more concerned with the welfare of this son than we mortals could ever be? Can we not know this: "His purposes fail not, neither are there any that can stay his hand"? There is no tragedy except in sin. Let us know therefore that life is eternal, and that God doeth all things well; and this righteous son, the offspring of God, was not born for a day, a decade, or a century, but for eternity. Only his own lack of righteousness could ever deprive him of any blessing promised by the Lord. "Thy Son liveth" and continues to radiate life, not death; light, not darkness; commencement, not termination; assurance, not uncertainty; joy eternal, not sorrow; sweetness, not bitterness; youthful maturity, not senility; progress, not stoppage; sunshine, not clouds; clearness of vision, not confusion and dimness; fulfilment, not frustration; an open gate with light ahead, not barred windows with darkness beyond.

May our Heavenly Father bring his peace to all of you who are now passing through your Garden of Gethsemane.

Sincerely your brother,
Spencer W. Kimball

ELDER NICHOLAS G. SMITH

Assistant to the Council of the Twelve Apostles

My brethren, as I look into your faces I endeavor to place you. I have visited half of the stakes of Zion, up to the present time, and should know half of this congregation, but I have only been able to pick out about two dozen faces. As I walk amongst you, if you will just punch me one in the ribs I shall know I have been in your town.

AN INCIDENT ABOUT JUDGE ELIAS A. SMITH

As Brother Joseph Fielding spoke yesterday of the sanctity of work, I could not help thinking of Judge Elias A. Smith who celebrated his eighty-eighth birthday just about two weeks ago. Thinking, of course, that a man eighty-eight years of age would be resting in his home, I went over to his place, only to discover that he was at work, about two o'clock in the afternoon. So I wended my way down to his office, but he was so busy that he was unable to stop to have anyone congratulate him on his eighty-eighth birthday. The following day I met him on the street and said, "Judge, I went to your home and your office yesterday to wish you many happy returns." "Well," he said, "I am a busy man."

"Yes, I noted that. I couldn't get to see you in the office. I thought you would be home. I didn't know you were working." "Why," he said, "working, earning my own way. I am so much happier doing that than I could possibly be in any other way." I wish a lot of folks could follow Judge Elias A. Smith's way of life, and the way of life which our President has followed. Day before yesterday morning, down in back of the Church Office Building in his car, sick and afflicted, our worthy President sat and signed the letters that he had dictated to go out to different parts of the Church.

He isn't too old to work, nor too sick, nor feeble to work. God bless him.

THE KEEPING OF THE SABBATH

Brother Mark Petersen brought to my mind the words of our Savior:

Blessed are they which are persecuted for righteousness' sake: for theirs is the kingdom of heaven. Blessed are ye, when men shall revile you, and persecute you, and shall say all manner of evil against you falsely, for my sake. Rejoice, and be exceeding glad; for great is your reward in heaven: for so persecuted they the prophets which were before you. (Matthew 5:10-12.)

And then our President's message, speaking of the many commandments and reminding us of our responsibility as leaders, to keep the commandments of our Heavenly Father, made me think of one commandment especially. As I have traveled about attending your conferences, of necessity I have had to travel on Sundays throughout the intermountain states, and I have seen men in the fields plowing, and hauling their hay, and putting their grain into the stacks. I have seen lined up on this sacred Sabbath day many people in front of the moving picture theatres waiting to purchase their tickets. I have noted crowds lined up at sporting events, buying their tickets that they might go in and participate in that recreation upon this holy day. It may surprise you when I say that my grandfather, George A. Smith, was one of the first men to break the Sabbath day here in Utah. Being rather a practical sort of man, he felt that it was just as necessary that hunger should be appeased as that we should lift the sheep out of the pit upon the Sabbath day (see Matt. 12:11), and according to his journal, on July 24th, 1847, you remember, the Saints came down into the valley. Grandfather's diary records that:

... it was cloudy but quite warm. Potatoes were planted. I planted the first. At about two o'clock President Brigham Young and his company came up all better. Water was let on the ground on the twenty-fourth. Toward evening there was a slight shower. Sunday, July 25th, it was clear and warm. Meetings commenced at half past ten. In the morning, I, in company with some others, planted some corn, beans and peas. Meeting again at two p.m. That afternoon Brigham Young chastised me, directing that the brethren must not work on Sunday. He said they would lose five times as much as they would gain by it. None were to hunt that day, and there should not any man dwell among us who would not observe these rules. They might go and dwell wherever they pleased but they should not dwell amongst us.

Grandfather must have taken that lesson to heart after he had been plowing and planting seeds upon that Sunday morning, for he got into the soul of my father the great ideal that Sunday was the Lord's day, the day that we should observe and rest and refrain from all types of work.

While we had horses and our whitetop, we couldn't use them on the Sabbath day. I remember on one occasion when my brother, Winslow, and I went to our father and asked him if we might have the whitetop, he said, "Boys, we must follow so-and-so's example, and you can't take the horses and the wagon out." That afternoon we saw so-and-so's boys out in their whitetop, so the following Sunday we came to father and said, "Father, may we take the whitetop out today?" "What did I tell you last Sunday, boys?" "Well, you said to follow so-and-so's example, and last Sunday we saw them out in their whitetop." Father said, "Well, we won't follow anybody's example. We will set one of our own. You can't have the whitetop."

ADVICE FROM CHURCH LEADERS

Some years later, after Brigham Young had spoken about the Sabbath day he was again called upon to speak of it. Apparently they hadn't moved away, those who desired to break the Sabbath, for he said, "Now remember, my brethren, those who go skating, buggy riding, or on excursions on the Sabbath day—and there is a great deal of this practice—are weak in the faith. Gradually, little by little, the spirit of their religion leaks out of their hearts, their affections and in time they begin to see faults in their brethren, faults in the doctrines of the Church, faults in the organization, and at last they leave the kingdom of God and go to destruction."

He felt very seriously about this subject, as have all of the men who have presided over this Church. All of them have stressed this important matter. I think that perhaps the greatest and finest expression was by President Grant when he said, "The Lord's day is a holy day and not a holiday. It has been set apart as a day of rest and worship, and we accept the Lord's day as the first day of the week in accordance with the instructions given by the Prophet Joseph Smith. A sacred Sabbath begets reverence for God." And how essential that is. "It is not pleasing in his sight that the day be given over to pleasure-seeking in places of amusement or elsewhere. Sunday Schools and meetings have been so arranged that they meet the convenience of the people and leave a considerable portion of the Sabbath day without Church appointments. We earnestly appeal to the people to keep their appointments faithfully and to utilize that part of Sunday not appointed, for meetings in promoting family association in the home, with the purpose of stimulating and establishing greater home fealty, a closer companionship among parents and children; and more intimate relations among all kindred. We believe it is unnecessary for families to go beyond their homes or those of their kindred for the relaxation and associations which are proper for the Sabbath day, and we therefore discourage more traveling than is necessary for this purpose and attendance upon appointed meetings. Let all unnecessary labor be suspended, and let no encouragement be given by members of the Church at places of amusement and recreation on the Sabbath day. If Sunday is spent in our meetings and in our homes, great blessings will come to our families and to our communities."

So I would appeal, my brethren, to you who are the presiding officers in the Church, that in your actions nothing can be laid at your door that would cause anyone to start on that path of desecrating the Sabbath day, and I would bring to your minds that message which was written by the finger of God upon tablets of stone:

Remember the sabbath day, to keep it holy. Six days shalt thou labour, and do all thy work: But the seventh day is the sabbath of the Lord thy God: in it thou shalt not do any work, thou, nor thy son, nor thy daughter, thy manservant, nor thy maidservant, nor thy cattle, nor thy stranger that is within thy gates: For in six days the Lord made heaven and earth, the sea, and all that in them is, and rested the seventh day: wherefore the Lord blessed the sabbath day, and hallowed it. (Exodus 20:8-11.)

Amen.

PRESIDENT LEVI EDGAR YOUNG

Of the First Council of Seventy

We first see him in the woods on the frontier of America praying as a child might pray and the Lord appearing to him. Using the words of the Psalmist, "Grace is poured into thy lips, therefore God hath blessed thee for ever more."

JOSEPH SMITH'S FIRST VISION

With the Father was Jesus the Savior. Joseph heard the voice of God and the divine words: "This is my Beloved Son." A new day was at hand. From that moment he was heart and mind to the word of the Lord. What a message for our missionaries of today!

He learned that day that the divisions of Christendom are its most conspicuous reproach and the chief cause of its inefficiency. They present a moral affront to the enterprise inaugurated by Jesus Christ, and constitute the outstanding limitation of its progress. Christianity is weakened by its division in facing the problems of to-day, among which are class hatreds, race antagonisms, blindness to social justice, the lure of vicious literature, crime-instigating narcotics, and the spread of military spirit in the world.

The supreme test of religion is revelation. No religion can be persuasive unless it relies on the principle of revelation. The living Church of Jesus Christ must be revelatory. One readily sees that the very lifeblood of the Church is the principle and potency of redemption. Christianity in its pure sense is the religion of redeemed personality. While all true men reveal God, the completest carrier of revelation can be no other than a chosen personality.

THE MESSAGE OF THE RESTORATION

By the power of the Holy Priesthood which he received from heaven, Joseph established our true relationship to God. Out of this grows the salvation of man—his true immortal life. The nations all bear witness to the need of a light that is not of man. We can give our word to the world that the forces which are to make the world the world it ought to be are now within it. The Prophet Joseph Smith gave a new idea of the duty of man toward God; of man's duty to man in religion, politics, and society; of the duties of nations towards one another. His message was for the fireside, for we are taught that the gospel must be in the home; it is "pure religion breathing household laws." The father holds the priesthood of God; the mother is heir to the same influence of the priesthood. It brings the truest conception of home life, which lies at the root of civilization. Here are the children born and reared. Here are the teachings of faith expressed in prayer. Every child is taught faith, hope, charity, and love, with an eye single to the glory of God. Reverence for God is the basis of morality.

Joseph Smith's concept of government and law was divinely enlightened. Government was instituted by Almighty God, and the Constitution of the United States was written by men inspired of God to bring just civic life to the world, for there is a sacredness of citizenship which we all should know. It requires the faithful use of political rights. He saw the wrong of slavery and advocated that the government buy the slaves from their masters, and give them the opportunity to develop their own lives adapted to them. What a tragedy this could have averted. There must be a revival of civic pride in America, a keener respect for law and order. All the written laws in the world cannot bring back that fine old love of justice and the ways of God. There must be the spirit of consecration, of self-discipline, of devotion to the righteous teachings of God. Far back in the ages, Isaiah, six hundred years before the Savior of mankind came, wrote: "Open ye the gates, that the righteous nation which keepeth the truth may enter in." (Isaiah 26:2.) There is a conscience of nations as there is of individuals. We had once a national conscience, as expressed by the Puritans, Quakers, and the many other religious devotees who settled these shores. They knew moral integrity, moral purpose, moral restraint.

THE MEANING OF CIVILIZATION

Our civic ethics, our social idealism should rest securely on what an eminent lord chief justice of England said:

Civilization is not dominion; wealth, material luxury. Not a great literature and education, good though these things are. Its true signs are thoughtfulness for the poor and suffering, chivalrous regard and respect for woman, the frank recognition for human brotherhood, the doing away with war, the love of ordered freedom, abhorrence of what is mean and cruel, ceaseless devotion to the claims of justice.

Yes, we need the old-fashioned ethics, "when it was taught that every man should give account of himself to god."

The vision of the boy Prophet revealed two mighty truths: the reality of the spiritual life—the divine life; and the divinity and sanctity of the human body. The proper knowledge of the the personality of God and of Jesus Christ gave foundation for the redemption of the world from sin.

BODY AND MIND CLOSELY RELATED

The connection between body and mind is a commonplace of thought with us, but it is not a commonplace of practice. The relation of mind and body is a very close one in which each affects the other for good or evil. We are more dependent on physical conditions for our happiness, and even for our goodness, than we perhaps like to admit. The keenest brain and the spirit of man need a foundation of physical health to do their best work. The treatment of the body must be put on a moral basis. Every act of intemperance of whatever sort, every sin against the physical constitution, every wilful neglect of the laws of health and moral life, is injuring the self in ways too delicate to estimate, and is dimming the radiance of the soul. There is such a thing as physical morality.

Beautifully has the Prophet depicted in the Doctrine and Covenants that God reigns in heaven and in earth. He is the rightful King of nations, and the source of supreme good to man. It is through forgetting God and forsaking him that spiritual and moral degradation and all the sorrows of this war-torn world result. It will be by mankind acting for God and responding to his call that a new age will come. More majestic are his words: "Man must be called of God to administer in his holy ordinances and to teach his eternal word." Must be called of God! Do we of the priesthood of the Lord deeply feel and deeply know what this means? "It administereth the gospel and holdeth the key of the mysteries of the kingdom, even the key of the knowledge of God." "In the ordinances the power of Godliness is manifest."

If the priesthood is a living reality in our lives, all thought and action will be regulated by our relation to God. Through a knowledge of God alone can human life assume its true destined significance. All duties will become in the highest sense duties to God; morality will become holiness.

The congregation arose and sang the hymn, "God Moves in a Mysterious Way," L.D.S. Hymns No. 50, Hymn Book No. 22.

ELDER JOSEPH L. WIRTHLIN

Second Counselor in the Presiding Bishopric

I sincerely trust, my brethren and my sisters of the radio audience, that I might have an interest in your prayers and faith this morning as I stand before you to express one or two thoughts.

GRATITUDE FOR BLESSINGS OF THE GOSPEL

As I listened to the Lord's anointed, yesterday, there came into my heart a feeling of profound gratitude—gratitude to my forebears who left the Alps of Switzerland and the villages of England and came to the valleys of these mountains where their posterity might enjoy all of the blessings and gifts of the gospel of the Lord Jesus Christ. I am profoundly grateful to them because it has brought me under the direction of the Lord's prophets. And anyone who listened to President Grant's message yesterday couldn't help feeling that he was speaking to us as God's mouthpiece and servant. It is my firm conviction and testimony that if all of us will heed the advice and counsel of these men who guide and direct the destiny of this great work that God will sustain us and bless us through all the vicissitudes, trials, and tribulations of life.

As I grow older, I become more convinced in my heart and spirit that this is the work of the Lord Jesus Christ. One evidence to me that it is his work, is that the Lord is not only mindful of those who live, but he is mindful of those who passed on without having had the opportunity of hearing the gospel of the Lord Jesus Christ in the flesh. The Lord ordained his Son to be the judge of both the dead and the quick. David, who transgressed sorely, understood fully that there would come a time when he, too, would have an opportunity of repenting and enjoying the good will of our Heavenly Father. He said:

Therefore my heart is glad, and my glory rejoiceth: my flesh also shall rest in hope. For thou wilt not leave my soul in hell; neither wilt thou suffer thine Holy One to see corruption. Thou wilt shew me the path of life: in thy presence is fulness of joy; at thy right hand there are pleasures for evermore. (Psalms 16:9-11.)

BAPTISM A NECESSARY ORDINANCE

With the advent of the Savior upon the earth, there came to him one of the learned Pharisees, Nicodemus. Nicodemus was interested in the miracles the Savior performed, and finally out of the discussion that ensued, the Savior said to Nicodemus, "Verily, verily, I say unto thee, Except a man be born again, he cannot see the kingdom of God." Nicodemus could not understand this statement. Thinking that once a man had been born of woman that was enough, and then to clarify the statement the Lord said:

... Verily, verily, I say unto thee, Except a man be born of water and of the Spirit, he cannot enter into the kingdom of God. That which is born of the flesh is flesh; and that which is born of the Spirit is spirit. (John 3:5, 6.)

The Savior here laid down the mandate of baptism that applies to every son and daughter of the Lord that is born in the flesh, that if they expect entrance into the kingdom of our Heavenly Father they must be born of the water, or baptized of the water, born of the spirit or baptized of the spirit. This declaration was so important that the Savior himself submitted to the ordinance of baptism. We all recall the time when John was baptizing by the Jordan and then cometh Jesus from Galilee unto John to be baptized of him, but John forbade him saying:

... I have need to be baptized of thee, and comest thou to me? And Jesus answering said unto him. Suffer it to be so now: for thus it becometh us to fulfill all righteousness. Then he suffered him. And Jesus, when he was baptized, went up straightway out of the water: and, lo, the heavens were opened unto him, and he saw the Spirit of God descending like a dove, and lighting upon him: And lo a voice from heaven saying, This is my beloved Son, in whom I am well pleased. (Matt. 3:14-17.)

Christ not only inaugurated the initiatory ordinance into the kingdom of heaven, but he also placed upon his followers the mantle of authority. For said he this to Peter:

And I say also unto thee, That thou art Peter, and upon this rock will I build my church; and the gates of hell shall not prevail against it. And I will give unto thee the keys of the kingdom of heaven: and whatsoever thou shalt bind on earth shall be bound in heaven: and whatsoever thou shalt loose on earth shall be loosed in heaven. (Matt. 16:18, 19.)

Then there came Calvary Hill when the Savior of the world was crucified between two sinners, and upon the cross he conversed with one of these men, Christ making him this promise:

And Jesus said unto him, Verily I say unto thee, Today shalt thou be with me in paradise. (Luke 23:43.)

This statement has been confusing to the Christian world, in view of the fact that the Savior said unto Nicodemus, "Verily, verily I say unto thee, except a man be born of water and the Spirit, he cannot enter the kingdom of God." (op. cit.) There is no question but that the thief had never heard the gospel of the Lord Jesus Christ until the Savior preached it to him on the cross, and yet the Savior promised him that he would be in paradise; the world in its confused thinking believes that paradise is heaven. The Apostle Peter clarifies this misconception of paradise when we read his statement found in I Peter:

For Christ also hath once suffered for sins, the just for the unjust; that he might bring us to God, being put to death in the flesh, but quickened by the Spirit: By which also he went and preached unto the spirits in prison; Which sometime were disobedient, when once the longsuffering of God waited in the days of Noah, while the ark was preparing, wherein few, that is, eight souls were saved by water. (I Peter 3:18, 19, 20.)

After the Savior was resurrected and meeting Mary, he said to her, "Touch me not; for I am not yet ascended to my Father . . ." (John 20:17), which is an indication to us that during the time his spirit and body were separated, he was in paradise, preaching the gospel message to those who, as Peter tells us, sinned in the days of Noah and were swept from the earth by the great flood.

Another very important statement with reference to baptism was made by Paul when he was preaching the resurrection. He said:

Else what shall they do which are baptized for the dead, if the dead rise not at all? why are they then baptized for the dead? (I Cor. 15:29.)

CHANGES MADE THROUGH APOSTASY

Thereafter, according to prophecy, there came the great apostasy. It was only a matter of a century or two after the apostles had disappeared from the earth until the ordinances and doctrines of men were substituted for those of the Lord Jesus Christ. The words of the old prophet Amos were fulfilled wherein he said:

Behold, the days come, saith the Lord God, that I will send a famine in the land, not a famine of bread, nor a thirst for water, but of hearing the words of the Lord. (Amos 8:11.)

We find one of the world's greatest ecclesiastical leaders making this statement in a book that he wrote, the book written by Cardinal Gibbons called The Faith of Our Fathers, wherein he said that the ordinance of baptism was changed from that of immersion to sprinkling for convenience's sake. Said he:

There are those who are ill. There are those where there may be but little water found, consequently there being little water it is right to sprinkle them, and that sprinkling is just as efficacious as immersion.

The important thing is that this great ecclesiastical leader admits that baptism was by immersion just as Christ indicated, and as he was baptized by John the Baptist, and as he indicated to Nicodemus, that if a man must be born again he would have to be born of the water, completely submerged and come forth, symbolical of the birth.

With the apostasy there came into the world many doctrines. There came into the world erroneous doctrines that there is no place in the kingdom of our Heavenly Father for those who have not heard the gospel of the Lord Jesus Christ; but the Lord said in the beginning he ordained his Son to be the judge of not only the living but also the dead. The world has lost sight of this concept, and the great churches teach the following:

There is nothing any human being can do to change the condition of the dead. After one dies there is no more that can be done or that he can do.

Another one declares:

Don't believe we can help those who have died, neither believers nor nonbelievers; no ordinance for the dead that recognized intercession for the dead as well as for the living. Man cannot help those who have died. We have no form of work for the dead. After the death, the judgment.

Another one:

We are powerless to do anything for those who are dead. Don't believe in any form of work for the dead. We are powerless to aid those who are dead.

I am sure that if these great religious organizations understood the mission of the Lord Jesus Christ, they would not declare to the world nor to their followers that nothing can be done for those who have passed on. Without having heard the gospel of the Lord Jesus Christ and those who have not submitted themselves to the ordinance of baptism, they would have us believe that they are lost forever and ever.

Then Cardinal Gibbons makes another rather pertinent statement in his book (op. cit.) wherein he said this:

For if baptism by immersion only is valid, how many sick and delicate persons; how many prisoners and seafaring people, how many thousands living in the frigid zone, in the depth of inclement weather, though craving the grace of regeneration would be deprived of God's seal or receive it at the risk of their lives. Surely God does not ordinarily impose ordinances upon us under such a penalty. Moreover, if immersion is the only form of valid baptism, what has become of the millions of souls in every age and country that have been regenerated by sprinkling of water in the Christian churches?

PROMISES OF THE RESTORATION FULFILLED

When the Lord, through his servants, predicted that there would be a famine for his word in the land, knowing that men would change the ordinances and substitute their own, he also gave the world a promise that the day would come, as he said, when:

Behold, I will send you Elijah the prophet before the coming of the great and dreadful day of the Lord: And he shall turn the heart of the fathers to the children, and the heart of the children to their fathers, lest I come and smite the earth with a curse. (Mal. 4: 5, 6.)

That promise has been kept. John the Baptist appeared to Joseph Smith and Oliver Cowdery upon the banks of the Susquehanna River bestowing upon them the Aaronic Priesthood, the same priesthood that John the Baptist held when he baptized the Savior. They immersed one another just as Christ was immersed by John the Baptist. Later there came three other heavenly beings, Peter, James, and John, who bestowed upon these men the Melchizedek Priesthood, that priesthood which Christ himself bestowed upon Peter and his associates, giving them the right to bind on earth and to bind in heaven and to loose on earth and it would be loosed in heaven.

Elijah conferred upon Joseph Smith the keys of this great work, the work for the dead, wherein children perform the ordinance of baptism for their dead progenitors, which is a vicarious form of work just as was Christ's atonement for the sin of Adam of a vicarious nature wherein he represented all of us upon the cross. Furthermore, President Joseph F. Smith in 1918 indicated that he had been caught up by the spirit and was permitted to see what was going on in the spirit world. The sight he beheld was one wherein the brethren were preaching to the spirits in paradise just as the Savior nineteen centuries ago in spirit form preached them the gospel. By performing the ordinance of baptism here in proxy form for the dead, there are no obstacles in their way whereby they might embrace the gospel in its entirety though they be in paradise. I wish to declare that with the appearance of Elijah to the Prophet Joseph, the restoration of the priesthood, baptism for the dead, and the preaching to spirits as President Joseph F. Smith indicates, constitute an answer to Cardinal Gibbons with reference to those who have not been born of the water and the spirit, as the Savior indicated to Nicodemus a man must needs be before he can enter the kingdom of heaven. Think, if you will, of the millions who have died without the performance of this ordinance and the acceptance of the gospel during the period when the gospel was not upon the earth. To me it is only justice that our kind Father in heaven would institute a plan whereby all his children, be they alive or dead, might have the privilege of accepting or rejecting the gospel of his beloved Son. I could not worship a God who would permit some of his children to enjoy the blessings of the gospel and deprive others who for some reason or another had not heard the gospel because of some circumstances over which they had no control and were denied the privilege of accepting it. I do not believe in that kind of a God, and neither do you. We believe in a God who so loved the world that he gave his only begotten Son to suffer, to bleed, and die to the end that everyone of us might enjoy salvation and exaltation in his kingdom.

This is the philosophy of Mormonism, a plan of salvation so broad that it provides an opportunity for everyone of the Lord's children to gain entrance to his kingdom as was prescribed by the Savior to Nicodemus.

This is my testimony to you, and I am grateful beyond words of expression to know that I enjoy membership in God's Church, the same Church that Christ established upon the earth with apostles, prophets, evangelists, and teachers, for the purpose of teaching us the gospel in its fulness and to the ultimate end that we may all come to a unity of faith. And we may come to a unity of the faith if we abide by the counsel given to us by the Lord's anointed, and that unity of faith will exemplify to the whole world the destiny of this great organization—a destiny of leadership to direct men from the paths of error into the paths of truth, salvation, and exaltation, which I pray will be the blessing of everyone of the Lord's children, in the name of Jesus Christ. Amen.

ELDER MILTON R. HUNTER
Of the First Council of the Seventy

President Grant, President Clark, President McKay, members of the priesthood, and all the radio audience: I stand before this assembled group today in deep humility, in trembling and weakness. I have no words to express the intense feelings that have completely filled me during the past twenty-four hours. The more I contemplate the call which has been made upon me the greater the responsibility looms before my mind, and the more I recognize my weakness and incapability in filling this position. I know that without the help of God the task will be too great, but I do trust and pray with all my heart that I might have his Holy Spirit to be with me, that in this new call I may be a worthy servant in helping to proclaim the gospel of Jesus Christ. I do covenant before my Heavenly Father and before you that I will put forth my very best efforts, that I will give all of my time and talents and anything that God has blessed me with for the upbuilding of his Church and kingdom here upon this earth.

I hope you will pardon me this morning if I say a few things that are personal, but during the past twenty-four hours with such a sudden change coming into my life, my mind has been going back in retrospect over the events of my past life and also of my future. I desire to express, with the help of the Lord, a few of my feelings, a few of my hopes.

EXPERIENCE IN SEMINARY WORK

I have always loved the gospel of Jesus Christ more than anything else in life. I have continuously labored in the Church from my boyhood up, willingly and happily. The gospel and the opportunities to serve in the Church have been the greatest blessing and joy in my life. When I was attending high school seminary under one of our very excellent teachers, Brother William Tew, I made up my mind that if I ever had the opportunity I should like to be a seminary teacher and devote my time and my entire life to teaching the gospel of our Lord Jesus Christ. With that thought in mind I went on through school. Elder Joseph F. Merrill offered me the opportunity, which I gladly accepted, and in happiness I undertook the work.

I have had the great privilege of spending seventeen years in the Church system of education in the high school seminaries and in the institutes. They have been years of much happiness to me, years I know that have furnished me wonderful opportunities. Throughout that time I have never lost opportunity on any occasion to bear testimony to the students of the truthfulness of the gospel and to try to help them with all evidence possible to gain a testimony of the gospel; and to gain facts and the proper spirit which will sustain this great Church of our Master to which we belong.

I would like on this occasion to remark to the parents of the young people of the Church and to the First Presidency and to the officers of the Church, that I have found through working with the young people that they are great; they are wonderful; they are filled with the testimony of the gospel; they are just as staunch, just as true, just as faithful, I am sure, as were their parents or their grandparents. I have never seen more faith exhibited in my life by any group of people than I have seen among the young people of our Church with whom I have had the privilege of working. I do not fear for the future of the Church so long as our young people are of this splendid type, and so long as they are filled with the spirit of the gospel and continue living their present type of lives. I am sure that they will take leadership in the Church in due time and carry it on very effectively. I accept the promise made to the Prophet Joseph that the gospel is upon the earth never to be taken from the earth again and never to be given to another people.

We should thank the Presidency of the Church and all those working for this great cause who have made possible our educational system. They foster the great opportunities that we have therein. I speak of that subject definitely this morning because of my close contact for many years with that particular work. I am convinced that the educational program is completely in line with the gospel as revealed to the Prophet Joseph Smith—that man “cannot be saved in ignorance”; that “we are saved no faster than we gain knowledge”; that “the glory of God is intelligence.” The educational program is also definitely in line with the practices of the Church from the beginning, during pioneer days, and on down to the present time. We are a group of people who know that we must gain knowledge of truth in order that we may progress on to godhood. So I do express my appreciation to the First Presidency and their associates for the privilege I have had of spending seventeen years in that very excellent work and also for all the opportunities that I have had in the Church.

When I completed my doctor's degree in California, I was given the opportunity to teach at the institute in Logan. I was delighted; but when I went down to California and told the professors under whom I had taken my graduate work, they tried to persuade me to not come back to Utah to teach. They wanted me to teach in history, the field that I had taken my special work in, but I talked to my wife—who is a very faithful and devout Latter-day Saint and a splendid companion—and her feelings agreed with mine. We recognized that we had a great opportunity at Logan to help the young people of the Church, and we felt that we wanted to rear our family in Utah, and so we turned our backs upon that suggestion and returned to our home state. We have been very happy in our decision.

PERSONAL TESTIMONIES

Before closing my remarks, I would like to bear my testimony. I know that God lives. I know that Jesus the Christ is his Beloved Son. He is the Savior of the world, the Redeemer, the author of the eternal plan of salvation. I know that God, the Eternal Father, through his only begotten son, restored the gospel upon the earth through the Prophet Joseph Smith in our dispensation; that it is the true gospel; that it is the power of God unto salvation. I know that if we live by these eternal principles we shall gain a great reward, even that of eternal life in the kingdom of God. I know that our Heavenly Father is good; that he hears and answers prayers; that he is gracious and kind even beyond our comprehension; and that he delights in blessing those who keep his commandments. The Holy Ghost has borne this testimony to my soul so strongly that I am as sure of these facts as I am that I live. I pray that I may ever live worthy enough to retain this testimony.

Everyone in this audience no doubt has had many experiences which to them have testified to the goodness of God and which have given them a testimony of the truthfulness of the restored gospel. Herein lies the strength of Mormonism. I would like to give an experience or two of mine.

At least twice in my life I was at the point of death and was brought back to life through the power of the priesthood, through the goodness of God. One June day when I was twenty-one years old, I had climbed the hay pole to thread it in order that we might harvest our crop. Just as I had finished, the guy wire broke, and the pole came crashing to the earth. It splintered into many pieces. The hayfork lit with the tines straight up just a few feet from where I lit. Although I fell nearly fifty feet, the only injury that I received was a broken foot. Of course the shock was terrific. I went to bed, and the next day I thought I could get up. I crawled out of bed and immediately everything went black, but through the power of God I was restored to health and strength.

Eleven years later, when I finished my doctor's degree, my physical condition was poor because I had worked very hard. I was teaching seminary in Provo. In November I went to Salt Lake City and had my wisdom teeth extracted. On the way home a storm arose and within twenty-four hours I was seriously ill. A streptococcus infection had settled in my throat, and for the next three weeks I lay at the point of death. The doctor had no hopes that I would recover. The bishop came to our home, and as kindly as he could, told my wife I should not be able to recover. But the seminary teachers I worked with came daily and administered to me. Never once did I have the thought in my mind that I would not get well. I knew there were many things in this world that I was to do yet. In three weeks' time I got out of bed and went back to my schoolroom. It took a year, however, to get the infection out of my system. I am sure that it was through the help and blessings of God that I was restored to life. Upon returning to my school, the students asked me to what I attributed my recovery from such a severe sickness. I testified to them on that occasion, and have done so on many occasions since, that it was through the power of the priesthood and because of the goodness of God that my life was preserved.

I want to bear my testimony today that I know these things are true and that my Heavenly Father has been kind and good to me, blessing me more abundantly than I have deserved. I sincerely hope and pray that I have the full support and the faith of all the members of the Church and the same help from God in the performance of my duties as a member of the First Council of the Seventy. This is my humble prayer in the name of Jesus Christ. Amen.

ELDER THOMAS E. McKAY

Assistant to the Council of the Twelve Apostles

President Grant, President Clark, President McKay, members of the Council of the Twelve, and brethren: I am truly grateful at this time for the inspired leadership of this Church as manifested in the selection of these two very fine brethren, Elder Dilworth Young and Elder Milton R. Hunter to succeed those two great missionaries, members of the First Council of the Seventy, who were recently released from their earthly missions, Presidents Bennion and Hardy, and I am sure that they also are pleased with these very fine selections.

SUGGESTIONS FOR POSTWAR PLANNING

One of the four new features in this year's program for stake quarterly conferences is the outlining, or partially so, of the general priesthood session. One of the topics suggested in the quarterly conference emphasizing elders' work is: "Quorum responsibility in postwar readjustment of soldier quorum members (by a president or member of an elders' quorum)."

Some excellent talks have been given; I believe one or two of them should be published. As a result of these talks and discussions in the priesthood leadership meetings—another new feature of this year's conference program—a number of the quorums have already initiated some definite postwar plans. I shall not take time to discuss these projects, nor those already under way in the wards sponsored by the ward welfare committees, as I should like to use the time allotted to me in a brief reference to a certain phase of postwar planning in the home—planning on the part of different members of the family.

After all, the thoughts of our boys in the service are centered about loved ones at home—these thoughts spur them on to give the best they have to our country—many of them have already given their all in their effort to bring this terrible war to an end so they can come home as soon as possible.

An article in a recent issue of the Reader's Digest illustrates this point:

One evening in Albany, New York, I asked a sailor what time it was. He pulled out a huge watch and replied, "It is 7:20." I knew it was later. "Your watch has stopped, hasn't it?" I asked.

"No," he said, "I'm still on mountain standard time. I'm from southern Utah. When I joined the navy, Pa gave me this watch. He said it'd help me to remember home."

"When my watch says 5 a.m. I know Dad is rolling out to milk the cows. And any night when it says 7:30 I know the whole family's around a well-spread table, and Dad's thanking God for what's on it and asking him to watch over me. I can almost smell the hot biscuits and bacon."

"It's thinking about these things that makes we want to fight when the going gets tough," he concluded. "I can find out what time it is where I am easy enough. What I want to know is what time it is in Utah."

What kind of planning can be done to make the homecoming even greater than their dreams? What can fathers do?

About two years ago a young sailor in whom I had shown an interest called at my office. He told how he had enjoyed himself at the training center at Farragut; of the Sunday School where about ninety percent of the more than two hundred stationed there would attend every Sunday, but his face fairly beamed and his eyes moistened when he said: "My father has quit the use of tobacco; he stopped soon after I enlisted, so mother told me, and is now attending his priesthood meetings." Not so many fathers in the Church are users of tobacco; it may be something else, such as fishing, or hunting, or working in the fields on Sunday that keeps them away from priesthood and sacrament meetings; whatever it is, I commend to all such the course taken by the father of this young sailor.

The breaking of the Word of Wisdom, or the Sabbath day, applies to a comparatively few, but nearly all fathers could plan a pleasant surprise for their boys by being a little kinder, more thoughtful and considerate in and around the home, and express appreciation for services rendered.

The snake crawls out in the sun to get warm, and crawls back under the rocks—voiceless. The bird comes out into the sun and sings his gratitude and expresses his thanks for the sunshine. Everyone loves a bird.

I like the words "continuous courtship" with reference to home life. When we were courting and in the early days of our married life, we would always express our appreciation for the well-cooked meal, the extra dessert; we occasionally brought home a bouquet of flowers or a box of candy. If some husbands did that now, the wife would probably ask, "Is there anything wrong?"

So much for the father's preparation. What about the mother? As a general rule she is just about right. She writes the letters, prepares and sends the cookies and other surprise packages. We hope that these mothers will take care of themselves, so that they will look just as young, or even younger, when the boys come home, as when they left; they might even indulge in a new dress, or a visit to a hair-dresser.' Once in a while, however, we do find a mother or wife who scolds, or is given to nagging. Speaking of nagging, may I quote the following:

A chaplain, after expressing the wish that those at home would spare their kinsmen in uniform, news of troubles about which nothing can be done, adds: You have heard of the husband who wrote to his wife: "Please do not write any more nagging letters. I am five thousand miles away and it doesn't do any good. And besides, I want to fight this war in peace."

What a joy it will be for the big brother in uniform to come home and find the children so grown up; and what a thrill it will be to find more thoughtfulness, courtesy, and love manifested toward one another. What a surprise to find the young brother as tall and straight and clean as the soldier brother himself, and the baby sister, after three or even more years' absence, blooming into young womanhood—even engaged, or perhaps married. There are hundreds, even thousands of our girls either engaged or married. And what about postwar planning on the part of these young girls and war brides? I am taking the liberty to quote four short paragraphs from a talk by a chaplain given to young husbands and prospective husbands, and I ask the young wives and sweethearts to apply the advice to themselves and use it in their postwar planning. It is entitled "An Appeal to Sportsmanship."

THE MEANING OF SPORTSMANSHIP

We in America pride ourselves on our sportsmanship, on our love of fair play. If a fellow is running the 440-yard dash, we like to see him cross the finish line even though all the other runners have already finished. Even men and women who make no claim to being religious speak with disgust of unfairness. The bum on the street will boo the man in the ring when he fights dirty. Fair play and Americanism go hand in hand.

This same spirit of fair play, should prevail in the matter of clean living. Some of you men are married. That fact in itself should challenge you to play fair with that wife of yours. You have no right to expect more of her than you are willing to give. Be as good a man when you go home as when you left, and you can expect her to be as good a woman. [May I add, Be as good a woman when he comes home as when he kissed you good-bye.]

Some of you fellows aren't married. I believe that all of you, when you get ready to marry, will want a girl who is pure and clean. Then be fair with her. Give her as good a man as she is a woman.

That is Americanism. That is sportsmanship. That is fair play. That is what we pride ourselves on in America, the giving as good as we expect to receive.

GREATER PRODUCTION NECESSARY

I haven't time, as I have stated, to speak of postwar planning in the wards and the quorums. But I would like to urge the ward welfare committees to devote much of their time upon this very important subject, emphasizing especially production. Encourage home gardens, welfare gardens, processing of all kinds of foods. I am very grateful that President Clark said what he did about production. I thought immediately about our members and friends in the war-torn countries in our European missions. We still hear from some of them and about them through some of our servicemen. They are still carrying on. This cablegram was received this morning. It is dated April 6th, Basel, Switzerland, Leimenstr. 49:

REPORTS FROM EUROPEAN MISSIONS

Swiss Saints send greetings and best wishes to you and other General Authorities and brethren assembled in conference. Just finished most successful missionwide Easter convention attended by two thousand Saints and friends. Received news from boys in German prisoners' camp. (Signed) Max Zimmer.

I have a few interesting letters recently received, but will not have time to read them. I may get permission to publish them. I will say, however, that after five years of this unprecedented horrible destruction, the food shortage is becoming increasingly desperate. The concluding sentence of a letter from a brother in southern France says: "We have all suffered from hunger and cold, but the members still have faith in God and are awaiting the return of the missionaries."

All our European missions are fairly well supplied with money, but when there is no food to buy, money doesn't help much. In arranging the annual churchwide welfare budget for 1945, the general committee assigned everything in commodities, but in the breakdown by the regional committees to the stakes, and the stakes to the quorums and wards, in all too many cases the line of least resistance has been followed and assessments in cash substituted for commodities. So, instead of so many hundred pounds of butter, for example, we have so many dollars earmarked butter; instead of so many tons of sugar beets, dollars again, earmarked sugar; beef, chickens, and cheese, and processed commodities the same. What our members need is food, not money—even earmarked money. It is a joy in visiting some of the outlying stakes to find that as usual our Relief Societies, our wives and mothers have followed counsel and have their basements and cellars filled to overflowing with sufficient processed foods to last from one to three and four years. This is as it should be—each family self-supporting, with a small surplus for emergencies, or calamities, such as we have at present in the world.

If the way should be opened up in the very near future, and we hope and pray that it will be, to get the necessary help to our members and friends who are hungry, and some of them starving, it will be from these private storehouses that much of the processed food and clothing will have to come.

In conclusion, may I plead that we as a people—as a nation—be less wasteful. If we are served more than we can comfortably eat, have a "portion" of it returned so it will not be wasted. In the United States enough food is wasted, it is said, to feed all the people in the war-torn countries of Europe.

May our boys and men and women in uniform, when they return, find us all less wasteful, more thrifty, and cooperative, and may they find more unity, and faith, and love in our quorums, our wards, and especially in our homes, I pray in the name of Jesus Christ. Amen.

ELDER RICHARD L. EVANS

Of the First Council of the Seventy

It would not require much to convince me, my brethren, that these semi-annual general conferences come every few days. If you know someone whom you would like to age rapidly, just give him some recurring responsibility concerning any part of these proceedings. It is something of an assignment to watch the clock, and to watch President Clark and President McKay, and to watch you, and to think, and to speak at the same time. I read not so long ago an article concerning the responsibility of those who speak and write in time of war, but I am convinced that the gravity of this responsibility is not limited to wartime. Those who speak or write, any time, for the influencing of others, have one of the greatest responsibilities, and surely one which we should not care to undertake in these gatherings without the sustaining help of our Father in heaven.

GOOD GOVERNMENT AND GOOD MEN

There has been running through my mind a statement by William Penn: "If men be good, government can not be bad." At first I was inclined to challenge it seriously, as we are inclined to challenge all statements of broad generalization. I challenged it because I thought of all the exceptions to the rule. I thought of all the peoples, historically and also in the present, who had become captive peoples and oppressed peoples quite beyond their choice or their power to resist. I thought of all the straight-thinking minorities who have resisted the popular fallacies in every generation and in every country. But I became convinced, as I thought further through William Penn's statement, that it had a broad and fundamental truth in it: "If men be good, government can not be bad"—in the long view of things, and admitting all the exceptions.

INDIVIDUALS SHARE RESPONSIBILITY IN WORLD AFFAIRS

For convenience, historians have written history in a manner that gives emphasis to a comparatively few individuals—as though Alexander the Great conquered the world. (We don't hear much about all of those who followed Alexander the Great and made this possible)—or as though Hannibal did what he did, individually; or the Caesars, or the Pharaohs. Even though historians concentrate upon and would make history seem to be the doings of one man, or a few, in every generation, in every country, yet the great host of men and women who follow them carry their share of the responsibility, not discounting the importance of leadership, good or bad.

We are inclined to repeat this fallacy of history in our own generation, if we are not careful. We have had the opportunity of observing at close range the leaders of the world in our generation perhaps more intimately than in any other, for many centuries past, because of our facilities for rapid communication and travel in these days. We have heard the voices, read the thoughts, and have seen both in picture and in reality many of the leading figures of our own day—and we are likely to think, if we are not careful, that all the acts of each nation head up in one man, or in a handful of men, that all of the troubles stem from them. We may think, as Brother Bowen suggested yesterday, that the war is the cause rather than the result of our difficulties.

We are apt to over-simplify history both current and past, and to look for scapegoats and to fix responsibility too conveniently; but I am sure that if we will think a little more closely we will be impressed with the truth that a man isn't a leader unless he has followers, and that he couldn't accomplish those things which he does accomplish unless a very considerable number of people were willing that he should accomplish those things.

I am reminded of one of the statements of Heber C. Kimball, who, in his characteristic and colorful way said, "I will tell you, the Devil has his smart men."<sup>1</sup> Even Satan would be impotent unless he had a considerable following; and so I say, going back to William Penn, whenever and wherever there is deterioration in government, the people may look to themselves. Whenever and wherever there is corruption, the people may look to themselves. Whenever and wherever there is flagrant public waste, the people may look to themselves. Whenever and wherever there is loss of freedom, the people may look to themselves. I am sure that no man, great though he may be, or potentially great in the powers of leadership, could accomplish much of his purposes without a considerable following; and our responsibility for our allegiance as followers is likewise great.

Of course we know that anyone who opposes a profitable evil or anyone who opposes a popular fallacy is certain to be deliberately misunderstood. Nevertheless every generation and every people have produced those straight-thinking minorities who have seen what they have seen and who have felt an obligation to say what they have said; and any man who sees his own generation headed for a precipice at the bottom of which lie tragedy, destruction, sorrow, and misfortune, cannot honorably remain silent. He has an obligation to speak, even though he be misunderstood, and even though false charges be levied against him. This is true at all places in the world at all times.

PRESIDENT BRIGHAM YOUNG'S VIEW OF LEADERSHIP

We have a leadership in this Church, who have an obligation, as President Grant stated yesterday morning, to instruct this people to do anything which the Lord inspires them to do, and I am sure that we must understand the authorities in their fulfilling of this obligation. I am sure that the prophets of God throughout all the ages, have not, in most cases, seen the end fully from the beginning, but it has been given unto them to know in what they must instruct their people whether they could fully state the reasons or not. There are many things that we must still accept on faith.

I should like to read you a quotation from Brigham Young. He had his troubles, too; they are not all confined to our generation. It was at the time when the cornerstones of the Salt Lake Temple were being laid, April 6, 1853. Brother Brigham was the object of much criticism. The people had built their temples in the past, at Kirtland and Nauvoo, and had had to abandon them. They had many practical problems facing them—food, shelter, Indians, and many other stark realities were pressing them. No doubt many of the people thought it was folly at such a time to undertake so great a task. Said President Young:

Some will inquire, "Do you suppose we shall finish this temple, Brother Brigham?" I have had such questions put to me already. My answer is, I do not know, and I do not care. . . . I never have cared but for one thing, and that is, simply to know that I am now right before my Father in heaven. If I am this moment, this day, doing the things God requires of my hands, and I am precisely where my Father in heaven wants me to be, I care no more about tomorrow than though it never would come. I do not know where I shall be tomorrow, nor when this temple will be done—I know no more about it than you do. . . . This I do know—there should be a temple built here. I do know it is the duty of this people to commence to build a temple.<sup>2</sup>

I am sure that this ties in with the statement of President Grant yesterday morning.

THE HOME-COMING OF THE SOLDIERS

I should like to leave this subject for just one moment, and close with another thought which has been mentioned by several speakers at this conference, including Brother McKay previously, and read a couplet which in a very few words states what I think our returning boys, who have been serving their country, expect. It is from a poem by Kenneth Parsons, just two lines:

When we come home again, forget the band. Just have the things we fought for, understand?

I believe this is in the heart of every man who is away from home, in the armed forces. May God grant that they will return to find their homes as they would have them; their children reared in those paths in which they would have guided them; and find the free institutions and the free enterprise for which they have fought; and peace and happiness and the opportunity to live in peace with those they love.

God lives, and has given us life; he still speaks to us through his appointed servants; Jesus is the Christ—which is the testimony I leave with you, in his name. Amen.

President Clark:

The congregation will now sing: "Lord, Dismiss Us With Thy Blessings," Song Folder No. 21, L.D.S. Hymns 315, Hymn Book No. 98.

The closing prayer will be offered by President Christian Call of the Idaho Stake, after which this conference will stand adjourned until 2 o'clock this afternoon. The proceedings of the afternoon session will be broadcast over KSL at Salt Lake City, and KSUB at Cedar City. It will also be carried over KFXD at Nampa, Idaho.

Singing by the congregation, "Lord, Dismiss Us With Thy Blessings."

The closing prayer was offered by President Christian Call of the Idaho Stake.

Conference adjourned until 2 p.m.

SECOND DAY

AFTERNOON MEETING

Conference reconvened at 2 p.m., Saturday, April 7, in the Assembly Hall.

President Clark:

This is the fourth session of the 115th Annual Conference of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints. We are convened in the Assembly Hall on Temple Square, Salt Lake City.

There are present on the stand this afternoon all the General Authorities of the Church as sustained yesterday, except President Grant who is at his home, to which a special wire has been run from the Assembly Hall so that he may "listen in."

The proceedings of this session will be broadcast over KSL at Salt Lake City, and KSUB at Cedar City. It will also be carried over KFXD at Nampa, Idaho.

We will begin the afternoon services by the congregation singing: "O Ye Mountains High," Song Folder No. 12, L.D.S. Hymns No. 338, Hymn Book No. 317. Elder J. Spencer Cornwall will conduct the singing; Elder Alexander Schreiner is at the organ.

The opening prayer will be offered by President Samuel Pollock of the Panguitch Stake.

The congregation joined in singing the hymn, "O Ye Mountains High," after which the opening prayer was offered by Elder Samuel Pollock, President of the Panguitch Stake.

The hymn, "Do What is Right," L.D.S. Hymns No. 185, Hymn Book No. 151, was sung by the congregation.

ELDER JOHN H. TAYLOR

Of the First Council of the Seventy

I am very happy, brethren, to have the opportunity of being at this conference and of speaking to you for a few minutes. As has been stated, we recently lost two of the members of our council, men who were great missionaries, men who had good judgment and good inspiration. I am sure that we will miss them; our associations with them have been long and satisfying. Men who have been intimately associated in a common cause become very close to each other. Separations like this come to all of us, but with the blessings of the Lord, other good men are given to us to carry on the work. We are grateful to have two such good men as Brother Young and Brother Hunter associated with us in the First Council of the Seventy. I am quite certain that we shall love them and hope that they will love us and that with the blessings and inspirations of our Heavenly Father, we as a council may be helpful in his great missionary cause.

SOME OF THE PRIVILEGES OF CITIZENSHIP

Some time ago I was in court where there were a number of people being examined as to their qualifications to become citizens of this great country of ours. The judge asked one of the men this question: "What can you receive as a citizen of this country that you cannot receive without being a citizen?" As an alien, a man could reside in our country, could move about in freedom from place to place, could have the advantages of our schools, could have police protection for himself and family and his business, irrespective of the fact that he was not a citizen. But with all these privileges, he was always an alien, having no part in the feeling and enthusiasm and love of country that belong to us as citizens. One all-important thing that he was unable to enjoy was the right of suffrage—the right to vote and to participate in the government, in its laws and regulations. He could not go out and represent or speak officially for the country or for the officers who might be elected. Therefore, he failed to have one of the great things we value so much.

BLESSINGS THROUGH MEMBERSHIP IN THE CHURCH

We are often asked, "What is there in your Church that I cannot receive without becoming a member?" Well, as a non-member of the Church, he could get all the blessings and all the rewards that have to do with obedience to certain laws. He could be clean and receive from our Heavenly Father all of the blessings that we receive because of our being clean. He could receive the blessings that come to one who is honest, one who is a good neighbor, one who is willing to live up to the obligations of his country. He could participate with us in the blessings of the Word of Wisdom and could have for himself that health and strength and vitality that can come to one who obeys the rules pertaining to this law.

He can have all the blessings that come from keeping the Ten Commandments. By living in harmony with the spirit of the Sermon on the Mount, he can receive all the blessings promised by the Savior.

That is the thing about the Church and kingdom of the Lord. It gives rewards to those who merit them. It is stated in the Doctrine and Covenants that upon every law there is a blessing attached; and all people, provided they can live up to the laws and regulations, will have the promised blessings given to them. But as in the case of citizenship, there are some things that simply cannot come to a man without his becoming a member of the Church and kingdom of our Heavenly Father.

The priesthood of God is one such thing. This priesthood can come only from God himself or from those who are delegated to hold the priesthood and give it to somebody else. You remember the case of the lame man, sitting in front of the temple. When Peter and John came along, he asked for alms. Peter said to him:

... Silver and gold have I none; but such as I have give I thee: In the name of Jesus Christ of Nazareth rise up and walk. (Acts 3:6.)

No man has the authority to speak in the name of the Lord unless he holds the priesthood of God.

You remember the occasion when the seven sons of Sceva trying to do the things that Paul had been doing said unto a man who was afflicted, "... We adjure you by Jesus whom Paul preacheth," and the spirit returned the answer, "Jesus I know, and Paul I know; but who are ye?" (Acts 19:13, 15.) God has always limited the power and the right to speak in his name to the men who hold his Holy Priesthood. Because of this priesthood we have a number of blessings that no one else can have. Others may wish them; they may desire them, but the only way they can have them is by becoming members of his Church.

One blessing of membership is that men and women when entering into holy matrimony may be sealed for time and eternity and not only have each other, but also have their children. Only in the temples of the Lord can this work be done. Another blessing of membership is the constant direction by men who speak and act and are called by God to preside over the Church. We are never left without guidance and without help to meet life's changing problems.

As members of the Church, we have the privilege and opportunity of doing missionary work. Men and women can go out in the name of the Lord as they may be called. Men have the right to act in the name of the Lord, and when they teach, they teach correct doctrine. When they perform certain ordinances they perform those ordinances according to the laws and regulations of our Heavenly Father, and they are done right, and when these things are performed men and women are truly members of the Church and kingdom of our Heavenly Father.

MISSIONARY WORK IN THE STAKES

Just in passing I would like to say a word about our missionaries. In the hands of the brethren who have met together today rests the responsibility for the amount of missionary work that will be done in the Church. You men are the leaders in our stakes and in our wards, and it is through your recommendations that members are called to become missionaries. When we have a ward or a stake that thoroughly believes in the great work that God has given us to do as a Church, we find that we have a great missionary corps of men and women preaching the gospel. Where presiding men are not thoroughly enthusiastic or converted to the missionary cause, we have stakes and wards where not much is done in the missionary line. It is quite true, brethren, that all the priesthood of the Lord can be used in preaching the gospel. Those holding the Aaronic Priesthood can be authorized and sent out to preach the gospel, if necessary, and women can be called to go out and preach the gospel; but to those holding the special calling of seventies there has been given the obligation that they shall preach and teach the gospel. We are in hopes, brethren, you leading men who have this great responsibility in your hands will see that our seventies shall have the opportunity of magnifying their calling through preaching the gospel of Jesus Christ, that, if necessary, they may be released from other duties so that they may preach the gospel either out in the world or in the missions of your stakes. I am quite certain if we could get the seventies necessary for missionary work that we would be able to bring men and women into the Church who are at present running to and fro and cannot understand the gospel of Jesus Christ because there is no preacher or no teacher.

UNDERSTANDING INCREASED THROUGH STUDY

Through membership we have a right to understand more about the work of the Lord. Because of the additional things that have come to us by way of revelation, instead of having only the Bible we have in addition, the Pearl of Great Price, the Book of Mormon, and the Doctrine and Covenants. These enable us to understand what God expects us to do here upon the earth, that we may walk more uprightly and more sincerely than we could without the additional evidence and the additional testimony that come from these great revelations of the Lord. In addition, because of our faith and membership, we have the privilege of understanding doctrines that are not generally understood by the world, such as pre-existence, salvation for the dead, and the resurrection with its three glories. Our understanding is increased, and we gain strength from many things that the Lord has revealed to us for our consolation, for our blessing, and for our encouragement.

May the Lord bless us and help us to value our membership in the Church and our citizenship in the great kingdom of the Lord, that we shall not only use the things that are easy for us to understand and to use, but that we shall search deeply into the ways of the Lord and make use of all the principles and the doctrines and live by all of the standards of the Church, I pray, in Jesus' name. Amen.

ELDER MARION G. ROMNEY

As a preface to what I would like to say this afternoon, I read the following from President Grant's message:

I believe that the elders of Israel in all the different wards and stakes of Zion earnestly desire to know the mind and will of our Heavenly Father, and that they are ready and willing to do anything that is within their power to fulfill that mind and that will and to carry it out in their lives.

It is a great responsibility to address a general conference of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints, and I feel that responsibility keenly. I pray that I may be responsive to the Holy Spirit and that what I say will bring comfort to the hearts of those who listen, and at the same time stimulate us all to examine ourselves and determine more fully to do our Father's will, which, if we do, will bring us peace in this world and finally immortality and eternal life in his presence.

DOING THE WILL OF GOD BRINGS PEACE

To seek to know the Father's will and to comply therewith does not mean abject submission to an arbitrary superior force, but rather bringing ourselves into harmony with the laws and principles prevailing in an orderly universe. It is the only way by which we may ion to which they are entitled, because our leaders put so much stress upon what, to them, are unimportant rules of conduct, such as the nonuse of tea, coffee, tobacco, and intoxicating beverages." He wondered if the rules as to these things and such other, to them, minor things as the payment of tithing and the keeping of the Sabbath day holy, could not be relaxed so that such persons would not feel out of harmony or be embarrassed in the Church.

THE YOKE OF CHRIST

Now, my brethren and sisters, it is not the desire of the Church nor of any man or woman in the Church who has the spirit of the gospel, to discomfort or embarrass or drive away from the purifying and sanctifying influences of the gospel, any person, be he in or out of the Church. Rather, it is their desire to take every person where he now is and build him up, lead him step by step along the straight and narrow path of conforming with gospel standards, until he finds peace and happiness in doing the will of the Father.

This, however, cannot be done by condoning noncompliance with the rules of conduct which the Lord has prescribed, nor by presuming to change them. The words of Jesus were, "Take my yoke upon you." He did not say come on your own terms, but—

Take my yoke upon you, and learn of me; . . . and ye shall find rest unto your souls. (Matt. 11:29.)

The Lord has never revealed a way whereby we can enjoy that rest unto our souls without taking his yoke upon us. The acceptance of the commandments in the Doctrine and Covenants as an expression to us individually of the will of our Father in heaven as to how we should live, and an earnest effort to abide thereby, will do much to bring us peace and happiness while we live in the earth, and to assure us of great joy in the world to come.

LIVING PROPHETS AS GUIDES

Another fundamental to bear in mind in our search is that the manifestations of the Father's will to this generation did not cease with what is written in the Doctrine and Covenants. He has not left us unguided to jangle over the interpretations of those revelations, nor does he leave us ignorant of his will on current issues. He has given us living prophets to interpret those revelations and to declare to us his will on present problems.

When the Lord opened up this dispensation, he chose and appointed the Prophet Joseph Smith through whom to reveal his will. And the peoples of the earth were put under obligation to hear him. More than a year before the Church was organized, the Lord said to the Prophet:

. . . this generation shall have my word through you. (Doc. and Cov. 5:10.)

And he further declared that woe should come upon the inhabitants of the earth if they did not hearken unto his words.

As long as the Prophet lived, the Lord revealed his will to that generation through him. And it is significant how much of what he revealed dealt with the issues of that day. Since the Prophet's martyrdom, the will of the Lord has been given through succeeding prophets, Presidents Brigham Young, John Taylor, Wilford Woodruff, Lorenzo Snow, Joseph F. Smith, and Heber J. Grant, who each in his turn has presided over the Church, and, like unto Moses, has guided the people of his generation on the issues of their day by the spirit of revelation. (See Doc. and Cov. 107:91; 8:2-3.)

During the administrations of all these leaders, those who have accepted them as prophets, who have truly believed that by the spirit of revelation they spoke the Father's will on the issues of the day, who have adjusted their thinking, their living, and their feelings to harmonize with the spirit and the letter of the words of these living prophets—they are the ones who have been comforted and who have had peace in their souls.

Today the Lord is revealing his will to all the inhabitants of the earth, and to members of the Church in particular, on the issues of this our day through the living prophets, with the First Presidency at the head. What they say as a presidency is what the Lord would say if he were here in person. This is the rock foundation of Mormonism. If it ever ceases to be the fact, this will be an apostate Church. But it will never cease to be the fact. When the Prophet Joseph Smith was asked what the difference was between the Latter-day Saint Church and the sectarian churches of the world, he said, "We have the Holy Ghost," by which he meant that by the power of the Holy Ghost the will of our Father is revealed to the minds of the leaders of this Church. So I repeat again, what the presidency say as a presidency is what the Lord would say if he were here, and it is scripture. It should be studied, understood, and followed, even as the revelations in the Doctrine and Covenants and other scriptures. Those who follow this course will not interpret what they say as being inspired by political bias or selfishness; neither will they say that the brethren are uninformed as to the circumstances of those affected by their counsel; or that their counsels cannot be accepted because they are not prefaced by the quotation, "Thus saith the Lord."

Those, and I testify to this out of my own experience, who will through mighty prayer and earnest study inform themselves as to what these living prophets say, and act upon it, will be visited by the spirit of the Lord and know by the spirit of revelation that they speak the mind and will of the Father.

This is a day of great conflict between truth and error. Satan is having a field day with the souls of men. Anti-christs stalk the earth in all lands, including our own. False philosophies and doctrines emanating from the prince of darkness are being presented in such appealing manner as almost to deceive the very elect. There is only one sure way to divine the truth from the error. That is to learn what the mind and will of the Father is on these matters, and then do it. You will find it declared on many issues in the messages of the First Presidency given in the general conferences in 1942. I take the liberty of reading from the one given in April the following:

We again warn our people in America of the constantly increasing threat against our inspired Constitution and our free institutions set up under it. The same political tenets and philosophies that have brought war and terror in other parts of the world are at work amongst us in America. The proponents thereof are seeking to undermine our own form of government and to set up instead one of the forms of dictatorships now flourishing in other lands. These revolutionists are using a technique that is as old as the human race—a fervid but false solicitude for the unfortunate over whom they thus gain mastery, and then enslave them.

They suit their approaches to the particular group they seek to deceive. Among the Latter-day Saints they speak of their philosophy and their plans under it, as an ushering in of the United Order. Communism and all other similar isms bear no relationship whatever to the United Order. They are merely the clumsy counterfeits which Satan always devises of the gospel plan. Communism debases the individual and makes him the enslaved tool of the state to whom he must look for sustenance and religion; the United Order exalts the individual, leaves him his property, "according to his family, according to his circumstances and his wants and needs" (Doc. and Cov. 51:3), and provides a system by which he helps care for his less fortunate brethren; the United Order leaves every man free to choose his own religion as his conscience directs. Communism destroys man's God-given free agency; the United Order glorifies it. Latter-day Saints cannot be true to their faith and lend aid, encouragement, or sympathy to any of these false philosophies. They will prove snares to their feet.

If there be those among us who feel aggrieved, out of harmony, or to criticize what the Presidency say on these burning issues of our times, it would be well to remember that these prophets are but declaring to us the will of the Father, and that the only open road to peace and happiness is to bring ourselves into harmony therewith.

May the Lord help each of us to have a consuming desire to know and do his will, and to recognize that his will is made known to us and all peoples of this generation through the revelations in the Doctrine and Covenants and the interpretations and counsels of the living prophets, I humbly pray in the name of Jesus Christ. Amen.

ELDER JOHN A. WIDTSOE

of the Council of the Twelve Apostles

My dear brethren and you also who may be listening in: I am very glad today that I am a member of the restored Church of Christ. I have had this gladness in my heart all the days of my life, since my early boyhood, and I bear testimony to you this afternoon and witness also, that this Church is of God, established by him, which, as has already been quoted here, will never be cast down or given to another people. We are dealing with eternal realities, everlasting, from the heavens above.

The excellent messages given us by our brethren during this conference have started in our minds, I know, many trains of thought. One particularly has been with me ever since one of the brethren spoke yesterday forenoon. I would like to discuss it with you briefly.

AN ECHO FROM WORLD WAR I

Some years ago I had the opportunity to spend the night in a little tavern or hotel at the famous little town of Chateau Thierry, in France. That little town was a storm center of the great war of a quarter of a century ago. When we left, the next morning, the proprietor or hotel manager, a veteran of the last war, came out to say goodbye to us. Someone said something about the war in which he had served. He promptly pulled down the eyelid of one of his eyes and put his finger on the eyeball. It was an artificial eye, to replace one he lost in the war. Not satisfied with that, he pulled back his cheek and showed us a silver jaw that had been inserted by the surgeons to replace the one he lost in the war. He looked at us and said, "This is all I got out of the war. What good is war?" I believe that man spoke the feeling of the great majority of mankind, of us common men.

SOLUTION FOR THE PROBLEMS OF THE WORLD

Yet we stand now bewildered before another great war. I believe the world has never been so bewildered as at the present time. We cannot understand how this war has come about. We don't know how to solve the problems that will follow. We look into the future with a certain amount of dread. If I read the magazines and reports correctly, many are ready to surrender even their free agencies to try out something new in the hope that it may lead to something better. The answer to all this, by the Church of Christ, is simple. It is the answer that has been given since the beginning of time. If mankind had accepted the gospel of the Lord Jesus Christ, there would have been no bloody wars; and if the world today would accept the gospel of the Lord Jesus Christ, all problems that lie before us would be solved easily and well. We believe, and we have so taught, that every question confronting humanity may be answered by the gospel if we understand the gospel and accept it and use it properly; and every problem before us may be solved in the same manner.

To this reply the leaders of nations say no, or a very doubtful yes. They are willing to concede that religion and the gospel of the Lord Jesus Christ may be very effective in the spiritual field, but not very efficacious in the temporal world of men and women dealing with living problems here upon this earth.

If gospel light is thrown upon Dumbarton Oaks and upon Yalta, the agreements made there, and upon the coming San Francisco conference, it will not be so difficult to write safe treaties or to discover the weaknesses inherent in agreements already made. Men are so willing in working out the problems of the day, to cover with smiling diplomacy, riotous selfishness.

RESPONSIBILITY OF CHURCH MEMBERS

Now then, having said this, let me ask, what is our obligation as a Church and Church members, in this day of confusion. Do we have an obligation? Are we willing to continue as other people, to use our best judgment as men, try to vote this way or that when an election comes up, depending on our human powers? Are we like all the other people on the face of the earth, or has the Lord placed upon us obligations and conditions which make us different from all the world?

We say that the Lord spoke to the Prophet Joseph Smith and through him restored the eternal gospel, formulated in the heavens before the foundations of the earth were laid. The Lord has told us that the gospel is for all men. He has charged us, members of this Church, to carry the gospel message to all the world.

If it is true that peace can be won only through the gospel of Jesus Christ; and if our claim is true, as I verily believe it is, that we alone have the true and full gospel of the Lord Jesus Christ, we carry a tremendous responsibility upon our shoulders. There will then be no world peace until we do our part, accept our high commission and teach the truth to all the world. In that sense we become the custodians, so to speak, of the world's peace, of the world's future, we humble men assembled here, with those who labor in the wards and stakes of Zion. I believe that it is our duty to accept this challenge. We cannot sit in some cozy, warm, spiritual chimney corner, thanking God for the blessings of the gospel, for our membership in the Church, selfishly forgetting all else and everybody else. That is not our work, nor our destiny, nor our business in life, under God's command.

The possession of the gospel, the knowledge of it, does change a man tremendously, but the full joy of the gospel, that joy which we have all seen in many a humble person who has received the gospel, comes only when we use the gospel for others. He who receives must give, that is one of the first and most fundamental of all gospel laws.

Well, you say, we are only a small people, not quite a million people as reported here yesterday. There are about two thousand millions in the world today. Can we do it? Can we teach all the world? We are too few, are we not? Obviously, the first answer that comes when we speak of this high obligation that rests upon us is: We are few, yes. We claim no preeminence in physical or intellectual matters, nor in the affairs of men. But, we have the truth of eternity, and we have faith. Faith and truth are invincible. With the sling of faith and the pebble of truth, like David of old, we may lay low every giant of unbelief and error and opposition to truth in all the world. To go forth in this spirit is the call of the day of Latter-day Israel.

WHOLE-HEARTED SERVICE REQUIRED

You remember that in days gone by, a great cry went forth, "Is there faith in Israel?" That is the cry today, faith not only to bless ourselves in our own mountain valleys, or those of our people in the coast country; but faith that this work will bless all humanity. We belong to a world organization; we have a world message; we are under a world obligation. We must lift our eyes and see this work in its wholeness as the Lord has revealed it to us, and as we have been taught since the days long gone by.

I have the feeling, brethren, that we can't accomplish this work unless we give our whole selves to it. Half-hearted service will not suffice. There must be complete surrender to this work if it shall accomplish the purposes of the Almighty. The old proverb maker said: "Son, son, give me thine heart." Are we giving our hearts to this work that the purposes of the Lord may be accomplished? That is the question for us in this day. That surrender, that giving of one's self, must be full of eagerness. We must not wait to be called to serve. You know what the Lord said to the Prophet Joseph Smith a long time ago about men who wait to be called. We must be eager in service. You remember the story from the days of Christ:

And when he [Jesus] was gone forth into the way, there came one running, and kneeled to him, and asked him, Good Master, what shall I do that I may inherit eternal life? (Mark 10:17.)

That story is for us today, leaders in Israel. Are we so eager that we run to do the will of God, to help work out his purposes?

A LESSON FROM THE STORY OF GIDEON

There is yet another story from the Old Testament, the book on which I grew up and therefore always dear to me. (I speak of growing up on that book before my family joined the Church, in the country of my birth. I was taught the Old Testament every school day.) Do you remember the story of Gideon, Judge of Israel? Midian had set about to destroy Israel. Gideon secured an army of over thirty thousand men to fight the battles of his people. Before he undertook to meet Midian he sent back to their homes all who had fearful hearts, also all who were loiterers, men who, when they came to a water course, would lie down on their stomachs, drink at their leisure, and take it easy. He sent such men back. When he had done this, only three hundred men were left. But they were eager men who wanted to fight the battles of Israel, and who when they came to a water course, had no time to lie down to drink, but cupped their hands and took a swallow of water. With these three hundred men, as you remember, Gideon won the battle for Israel. Numbers do not count in the end. It is even so with modern Israel. That is the thought that has gone through my mind during this conference. It is the message I would leave with you.

SACRIFICE NECESSARY

Of course, such service means sacrifice. Certainly it means sacrifice, but the Lord said to us at the beginning of this great latter-day work, "This is a day of sacrifice." Later on, you recall that he said on one occasion we cannot really live up to our covenants as we should unless we sacrifice. But what does sacrifice matter when we are in the cause of the Lord and feel the power of the spirit of God? Many years ago the message came, "Be still and know that I am God." (Psalm 46:10.) We can trust him. We give a little, and the Lord returns ten-fold, often a hundred-fold. Look at the men of our own Church, who have spent years and years in service to the great cause. They have prospered, not only temporally but spiritually. To them we go for help and counsel. From them we receive support, to make our own lives more beautiful. Of course, sacrifice is required of us; but we, with a great world commission, must lift our eyes to it, prepare for it, have faith for it, and try to do what the Lord requires of us. If we stand ready to give full service, not half service, not half surrender but complete surrender, we shall become mighty men. May that spirit grow strong among us I pray in the name of the Lord Jesus Christ. Amen.

The congregation sang the hymn, "Glory to God on High," L.D.S. Hymns No. 113, Hymn Book No. 137.

ELDER ANTOINE R. IVINS Of the First Council of the Seventy

I stand before you this afternoon, my brethren, with mingled feelings of joy and sadness. I am glad that the absence of President Hardy and President Bennion has been mentioned here this afternoon. They were both men who were very, very dear to me, and I want you all to know that I miss them very keenly. As I sit here on the stand today, I feel their absence because I used to go to both of them for support in the questions that so frequently arose, and I used to sit next to Brother Bennion in all of our conference gatherings. I hope that God will comfort Sister Hardy and Sister Bennion, and that he will give us the power to give them some aid in their trials and make it easier for them. On the other hand, I rejoice in the fine quality of the men who have been selected to take their places. I want to make public acknowledgement of my esteem for them and tell them that they have my support in the work that they shall have to do.

THE COMFORT A TESTIMONY GIVES

I am glad for the testimony I have of the gospel of Jesus Christ and for the faith that it gives me, faith that the work which God initiated in this dispensation, through the instrumentality of the Prophet Joseph Smith, shall go on and on and on. I feel very insignificant as one of the cogs in the great machine which is to carry it forward, but I have gained through my observation and experience the faith that God will see it go forward, regardless of the fact that those of us who are here now will eventually lay down the burdens of life. I like to think of life as something that began before mortality and something that will go on after it; that death is but an incident in life, just as is birth, and I like to think that these companions of mine now are exercising an influence just as they did here. The sun rises in the morning, and we feel its warmth during the day. For us it sets in the evening, but when it sets for us, it warms another land. I feel that those fine men are doing that very thing, that through their personalities and the power that they gained through their experiences here, they are warming another land and helping another group of men and women. I am thankful for that faith, for it helps me over many difficult problems in life.

THE RESPONSIBILITY OF LEADERSHIP

We who are here, this afternoon, represent the leadership of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints. We come together for inspiration and to learn better how to do the various things that we have to do in administering the work of the Church. We have a great and grave responsibility because we stand at the head of this large group of people, and it is expected of us that we will show them the way to go. It is true, as has been said, that he who holds a lantern to light the footsteps of his friends, lights his own. In leading the people we see more clearly our own duties, our own responsibilities, and the pathway that we should follow. It is a great obligation, and I stand in fear and trembling before you and before God when I think of my responsibility in the position I occupy. I hope that I may have your faith and prayers as my life carries on, to do it properly.

Man is the crowning creation of God, who spent a long time fashioning the world and the plants and the animals that grow upon it. As his crowning effort he placed man to rule and reign over them. Man is the great workmanship of God. To bring about the eternal life of man is his great objective. He starts us out as almost the weakest of all of the animal creations which he has placed upon the world. There are few of the animals that are born as weak and puny as we, and all of them grow more quickly to maturity and to independence than we. We are the most dependent of all the creations, I believe, but we grow, if we are properly nurtured and cared for, into the crowning glory of the work of God. To take that new soul and tiny body as it comes into the world and develop it into a personage who will eventually attain to the qualities of godhood is a responsibility that few of us appreciate in its enormity. We talk a great deal about the delinquency of this present day, juvenile delinquency and the delinquency of others, but we seem to be startled mainly with what we term juvenile delinquency. The other night I sat and listened to a discussion by one of our prominent educators on that question and one of the things that I gained from his discussion was this statement, "Back of every delinquent child, there is a responsible and frequently a delinquent adult." Now if we will think of it that way, think what a responsibility we have. It isn't their fault, if that is true, there is delinquency in the world, but it is our fault and the fault of our grandfathers, because we respond to influences down through all these generations, the present generation being the product of the past. When we think, too, of a child whose career is changed by some careless act or teaching of ours and that he becomes an undesirable member of society passing his undesirable qualities down to future generations, which pyramid as a great fan beyond him, how can we think of the end of that evil influence and how can we determine the enormity of the offense; thus it is not surprising that we read in Matthew and in Mark and in Luke the statement of the Savior that "he who shall offend the least of these little ones who believe in me, it were better for him that a millstone had been tied about his neck and he had been drowned in the sea." (See Matt. 18:6; Mark 9:42; Luke 17:2.) Verily, that is true, for had that been done before his evil influence was felt, it had been better for the world.

THE PROPER WATCHCARE OF CHILDREN ENJOINED

Now, brethren, the children of this Church are our children. God has entrusted us with their care, and ours is the problem to see that they are properly taught and led. I am very, very sure that there are many homes, and perhaps most of the homes of the Latter-day Saints, where this obligation is properly appreciated and where the parents do what is within their power properly to lead as well as direct their children, and I give you in testimony of it the fact that I have seen many young men and women come out of these homes with a faith that is fine and holy. At the same time, it is quite possible that some of us do not attend to these responsibilities as we should. We have frequent cases reported to us where children are on the streets at all hours of the day and night, while their parents are off on some errand, perhaps for pleasure, perhaps for gain, a questionable gain when you consider the sacrifice they make for it. So there may be among us some cases which should have attention, and we who are here are the ones who are charged with that part of it, to see that our people are properly taught and properly led.

It isn't every parent that has the tact to do those things as he should, and it isn't every parent whose children go astray who is responsible for that, because they come under the influence of people outside the family as well as within it, but when we expose them to those external influences we should do everything within our power to protect them from within. Perhaps we who are here in this section of the country have felt so secure in the past that we haven't done as much as we should in preparation and in protection.

I remember visiting an outlying stake established in a large community. When I suggested to the president of the stake that we at home were worried over the temptations that are now being presented to our young people, he said, "President Ivins, we have had to contend with temptation since we came into this section. Our children have developed a method of withstanding it, and we can trust them." So it seems possible to build up a resistance to those things. That is our charge and that is our task. I wonder how many of us get close enough to our children, so that when they come in in the evening, they come to our bedside and tell us where they have been, and how many of us get close enough to them that they will come and confide in us their problems as their advancing years come upon them? Too many of us, I am sure, as parents, are backward in teaching them some of the principles of life which they should learn, and there develops between father and son, between mother and daughter, a barrier that seems hard to surmount; but when we recognize that, at its very first appearance, we should consciously attempt to break it down, tactfully, nicely. Let us see if we can't gain the confidence of these children that we are producing, and let us who are the fathers in the wards and the stakes of the Church see if we can't so gain the confidence of the fathers and mothers that we can talk to them in the same spirit, that we can teach them the value of family prayer. It is astonishing how many people in this last report that we received have admitted that they don't practice regularly family prayer. Now there is no greater safeguard in the family, and there is no greater protection to a child than that habit which he should develop. The principles of integrity, righteousness, and upright living should also be taught them. If it is true that back of every erring child there is an erring parent or other adult, there is a grave responsibility resting upon us, and we shouldn't shirk it; we shouldn't evade it because we are backward or bashful with our children. We should face it fairly and squarely with our arms around them, bringing them close to our hearts and talking confidentially with them. Some of the greatest pleasures of my life have been the sessions that I had with my father, under the stars of heaven, sleeping side by side with him. We should get close to those children; we should love them. We would give our lives for them, but frequently we are so embarrassed and bashful that we won't even talk plainly to them in love and good will. I don't mean a dominating spirit or anything of that kind. I remember one time in going through a mission we attempted to teach a father that he should put his arms around his child, his boy, and bring him close to him. The man who made the appeal in the public address said, "You must hang on to your children," and the man who translated into Spanish, said, "You must govern them with a hand of mail." You can imagine how far we got. That isn't what I mean, brethren. "We must put our arms around them; we must love them; we must teach them; we are the leaders of the people, the heads of the wards and stakes; and what are we doing for them? Let every man of us look himself in the eye, and see if he can say, 'I have done my full duty, I am satisfied and happy.' If he can't, I call him to repentance.

May God give us the strength to do it, I ask in the name of Jesus. Amen.

ELDER SEYMOUR DILWORTH YOUNG

Of the First Council of the Seventy

A good portion of my life I have thought that the calls which came to those who are to do things for the Church, while officially coming from the prophets, perhaps might come as a still, small voice speaking to the person in the manner of the words of the Lord when he spoke to Samuel. He called, "Samuel." Samuel had to answer two or three times. The words which came to me sounded distinctly like those of President David O. McKay.

THE WAY THE CALL CAME

I submit to you the questions he asked of me because I believe there have never been propounded, to me at least, three more innocent questions. He said, "Where are you?" Of course, I was in my office. He said, "What are you doing?" I said, "I am working." He said, "Would you like to attend conference?" Well, the only reason I wasn't attending conference was because I had no ticket. So I assured him that I would be very happy to attend conference.

He told me he wanted me to attend conference, would I please come down as quickly as I could and sit in the audience and see him at noon. That was as much as I knew until I got to the temple gate, when a very polite and delightful officer of the Salt Lake City police force informed me that I was a member of the First Council of the Seventy, and for the first time in my life I was escorted by a policeman across the temple grounds.

PERSONAL EXPERIENCES

Now I know, and many of you know, that, whatever the reason why I am called (and I do not know what it is) I should not be here in any event without the love and the backing and the work of the men with whom I have labored in the past twenty-two years. A sprinkling of those men sit in this audience today. All I can see before me is a sea of faces, as one man put it this morning, but there are islands in that sea, and those islands are the faces of my friends from all parts of the four counties which I have served so long. They took me to their hearts twenty-two years ago after President Samuel G. Dye and President C. E. Smith, who were then members of our executive board of the Ogden council, with other men, thought I was honest looking enough to try to be their Scout executive, so they voted me in.

I moved to Ogden and that is where my house is, but over these years I have learned my home is there only in part. My home has been in Park Valley, in Snowville, in Howell, in Deweyville, in Croyden, in Devil's Slide, in Morgan, in Willard, in Mantua, in Kaysville, in Layton, in Clearfield, in Syracuse, in Hooper, in Plain City, in Huntsville, and in all of the hamlets where boys have been gathered together as Boy Scouts.

In the counties of northern Utah, loyal bodies of men, under the direction of their bishops and stake presidents, have been called and have labored with those lads. It has been my fortunate lot to serve with them and to serve them. I know of no better group, and it is likely that I shall never meet a more loyal group.

They have been an honor to me, loyal and true. I have camped with them; I've hiked the hills with them; we've talked over Scout problems together; and we've tried to make the boys of the Church better Latter-day Saints. As I say, if I have had the call which I have received, come, it must be because of the support these men have given me, not because of any inherent virtue which I possess, and I pay tribute to them, and I thank them for their support.

Perhaps I shouldn't say this, but when I reached home last night, I received a call from a very close friend who said, "Well, that's fine for you, but what will the poor Boy Scouts do?" I can assure you that there are dozens of professional men in scouting who are Latter-day Saints, humble, honest, upright men who could step into the position I hold and do a much better job than I am doing or have done, so you need not fear, my friends of the Ogden area. When the time comes for me to step down from that position and take another, there will rise up, at the hands of those who elect him, one who will do a better job than I, and one with whom you will be satisfied, I am sure.

A TRIBUTE TO ELDER SAMUEL O. BENNION

I should like to pay tribute to my old mission president, and to his wife. I was one of those persons who were fortunate enough to be under the direction of President Samuel O. Bennion, back in the days when he was a vigorous mission president. He sent me out with Elder Boyd Rogers without purse or scrip, into the wilds of Louisiana to preach the gospel. I didn't know the reason why he sent me to Louisiana, so he told me one time. I was quite a loud youth. I had a voice like a foghorn, and I laughed like one, so when he heard me laugh in the mission office one day after I arrived, he said, "You go to Louisiana. You can laugh down there, and they can't hear you." Elder Rogers and I went down there where they couldn't hear us, and for three days they didn't hear us. We were lost in the piney woods of Louisiana. One of the happiest moments I have experienced in this conference today is to have Elder Rogers, whom I haven't seen since, step up here and make himself acquainted with me.

President Bennion was a father to me. Sister Bennion was a mother for more than two years. I regret the passing of President Bennion more than I can tell you, and I should like to say over this radio to Sister Bennion that I love her nearly as much as I love my own mother.

I desire to serve you in humbleness and sincerity, but I also desire strength of body and of mind to testify to the truth of what I know so well. I know that Christ founded this Church in these last days through the Prophet Joseph and that it sits solidly and squarely on the rock of revelation, given to its living prophet, President Heber J. Grant. If I can bear that testimony to the world wherever I am called, I shall be happy. I shall serve with all the strength I have and with all my might and with all my mind, until that time when I am called hence, and meet my father and my grandparents and my son. I ask it in the name of Christ. Amen.

President Clark:

You have just listened to President Seymour Dilworth Young of the First Council of the Seventy.

I should like to tell you, President Young, that President Bennion left a record of your work in the mission field, which speaks as highly of your devotion to your work and of you yourself, as you have spoken here regarding President Bennion.

Elder Sonne, of the Assistants to the Twelve, will be our next and concluding speaker.

ELDER ALMA SONNE

Assistant to the Council of the Twelve Apostles

My brethren, it seems to me that the circumstances under which we meet and the stirring messages to which we have listened give rise to many reflections. I rejoice with you in the strength and stability of the Church. I rejoice with you in the zeal and the enthusiasm of the leaders of this Church, and I rejoice with you in the faith and the integrity and the unswerving devotion of the membership of this Church. I say to you that God is at the helm. He is directing this people. He will continue to inspire the leaders of this Church. I appreciate more than I can tell my membership in the Church, my testimony of the truth, the great privileges, and the great opportunities which have come to me because of that membership.

ACCOMPLISHMENTS OF THE CHURCH

Reference has been made frequently to the greatness of the Church. The Church is great, not necessarily great in number, because there are many churches which outnumber us in members, but our Church, the Church of Christ, is great in purpose, in plan and objectives. It is great in leadership, past and present, local and general. It is great in historical background; its history forms a big part in the drama of American accomplishments. Our history is colorful, interesting, stirring, full of romance, full of tragedy, and yet full of achievement. The membership of this Church have built villages, cities, commonwealths, churches, schools, and temples—and the end is not yet. The organization and the movement characteristic of the Church have always been surcharged with a constructive spirit. Past leaders have subdued the desert. They have set up high standards for you and me to follow. They have developed a literature that will live in the world, a literature that explains and interprets the teachings of Jesus, of Paul, of Moses, and of other great men who stand as the pivots of history. What would these men say if they came back today with a message? What would Moses, the lawgiver of Israel say? He would teach, as he taught when he lived, the divinity of the Ten Commandments. So important are these commandments that neither men nor nations can violate them, if they want to live and achieve. What would Paul, the apostle, say? He would say to the skeptics as he did to King Agrippa, "Why should it be thought a thing incredible with you, that God should raise the dead?" (Acts 26:8), virtually saying, "You ask me to explain the resurrection. I call upon you to substantiate the denial of this great doctrine." He would say, as he did to King Agrippa, "... believest thou the prophets?" (Acts 26:27.) I tell you the world has gone astray because they have failed to believe the prophets.

What would Jesus say? He would preach again his wonderful, unparalleled Sermon on the Mount and tell the nations to heed the teachings, because in it are the elements of salvation. What would Joseph Smith say? He would give his testimony as he gave it when he was alive. He would tell you and me and the world that he saw God the Father, that he gazed upon him and heard the voice of the risen Redeemer. I testify to you that God's work has been established upon the earth. It will grow and increase until it reaches the hearts of men everywhere. It will not fail. God help us to discharge our responsibilities and to introduce into our lives the saving principles of the gospel of the Lord Jesus Christ, I pray in his name. Amen.

PRESIDENT J. REUBEN CLARK, JR.First Counselor in the First Presidency*

There are three or four minutes still left. Perhaps we should not let them go without trying to have something said that might be helpful.

I am sure we have all enjoyed the spirit of the conference to this time. I am equally sure that that same spirit will remain with us during the balance of the conference, for we meet in humility with a sense of our own unworthiness and with a desire to serve God and keep his commandments.

Nearly two thousand years ago the Lord, walking by the seashore, again saw brethren whom he had seen before. They were busy with their nets and their boats. And he said to them: "Follow me and I will make you fishers of men." They had little training, little education; they were of the humble folk of the land in which they lived, but they had spirit and a spirituality, they had faith; so they left their nets and their boats and followed him. And that is all the Lord requires of us today.

I think perhaps he cares little for our achievements among men, little for what we have done in a worldly way in the past, provided we come to him with a qualification which seems to me to be all-embracing: a pure heart and a contrite spirit. Without these we shall fail, with them we can but succeed.

The Lord expects this from all of us at all times and on all occasions. He expects us to forget the honors we may have gained from this world and our work therein and to come to him, humble and contrite, with a firm desire and a firm determination to follow him and become fishers of men. May this be our lot, I humbly pray in the name of Jesus. Amen.

President Clark:

The Congregation will now sing: "Abide With Me," Song Folder No. 17, L.D.S. Hymns 180, Hymn Book No. 376.

President Moses C. Taylor of the South Summit Stake will offer the closing prayer, after which the conference will stand adjourned until 7 o'clock this evening. That meeting will not be broadcast. The sessions at 10 and 2 o'clock on tomorrow, Sunday, will be broadcast over KSL at Salt Lake City, and KSUB at Cedar City.

The congregation sang the hymn, "Abide With Me."

Elder Moses C. Taylor, President of the South Summit Stake, offered the closing prayer.

Conference adjourned until 7 p.m.

SECOND DAY

EVENING MEETING

The Saturday evening session of the Conference convened at 7 o'clock p.m. The Tabernacle Choir Men's Chorus was present and furnished music for this session.

President Clark:

Brethren, it is a great relief to be free from the tyranny and slave-driving of these "mikes." Tonight we can go forward as we would like.

I notice—I hope you will pardon me—that increasingly there are more people coming in late. I know you must be busy but please try to get in early, and tomorrow morning particularly. We shall then meet in the Tabernacle for the broadcast and Church of the Air sermon, and we should like you to be there certainly not later than a quarter to 10:00, because we have to have our opening exercises before the broadcast begins, and there must be some time between the time that we get through to the beginning of the broadcast.

Tomorrow afternoon we shall meet again in this building at 2 o'clock, and I repeat: please, in the morning particularly, be on time.

We will begin the evening services by the congregation singing with the Male Chorus: "Come All Ye Sons of God." You will find it in your Song Folder No. 25.

Elder J. Spencer Cornwall is conducting the singing, and Elder Alexander Schreiner is at the organ.

After the singing, President Joel G. Sedgwick, of the San Bernardino Stake, will offer the invocation.

Singing by the congregation, "Come All Ye Sons of God."

The opening prayer was offered by Elder Joel G. Sedgwick, President of the San Bernardino Stake.

The Tabernacle Choir Men's Chorus sang, "Prayer At Evening," (by Josephi).

President Clark:

The considerable number of officers and General Authorities to whom we wish to give opportunities to speak, compels us to have this meeting, which formerly was known as a Priesthood meeting, take on more and more the character of one of the regular meetings of the General Conference, and in order to get through we are under the necessity of asking some of the Brethren, each time, to forego the opportunity of being heard "over the air," and to speak to those only who are here.

Our first speaker tonight will be Elder Ezra T. Benson, of the Council of the Twelve.

ELDER EZRA TAFT BENSON
Of the Council of the Twelve Apostles

I cannot refrain, my brethren, from expressing my personal gratification on the selection of the two fine men, Brother Seymour Dilworth Young and Milton Reed Hunter to serve as members of the General Authorities of the Church. As one who has recently come into the presiding councils of the Church, I can assure them that they can look forward to some of the sweetest, most soul-satisfying experiences that come to men in this life. With all my heart I welcome them and assure them of my love and confidence.

OBLIGATIONS RESTING UPON THE CHURCH

I have been impressed during this conference, with the great responsibilities and obligations resting upon this Church and its people. I was impressed with the inspiring message of President Grant, which called to our attention some of these obligations which are ours as leaders. I have often felt that there are three great and important obligations, possibly over-shadowing all others, which rest upon this people and upon this great Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints. The first of these, at least in the order of emphasis in this dispensation, is that of missionary work—the responsibility which rests upon this people to carry the message of the restored gospel to the people of the world. We have been engaged in that work ever since the Church was organized, yea, even before. Secondly, we have the responsibility of building up the stakes and wards and branches of Zion. This entails the building of a material kingdom, as well as a spiritual kingdom. It entails the providing of facilities—houses of worship, temples, seminary buldings—that are so necessary for us to carry on the spiritual part of the program. It entails taking care of our people, temporally, physically, culturally, and socially, as well as spiritually. And in the third place, we have the great responsibility of performing certain sacred ordinances in the temples of the Lord,—a responsibility which rests upon every holder of the priesthood as well as upon the sisters of the Church.

MISSIONARY RESPONSIBILITY

I was pleased to note the importance which President Grant placed in his message on the first mentioned obligation—that of missionary service. In reading the revelations which the Lord has given to us in this dispensation, I have been impressed to note that probably on no other subject has he referred so frequently as in the case of our obligation as a people to carry this message of the restored gospel to the people of the world. In reading again the revelations which the Lord has given us, I noted that at least twenty-five to thirty of these revelations make specific mention of this great responsibility which is ours. I noted, too, that in some of the revelations, given more than a year before the Church was organized, the Lord made special mention of this important mission of the Latter-day Saints. May I call your attention, this evening, to a few of those revelations? There will not be time to discuss, in any detail, any of them. I simply call them to your attention. In February of 1829, the Lord said this:

Now behold, a marvelous work is about to come forth among the children of men.

Therefore, O ye that embark in the service of God, see that ye serve him with all your heart, might, mind and strength, that ye may stand blameless before God at the last day. (Doc. and Cov. 4:1, 2.)

Then he goes on to point out in that and other revelations:

Behold, the field is white already to harvest; therefore, whoso desireth to reap, let him thrust in his sickle with his might, and reap while the day lasts, that he may treasure up for his soul everlasting salvation in the kingdom of God. (Doc. and Cov. 6:3.)

Many of those who came in contact with the Prophet Joseph, even prior to the organization of the Church, became convinced and received testimonies of the genuineness of his message. It was not an uncommon thing for them to approach the Prophet and ask him to inquire of the Lord as to their responsibilities and obligations. You recall the important part played by the Whitmer family. It was in the home of Peter Whitmer, Sr., that the Book of Mormon was translated—at least the latter part of it was completed there. John, David, and Peter Whitmer, Jr., approached the Prophet and asked if he would inquire of the Lord as to what they might do,—what was their duty as men who had recently received the testimony of the truth. The Prophet made inquiry and we have three sections of the Doctrine and Covenants devoted to the answer to these inquiries. They are very similar. May I read from section 15—the answer to the request of John Whitmer.

Hearken, my servant John, and listen to the words of Jesus Christ, your Lord and your Redeemer.

For behold, I speak unto you with sharpness and with power, for mine arm is over all the earth.

And I will tell you that which no man knoweth save me and thee alone—

For many times you have desired of me to know that which would be of most worth unto you.

Behold, blessed are you for this thing, and for speaking my words which I had given you according to my commandments.

And now, behold, I say unto you, that the thing which will be of most worth unto you will be to declare repentance unto this people, that you may bring souls unto me, that you may rest with them in the kingdom of my Father. Amen.

It was only a short time after this that the Lord in another revelation, in which he indicated the calling of the quorum of the Twelve Apostles in this dispensation, made this statement:

Remember the worth of souls is great in the sight of God; For, behold, the Lord your Redeemer suffered death in the flesh; wherefore he suffered the pain of all men, that all men might repent and come unto him. (Doc. and Cov. 18:10 and 11.)

And further:

And if it so be that you should labor all your days in crying repentance unto this people, and bring, save it be one soul unto me, how great shall be your joy with him in the kingdom of my Father. (Doc. and Cov. 18:15.)

The Lord spoke frequently regarding the obligations of the elders of the Church and ofttimes commended them for their faithfulness and devotion, even to the extent of indicating that whatever they spoke when moved upon by the Holy Ghost would be the will of the Lord, the word of the Lord, and would be scripture to the people. Yet, at times, in those days, as in this day, there were men who feared men more than the Lord, and occasionally he had reason to chastise some of the elders of the Church.

In section 60, we read the following verse:

But with some I am not well pleased, for they will not open their mouths, but they hide the talent which I have given unto them, because of the fear of man. Wo unto such, for mine anger is kindled against them.

And then in the 68th section—reference to which I have already made—

And whatsoever they shall speak when moved upon by the Holy Ghost shall be scripture, shall be the will of the Lord, shall be the mind of the Lord, shall be the word of the Lord, shall be the voice of the Lord, and the power of God unto salvation. (Doc. and Cov. 68:4.)

And this additional great and important promise, made to those who go forward as missionaries carrying the message of the restored gospel:

And any man that shall go and preach this gospel of the kingdom, and fail not to continue faithful in all things, shall not be weary in mind, neither darkened, neither in body, limb, nor joint; and a hair of his head shall not bow to the ground unnoticed. And they shall not go hungry, neither athirst. (Doc. and Cov. 84:80.)

So the early missionaries of the Church went forward, beginning with Samuel H. Smith, only a few days after the Church was organized. The number increased until the message was carried to all parts of the then known United States—into Canada, and by 1837, missionaries were on the eastern hemisphere. Even during the dark days of Missouri and Illinois and in the pilgrimage across the plains, missionaries went forward with their work. At times it was interrupted slightly, but always there was that urge and desire on the part of the elders of the Church, who had burning within their souls the testimony of the truth—to carry the message of the restored gospel to the people of the world. After the Saints arrived in the valley, it was not an uncommon thing to have read long lists of names of men attending the general conference of the Church, who were called to go into the mission field and carry the message of the restored gospel. In later years it became the custom to issue the calls by letter.

A PERSONAL FAMILY EXPERIENCE

I shall ever be grateful for an experience which came into our family during this latter period that I refer to; something over thirty years ago. It was during the time when sacrament meetings were held on Sunday afternoon, at two o'clock, at least in the rural wards. I remember very well this particular Sunday afternoon, as father and mother returned from sacrament meeting, in the one horse buggy. As they drove into the yard and their little brood of seven kiddies gathered around the buggy, we witnessed a thing which we had never seen before in our family. Both father and mother were in tears. We had often seen mother in tears and father, offering consolation, or father weeping and mother offering sympathy. But never before had we seen them both crying at the same time. We inquired as to the reason, and we were assured that everything was all right. As we followed them into the house and sat down in the living room, mother told us that father had received a letter from Box "B." That was a call to go on a mission. She explained that they were grateful that he was considered worthy to go and that they were happy; but they knew that it meant separation for a period of two years, and they had never been separated more than one night at a time in all of their married life.

This is only a little thing. Practically every family in the Church could tell similar and even more impressive experiences in connection with this great missionary movement. Father went, as your fathers and grandfathers went. The eighth member of our family was born after he got into the field. How I appreciate the faith of our mothers, and our grandmothers. Important has been their responsibility in connection with this great missionary service.

MISSIONARY WORK OF MEN IN THE ARMED SERVICE

Now, during this critical period, through which we are passing—this war period—our missionary program has been seriously interfered with. I visited a mission not long ago and found not one single young man of military age in the missionary service—all were in the armed service of their country. The missionary corps was about ten percent of the normal number and made up almost entirely of young women missionaries and elderly married couples. And yet, as I have thought of this war condition, through which we are passing, and the effect upon our missionary program,—I cannot help feeling that we are probably doing more total missionary work today than we have ever done in the history of the Church. While our number of full-time missionaries has been reduced, we have, it is estimated, almost one hundred thousand of our young men in the service of their country, hundreds and thousands of whom are doing effective missionary work.

There came to my office a few days ago a young marine, a former stake missionary, with one of his buddies. He told me that he had been doing missionary work with his associates. He had recently baptized this young man, and they had come to the Church office building, during their leave, in the hope that this new convert to the Church could receive a patriarchal blessing.

Only this week there came to my office several young men, in the uniform of their country, who were thrilled with the experiences they were having in the mission field, although in the service of their country. One of them said, "Brother Benson, it is just like being on another mission. Conditions are different, but we have opportunities to preach the gospel, and we are taking advantage of it." A letter from a young man down in the South Pacific, only a few days ago, told of the struggle they had had on one of the islands to get together a small group of Latter-day Saints. He said the first time they held a meeting there were only three present. Then, gradually the number increased until the day he wrote the letter, which was Sunday, he said, "There were sixteen of us at the service today. Four of the boys have joined the Church since the war started."

And so, my brethren, I feel that we have cause to rejoice that we have boys in the service with faith sufficient, with the testimony of the truth that impels them to carry that missionary spirit to their buddies in arms.

THE MESSAGE OF THE RESTORATION MUST GO FORWARD

I know there are many of our friends outside the Church who wonder why we do it, why we make the sacrifice, why we go to the expense of sending out missionaries. We have sent, it is estimated, approximately seventy-five thousand missionaries into the field during the brief existence of the Church; at a cost, I am sure, if we figure the money expended and the income sacrificed, of possibly more than two hundred million dollars. Why do we do it? I received a letter following the last general conference from a young man from this city, not a member of the Church, who asked that very question:

"Why does the Mormon Church continue to send missionaries out into the world, particularly to Christian countries?" May I read the words of the First Presidency of this Church, uttered three years ago yesterday, from this very pulpit, in which they gave answer to this question.

It is our duty, divinely imposed, to continue urgently and militantly to carry forward our missionary work. We must continue to call missionaries and send them out to preach the gospel, which was never more needed than now, which is the only remedy for the tragic ills that now afflict the world, and which alone can bring peace and brotherly love back amongst the peoples of the earth.

Therefore no act of ours or of the Church must interfere with this God-given mandate. This is not a matter of our own choosing. It is not something that has been devised by man. The Lord has made it clear to us, my brethren, that the responsibility is ours, as holders of the priesthood, to carry this message of the restored gospel to the people of the world. And now, during this period of war-stimulated prosperity, when money seems to flow freely, we hope that as leaders in Zion—as fathers—we are making some plans to create a reserve so that when this great struggle is over, our missionary work can go forward with greater impetus and in greater volume than ever before in the history of the Church.

THE PREFACE TO THE LORD'S COMMANDMENTS

I should like to refer, in closing, to one other section in the Doctrine and Covenants. I mention this and call this revelation to your attention for the purpose of indicating that our message is a world message. It is not regional, it is not national, it is a message intended for all God's children. I refer to the first section of the Doctrine and Covenants, given years after some of these revelations that I have referred to. It was given for a particular purpose, to appear as the preface to this book of commandments which the Lord has given us in this dispensation. These are the words of the Lord, to this Church and to the world:

Hearken, O ye people of my Church, saith the voice of him who dwells on high, and whose eyes are upon all men; yea, verily I say: Hearken ye people from afar; and ye that are upon the islands of the sea, listen together. For verily the voice of the Lord is unto all men, and there is none to escape; . . . And the voice of warning shall be unto all people, by the mouths of my disciples, whom I have chosen in these last days. . . . Behold, this is mine authority, and the authority of my servants, and my preface unto the book of my commandments, which I have given them to publish unto you, O inhabitants of the earth.

And then further on:

And again, verily I say unto you, O inhabitants of the earth: I the Lord am willing to make these things known unto all flesh; For I am no respecter of persons, and will that all men shall know that the day speedily cometh; the hour is not yet, but is nigh at hand, when peace shall be taken from the earth, and the devil shall have power over his own dominion. . . . Search these commandments, for they are true and faithful, and the prophecies and promises which are in them shall all be fulfilled. What I the Lord hath spoken, I have spoken, and I excuse not myself; and though the heavens and the earth pass away, my word shall not pass away, but shall all be fulfilled, whether by mine own voice or by the voice of my servants, it is the same. (Doc. and Cov. 1:1-3, 4, 6, 34-35, 37-38.)

And so, my brethren of the priesthood, our message is a world message, the obligation is ours. The Lord expects us to carry his message to the inhabitants of the earth. Possibly never before in the history of the world, has there been a greater need for the simple, but divine message of the restored gospel. God help us to do our duty in this respect, I pray in the name of Jesus Christ. Amen.

ELDER JOSEPH F. MERRILL

Of the Council of the Twelve Apostles

Brethren, we are alone this evening, the microphone having been switched off from the powerful KSL broadcasting station. We, therefore, become a priesthood leadership meeting of the same type as we are now holding as a part of stake quarterly conferences. So it will be in order for me, I hope, to talk about matters that primarily concern priesthood officers.

EFFECTS OF HARSHNESS AND KINDNESS

In the bishops' meeting last evening in this hall, Bishop M. O. Ashton told two stories that deeply impressed me. Each story was about a bishop and some boys. In the first one, a group of boys engaged in some Halloween pranks of a rather serious, provotative nature. The bishop secured the names of the boys and charged them to come to the sacrament meeting and publicly ask forgiveness for engaging in the pranks committed, on pain of excommunication for failure to do so. In consequence there are in that community today a number of families that grew up outside of the Church.

In the second case a group of boys and a bishop were involved. A wedding party was held at the bishop's home. A big freezer of ice cream waited on the back porch for the refreshment hour. When the cream was to be served, it was observed that the freezer was empty. Pondering over the matter the bishop decided to invite the guilty boys to an ice cream festival and provided two freezers of ice cream for the occasion. All the boys accepted the invitation. When the lads were seated at the feast, it was noticed that tears began to run down one boy's face. Soon all the other boys were in tears also. From among that group have come some of the finest leaders in their community.

Those were the factual stories told by Bishop Ashton. Hearing them I was reminded of section 121:39-41, Doctrine and Covenants, which reads as follows:

We have learned by sad experience that it is the nature and disposition of almost all men, as soon as they get a little authority, as they suppose, they will immediately begin to exercise unrighteous dominion. Hence many are called, but few are chosen. No power or influence can or ought to be maintained by virtue of the priesthood, only by persuasion, by long-suffering, by gentleness and meekness, and by love unfeigned.

The two bishops of the story were undoubtedly actuated by the best of motives. Not for a moment would I question that. But one bishop was wise and the other unwise. The thought in the mind of one was to use persuasion, long-suffering, gentleness, meekness, and love, so beautifully stated in the revelation quoted. In the case of the other bishop he seems to have acted impulsively, yielding to the influence of the evil power. He forgot the scriptural injunction found in the Doctrine and Covenants 64:9-10:

Wherefore, I say unto you, that ye ought to forgive one another; for he that forgiveth not his brother his trespasses standeth condemned before the Lord; for there remaineth in him the greater sin. I, the Lord, will forgive whom I will forgive, but of you it is required to forgive all men."

I do not find in the teachings of the Master the word "must" used in the sense of force. But we do find the message of the foregoing quoted scripture printed in a beautiful hymn, found in the L.D.S. Hymn Book, 24th edition, 1905, the first two stanzas being as follows:

Know this, that ev'ry soul is free
To choose his life and what he'll be;
For this eternal truth is given,
That God will force no man to heaven

He'll call, persuade, direct aright,
And bless with wisdom, love, and light;
In nameless ways be good and kind,
But never force the human mind.

FREE AGENCY A GOD-GIVEN PRINCIPLE

We all remember, according to the scriptures, both ancient and modern, in that great council held in heaven when a plan was being considered to offer the Father's children when they came to earth, that Lucifer, the son of the morning, was there. He wanted to be sent to earth to have charge, promising the Father that all his children would be returned to him—none to be lost—provided the Lord would give Lucifer his glory. (See Moses 4:1-4.) Satan proposed to accomplish his purpose by the use of force—by denying men their free agency, taking from them their inalienable right that the Father gave to all his children in the spirit world as well as in the world of mortality. Free agency and accountability go hand in hand—they complement each other.

But I have digressed; let me return. There is no indication in the stories Bishop Ashton told that either bishop wanted to take free agency from the boys, but they certainly wanted to reform the boys. One succeeded, and the other failed, due to the methods employed. And this suggests the need for care, study, and prayer not only in dealing with boys but in dealing with all other people as well. Perhaps no two individuals are exactly alike. What is good for one may be bad for another. What succeeds with one may utterly fail with another. I have heard physicians say that this is one reason that makes the practice of medicine interesting—the fact that the doctor continually faces a challenge; for what is one man's meat may be another man's poison.

BISHOPS' DUTIES

In large measure, a bishop deals with individuals rather than with people en masse. If it were not so, there would often be insufficient reasons for dividing a large ward, for large wards have some advantages not usually possessed by smaller ones. But the need of individual treatment requires of the bishop wisdom, discernment, tact, sympathy, love, in order that he may succeed, without giving offense, in best serving his people. Among other duties, he is required to administer programs designed to help the boys and girls of his ward. As I see it these duties, in general, are second in importance to no others. If we can save the youth of the Church, we will save the Church. I would not have anyone think, however, that the individual exists for the Church. The reverse is true—the Church exists for its members. Because this is true, the Church is perhaps the finest example of a large democratic organization found in all the world. No individual can grow up in it, taking advantage of the opportunities offered him therein, without experiencing large personal growth and development in personality, attributes, talents, powers, and other leadership qualities.

ETERNAL PROGRESSION

Yes, the Church teaches the fact that each of us is a child of God, both in the spirit and in the flesh. Since in the realm of life, like begets like, we normally must possess, even though in ultra-microscopic quantities, the attributes of God our Father. And a characteristic teaching of the Church is that "as God now is man may become"—a statement in poetic language of our magnificent doctrine of eternal progression. Man is in very deed the acme of creation. In the language of the Psalmist we too can ask:

What is man, that thou art mindful of him? and the son of man, that thou visitest him? For thou hast made him a little lower than the angels, and hast crowned him with glory and honour. (Psalms 8:4-5.)

So in the plan of eternal progression life here on earth is an essential link, and in this link the most important thing is man—the individual. This is evident from the plan which, if successfully followed, will lead the participants back to the Father's presence. The Lord revealed to Moses that:

... This is my work and my glory—to bring to pass the immortality and eternal life of man. (Moses 1:39.)

To accomplish his purposes the Lord has set up his highly organized Church as an agency to serve his children. Hence the Church exists for us and for all who will accept its service.

SERVICE BRINGS OPPORTUNITY AND RESPONSIBILITY

And we who are here this evening, and many thousands of others besides, have been honored by being called into the service of the Church and thus given opportunity to serve our fellow men. If we serve well, we will be blessed. I am reminded at this point of the words Shakespeare put in the mouth of one of his characters:

... it [mercy] is twice blessed; It blesses him that gives and him that takes.

And of the two, the giver is usually the greater blessed—always so if he blesses with a sincere, unselfish motive.

Now let us, too, remember that to accept a proffered opportunity to serve is to accept a responsibility as well. We then in very fact become to an extent our brother's keeper. And in a larger or a smaller measure the welfare of a brother, a child of God, is in our keeping. From this point of view how fit for divine condemnation is he who having accepted responsibility fails in his duty to his brethren. Should not this thought act as a spur to the discharge of duty? Should it not help to send us reverently to our knees to seek earnestly and sincerely for the Lord's aid, suited to our needs? Without his help, brethren, none of us can fully succeed in his work. But succeeding, how great the joy and satisfaction that fills our breasts—a delightful feeling that all the money of a millionaire could not buy for us. This type of feeling is a reward from our God for service in his cause. It is an evidence of his acceptance of our efforts.

SATAN'S POWER BEING EXERCISED

Another point and I am done. Let us not forget that Satan, a spirit brother of ours, is here on earth with a myriad of other spirit brothers. They are among us for a purpose—they are doing all in their power to destroy us and handicap the work of the Lord. Satan knows us—our desires, our weaknesses, our secrets. He tempts us in a multitude of ways. He attacks us where we are weak, not where we are strong. He stirs us up to doubt, to question, to criticize, to hate, to be slothful, discouraged, sinful, and wicked. He is at the bottom of dissension among the Saints. He is ever near at hand to make attempts to overcome and lead us away. I have in mind not only us in this meeting but people generally. Undoubtedly Satan's influence and power in the world today is greater than ever before.

We here and many others in the Church are called to be watchmen upon the towers of Zion where duty calls us to be faithful in teaching the Lord's way of life by example as well as by precept. Then we shall be effective missionaries. And upon the Church is divinely placed the heavy responsibility of carrying on missionary work, a labor to which all baptized members are called, be they living at home or abroad. No one can escape the all-seeing eye of God our Father, who keeps us constantly wherever we are under scrutiny. Let us remember that finally the books will be opened and we will be judged by the things therein written—the deeds done in the body.

Through his wiles Satan is leading some of our people away. Describing conditions in the last days, Jesus, speaking to his disciples, said:

For there shall arise false Christs, and false prophets, and shall shew great signs and wonders; insomuch that, if it were possible, they shall deceive the very elect. (Matt. 24:24.)

Brethren, there is but one way of safety—live honestly, sincerely, and whole-heartedly near to the Lord and be wholly loyal to the leadership of the First Presidency of the Church.

I pray that every one of us with the help of the Lord will have the desire, courage, and strength thus to live, and do it in the name of our Redeemer. Amen.

The Tabernacle Choir Men's Chorus sang the hymn, "O My Father," (by Eliza R. Snow).

President Clark:

We are deeply grateful for that beautiful hymn—the hymn just sung—a hymn that I think is more instinct with the gospel and the gospel plan than any other hymn we have.

ELDER FRANKLIN L. WEST

Church Commissioner of Education

Brethren: I trust that the same beautiful spirit that has characterized the addresses of those who have spoken before may be with me in order that I may be able to say something that will be worthy of your time and attention, because I know that this is a very important assignment, and I feel quite unworthy and quite incapable of adequately filling this position.

I am very grateful for all the blessings that have come to me as a member of this Church. I am thankful that my father and mother lived the gospel from their early youth. In our home there was the spirit of love and peace. We had blessings on the food; we had family prayers. They not only encouraged us to go to church, but they went themselves. I have had the advantage of being brought up in all of the auxiliaries of the Church and have been active in all of the organizations, practically all of my life. I am grateful for the testimony that I have. It has been a great source of comfort, strength and joy to me. I am happy to be identified with this work which is the work of God, and to be associated with you men in pushing forward this great undertaking.

One of our seminary men came into my office about a month ago, very quietly. I was startled and thrilled to see him and almost shocked—Brother Reed Probst, formerly a seminary teacher at Bancroft, Idaho, and later at Hyrum, Utah. He had been serving for thirty-three months as a chaplain over in the Pacific Ocean, in the very heart of those heavy battles. At first, I was shocked at the color of his skin. It gave him a very peculiar appearance. I asked about his health and he said, "I am feeling very fine. That is an artificial coloring that they give us to protect us against the heat of the sun." We chatted about his work and he was very modest about what he had been doing. He said that originally there were some fifteen chaplains in their division, and there were only four or five of them left. Of the ten or eleven that had gone,—half of them had either been killed or had died due to sickness and disease. The other five or six had cracked up mentally; they couldn't stand the terrific strain, the emotional shock of the terrible things they were going through. He said: "I attribute the fact that I am alive and so well, to the fact that I have lived the Word of Wisdom. God has been very good and kind to me." He had a few months of rest in this country before he would be sent back into the conflict, to that ministering work of love that these chaplains are to do.

I visited with him on two occasions,—the last time he was standing in President Widtsoe's office, and I noticed a fine little decoration on his uniform, and I asked him what it was, and very modestly he got his briefcase out and allowed me to read about two or three pages of typewritten material. What he had done had been witnessed and the authenticity certified to by six people, and it said substantially this, that this man, under heavy enemy fire, from daylight until dark, bullets flying all about him, bombs exploding, soldiers being killed on all sides, quietly and effectively went about giving first aid, helping to bury some of the dead, listening and praying for those who were passing away in their last throes of death. All day long, absolutely unconscious of all that danger and hazard and gun fire and noise and confusion, he went about silently and quietly, administering those loving and tender words of kindness, and listening to the last words of these soldiers who were going to the Great Beyond. This happened not once, but on a second occasion, in another part of the war, he did that very same thing, indicating quiet bravery and heroism and simple devotion to duty.

I was proud to get a picture of four of our seminary men, all chaplains who met together in Italy, in a similar undertaking. And many of these boys were not drafted, they volunteered, knowing the great hazards of the work they were about to perform. You know, that is the very spirit of our gospel. Sometimes we worry a good deal, and have cause for worry, because of these great and trying circumstances under which we are all living,—all the difficulties of the work before us. It is a natural thing for us to worry, but you know if we get so busy and so active with our work, concentrating our minds, as Brother Probst no doubt was doing,—so devoted and so attentive in doing those loving, kindly things for those people, we become unconscious of danger and hazard. So one of the best ways of driving away our fear and anxiety is by heavy work in a great cause.

We ought to be happy for the opportunity we have of serving in God's great work. Our great organization, instituted by God our Heavenly Father in these last days, has to do not only with meeting in churches, being built up in our faith, stimulated to do our duty, but this important work is to be carried on essentially into the whole twenty-four hours of our work every day.

I like to think of our lives as like a wagon wheel. We can divide our activities into areas, such as the areas between the spokes. In one area we devote our time to making a living; another area to our home; another area to our political and civic life; another area might even be our recreational life. I like to think of the gospel of the Lord Jesus Christ, the great Church of God as the heart, the center, the hub of the wheel, and from that central source and hub comes the strength and the power and the oil and the grease that smooth out and make us joyous and happy, and integrate the whole life. Only so far, of course, as we put these teachings of Christ into operation in our homes, into our business and into all of our pursuits, are we doing our full duty and are we growing. That is why we are so anxious to have the spirit of God with us at all times. That is why we come together so frequently, to sing, to commune and to pray, and partake of the sacrament, in order that we might always have those influences near us, that the same may bless us in the work that is before us.

I hope you will be patient with us, my brethren, in our Church school system, in our seminary work, because we have some thirty-five or forty of our boys, out of one hundred and fifty, who are in the armed forces. We are obligated to them and we must give them a job when they come back, and a good job, in the places where they were before, or in equally desirable places. So we are doing a make-shift sort of a job. We have hired certain people, local people,—some of them doing very well indeed,—some not so well. In some places we are not functioning at all, and in some places we may be forced to discontinue for the next year. But just as soon as the war is over and these boys come back, and we get back to normal, we are going to get for you, as nearly as we can, young men who will be an inspiration to youth, young men of faith and integrity.

I see that my time is about gone. The gospel is a simple thing in a way — really it is — a matter of doing good every day, being patient, being kind and helpful, and being honest and paying our bills and doing our work well; being courageous and all that sort of thing. It doesn't take any high intellect to do that. As a matter of fact, one writer said that we don't need so much further understanding and wisdom to learn about the teachings of Jesus. What we need is a little more grit and courage and determination to put those principles into practice in our daily lives. That is what we really need. I should say, however, that although in many of its aspects it is very simple, and most of us don't do nearly as well as we know how to do, yet, in our work we are really confronted with some hard problems.

Two young men came to my office at one o'clock by appointment and stayed until seven-thirty at night. They are college graduates. They had been on missions. They were just ready to throw their whole religion over, because there was just one point in their education that had side-tracked them. There was no other answer that would meet them just on that ground. I could preach this and preach that and they would come right back to that one point. One of them said to me frankly, "Now all the other boys have got married and I haven't, because I am not going to marry a girl unless she is just as good as one of these Mormon girls; and when I get her, if she is a Mormon girl, she would want to go through the Temple, and I can't do that unless I am thoroughly converted on this one point in question." Then we went to arguing it. Now, I am not for arguing. I like to bear my testimony, and I didn't put those questions in their heads, but they got them out of their text books in their course of study. I could do absolutely nothing with them, except to try to face them and meet them in the very place where they were. Now they were good boys, too, very good boys, just as clean as any could be, and I certainly hope I helped them. I tried hard enough and I think I did.

I must say, that over a period of years I have been greatly blessed by our Father in Heaven. I don't know why it was, but when I was just a young boy I got to wrestling with some of these problems, and there was a kind of inner testimony that came to me and told me not to be afraid of these things, so I read and studied in the many areas of science, philosophy, psychology and geology and so on, with a good deal of peace of mind, and now I want to say to you that I am not bragging that I have the answer on all of these difficult questions. Any first-rate scholar or scientist knows that there are tremendous problems to which nobody knows the answer. Of course, on many occasions, I give my best answer. When they ask me a hard question about which I don't know, I say I don't know; but, in many cases there are first-rate answers, my brethren, without compromising one single fundamental principle of the gospel. There are answers that satisfy these young men and will hold them in the faith.

Now, God bless you my brothers and sisters. May we all work together with these young people and increase their faith. All over the whole Church system, these young seniors in the high school, just ready to go to war—I tell you they are upset. They are nervous, they are worried, they don't know what it is all about, and they feel they are going into the army soon. It is challenging the best efforts of our teachers to even keep them quiet and orderly while they teach the gospel to them. How thrilled we all are to see the magnificent way they are conducting themselves in the war. Their valor, their courage, their heroism, their faith, and their devotion and the purity of their lives. We have reason to be proud of them. We have some wonderful teachers in our Church school system. They are men of faith. They are working hard and they are loyal. Every day they find offers of larger salaries in more remunerative positions and yet they are sticking by us. They love this work and these young people so much. We are anxious to be able to build up faith in the fundamental principles of the gospel, in the work of the Lord. This is the work of the Lord, my brethren and sisters. God lives. He is our Father. Jesus Christ is the Redeemer of the world, the Messiah. They appeared, both of them, unto the Prophet Joseph Smith in that first vision. I love that. I am absolutely convinced that it happened just exactly as was recorded by the Prophet Joseph. The men who have stood at the head of this Church from the beginning were and are inspired—great prophets, and I am glad to work with them. I am happy to be identified with you in this work and I only hope that I shall be able to do it reasonably well, in order that we may, as leaders of these young people, teach them to be sweet and clean, so they will be loyal to their Church and that they will be faithful and live the lives they should live. God bless you, my brethren and sisters, and help us that we may set the example and do our full duty by the youth, I pray in the name of Jesus Christ. Amen.

PRESIDENT DAVID O. McKAY

Second Counselor in the First Presidency

As I listened to that inspiring rendition of "O My Father," I thought, music is truly the universal language, and when it is excellently expressed how deeply it moves our souls!

Though the exigencies of war have limited the attendance, this is a great conference. It is great because we have had from the first meeting, throughout all the sessions, an outpouring of the Spirit of the Lord. You have all felt it. The brethren who have spoken have been blessed and inspired by it. Now, you leaders in the priesthood have a double mission and will receive a double blessing, as you carry the spirit of this conference out to your wards and stakes.

What I am going to say tonight I wish could be said to the people out in the stakes, because two-thirds of what I have in mind will apply to them; one-third possibly to you brethren. So I am going to ask that you give it to the young people especially in your wards.

There are three very remarkable parables recorded by Luke in the fifteenth chapter. They are called the parables of the lost and found. Usually whenever they are referred to, the principles of repentance and forgiveness are emphasized, and the rejoicing over the lost, because the lost has been found. To that phase of the parable I am not going to refer tonight, except to say that I think that part of these parables is sometimes misinterpreted, or at least misapplied. There is another phase of these parables which appeals to me even more than the rejoicing, and that is what I want to speak about tonight. I desire to refer to the conditions that contributed to their being lost.

THE MEANING OF THE PARABLE OF THE LOST SHEEP

The scene is a gathering of publicans and sinners who have assembled, it seems, in quite large numbers to hear the message of Jesus. Standing out are pictured Pharisees and Sadducees who are sneering at the Man of Nazareth who is speaking to these publicans and sinners, and the Pharisees and Sadducees are judging him, I suppose, by the company he is keeping. By the Sadducees, the publicans and sinners are looked upon as lost. To the multitude Jesus speaks three parables. The first, the parable of the lost sheep:

What man of you, having an hundred sheep, if he lose one of them, doth not leave the ninety and nine in the wilderness, and go after that which is lost, until he find it?

I ask you tonight, how did that sheep get lost? He was not rebellious. If you follow the comparison, the lamb was seeking its livelihood in a perfectly legitimate manner, but either stupidly, perhaps unconsciously, it followed the enticement of the field, the prospect of better grass until it got out beyond the fold and was lost.

So we have those in the Church, young men and young women, who wander away from the fold in perfectly legitimate ways. They are seeking success, success in business, success in their professions, and before long they become disinterested in Church and finally disconnected from the fold; they have lost track of what true success is, perhaps stupidly, perhaps unconsciously, in some cases, perhaps willingly. They are blind to what constitutes true success.

TRUE SUCCESS

Jesus gave an apt definition of success, I think, when he spoke of Mary Magdalene, saying, "She hath done what she could." True success is reaching the level of our best in our association with our fellowmen. Many of these wandering away as the lost sheep are seeking success for selfish purposes, not for the benefit of their fellow-men. See the difference?

Over twenty years ago we had a truly excellent group of missionaries in the European Mission. I have been interested in watching them during the intervening years. One of these was a brilliant missionary, and he was faithful. He came home, completed his education, and succeeded in obtaining a high position in his profession. For twenty years now he has been following that profession. He is successful in it, but he has gone so far, and has so little contact with the flock, the body of the Church, that he hesitates about affiliating himself with it.

There was another missionary who came home about the same time who also started out to succeed, and he has succeeded. He is a prominent business man in this city, highly successful; but he has always kept in touch with the Church. I think he is a success. He has succeeded in his business, but he has used his means to help the Church of Christ; he is in the fold. There is no need of striking out in selfishness, thinking you have to leave the Church in order to succeed. In the Church we can ask God's help to guide us.

You remember the story of the business man who went into his private office in the morning and closed the door, and one of his agents came in and said to the secretary: "I want to see the manager."

The secretary answered: "He is in conference."

"I have come a long way to see him, I want to see him this morning, I cannot wait."

"Well, he is in conference."

The man arrogantly pushed by the secretary, opened the door of the manager's office and then quietly closed it, and apologetically said: "I did not know that he is that kind of man."

Said the secretary: "I told you that he was in conference."

The man was on his knees asking God's aid that day in his business.

I ask our young men at home who are striking out in legitimate enterprises to remember that true success is not just in achieving that one aim, but in keeping in touch with the organization in which they can serve their fellow men, in which they can live to the level of their best.

AN APPLICATION OF THE PARABLE OF THE LOST COIN

The second parable is the parable of the lost coin. A woman lost it and, looking in vain to find it, called in the neighbors to help her search for it.

In this case the thing lost was not in itself responsible. The one who had been trusted with that coin had, through carelessness or neglect, mislaid it or dropped it. There is a difference, and this is the one-third, which I think applies to us tonight. Our charge is not only coins, but living souls of children, youth, and adults. They are our charges. Some of them may be wandering tonight because of the neglect of the ward teachers whose duty it is to—

... watch over the Church always, and be with and strengthen them; And see that there is no iniquity in the Church, neither hardness with each other, neither lying, backbiting, nor evil speaking . . . (Doc. and Cov. 20:53-54.)

and to see that each one does his duty. Someone may be wandering because of the careless remark of a girl of her age in Mutual, (and I have in mind a case), and the president of the Mutual lets her go, fails to follow her next Tuesday night and invite her to come. Another may be lost because of the inactivity of the Sunday School teacher, or the indifference of the Sunday School teacher who is satisfied with the fifteen people there that morning, instead of thinking of the fifteen who are wandering because of neglect. I will just summarize this thought by calling your attention to a little rhyme that is in one of the deacon's manuals. The poetry is not excellent, but the thought is applicable:

He stood at the crossroads all alone,
The sunlight in his face;
He had no thought for the world unknown,
He was set for a manly race.
But the road stretched east, and the road stretched west,
And the lad knew not which road was best;
So he chose the road that led him down,
And he lost the race and the victor's crown.
He was caught at last in an angry snare;
Because no one stood at the crossroads there,
To show him the better way.

(That is the lost coin).

Another day, at the selfsame place,
A lad with high hopes stood;
He, too, was set for a manly race—
And was seeking the things that were good;
But one was there who the roads did know.
And that one showed him which way to go.
So he turned from the road that led him down,
And he won the race and the victor's crown.
He walks today the highway fair,
Because one stood at the crossroads there
To show him the better road.

Our responsibility is to keep the trust that God has reposed in us, calling us to guard these precious souls.

PARABLE OF THE PRODIGAL SON APPLIED TO YOUTH OF TODAY

The third parable is the prodigal son, the "younger son," we are told, so he was immature in his judgment. He was irking under the restraint, and he rather resented the father's careful guiding eye. He evidently longed for so-called freedom, wanted, so to speak, to try his wings. So he said, "Father, give me my portion, and I will go." The father gave him his portion, and out the lad went.

Here is a case of volition, here is choice, deliberate choice. Here is, in a way, rebellion against authority. And what did he do? He spent his means in riotous living, he wasted his portion with harlots. That is the way they are lost.

Youth who start out to indulge their appetites and passions are on the downward road to apostasy as sure as the sun rises in the east. I do not confine it to youth; any man or woman who starts out on that road of intemperance, of dissolute living will separate himself or herself from the fold as inevitably as darkness follows the day.

"My spirit shall not always strive with man" (Gen. 6:3), says the Lord. "My spirit will not dwell in an unclean tabernacle." He who tries to live a double life, who does live a double life in violation of his covenants, to quote one author, "is either a knave or a fool." Often he is both, because he himself is using his free agency to gratify his passions, to waste his substance in riotous living, to violate the covenants that he has made in the house of God.

In such cases there is little we can do but warn and plead until the recreant, as the prodigal son, at last "comes to himself." I am simply trying to picture how these three different parables can be applied to our own groups.

THE WAY TO TRUE HAPPINESS

I wish I could say to every young man in this Church, that if you would be successful, if you would be happy, if you would conserve your strength, intellectual, physical, and spiritual, you will resist temptation to indulge your appetites and your passions. That is gospel truth—indulgence does not strengthen youth or manhood; restraint and self-control do. That is psychologically sound, because, instead of expending your energy as animals, self-control gives you more power and energy to expend intellectually and spiritually. Chastity strengthens manhood. It is the source of virility, not impotence; it is the crown of beautiful womanhood; and it is the source of peace and happiness in the home when you start to build it; it is the source of strength and perpetuity of the race.

He is unwise who starts out as the prodigal son to waste in riotous living the substance which God has given him in physical manhood and intellectuality. Much better to follow the example of old Adam as mentioned by Shakespeare in As You Like It. I wish every student would get the implied lessons, and that every teacher of English literature would pause before his class of young men and women and let them absorb the picture that that old man gives when Orlando refuses to let the servant go with him out into the forest. The old servant, who reared Orlando and nursed him, watched him, and trained him in his youth, said:

Let me go with you.

Though I look old, yet I am strong and lusty;

For in my youth I never did apply
 Hot and rebellious liquors in my blood,
 Nor did not with unbashful forehead woo
 The means of weakness and debility;
 Therefore my age is as a lusty winter,
 Frosty, but kindly.

God help us that we as leaders may try to guide those who are wandering away from the flock. God give us power to inspire them with the true ideal of success as contained in another saying of our Savior, "Seek ye first the kingdom of God and his righteousness, and all these things will be added," I pray in the name of Jesus Christ. Amen.

The Tabernacle Choir Men's Chorus sang, "Day of Sadness," (by Mozart).

PRESIDENT J. REUBEN CLARK, JR.

First Counselor in the First Presidency

My Brethren: I see some of you looking at the clock and I suppose it is near train time, so I will detain you but a moment.

I would like to refer to a point that I tried to make yesterday regarding the mischievous gossip that is going about by those who are finding fault, by those who think that their idea about the government of the Church is superior to anybody else's. I suppose there is not a section hand in the United States who could not run the railroad better than the president and the board of directors.

I just want to read, along the line as to where the responsibility rests, and of the law and of the order of the Church, a few sentences from a letter written by the Prophet Joseph to the brother of Jared Carter:

"Respecting the vision you speak of we do not consider ourselves bound to receive any revelation from any one man or woman without his being legally constituted and ordained to that authority, and giving sufficient proof of it.

"I will inform you that it is contrary to the economy of God for any member of the Church, or any one, to receive instruction for those in authority, higher than themselves; therefore you will see the impropriety of giving heed to them; but if any person have a vision or a visitation from a heavenly messenger, it must be for his own benefit and instruction; for the fundamental principles, government, and doctrine of the Church are vested in the keys of the kingdom."

It is unfortunate that when we have to speak about matters of this sort we never have before us those who need the instruction. We always have to give it to those who do not need it; but I do hope, brethren, that you can help to stem this mischievous gossip; get the people to see and to understand that this is God's Church, that the president of the Church is at the head, that there is an order in the Church, and that so long as we follow that order God will bless us, and it is not for those of an inferior authority to undertake to tell the president of the Church what he should do, or what he should not do. And if we wish to keep the spirit of the Lord, if we wish always to enjoy his inspiration and his revelations to us for our needs and for our own benefit, it is well we should remember always to keep in harmony with the spirit of the Lord and to have faith in him and to have faith in the gospel, and to have faith in the order which the Lord has set up.

President Clark:

The Tabernacle Choir Men's Chorus will now sing: "Guide Me To Thee," by Huish, after which we will ask President George Sylvester Heiner of the Morgan Stake to dismiss us.

We will meet in the Tabernacle tomorrow morning, and I again ask that you be good enough to be there not later than a quarter to 10:00, and I repeat: We seem to come increasingly late to these meetings, and it would be helpful, brethren, if you could get here on time.

Brother Cornwall, we do want to thank you and the brethren for coming here and singing so beautifully for us tonight. Thank you, brethren, very much!

The Tabernacle Choir Men's Chorus sang, "Guide Me to Thee." Elder George Sylvester Heiner, President of the Morgan Stake, offered the benediction.

Conference adjourned until Sunday morning, April 8, at 10 o'clock.

THIRD DAY

MORNING MEETING

Conference reconvened in the great Tabernacle Sunday morning, April 8, at 10 o'clock.

The Tabernacle Choir was in attendance at this meeting and participated in the services.

PRESIDENT J. REUBEN CLARK, JR.

First Counselor in the First Presidency

Brethren, it is necessary that we begin now, before the Tabernacle Broadcast begins, in order that we may be prepared therefor.

This morning's session will be divided into four parts:

First—The Tabernacle Choir Broadcast from 10 to 10:30 a.m.

Second—A half hour period of the regular Conference session, 10:30 to 11 a.m.

Third—A half hour period of the Columbia Church of the Air program.

Fourth—a closing half hour period of the regular Conference session.

We shall open this Conference now with prayer. The intervening time from then to 10:00 will be taken up with some organ music, subject to the necessities of getting ready for the Choir Broadcast.

The opening prayer will be offered by President Jesse M. Walker of the Alpine Stake.

President Jesse M. Walker of the Alpine Stake offered the opening prayer.

TABERNACLE CHOIR AND ORGAN BROADCAST

During the period from 10.00 to 10:30 a.m., the regular Sunday morning nationwide broadcast of choral and organ music and brief spoken comment was presented as part of the General Conference proceedings. This program was presented by the Tabernacle Choir and Organ, and broadcast through the courtesy and facilities of the Columbia Broadcasting System's coast-to-coast network, throughout the United States. The broadcast, written and announced by Elder Richard L. Evans, originated with radio station KSL, Salt Lake City, and was presented as follows:

(Organ began playing "As the Dew," and then the organ and choir broke into "Gently Raise," singing words to end of second line, from which point choir hummed for announcer's background to end of verse).

Announcer: Again, from the Crossroads of the West, we beckon your thoughts unto the hills, as another week of life begins for all men.

At this hour the Columbia Broadcasting System and its affiliated stations bring you the 821st performance of this traditional broadcast from Temple Square in Salt Lake City.

J. Spencer Cornwall conducts the singing of the Tabernacle Choir. Alexander Schreiner is at the Tabernacle organ. The spoken word by Richard Evans.

We begin with a sacred song from Verdi's "Othello," with words by Adalbert Huguélet: "Lord, hear our prayer. . . . Lord God in heaven above . . . . give us love, and give us truth, and life eternal. . . ."

(Choir sang "Lord, Hear Our Prayer"—Verdi).

Announcer: We continue this hour from Temple Square with the music of the Tabernacle organ as Alexander Schreiner presents the "Toccata in B Minor" by Gigout.

(Organ presented "Toccata in B Minor"—Gigout).

Announcer: Appropriate to all times, but urgently so to ours, is the message of the sacred song to follow. Perhaps never did so many in their extremity need help, and never perhaps was it so clear what the Source of that help must be. The music is that of Mendelssohn, with the women's voices of the Tabernacle choir, and words from the Psalms: "Lift thine eyes, O lift thine eyes unto the hills, whence cometh help. Thy help cometh from the Lord, the Maker of Heaven and earth. He will not suffer thy foot to be moved: he that keepeth thee will not slumber." (Adapted from Psalm 121:1, 3)

(Women sang "Lift Thine Eyes"—Mendelssohn).

Announcer: In childhood we are excused for many mistakes on grounds of ignorance. But long after we cease to be children there are times when we would like to claim the same immunity which brings before us the time-worn question as to how long and to what extent ignorance is excusable. The question would be easier to answer if all ignorance were of the same kind—but this it is not. Sometimes ignorance is honest and unavoidable. But there is also the ignorance of which Peter wrote, "... they willingly are ignorant ..." (II Peter 3:5)—the wilful ignorance that prefers to believe what it finds convenient to believe. There are also varieties and degrees of educated ignorance, whereby knowing full well the consequences, we disregard many laws—economic laws, moral laws, the laws of health, and others for which we later pay and from which much learning does not save us. There should also be added to the list a type of malicious ignorance—the ignorance that prefers to believe sensational rumor rather than sober fact—the ignorance that chooses to credit the worst about other people even when the worst isn't true. Some ignorance is genuinely naive, but there is also a "smart" and sophisticated ignorance—the ignorance that pretends to have a new answer for all the old questions—the ignorance that cynically brushes aside the answers which God and time and experience have given. But there are some things in life for which there are no new answers. There is yet another kind of ignorance that should not go unmentioned—the ignorance of laziness and indifference—the ignorance of him who is self-satisfied; the ignorance of him who ignores the wisdom of the past, or who can't be bothered to search the scriptures, or who is indifferent to the advancing knowledge of his own generation—and yet who feels qualified to criticize what he doesn't know; the ignorance of him who doesn't want his life to be disturbed by greater light, more truth, new discovery; who wants to believe only what he wants to believe, because it requires an uncomfortable adjustment to believe anything else, even if it happens to be true. Again, how long shall ignorance be justified? The question is perhaps beyond answer, but this much can be said: that even though we may not be condemned in honest ignorance, yet "it is impossible for a man to be 'saved' in ignorance." (Doctrine and Covenants 131:6), because the progress of mankind, temporally or eternally, implies a condition of enlightenment—and not of darkness. And while we may not be accountable for what we do not know and cannot know, we may surely expect to be accountable for what we readily could have known but wilfully disregarded, or were too lazy or too indifferent to discover.

(Selection by the Choir, "Only the Sad of Heart"—Tschaikowsky).

Announcer: We close now from Temple Square singing the "Miles Lane" tune as arranged by R. Vaughn Williams—with its moving testimony and conviction of Jesus the Christ, of man and his destiny, of truth and its triumph:—"All hail the power of Jesus' name; let angels prostrate fall; bring forth the royal diadem to crown him, Lord of all . . . now hail the strength of Israel's might, and crown him, Lord of all. Crown him, ye morning stars of light, ye Martyrs of your God . . . Ye seed of Israel's chosen race, ye ransomed of the fall . . . let every tribe and every tongue to him their hearts enthrall; lift high the universal song and crown him, Lord of all."

(Choir sang "All Hail the Power of Jesus' Name").

Announcer: This Sabbath Hour from the Crossroads of the West is ended. Until we beckon your thoughts again unto the hills, may peace be with you—this day—and always.

This concludes another performance in the 16th year of this traditional broadcast from the Mormon Tabernacle on Temple Square, presented by the Columbia network and its affiliated stations, originating with Radio Station KSL, in Salt Lake City.

When another seven days have come and gone, those voices which now fade within these walls, will return again, with music and the spoken word, over your Columbia station.

J. Spencer Cornwall conducted the singing of the Tabernacle Choir. Alexander Schreiner was at the Tabernacle organ. The spoken word by Richard Evans.

President Clark:

The National Broadcast of the Tabernacle Choir to which you have just listened, has been the opening devotional music and comment of this, the sixth session of the 115th Annual Conference of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints. The opening prayer was offered before the beginning of the broadcast by President Jesse M. Walker of the Alpine Stake.

The regular session of this Conference will now continue for one half hour. Then the Columbia Church of the Air service will be given as a part of this session of the Conference. President George Albert Smith of the Council of the Twelve will be the speaker on the Church of the Air. At the conclusion of that service, the regular session of this Conference will resume for the balance of the morning service, with President David O. McKay as the concluding speaker.

Elder George F. Richards of the Council of the Twelve will now address us.

ELDER GEORGE F. RICHARDS
Of the Council of the Twelve Apostles

If my remarks this morning shall be addressed, principally, to members of the Church, others listening in, or who may afterwards read what I shall say, may perhaps learn something of the requirements, covenants, and obligations of those who join the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints, which all men and women must do, if they would be saved with an exaltation in the kingdom of God.

But ye are a chosen generation, a royal priesthood, an holy nation, a peculiar people; that ye should shew forth the praises of him who hath called you out of darkness into his marvellous light: Which in time past were not a people, but are now the people of God: . . . (1 Peter 2:9, 10.)

COVENANTS ENTERED INTO BY CHURCH MEMBERS

The Latter-day Saints are the people of God, a chosen people, a royal priesthood, a covenant people, and a covenant-making people.

The greatest and most important blessings our Heavenly Father has for his faithful sons and daughters are received by covenant. One of the greatest blessings he has to bestow is membership in his Church and kingdom. This is received by solemn covenant.

When I was baptized, and confirmed a member of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints, I was required to raise my right arm to the square, and covenant before God, angels, and witnesses present, that I would henceforth keep the commandments of God, as fast as they should be made known unto me. This represents the nature of the covenant entered into, by every person who is baptized and confirmed a member of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints. It is frequently spoken of as the covenant made in the waters of baptism. The nature of this covenant should be explained to every applicant for baptism, and he should manifest a willing acceptance, before being baptized.

Every man who has received the Melchizedek Priesthood, has received the oath and covenant belonging to the priesthood, that he will magnify the same; to do which, he must live a righteous life, and answer every call of authority that may come to him in the Church, keeping all other covenants he has entered into, or may do in the future. The Lord on his part covenants to give him all that he the Lord hath.

But whoso breaketh this covenant after he hath received it, and altogether turneth therefrom, shall not have forgiveness of sins in this world nor in the world to come. (Doc. and Cov. 84:41.)

The blessings of the temple are of inestimable value. The goal of our existence, that of eternal life and exaltation, cannot be attained without them, but to receive these blessings, we must enter into solemn covenants of faithfulness.

There is a law, irrevocably decreed in heaven before the foundations of this world, upon which all blessings are predicated—And when we obtain any blessing from God, it is by obedience to that law upon which it is predicated. (Doc. and Cov. 130:20, 21.)

We who have no other intent than to be faithful in all things do not hesitate making covenants to that end. Every covenant we enter into with the Lord, is for our own good and blessing. If there are any among us who are weak and hesitate, being fearful lest they might not be able to keep the required covenants of the gospel, they should lean more heavily upon the assistance the Lord has promised to all such, when he said.

Come unto me, all ye that labour and are heavy laden, and I will give you rest. Take my yoke upon you, and learn of me; for I am meek and lowly in heart; and ye shall find rest unto your souls. For my yoke is easy, and my burden is light. (Matt. 11:28-30.)

CONSIDERING THE CONSEQUENCES OF OUR ACTIONS

I would have the Saints, myself included, avoid as far as possible the disappointments and sorrow here in life, and hereafter, resulting from sin and neglect. Many of our sorrows, and the greatest sorrows we experience in life, are of our own making, and could have been averted.

Remorse of conscience, resulting from sin, is among the greatest of sorrows, and the hardest to heal. No person can afford to commit sin. There is no satisfaction derived from so doing that will justify the sorrow and remorse that result therefrom. Many of our sorrows in life are the result of thoughtfulness on our part. We do things that are unwise, and hurtful to ourselves and to others, not having first thought the thing through, and considered the inevitable consequences. This thought is emphasized in the story entitled, "Clarence and Mother":

A woman, left a widow with one child, was obliged to take in washing for a living. One morning Mother called Clarence earlier than usual, saying: "We have a larger wash than usual, and will need quite a lot of wood." Clarence made no complaint, but dressed himself, and going to the wood yard cut up and carried in a wood box full of wood. Then he wrote a little note to his mother and put it under her plate at the table. When Mother turned her plate over, she found Clarence's note which read like this: "Mother owes Clarence 50c for cutting up a wood box full of wood." The mother's countenance fell for a moment, then she went where she kept her meager earnings, and found 50c and brought it and gave it to Clarence. There was not much said at the table, and the mother ate but little breakfast.

The next morning when they turned their plates over at the table there was a note from Mother to Clarence which read as follows: "Clarence, debtor to Mother, for going down into the valley of the shadow of death, to give him life, nothing; for board and lodgings nine years, nothing; for clothing, and washing and mending his clothes, nine years, nothing; total, nothing."

Clarence had not thought the matter through to a correct conclusion, how much he was indebted to his mother, and that the hard work she had to do was as much for the boy as for the mother, and what an opportunity was here afforded, for him to show his love and appreciation for his mother, for what she had done and was doing for him. Clarence had not thought how deeply indebted he was to his mother, nor the fact that he could not live long enough, nor work hard enough, to pay fully the debt of gratitude he owed to her. Many of us grownups do things thoughtlessly that are just as censurable.

Many members of the Church, young and old, through carelessness and thoughtlessness, are pursuing a course in life that will surely be a great sorrow to them in the future, and to those who love them most, if they do not change their course. And even should they in the future repent, and mend their ways, they may, like Saul of Tarsus, forever after have a thorn in the flesh.

My sympathy goes out to all such, and I would like to help them to see and choose the better way.

There are in the Church today more than 45,000 men past twenty-one years of age, who hold some office in the Aaronic Priesthood, who, if worthy, should have been ordained to the office of elder in the Melchizedek Priesthood, at nineteen years of age, according to the order of the Church, but who have never received the Melchizedek Priesthood, nor the endowments and sealing blessings in the house of the Lord.

Being past twenty-one years of age, a large percentage of them are married men, and as men of the Church, may not receive the endowments and sealing ordinances of the temple without first receiving the Melchizedek Priesthood. It is clear that they have not been married in the new and everlasting covenant, and that if they have children, they, the children, have not been born in that covenant. If the parents of children who have been thus born ever have their children for eternity the children will have to be sealed to their parents, but this is impossible while the father does not hold the Melchizedek Priesthood. Should a man of this class die before the death of his wife, he has no assurance that if he has rejected these ordinances, his widow will go to the temple, after a year has elapsed, and be sealed to her dead husband, and have their children sealed to them. She may decide to be sealed to some man who is worthy to go to the temple, and who has proved his love for her, and his desire to have her as his wife for eternity. Such decisions are frequently made, and then the mother wants to have her children sealed to her, and the only way that can be done is to seal them to the mother, and the man to whom she is sealed. This done, the father has lost his wife, and lost his children. Have these adult members of the Aaronic Priesthood, having wives and children, thought this matter through, and decided to run the risk of losing their wives and children, and their own salvation? Such thoughtlessness, indifference, and neglect, may prove a source of everlasting sorrow.

Of all sad words of tongue or pen, the saddest are these, it might have been. (From Maud Muller.)

... neither is the man without the woman, neither the woman without the man, in the Lord. (I Cor. 11:11.)

A fulness of glory may not be had outside of the marriage relation, in the new and everlasting covenant, and nothing short of a fullness of glory will be satisfying in the end. It will be just too bad if through carelessness and neglect, men of the Church shall lose their wives, their children, and their salvation. These are among the greatest blessings our Father has to give. The Prophet Joseph Smith has left of record a statement that when God offers to a man knowledge or blessing, and he rejects it, that man is damned. (Compendium, p. 279.) If through neglect, a man lose his wife, his children, and his salvation, that would be condemnation, self-inflicted.

OUR DUTY TO OUR DEAD

There is born unto every man in the Church a responsibility to his kindred dead, to find them out by genealogical search, and then to do the temple work for them, or have done, all gospel ordinances necessary for the living, being alike necessary for the dead. Since the visitation of Elijah, to the Prophet Joseph Smith and Oliver Cowdery in the Kirtland Temple, April 3, 1836, genealogical societies have been organized, and genealogical libraries established, throughout this and other countries, and the spirit of Elijah has been in evidence among the people of the world, in their search to know of their kindred dead (See Comp., p. 282), and many thousands of family histories have been published and placed in these libraries, and are thus made accessible to members of the Church. In this we see the hand of the Lord manifested through nonmembers of the Church, in accomplishing his purposes in the redemption of the dead.

The genealogical search is the first step to be taken in the work of redemption of the dead, and as the temple work cannot be done until sufficient information is had, that will identify the dead upon the records, it makes the importance of genealogical research, on a par in importance with the temple work itself.

The Prophet Joseph Smith has said that, "The greatest responsibility in this world that God has laid upon us is to seek after our dead." (Comp., p. 254.) That includes both genealogical and temple work.

If while we are in life, we altogether neglect this sacred duty to our dead, there is no doubt that we will be deservedly reproached by them, when we meet them. Have we thought this matter through and reached correct conclusions, as to what our future will be with respect to this feature of our religious work, and responsibility?

It is to be hoped that in the end there will be no disappointments and remorse come to us because of neglect.

Are we quite sure that we have done our full duty to our neighbors, and associates, who are not of us, in an effort to make known to them the fact of the restoration of the gospel? This is a time of warning, and he that has been warned is to warn his neighbors. (See Doc. and Cov. 88:81.)

Have we thought this matter through and satisfied our conscience on this point? There are ever before us the hope of reward, and the fear of punishment or disappointment, as incentives for us to do the things that we know we ought to do, and to leave undone the things we know we ought not to do, all of which makes for salvation, for it is written:

... until the law sin was in the world: but sin is not imputed when there is no law, (Romans 5:13) and, ... where no law is, there is no transgression. (Romans 4:15.)

A TESTIMONY OF THE RESTORATION OF THE GOSPEL

We have received the gospel, the law, and will be justified only when we have lived the law as we understand it. Nor will we be justified in living in ignorance of the law with such wonderful opportunities as are ours, to learn and to know.

As a witness for the Lord Jesus Christ, I desire to bear to you my testimony, that I do know that the work in which we, as Latter-day Saints, are engaged, is the work of the Lord, the gospel of the Lord Jesus Christ, restored to earth in this the gospel dispensation, in the fulness of times, with all its gifts, ordinances, and blessings, through the instrumentality of Joseph Smith, whom God raised up to be the mighty prophet of the last days. It is the power of God unto salvation unto all those who receive its ordinances, and obey its precepts. It is being taught, practiced, and authoritatively administered to the repentant believers, by the Latter-day Saints, commonly called "Mormons." Its effect upon one who conscientiously accepts it is to establish him in habits of conduct, which make for a better life, a nobler character, a fuller and more enduring peace, and a greater hope of eternal life. It has a restraining and a stimulating effect upon one's life, restraining him from doing that which is wrong, and stimulating him to do that which is right. It teaches one the way of life and salvation, and encourages him to walk therein.

The gospel teaches me that I am a spirit-born son of God the Eternal Father, a brother of Jesus Christ, of most noble birth and ancestry. It teaches me, that I inherited from the Father those qualities and attributes which in their perfection make God, the Father, what he is; that I am placed here on earth for the purpose, in part, of perfecting the qualities and attributes of Deity in me implanted, with the command:

Be ye therefore perfect, even as your Father which is in heaven is perfect. (Matt. 5:48.)

It is also written:

Let this mind be in you, which was also in Christ Jesus: Who, being in the form of God, thought it not robbery to be equal with God. (Phil. 2:5, 6.)

A high aspiration indeed, but both scriptural and reasonable. It is written that things earthly are typical of things heavenly. It is most natural that the Son should desire to become like his Father, either in an earthly or heavenly sense. In this thought, and possibility, there is great comfort, and encouragement for one to enter into every necessary covenant of faithfulness, and to keep faithfully the covenants entered into.

We have a God-given responsibility to preach this gospel of the kingdom in all the world for a witness unto all nations before the end shall come; and we invite all men to come unto Christ in his kingdom, by obedience unto the laws, ordinances, and precepts of his gospel, of which we are his exponents and his witnesses.

May the Lord add his blessings to us all, according to our several needs, is my prayer, in the name of Jesus Christ. Amen.

The Choir and congregation joined in singing the hymn, "Come, Come, Ye Saints," L.D.S. Hymns No. 194.

President Clark: We will now turn over the conference to the regular Columbia Church of the Air Service, on which President George Albert Smith, President of the Council of the Twelve, will deliver the address.

COLUMBIA CHURCH OF THE AIR SERVICE

Theme: "Sweet is the Work." Open with approximately fifteen seconds of organ music.

Announcer, Richard L. Evans: The Church of the Air was established by the Columbia network so that representatives of the major faiths might bring their messages to a nationwide congregation of worshippers. This series, which is now in its fourteenth year of continuous broadcasts, presents two devotional programs each Sunday. Today, the network service of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints comes to you through the facilities of Station KSL and originates in the Tabernacle on Temple Square in Salt Lake City where the 115th Annual Conference of the Church is in session. The speaker will be President George Albert Smith of the Council of the Twelve Apostles. The Tabernacle Choir, under the direction of J. Spencer Cornwall, provides the music for the service. Alexander Schreiner is at the organ.

The Choir sang an anthem, "My Redeemer Lives," Gates.

(President George Albert Smith)

The Choir sang "Turn Thy Face from My Sins"—Sullivan.

Theme: "Sweet Is the Work"—(Organ with humming Choir).

PRESIDENT GEORGE ALBERT SMITH

Of the Council of the Twelve Apostles

My dear brothers and sisters, all children of our Heavenly Father: Wherever you may be, I greet you and address you with a prayerful desire that what I say may be a source of comfort and prove to be a blessing.

GOD'S PLAN IN THE CREATION

The Holy Bible contains the advice of our Heavenly Father, and I accept without mental reservation the statements made in Genesis, chapters 1 and 2, that in the beginning God created the heaven and the earth and every living thing that has inhabited the earth, including man:

So God created man in his own image, in the image of God created he him; male and female created he them.

And God blessed them, and God said unto them, Be fruitful, and multiply, and replenish the earth, and subdue it. (Genesis 1:27, 28.)

These are the generations of the heavens and of the earth when they were created, in the day that the Lord God made the earth and the heavens. And every plant of the field before it was in the earth, and every herb of the field before it grew: for the Lord God had not caused it to rain upon the earth, and there was not a man to till the ground. (Genesis 2:4, 5.)

This was all a spiritual creation. Then follows the physical creation.

And the Lord God formed man of the dust of the ground, and breathed into his nostrils the breath of life; and man became a living soul. (Genesis 2:7.)

It was in the plan of our Heavenly Father that every living thing that he created should each reproduce after its kind. Adam and Eve were the children of God; they were our first parents, and every human being that has lived upon the earth descended from them. God gave them their agency to decide for themselves in all matters and held them responsible for their conduct. They received their instructions in the Garden of Eden from our Heavenly Father and those teachings were preserved for succeeding generations.

Biblical chronology indicates that nearly six thousand years ago our first parents began their earth life. The Lord instructed them how they should conduct themselves, and his prophets divinely commissioned to speak for him, have taught Adam's descendants through the ages how to live to be happy in mortality and so qualify that when the time comes for them to die, they may pass into immortality taking with them the riches of their characters and the knowledge they have gained here. Those who conform their lives most nearly to the teachings of our Heavenly Father will receive the greatest reward and enjoy the most happiness here and hereafter.

THE VALUE OF THE BIBLE

Among other things, the prophets were required to keep a record of the truth that was revealed to them from time to time that it might be passed on for the benefit of their posterity, each generation inheriting from its forebears. Today, therefore, we of this generation are in possession of a record that has been preserved for our guidance containing information that the Lord has revealed from the beginning. I refer to the Holy Bible. Not only does it declare that which has occurred in the past, but it tells of events that were to occur in the future, in some cases generations before they actually did occur. It also informs us that fulfillment occurred at the time that had been specified.

The Prophet Amos said:

Surely the Lord God will do nothing, but he revealeth his secret unto his servants the prophets. (Amos 3:7.)

THE WARNING OF THE PROPHETS

I know of nothing of great importance that has happened in the world that the Lord through his prophets has not advised the people of beforehand, so that they have not been left in ignorance of what was to develop, but could plan their lives, if they would, to their advantage. I cite the following incidents in support of this:

The case of Noah is in point. He was commanded of the Lord to build an ark in which the righteous might be preserved from the flood which was to come. Noah built the ark and preached repentance to his generation for a period of one hundred and twenty years, thus fully warning them. The people, however, were so wicked that they failed to heed the warning. Having their agency, they chose evil rather than righteousness. The rains descended, and the floods came, and only Noah and his family of eight souls were saved. All had been fully warned, but because of their wilfulness and their refusal to repent they were drowned.

Another instance is that of Abraham and his posterity. He was informed that his seed would go into a strange land and after serving there for a period of four hundred years, would come out with great substance, all of which was thereafter literally fulfilled when Moses, being a descendant of Abraham, led the children of Israel out of Egypt back to the promised land.

Joseph, a faithful son of Jacob, who had been sold into slavery by his brothers, was in a prison in Egypt when Pharaoh had a dream that troubled him, that his wise men could not interpret. Pharaoh was told that Joseph could interpret the dream, and he was brought before the king. He informed Pharaoh that he could not interpret the dream but that God would give Pharaoh the answer. Joseph, having received the interpretation from the Lord, told Pharaoh that his dream was of great importance, that there were to be seven years of plenty throughout the land, followed by seven years of famine, and if Pharaoh during the years of plenty would accumulate food, when the famine came his people would not starve. Pharaoh accepted Joseph's interpretation and advice, then rewarded him by making him overseer of Egypt, only the king being greater than he. At the end of fourteen years the dream as interpreted by Joseph had been literally fulfilled, the Egyptians having been saved from starvation.

Another prophetic incident was the attempt to rebuild Jericho. When the city of Jericho was overthrown, a curse was placed upon it, and the people were warned that any man who should rebuild it would lose his first-born and his youngest son. The city lay waste until hundreds of years had passed, when Hiel, a Bethelite, who lived in the days of Ahab, ventured to rebuild the city, but no sooner had he laid its foundation than Abiram, his first born son, died. Still persevering in his determination to complete his work, he set up the gates, and Segub, his youngest son, passed away, thus fulfilling the prophecy.

Then there is the instance where Jeremiah prophesied that Jerusalem would be overthrown and her people remain in bondage for seventy years. This was to be accomplished by Nebuchadnezzar of Babylon. In due time Jerusalem with its beautiful temple was burned. Her princes, nobles, artisans, and many of her people were carried as prisoners to Babylon along with the sacred vessels from the temple.

One hundred and forty years before Cyrus the Great was born, the prophet Isaiah predicted his birth and announced his name and said that he should overthrow Babylon; also that he would rebuild Jerusalem, notwithstanding the fact that he was alien to all the interests of the Jews.

When Cyrus was about fifty years of age, after subduing many peoples and small nations, he appeared with his army before Babylon, the then greatest of all cities, with its impregnable walls, three hundred feet high, and its mighty gates of iron and brass. Instead of attacking the walls, he diverted the Euphrates River that flowed through the city and used the channel under the walls by which to enter Babylon. He captured the city without difficulty, while Belshazzar, the king, with his courtiers were drinking themselves drunk and desecrating the sacred vessels of the house of the Lord which his father, Nebuchadnezzar, had brought from Jerusalem.

Within the city, Cyrus found the Hebrew prophet, Daniel, who had already interpreted the handwriting on the wall, having informed Belshazzar that he had been "weighed in the balance and found wanting." Having access to the Jewish records, Cyrus learned that the God of Israel had decreed that he was to rebuild Jerusalem. He promptly issued a proclamation to the Jews to return to Jerusalem and for the nations to assist them in rebuilding the city and the temple. This was accomplished exactly seventy years after Jerusalem was destroyed, thus fulfilling Jeremiah's prophecy uttered more than one hundred years before.

The destruction of Babylon is another case in point. When Babylon was in the height of her glory, Isaiah prophesied that it should be destroyed, "that it should never be inhabited, neither dwell in from generation to generation." It was completely destroyed and inundated by the flood waters of the river. Now, after more than two thousand years, the city that at that time was the greatest under heaven is still a heap of ruins.

The Old Testament is replete with remarkable and almost unbelievable prophecies that were fulfilled to the letter. Only by the revelations of the Lord could the prophets have known what was to occur and only God could fulfill their predictions. Isaiah, Jeremiah, Ezekiel, Joseph, and others were human beings like their fellows, but they were chosen to represent the Lord and the inspiration of the Almighty directed their utterances and the power of the Lord fulfilled their promises.

Let us refer to one of many predictions in the New Testament. Read the entire twenty-first chapter of St. Luke.

And when ye shall see Jerusalem compassed with armies, then know that the desolation thereof is nigh.

This prophecy involves the fate of Jerusalem, of the temple, and the whole Jewish nation for nineteen hundred years and is still in the course of fulfilment.

In the year 70 A.D., the Roman army encompassed Jerusalem. The faithful disciples, remembering the warning that Jesus had given, fled to the mountains. The city was taken after a long siege in which the inhabitants suffered the extremes of famine, pestilence, and the sword. In addition to those taken captive one and one-half million Jews perished. The country was laid waste and the temple destroyed, not one stone being left upon another, and the population was dispersed into all the nations of the earth—all as predicted.

Today the Jews are a people without a country and are suffering most inhuman treatment under the tyranny of so-called Christian nations. In their dispersion and suffering they have fulfilled prophecy and will in the future further fulfill it by returning to their homeland.

Jerusalem and Babylon, warned by the Lord's servants that they must repent of their wickedness or they would be punished, defiantly refused, and destruction followed. Other cities and nations have become rich, powerful, and wicked, and have passed into oblivion. As we look back at these happenings do we fail to realize that today the world is reaping a harvest of sorrow and destruction because of the iniquity of its inhabitants?

REPENTANCE THE SALVATION OF MANKIND

With the people of the world ignoring the advice of our Heavenly Father and suffering the penalty of wilfulness, will we follow the path of evil when the history of the past teaches us that destruction will eventually overtake us unless we turn to the Lord? Only repentance can save us. Will we repent before it is too late?

We are not landlords. We do not own any part of the earth or its riches. At most we are only temporary tenants. We leave it all here when we pass on. Naked we came into the world, and naked we depart. This is the Lord's earth, and keeping his commandments is the rent we pay for the blessings of life and all that we will enjoy here and hereafter.

We are living eternal life, and our position hereafter will be the result of our lives here. Every man will be judged according to his works, and he will receive only that degree of glory that he has earned.

It is nearly two thousand years since Jesus Christ our Lord came to earth and gave his life as a ransom for us that through him all might be resurrected from the dead. He was the first fruits of the resurrection. He taught us to love our neighbor as ourself and to do good to all people. His teachings in the New Testament are a most valuable part of the Holy Bible. It was he who said:

Search the scriptures; for in them ye think ye have eternal life: and they are they which testify of me. (John 5:39.)

He knew that a knowledge of the scriptures was most important. The nations that have been most influenced by the Bible have accomplished most to bring success and happiness and enlightenment to the world along every line of endeavor because they have profited by the guidance of the God of heaven and earth. We read in Job:

... There is a spirit in man; and the inspiration of the Almighty giveth them understanding. (Job 32-8.)

In times like these we should seek that inspiration through righteousness. It will come in no other way.

With our sons and daughters pouring out their blood like a river on the battlefields of the world to save us from destruction, surely the most praiseworthy and effective thing we can do to show our appreciation of their sacrifice will be to repent of our sins and set our lives and our homes in order so that we can worthily ask our Heavenly Father to restore peace to the earth and bring our loved ones back to us again.

I am grateful for the companionship of the many intelligent, righteous people who live in this most favored of all lands and in other lands. My life has been enriched by your association, and I thank you for it. I desire most earnestly that we shall all earn and receive an eternal inheritance in the celestial kingdom of our Lord right here upon this earth when we attain to immortality. In this the evening of my mortal life, I leave with you my testimony that I know that the God of our fathers, our God still lives and loves us and desires our happiness and exaltation, and I leave this witness with my love and blessing in the name of Jesus Christ his Beloved Son, our Redeemer. Amen.

President Clark:

We will now resume the regular session of this Conference.

Our concluding speaker will be President David O. McKay of the First Presidency. He will now address us.

PRESIDENT DAVID O. MCKAY
Second Counselor in the First Presidency

And the Pharisees came to him, and asked him, Is it lawful for a man to put away his wife? tempting him.

And he answered and said unto them, What did Moses command you?

And they said, Moses suffered to write a bill of divorcement, and to put her away.

And Jesus answered and said unto them, For the hardness of your heart he wrote you this precept. (Mark 10:2-5.)

SACREDNESS OF MARRIAGE TAUGHT BY JESUS

Recently, I heard President Grant express grave concern over the apparent increase of the number of applications for the severance of marital bonds. His concern and fears that there is a growing laxity in the minds of young people with respect to the importance and sacredness of the marriage covenant suggest the topic "Marriage and Divorce" to which I now invite your attention.

Adjustments to be made by newly married couples when young husbands now in the armed forces return to civilian life suggest another condition that makes such a consideration not wholly untimely.

In all the problems and perplexities of human existence, Jesus Christ is the one safe guide to whom we can go for guidance and comfort. Mark's account of Jesus' answer to the Pharisees on divorce sets forth the Savior's attitude toward this vital question.

A careful study of this text, and other references that he made to marriage and divorce, leave little doubt that Jesus set forth the lofty ideal that marriage is of divine origin and that the marriage bond should be held sacred.

This lofty ideal of marriage is confirmed by modern revelation, and is recorded in the Doctrine and Covenants as follows:

And again, verily I say unto you, that whoso forbiddeth to marry is not ordained of God, for marriage is ordained of God unto man.

Wherefore, it is lawful that he should have one wife, and they twain shall be one flesh, and all this that the earth might answer the end of its creation;

And that it might be filled with the measure of man, according to his creation before the world was made. (Doc. and Cov. 49:15-17.)

When the Pharisees, seeking to justify the granting of divorce, cited the fact that "Moses suffered to write a bill of divorcement and to put a wife away" on the ground of "some uncleanness," Jesus answered:

... For the hardness of your heart he wrote you this precept. But from the beginning of the creation God made them male and female. For this cause shall a man leave his father and mother, and cleave to his wife; And they twain shall be one flesh; so then they are no more twain, but one flesh. What therefore God hath joined together, let not man put asunder. (Mark 10:5-9.)

In the light of scripture, ancient and modern, we are justified in concluding that Christ's ideal pertaining to marriage is the unbroken home, and conditions that cause divorce are violations of his divine teachings. Some of these are:

Unfaithfulness on the part of either or both, habitual drunkenness, physical violence, long imprisonment that disgraces the wife and family, the union of an innocent girl to a reprobate—in these and perhaps other cases there may be circumstances which make the continuance of the marriage state a greater evil than divorce. But these are extreme cases—they are the mistakes, the calamities in the realm of marriage.

On the other hand, to look upon marriage as a mere contract that may be entered into at pleasure in response to a romantic whim, or for selfish purposes, and severed at the first difficulty or misunderstanding that may arise, is an evil meriting severe condemnation, especially in cases wherein children are made to suffer because of such separation.

DANGERS THREATENING THE MARRIAGE RELATION

Marriage is a sacred relationship entered into for purposes that are well recognized—primarily for the rearing of a family. It is claimed by some careful observers that our present modern life tends to frustrate these purposes. Writes one:

Modern living conditions contribute to these frustrations. Formerly a married woman had a home to care for, often several children. Today, in many parts of our country, a married woman continues either to follow her vocation or to spend her time seeking new stimulations—no children to care for—no house to clean—no meals to cook. Under such a condition her leisure time activities become her all-absorbing interests—interests which often lead her away from her husband rather than to him.

Twenty-four years ago when the steamship Marama dropped anchor outside the coral reef that surrounds the island Rarotonga, a passenger desiring to go ashore asked the captain why he did not sail nearer to the wharf. In answer the experienced seaman mentioned treacherous waters and pointed to an engine of one ship, the Maitai, and to the bow of another, still protruding out of the water—both carrying mute evidence of the danger of anchoring too close to the shore of this coral-bound island. "We anchor here," said the captain, "because it is safer to avoid being dashed to pieces, as those two vessels, on those dangerous reefs."

A flippant attitude toward marriage, the ill-advised suggestion of "companionate marriage," the base, diabolical theory of "free sex experiment," and the ready-made divorce courts are dangerous reefs upon which many a family bark is wrecked.

An ever-decreasing birth rate and an increasing divorce rate are ominous signs threatening the stability of the American home, and the perpetuity of our present form of constitutional government. An editorial in a weekly magazine, published in the capital of the nation, says:

Since 1890 the United States of America's national birth rate has dropped from 32.9 per 1,000 population to 17.4 per 1,000 population.

In those same years, the national average for divorces jumped from 5.7 per 100 marriages to 19.3 per 100 marriages.

A falling birth rate plus a rising divorce rate speak ill for individual faith in the future. Hence it speaks ill for the nation's future.

What, in the long run, is the point of vast new public programs if the individual, continually fearful of tomorrow, flutters from mate to mate and deliberately robs the nation of his, or her, own good qualities in the next generation? A nation's permanency is entirely dependent on the permanency of its individual homes, the family pride of its citizens and the reproduction of those families, generation by generation.

Ex-president Taft on one occasion said:

Our state rests upon our homes. And if we cannot keep our homes from this constant demoralizing breaking up, we had better go out of the business of government entirely.

In some states of the union, it is almost as easy to get a divorce as it is to get married. As a result of this laxity, one out of every five marriages ends either in divorce or annulment.

DIVORCE INCREASING IN CIVIL AND CHURCH MARRIAGES

Though statistics indicate that there is a much lower divorce rate in the Church than in the nation, yet there is cause for concern over the number of marriages annulled annually in the divorce courts.

With the assistance of the Presiding Bishop's office and Professor Roy A. West, I have before me a comparison of marriages and divorces in the Church from 1920 to 1944. It sets forth the fact that though there are fewer divorces among couples married in the temples and by stake and ward authorities than by civil officers and other churches, yet divorces are increasing even in the Church.

For example, during the period 1920-1922 there was one divorce for every 38.24 marriages among couples married in the temples and by stake and ward authorities, but there was, during those same years, one divorce for every 13.20 marriages among couples married by civil officers. Comparatively, that ratio continues throughout the twenty years, as you will note by the following taken at random: (The first figure will be the Church marriage; the second, the civil marriage.)

1923 to 1925—one divorce to every 33 marriages; one divorce to every
15 marriages.

1935 to 1937—one divorce to every
28 marriages; one divorce to every
12.52 marriages.

1938 to 1940—one divorce to every 26.61 marriages; one divorce to every 10.13 marriages.

Last year there was one divorce for every seventeen marriages among couples married in temples and by stake and ward authorities, and one divorce for every 6.9 (we will say seven) marriages among couples married by civil officers. There is cause for concern over the increase of divorces in this country and even in our Church.

DIVORCE RATE IN THE CHURCH AND IN THE UNITED STATES

The ratio of divorce to marriage in the United States is three times higher than in the Church. In 1920 there were 7.5 marriages to every divorce in the United States; while in the Church there were 24.8 marriages to every divorce. In 1935, the United States had a ratio of 6.1 marriages to every divorce; during the same year the Church had a ratio of 17.9 marriages to each divorce.

The real source of security of our nation rests in the well ordered, properly conducted homes. The character of a child is formed largely during the first twelve years of his life. It is estimated that in that period the child spends approximately 3,240 hours in school; 416 hours in Sunday School and church, but 52,560 hours in the home, not counting twelve hours a day for sleep. In other words, he spends sixteen times as many waking hours in the home as in school, and one hundred twenty-six times as many hours in the home as in the Church.

In the homes of America are born the children of America, and from them go out into American life American men and women. They go out with the stamp of these homes upon them, and only as these homes are what they should be, will children be what they should be.

Luther Burbank, the great plant wizard, most impressively emphasizes the need for constant attention in the training of a child. He says:

Teach the child self-respect. Train it in self-respect just as you train a plant in better ways. No self-respecting man was ever a grafter. Above all, bear in mind repetition—the use of an influence over and over again, keeping everlastingly at it. This is what fixes traits in plants, the constant repetition of an influence until at last it is irrevocably fixed and will not change. You cannot afford to get discouraged. You are dealing with something far more precious than any plant—the precious soul of a child!

There are three fundamental things to which every child is entitled: (1) a respected name, (2) a sense of security, (3) opportunities for development.

The family gives to the child his name and standing in the community. A child wants his family to be as good as those of his friends. He wants to be able to point with pride to his father, and to feel an inspiration always as he thinks of his mother. It is a mother's duty so to live that her children will associate with her everything that is beautiful, sweet, and pure. And the father should so live that the child, emulating his example, will be a good citizen, and, in the Church, a true Latter-day Saint.

SECURITY

A child has the right to feel that in his home he has a place of refuge, a place of protection from the dangers and evils of the outside world. Family unity and integrity are necessary to supply this need.

He needs parents who are happy in their adjustment to each other, who are working hopefully toward the fulfilment of an ideal of living, who love their children with a sincere and unselfish love; in short, who are well-balanced individuals, gifted with a certain amount of insight, who are able to provide the child with a wholesome emotional background which will contribute more to his development than material advantages.

Divorce almost invariably deprives children of these advantages.

HOW TO LESSEN THE BREAKING UP OF HOMES

1. Substitute the present tendency toward a low view of marriage by the lofty view which Jesus the Christ gives it. Let us look upon marriage as a sacred obligation and a covenant that is eternal, or that may be made eternal.

2. Teach the young of both sexes in the responsibilities and ideals of marriage so that they may realize that marriage involves obligation, and is not an arrangement to be terminated at pleasure. Teach them that pure love between the sexes is one of the noblest things on earth, and the bearing and rearing of children the highest of all human duties. In this regard it is the duty of parents to set an example in the home that children may see and absorb, as it were, the sacredness of family life and the responsibility associated therewith.

3. The number of broken marriages can be reduced if couples realize even before they approach the altar that marriage is a state of mutual service, a state of giving as well as of receiving, and that each must give of himself or herself to the utmost. Harriet Beecher Stowe wisely writes:

No man or woman can create a true home who is not willing in the outset to embrace life heroically, to encounter labor and sacrifice. Only to such can this divinest power be given to create on earth that which is the nearest image of heaven.

4. Another condition that contributes to the permanence of the marriage covenant is marriage in the temple. Before such a marriage is consummated, it is necessary for the young man and young woman first to obtain a recommendation from the bishop. They should go to him in person, and the bishop who does his duty will instruct the couple regarding the sacredness of the obligation that they are as young people going to assume, emphasizing all the safeguards that have been named before. There in the presence of the priesthood the young people receive, before they take upon themselves the obligation, instruction upon the sacredness of the duty which is before them; and, furthermore, whether or not they are prepared to go in holiness and purity to the altar of God and there seal their vows and love.

5. Finally, there is one principle which seems to me to strike right at the base of the happiness of the marriage relation, and that is the standard of purity taught and practiced among the Latter-day Saints. It is a common saying throughout the world that young men may sow their wild oats, but that young women should be chaperoned and guarded. In the Church of Christ there is but one standard of morality. No young man has any more right to sow his wild oats than has a young girl. She is taught that second only to the crime of taking human life is that of losing her virtue. And that is the ideal among young men. That young man who comes to the bishop and asks for a recommend to take a pure girl to the altar is expected to give just the same purity that he expects to receive.

CONCLUSION

For the proper solution of this great problem we may turn with safety to Jesus as our guide. He declared that the marriage relation is of divine origin, that "marriage is ordained of God," that only under the most exceptional conditions should it be set aside. In the teaching of the Church of Christ, the family assumes supreme importance in the development of the individual and of society. "Happy and thrice happy are they who enjoy an uninterrupted union, and whose love, unbroken by any complaint, shall not dissolve until the last day."

The marriage ceremony when sealed by the authority of the Holy Priesthood endures, as do family relationships, throughout time and all eternity.

What therefore God hath joined together, let not man put asunder.

God bless these young couples who must make new adjustments, some under trying circumstances, when the boys and husbands come home from war, and God bless us all to look more earnestly and prayerfully and sincerely upon the sacredness of home and the marriage covenant, I pray in the name of Jesus Christ. Amen.

President Clark:

The choir will now sing, under the direction of J. Spencer Cornwall, with Alexander Schreiner at the organ, the "Hallelujah Chorus" (from "The Messiah"), by Handel.

The closing prayer will be offered by President Stanley A. Rasmussen, of the Mount Jordan Stake, after which this Conference will be adjourned until 2 o'clock this afternoon. We will meet here in the Tabernacle, not in the Assembly Hall. The afternoon session will be broadcast over KSL at Salt Lake City, and KSUB at Cedar City.

The Choir sang "Hallelujah Chorus," after which the benediction was pronounced by Elder Stanley A. Rasmussen, President of the Mount Jordan Stake.

Conference adjourned until 2 p.m.

THIRD DAY

AFTERNOON MEETING

The concluding session of the Conference was held in the Tabernacle at 2 p.m., Sunday, April 8, 1945.

President Clark:

This is the seventh and closing session of the 115th Annual Conference of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints. We are convened in the Tabernacle on Temple Square in Salt Lake City.

There are present on the stand this afternoon, all the General Authorities of the Church as sustained Thursday, except President Grant who, on a special wire running to his home, is able to listen to the Conference proceedings.

The proceedings of this session will be broadcast over KSL at Salt Lake City, and KSUB at Cedar City.

We will begin the afternoon services by the Congregation singing: "High on the Mountain Top," Song Folder No. 10. Brother J. Spencer Cornwall will conduct the singing; Elder Frank W. Asper is at the organ.

The opening prayer will be offered by President Will L. Hoyt of the Juab Stake.

Singing by the congregation, "High on the Mountain Top."

Elder Will L. Hoyt, President of the Juab Stake, offered the opening prayer.

President Clark:

We will continue by the Congregation singing: "The Lord Is My Shepherd," Song Folder No. 34, after which President Howard McDonald, the newly chosen President of the Brigham Young University at Provo, will address us.

We have a very full program this afternoon, brethren, which will account for the brevity of the speeches of those who talk to us.

The congregation sang, "The Lord Is My Shepherd."

ELDER HOWARD McDONALD

President of Brigham Young University

My Brethren: it is with a feeling of great honor that I stand before you this afternoon. It is also with a feeling of humility, as I feel keenly the great responsibility that has been placed upon my shoulders in being President of the Brigham Young University, and I pray that my Heavenly Father will bless me in this position, that I may carry forward the great work of that institution as my Father in heaven would have it carried on.

I have somewhat the feeling which has been expressed by some of the good brethren when they have stood in this position in conferences past. I remember Brother Lee, Brother Kimball, Brother Benson, Brother Mark Petersen, how they felt when a great responsibility was put upon them. I, just in a small measure, feel that same feeling going through myself. For the past two weeks it has been a great dream. It has hardly got past the dream stage, but every day it is becoming more a reality.

When the First Presidency called me to the office and asked me if I would consider such a position I told them it took my feet from under me, and they said, "You are not the first one whose feet have been taken from under him in this room." I asked them if I might go home and talk it over with my wife. We were both floored, as you might say, and after a few minutes of contemplation and serious thought Mrs. McDonald turned to me and said, "Howard, we have been married for twenty-eight years and I have said more than once I knew you were going to drive me to Provo." (Laughter)

Since the First Presidency and the authorities of the Church have asked me to carry on this great work I feel that I can, with the blessings of my Heavenly Father, as I have always felt that without his aid I would be able to do nothing.

When I entered into my work in California, about twenty years ago, going among a strange people, strange in belief, different from ours, I asked my Heavenly Father to bless me, and I believe he did. When the authorities of that school system called me into the position of vice-principal of the largest High School in San Francisco, I again continued to pray that God would help me, and he did. When I was asked by the superintendent to be deputy superintendent in charge of teaching personnel I asked my Heavenly Father to bless me, and he did. When I was called back to Salt Lake City as superintendent of Salt Lake City Schools, I asked God to bless me in that position, and if we have met with any success this past year it isn't the efforts of myself, but of my Father in heaven who has blessed me.

When I was called upon by Brother George F. Richards to be President of the Stake in San Francisco I asked my Father to bless me then, and I believe he did; and if the Presidency of this Church, those in authority, want me to go to the Brigham Young University as the president, if they will send me with their blessings, and if God will go with me, I believe we can carry on that great work as you people would want it carried on. We want to promote in that institution the traditions of the founder of that great institution, Brigham Young. What were his standards? I think if he were laying the foundation and stood here today he would say to me, "We want established in that institution principles wherein the boys and girls, the young men and young women who enter that institution, will have faith in God, that they will be nurtured in the faith that God lives and that Jesus Christ is the Son of God, the Redeemer of the World, and that Joseph Smith was a Prophet of God and that the leaders of this Church from the Prophet Joseph to the present, President Heber J. Grant, have been prophets and seers of the living God. As you presidents of stakes and you bishops of wards go back into your stakes and your wards I hope you will carry this message with you, as the young men and young women will be coming to you for advice. Where shall we go for our education? I want you to know what my philosophy of life and education are, that you might know that those boys and girls who come under the jurisdiction of that institution will be well cared for.

I also want to say, so all the world may know, that we want teachers, professors in that institution, who have faith in God, faith in a living God, a personal God, and who have faith in the mission of the Prophet Joseph Smith, that they may carry to the boys and the girls, the young men and women that same faith.

Horace Mann, that great educator, gave a definition of what a teacher should be. He said,

"A young man or a young woman whose education is sound, whose language is well selected, whose pronunciation and tones of voice are correct and attractive, whose manners are gentle and refined, whose topics of conversation are always elevating and constructive, whose dignity of heart maintains acts of civility, courtesy and kindness, who carries with him an unnamed charm into whatever circle he goes,—that should be the teacher of every school."

I would add to that, to all of those qualifications for those who teach in the Brigham Young University, not only should they have those qualifications but they should have the qualification of faith in God, and in the divinity of the Prophet Joseph Smith.

Time will not permit to go further, but I feel like William Lyons Phelps when he said, "I cannot explain to another the joy and the happiness I get out of teaching. It is more than a profession, an occupation, a vocation, a struggle; it is a passion, for I love to teach." He said, "I love to teach as a painter loves to paint, as a singer loves to sing, and as a musician loves to play. Every strong man loves to run a race."

Never in all the world has there been a greater time to be a teacher than at the present time, in this twentieth century. With all these problems before us today we have the greatest opportunity to be a teacher, and I want our teachers to be lovers of the Gospel of Jesus Christ.

It has been my privilege to sit in the company of men who have professed that they are Latter-day Saints, coming to the Bay area with the groups of educators. They didn't happen to know that I belonged to the Church, and they thought that they had to be in with the rest of the world to make a showing. At the dinner table they would partake of their cocktails and their coffee. Oh, my heart bled for them. Oh, what a mistake if you think you have to go out into the world and partake of those things that the world partakes of—you don't, because those very men with whom they were eating came to me afterwards and said, "Well, we thought they were Latter-day Saints," and I would have to make excuses. I have never found in all my life a greater asset than the Gospel of Jesus Christ. The people throughout the United States have known where I stood and the belief which I possess, and may God bless me in this work that is now upon my shoulders, that I may carry that belief and make it a part of the Brigham Young University, I pray, in the name of Jesus Christ. Amen.

ELDER OSCAR A. KIRKHAM

Of the First Council of the Seventy

I humbly pray that I may enjoy the blessings of the Spirit of God. Just a word of appreciation for the life of Samuel O. Bennion and Rufus K. Hardy. These last few days, as I have seen the pictures taken from the walls, the spears of New Zealand chiefs, finally the flag of Maori land, New Zealand, from Brother Hardy's room, and like treasures of Brother Bennion's, I felt in my heart that something had gone out of my own life. These were great and good men. God bless their sacred memory.

Because of my work for so many years in the auxiliaries of the Church I want to pay tribute to a lovely lady, a lovely sister in this Church, who has just resigned from her office as president of the Relief Society, Amy Brown Lyman, a fine efficient leader, a woman of clear vision and clear mind, of great courage and service for the kingdom of God. May the Lord bless her as she continues in her lovely life.

MISSIONARY WORK IN THE STAKES

I want to thank you brethren here today for what you have done for the cause that we as the First Council of the Seventy represent. Last year we had approximately twenty-nine hundred missionaries in the stakes of Zion. We baptized twenty-three hundred. Since this work was assigned to the First Council of the Seventy in 1936, there have been approximately seventeen thousand souls that have been baptized and made members of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints. We thank you brethren for your fine cooperation and leadership in this work. I have thought, as I attended these sessions of this conference, what a glorious thing it would be if you would just give us one more missionary from each ward for the stake missions of the Church, that every ward that is represented would just carry back in their hearts that one obligation. What a blessing it would be, and what blessings it would bring to the people!

In connection with our missionary work, recently, I read these words from President Lorenzo Snow: "There is a way to every human heart, and the Lord will show you that way if you will be humble, prayerful, and study his holy word."

How simple, but how great and far-reaching in its meaning! One of our greatest tasks is the task of meeting men, understanding them, placing them right, that their lives may unfold in strength and beauty and joy to themselves. This admonition may be applied in many different ways.

Only a moment ago I was listening to news over the radio. God bless the men who meet in San Francisco April 25. God bless the President of the United States and the Secretary of State of our great nation. God bless the delegation that represents our great country at the San Francisco conference. No such year has ever come to us as 1945, fraught with the things of destiny. May God be with them. May they be humble. May they be prayerful. May they study his holy word, that the destiny of humanity on this good earth of ours may be made safe and beautiful.

I pray that the Lord will bless us abundantly for the work that I feel is just ahead. The great missionary work that is coming to us—I feel confident in my own thinking, in my own praying that God has a great work before us to perform in our missionary service.

Recently I was asked to the home of a friend, the dean of one of the largest universities in the United States. I was somewhat surprised at the invitation, but after we had finished the meal we were sitting in the parlor and he said, "Mr. Kirkham, it may be of great interest for you to know that the real reason I had in inviting you here was not so much personal as it was for what you represent. Not long ago I walked down the streets of Boston, and I saw a young man standing on the curb. He had his companion out in front of him seemingly to draw passersby to listen to him. I was so struck by the picture that I stepped back in the shadow of a building and listened. What he said was very interesting to me. His English was not the best. I saw he paused and hesitated in his effort to voice what was on his heart, but finally said, 'Friends, I want to bear my testimony to you that Joseph Smith was a Prophet of God and that through him the gospel of Jesus Christ was restored,' and in a humble way he continued, "Well," said my friend to me, "Kirkham, I've never quite got that off my heart. That testimony rang deep within my own soul, and I wanted to talk it over with you, so I invited you here."

Yes, there are thousands and hundreds of thousands of men and women to whom God is saying, "Search for the truth. Have the courage when you hear it to accept it."

May the Lord grant to us humility, a prayerful heart, and a desire to study his holy word, that we may be prepared for the destiny that awaits us, that we may magnify the callings which are ours before our Heavenly Father, I humbly pray in the name of Jesus Christ. Amen.

ELDER MARVIN O. ASHTON

First Counselor In the Presiding Bishopric

If I remember correctly, I followed Brother Kirkham last conference, and as far as I am concerned, I will be glad to follow him any time, and yes, follow in his footsteps all the way. I am not like the gentleman who had a wife like the wife that Brother Thomas E. McKay spoke about in conference. He didn't want her nagging at him. He wanted her away from the battle so he could fight in peace. He had a wife who thought she was better than he. Before she died, she had put on her tombstone, "Follow me." You see, she wanted him to land in the celestial realms she was dead sure of. He wasn't quite satisfied with the epitaph as it was, so he finished it. It then read, "To follow thee I'm not content, until I know which way you went."

THE WORK WITH THE BOYS OF THE CHURCH

Oscar Kirkham has done a wonderful work in this Church and particularly with boys. If I could follow him all the way, I would be very content. I had the pleasure of riding down to conference in the automobile this morning with Elder Merrill. We were talking about some of the observations he made with boys in this conference. He was very kind to us, I thought, and by virtue of his observations in the conversation this morning, I am spurred on to say some of the things I am going to try to say this afternoon. I told him I couldn't say what I wanted to say at our Aaronic Priesthood meeting, because if I went into too much detail the bishop and his counselors of a certain ward would be sure to guess about whom I was talking, and I have so much to answer for now that I wouldn't be that brave. Brother Merrill said, "Surely, you don't mean to say that 'tyranny' towards boys exists today." When I told him the whole story, he could hardly believe it. The trouble with many of the fine things we hear is that they always mean the other fellow. We don't "Stop, Look, and Listen." That sign on some of your farms says, "This means you." Some of these observations I am trying to make do mean you and me.

Like Brother Merrill, I had another talk I wanted to give this afternoon, but I am throwing it away. To hear me tell it, my very best talks I have never given. Of course, that isn't hard to believe, and such news is comforting.

Someone has said the reason the boy likes a dog is because it is the only thing around the ranch that doesn't criticize him. When he's around, he's a pain in the neck. Yes, but if you had the experience of some of the rest of us, when he isn't around, it's a pain in the heart. Stay with him. I saw one of the finest demonstrations of love for a boy in Yellowstone Stake. The story is about President Hess of that stake, and I am going into some detail:

STORIES ABOUT BOYS

I was attending a big banquet in St. Anthony, about six hundred strong, the select of the land. All the fathers of the stake were there sitting beside their sons. Yes, they hired the biggest hall in the place. Some of us were sitting at the head table. I discovered about three chairs from where I was sitting something that decidedly interested me. It was a half-kept kid. The back of his head looked like the back of a dog. What I'm trying to say is that he'd been neglected. I went on without asking any questions, and yet I got curious. After the party was over I inquired as to who the lad was. Here is the story I got: Coming down the highway from his home President Hess was accosted by a shabbily dressed lad. The boy was invited to get in the car. He asked, "Where are you going, mister?" The answer was, "I'm going to a party for fathers and their sons." The boy was a real Yankee. He said, "Where is your boy?" "I haven't him with me tonight," came the answer of the president. "Well, say, mister, why can't I be your son tonight?" Well, the end of the story is, that urchin sat at the head of the table as big as you please with the rest of us. Brethren, that's America. That's the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints. You never can tell what's under that mat of shaggy hair. You can never tell what heart beats buttoned up in that threadbare coat. Let's love him.

Did you ever hear the story of the lad in the slums and his little sister who desperately took sick? There had to be a transfusion. (We'll go through the story in a hurry.) They thought her brother's blood would match. They tried it out, and it "clicked." When asked to give his blood for his sister, he said, "Sure." When they cleaned his arm, its whiteness, with the dirt off, nearly scared him to death. Well, they took a pint of his blood. An hour after the pumping procedure he was told that his sister had revived and was getting along fine. But what was the question the kid of the slums asked? It was, "Doc, when do I croak? When do I croak?" He thought when he was asked to give his blood to his sister that it meant he was to give his life for his sister. I repeat, "Will you give your blood to your sister?" "Sure." That was the answer from an American lad of the slums.

Christ said that no man is greater than he who gives his life for his fellows. Sometimes virtue is put up in clumsy parcels, but underneath often you've got gold.

A TEACHER'S EXPERIENCE

Talk the boy's language. Be reasonably firm. Don't let him run over you. No boy loves you if you let him run over you.

I once heard a very interesting story about the boys of a certain school district years ago in a backwoods country. They rode every teacher out of the village. The school trustees didn't know what to do about it. As fast as a new teacher came he was ridden out. Finally, one of the trustees said, "I have a fellow that can take care of this school." They cried out, "Trot him out. Send him here." The teacher got to the school Monday morning at eight-thirty and brought with him his six-shooter. (I remind you that this was a school in a wild country.) Well, a hawk floated overhead, flying a little low. He was circling around, and he was a real temptation. The new teacher pulled out the six-shooter, pulled the trigger twice, and the hawk fell at his feet. Of course, the school population gathered around this crack shot. He observed, "That wasn't so bad, was it?" Well, he next went into the schoolroom. He noticed the blackboard wasn't kept so spick and span, that a bull's-eye on the board with a couple of holes in it would not do any particular harm. He stepped off a few steps, took the six-shooter, pulled the trigger a couple of times more, hitting the bull's-eye squarely, and said, "That wasn't so bad, was it?"

Well, he was talking their language. But he wasn't through yet. He pulled out his watch. "It's time to ring the bell." He picked the leader of the gang, the one that had done the most in the past in running former teachers out of their country. He requested, "Ring the bell." The fellow stepped back with his fingers in his vest and replied, "Ring it yourself." Out came the six-shooter. It pointed at the bully. "Ring the bell." He did.

Now, I didn't say that if you want to lead a bunch of boys take a six-shooter with you. I didn't mean that. But talk their language and have them mind.

PRaise FOR STAKE LEADERS

God bless you fine men. To repeat again, as we go around your stakes and see what you are doing, if we were to give way to our feelings we would sit down and cry like babies at your accomplishing great things. You are doing a fine job. I don't know what some of us do for you in the way of inspiration when we stand before you, but I know what inspiration we get from you in holding your hands and looking into your eyes. God bless you. Amen.

ELDER HUGH B. BROWN

President of British Mission and Church Coordinator for Service Men

My brethren and sisters: I am very grateful for the unexpected privilege of attending this great conference. I am proud to be the messenger to bring love and greetings from the saints of the British mission, the people who have endured so much during the last five years of war. These people have seen their homes, villages, towns and cities destroyed, but have carried on in the face of difficulties which might have discouraged most of us. I say I am proud to represent them here today, and I feel that their faith and their courage, their loyalty and fortitude stand out as an ensign to the Church. I am sure, too, that the members of the other missions of Europe when their story can be told, will be found to have done the same kind of work and exhibited the same faith and courage. We will be glad to call them brothers and sisters.

The work over there, during the war period, has been under the able direction of President Anastasiou. He and his associates have done an outstanding job during the time that missionaries from here were not permitted to go there and, as I think, in recognition of his fine service, the Lord has opened the way for him to come to Zion with his family. So from the saints of Britain, we bring greetings, love and blessings.

I am very glad, too, to bring a very brief report concerning the work which has been and is being done by your sons and brothers. It has been my privilege to meet thousands of them. We have met them in the villages, in the towns and cities of Britain. We have met them in the branches and districts and at the mission home. We have seen some of them in the hospitals and many of them in their camps. We have seen them as they went out on their dangerous missions, and we have seen them as they came back. We have heard their stirring testimonies and have been inspired with the enthusiasm that seemed to characterize their work. We have heard them talk of home, and pray for their loved ones. We have heard them pray for the authorities of the Church, for the leaders of the nation. I would like to say to you brothers and sisters, you have reason to be proud of these fine young fellows. We have met them in the woods, out under improvised shelters, in the cold and the rain of that unconquerable climate of England, and under those conditions we have felt a warmth and a comfort that sometimes are missing under conditions that ought to be more favorable. We have met these men, as I say, under these conditions and have labored with them, and nothing in my experience has tended more to cement my faith in God and in the fact of the restoration of the Gospel of Jesus Christ than to see that Gospel in action in the lives of these men. We hear from them from Arabia and Serbia, from Egypt and the Holy Land, from Africa, India, from Burma and China, from the Philippines, the Aleutians and the many islands of the Pacific. We hear from them from all over the continental United States and in her far-flung outposts. We hear from them on those floating islands, our great navy, and in all of these places, these men are meeting as regularly as conditions will permit. They are singing the songs that you sing, and they are praying to God and expressing gratitude to him for home and for loved ones and Church.

Yesterday I got a letter from Iwo Jima, that blood-soaked island which has just been conquered, and one of our own boys who took part in it said that he and a group of Latter-day Saint men had met on the beach there and with uncovered heads had administered the sacrament to one another and thanked God for their deliverance. Then he added as a postscript to his letter, "Please tell President Grant that we out here are praying for him." Can you match that for love and loyalty and devotion to a cause?

Now, brethren and sisters, these men are coming home shortly, thousands of them. There are enough men out there, of this Church, to fill this building to overflowing ten times, and they are coming back. We hope we will get some vision of the responsibility and task which confronts us as we are called upon to meet them, to greet them, and to help them.

These men will not be the same boys as you saw go out. These men have gone out into conditions which many of us know not of. These men have had responsibility. They have traveled in far places. They have been flying these great ships with millions of dollars worth of cargo. They have had the lives of their fellows in their care. They have had to make decisions upon which the lives of thousands depended. These men have been seasoned, and they are coming home mature. Some of them will come home wounded in their bodies, having lost limbs, eye-sight, or hearing. These will be ministered to by the best that science can provide, and the government will do everything possible for them, but there are others who will come home with unseen wounds, and they will need help, too. We who have remained in the harbor must learn to understand something of the problems confronting these men who went out on the high seas. No sailor who does not sail his ship out into the seas will ever criticize the one who does, even though he comes back with the sails of his ship tattered, the hull dented and the mast broken. They will not criticize him because they know what he has gone through.

I pray that God will help us to understand something of what these men have been enduring, and by the help of him who gave his life on the cross for the wounded and the sick and the weary and the heavy laden, by the help of his spirit may we attack this great problem of the rehabilitation of our men. I would like to express and send to these men, through you parents who are listening in, this comforting message: The General Authorities under the First Presidency are making plans now and setting up an organization and program so that we may supplement the great rehabilitation program of our nation. Provision is being made to meet these men and to help them become reestablished.

I pray that God will help them and us, that we may do our part to uphold the standards of the Church and that they, upon returning, will bring to the problem of reconstruction the same faith and courage and hope which have inspired them while they have been away. I said they have often spoken of home. Someone has written just a line, a prayer which could have been spoken by one of them and has doubtless been thought by many. It is as follows:

GENERAL CONFERENCE

Third Day

O God, I did not come out to this war
 From a park bench or a rented room,
 I came from home.
 And I brought with me family words:
 Garden, crib, fireplace, front door,
 Wife, Little fellow.
 Now they are all mixed up with war jargon:
 Jeep, tank, foxhole, tommygun, blitz.
 Help me, God, to keep my thinking straight.
 Grant the impossible. Make home, our home,
 Seem real—in battle.
 Show me how to sort out my thoughts
 And use the words about home.
 Even when I'm sitting in a swamp,
 Hours at a time, not daring to move
 More than my eyes. They'll keep me sane.
 I'll be a better human. And just now
 When fighting is my job,
 I want to stay human.
 It didn't take a war to show me how I love
 My home. But it has taken a war to show me
 How it will feel to walk out of Hell
 Straight to a paradise that men call home.
 O God, let ours rest under the shadow of your hand!
 Amen.

God grant that in our homes and in our communities provision may be made for these returning thousands of our boys, that they may uphold here at home as they have out there in the main the standards of the Church. I bear witness to its truth, to the divinity of this work. I bear witness to the fact that these men who are our leaders are inspired of God, I pray that under their direction we may be able to carry out this splendid program for the rehabilitation of our service men, in the name of Jesus Christ. Amen.

The congregation sang the hymn, "I Know That My Redeemer Lives," L.D.S. Hymns No. 290, Hymn Book No. 145.

ELDER JOSEPH F. SMITH

Patriarch to the Church

This is great company. I wish to thank my Father in heaven for the incomparable privilege of being a little part of it.

As I have listened to this conference, beginning with the message of the Lord's prophet, and have felt the cumulative power of the succeeding testimonies and admonitions, I have been increasingly aware that if I am to make any contribution at all it must be with the help of my Father in heaven, for which I pray, and I ask you to join me in that prayer.

A FERVENT TESTIMONY

I wish to record before this present congregation and before the unseen audience my emphatic witness, without hint of reservation, that Jesus of Nazareth was the Christ, is the anointed One of Israel, the very Redeemer of the world, that he rose from the tomb in a literal resurrection which, by the Christian world, is not believed, in spite of its flaunted celebration of Easter. I wish further to record that because of the wickedness of men the gospel was taken from the earth and that in this dispensation was restored, and that the priesthood of Almighty God was restored with Joseph Smith and Oliver Cowdery as instruments, that Joseph Smith is a Prophet of the Living God and that every one of his successors is also a prophet.

A SERMON FOR A SOLDIER KILLED IN BATTLE

Not long ago, some weeks ago, I received a letter from a Canadian boy in England. He said in part:

Will you promise to do something for me when and if you manage to get to Edmonton this summer? Will you go to my home and see my mother and talk about me a little? She likes me a lot, and she likes to talk about me to someone else. Since you may be in Edmonton, and especially if something has happened to me by that time, you could gratify this little trait of hers. With love, Roy.

And just a month ago there came to my desk in the tortured handwriting of a grief-stricken mother this letter:

Mr. Smith, Roy has gone. Please will you say a sermon for him?

Roy was not a member of the Church. He was a boy of great talent, a boy of great promise, and he is gone as thousands of others are going, killed in battle.

What sermon shall we say for Roy, together with the thousands of our own boys and the tens of thousands of others who are his companions in death? Shall we extol his virtues and praise his talents or shall we berate our enemies and castigate the war lords? Neither panegyric nor denunciation will give to the world the pictures Roy might have painted, nor the sons he might have reared. What shall we say? Shall we not plead for conduct which will remedy the evil? What one of us, having selected a reputable physician and called him in to diagnose and administer to our ills but will follow his instruction? I marvel at the faith men put in doctors. We will literally lap up any nostrum which a physician in whom we have faith prescribes, without asking what it contains or what it may do. Oh, that people had a fraction of the faith in the words of the prophets that they have in their physicians! We seek to avoid medical quacks. How much more important that we avoid spiritual quacks. We need in these days of a sick world the treatment prescribed by the Great Physician. We have his diagnosis, and we have it constantly reiterated by the Lord's prophets.

APPEAL OF FIRST PRESIDENCY

Five and one-half years ago the First Presidency of the Church said this:

We affirm that all international controversies may be settled by specific means if nations will but deal unselfishly and righteously with one another. We appeal to the leaders of all nations and to the people themselves that they mend and adjust their differences lest the vials of God's wrath be poured out upon the earth, for he has said he will visit his wrath upon the wicked without measure. We further declare that God is grieved by war and that he will hold subject to the eternal punishment of his will those who wage it unrighteously.

We are but beginning to see how prophetic that utterance was. Brethren and sisters, we have faith in the physician because experience has taught us that very frequently his prescriptions are helpful. We have learned to leave things alone, sometimes, when we find they are doing us unquestionable hurt. When are we going to learn the lessons of history? The scriptures are replete with the experiences of people who have rejected the prophets. In this conference reference has been made to many of them, and there will be those foolish persons who will say, "Well, that's Bible stuff. I don't quite believe the Bible." If men can't believe the Bible, will they study their secular history and find the reasons for the dissolution and destruction of the great civilizations of the world—Tyre and Sidon, Babylon, Nineveh, Egypt and Greece, Carthage and Rome—yes, and today the great part of modern Europe? And can the United States of America be far behind? I say unto you, "Nay, unless the United States of America give heed to the prescription of the Great Physician."

FAILURE TO HEED THE WORDS OF THE PROPHETS

Reference has been made to the forthcoming conference in San Francisco. It is becoming increasingly the cynosure, with all eyes turning toward it, with great hope. Will it fail? It will fail unless it is based upon the precepts of the Gospel of Christ, and I have seen only two pronouncements by men in high places who have had the courage to declare this fact.

A few years ago I had the great privilege of driving President Grant from Madison, Wisconsin, to a speaking appointment, and as we drove he said, and I have rarely seen President Grant in sadder mood: "I wish the Latter-day Saint people would be obedient." That called to mind a remark that President Joseph F. Smith made before some members of his family. He said, "I wish I could tell this people some of the things I know," and one of his sons said, "Papa, why don't you?" He replied, "I have tried and I can't, for the people are not ready to hear it." That calls further to mind those tragic words of the Prophet Joseph Smith, betrayed by some of his own, "If my life is of no use to my friends, it is of no use to me," and those other great words of the Master himself:

O Jerusalem, Jerusalem, thou that killest the prophets, and stonest them which are sent unto thee, how often would I have gathered thy children together, even as a hen gathereth her chickens under her wings, and ye would not! Behold, your house is left unto you desolate. For I say unto you, ye shall not see me henceforth till ye shall say, . . . Blessed is he that cometh in the name of the Lord. (Matt. 23:37-39.)

Brethren and sisters, Latter-day Saints, listen to the counsel of the Lord. What matter if we be but few? If every man at this conference, if every Latter-day Saint listening to this conference, would go out and see to it that he made of himself a center from which went out the testimony of the truth, we could accomplish miracles. Let no Latter-day Saint, who has raised his hand to sustain the prophets of the Lord, permit himself ever to depart from that instruction. Let him challenge any faultfinding and let him champion the truth.

Brethren and sisters, any Latter-day Saint having covenanted as a Latter-day Saint to keep the commandments of the Lord and then who refuses to follow the counsel of the Lord's prophets is bringing bricks and mortar for the erection of those altars of unrighteousness upon which other millions of Roys will be sacrificed. Let us remember it.

God give us courage, give us vision and above all give us faith, I pray in the name of Jesus Christ. Amen.

ELDER LE GRAND RICHARDS

Presiding Bishop of the Church

Brethren, it is good to be here to share with you the inspiration and teachings of this conference. We have heard enough already, that if we can just remember half of what we have heard and take it back to our stakes and wards, they will be enriched because of these conference sessions.

PREPARATION FOR THE RETURN OF THE SOLDIERS

A great deal has been said during the conference, and at the present time much is said and written, about postwar conditions and our responsibilities. In my work in the Church with the young people, particularly the boys of the Aaronic Priesthood, I feel that there are some things to which we can well give thought along this line, for the Church will have to remember that our boys will be coming home, anticipating a great deal from us. We have had many letters from boys who are in the service, in answer to some of the articles that have been written and published in the Church Section of The Deseret News and in The Improvement Era by our girls, on the value of priesthood to young womanhood. Usually the boys close with words something like this: "It is wonderful to know that there are such girls to come home to," and then they tell us of the kind of girls they have met while they have been away.

It seems to me that the M.I.A. organizations will have a greater responsibility than they have ever had before, because these boys will expect more through having been away, and many of our girls have been waiting patiently, faithfully, and adhering to the teachings of the Church, waiting until these boys do return home. I hope there will be due consideration given them, for I am not unmindful of the fact that we owe so very much to them. They have offered their lives and all they have for us, and we ought to do all we can to make their homecoming pleasant and welcome.

I was very happy while in California, a few years ago, in listening to a radio broadcast by a minister of the gospel, to know that this Church has what he indicated the world needs today. He said, "What we need today is a church for the youth of the land. We have been preaching to the old folks and letting the young people go to the devil." Now I am grateful that we have in the Church a program for the youth of the land, that our boys and girls are being taught the gospel and inspired with the spirit of it, that they are being entertained and kept together in a splendid way. There is nothing else like it in all the world.

IMPRESSIONS MADE ON PROMINENT MEN

Some years ago the agent of the Holland-America Steamship line from Rotterdam, a Mr. Herschfeld, came here on a visit. I had met him in Holland. He had a letter of introduction to President Grant from the mission president, and President Grant invited me to the office because I could talk Dutch, and turned Mr. Herschfeld over to me to entertain. When evening came, I said, "Mr. Herschfeld, where would you like to go? I can take you to a show, or I will take you for a ride around the valley, but if you would like to see Mormonism in action I will take you to a Mormon bazaar." He said, "I would surely like to see Mormonism in action." So we went down to the old Granite Stake Tabernacle, on State Street and Thirty-third South. I introduced him to many of the Hollanders who were there, and he spent money freely. He was thrilled with what he saw. We went upstairs to an operetta that was beautiful, and then I said, as they announced the dance downstairs, "Probably you have had enough. I shall be glad to take you back to the hotel." He said, "Mr. Richards, couldn't I see the dance?" "Yes," I said, "if you would like to." We went down to the dance hall, and, on our way back to the hotel, he said, "You could not have made me believe that I could ever see a group of hundreds of young people such as I have seen here tonight, dancing together with no evidence of any evil thought or anything of that kind." He said, "Mr. Richards, if I were a young man I surely would cast my lot with the Mormon people." Then he went on to indicate that his daughter was the wife of a professor, and his son was a doctor, and he said, "You know what they think of the Mormons in Holland."

When we were in Los Angeles, we had a beautiful party in the Hollywood Stake tabernacle, given by the Deseret Club. Mr. Evans, who was in charge of all the Church groups on the campus at the college, was there. I spent considerable time with him, and he said, "Mr. Richards, I wish all the ministers in Los Angeles could see what I can see here tonight."

Now, brethren, I often felt while in the South, that if television ever developed to the point that the radio has, what a marvelous thing it would be to be able to set some of these parties with our young people out where the world could see them.

PRAISE FOR THE YOUTH PROGRAM

I thank the Lord for the leadership of the Church in this youth program for holding our boys and girls together under clean and wholesome recreation, and I trust when restrictions are lifted that there will be increased attention given to this program here at home, such as it deserves. I would like to admonish the bishops not to be too stingy with the Mutual officers whom they expect to carry on this activity program. Don't tell them there is no money in the budget. Go out and get the money if it is necessary. These boys and girls of ours are worth more than our money, and they are entitled to the kind of leadership this Church is prepared to give. You can requisition the finest talent living within your wards and stakes, and you don't have to pay for it. No one else can do that, so there is no excuse for not having the finest parties possible. Then I think we ought to make sure that we maintain our standards. No boy ought ever to enter one of our recreation halls and mingle with our young women with the smell of liquor on his breath, or a bottle of liquor on his person. The Lord expects us to guard and protect the lives and honor of our girls, and such men are in no fit condition to associate with them.

MISSIONARY EXPERIENCES

Now, I would like to leave one other thought with you today. You have heard a marvelous address during this conference, by Brother Benson, on missionary work. You brethren will realize that because of the war many of our boys will be deprived of the privilege of going on missions. Some of them will feel that the years they have spent in the service will have to take the place of their missions, but we have a new generation of boys coming along, the boys of the Aaronic Priesthood of this Church, and I truly hope that every bishop and every father and mother will see to it that these boys grow to manhood with a desire to fill a mission for the Church. It is not only a great responsibility that the Lord has placed upon the Church, to see that the gospel is preached in all the world for a witness unto all nations, but the great missionary system of this Church does more for the membership of the Church individually and collectively than any other activity of the Church, in my judgment. When I was a boy, I desired with all my heart to go on a mission. I remember two returned missionaries reporting their missions in the little country town where I was reared as a boy, and as I have said many times, if they did not do unusually well that night, the Lord did something for me, because when I went home, mere boy that I was, I got down on my knees and asked the Lord to help me to be worthy to go on a mission when I was old enough. When the train finally left the station here in Salt Lake, and I bade farewell to my parents, I told them it was the happiest moment of my life. There were many tears shed upon that occasion, but there were a great many more tears shed in little old Holland when I left there to return home nearly three years later. When we were set apart for our missions, President Anthon H. Lund made a statement to us boys I will never forget. He said, "Brethren, the people will love you when you go into the mission field. Now," he said, "don't get lifted up in the pride of your hearts and think they love you because of who you are. They will love you because of what you are. You are servants of the Lord. You are clothed with his Holy Priesthood and that is what the people will love." I did not realize fully the meaning of those words until I went to bid farewell to the Saints in Holland. One little mother, whose daughter came to America only a few weeks before, said, "Brother Richards, it was hard to see my daughter leave, but it is much harder to see you go." A brother old enough to be my own father, knelt down and kissed my hand an affectionate good-bye. As I closed my ministry, I shed tears all the way traveling from Amsterdam to Rotterdam, as I thought of how marvelously the Lord had sustained and blessed me, and what that mission meant to me.

Then President Lund made another statement I could not help thinking of today when we heard Brother Kirkham telling about the boy on the street corner in Boston bearing his testimony. President Lund said, "Boys, if you ever lack for words to speak when you are called upon, just arise and testify that you know that Joseph Smith was a Prophet of God and the Book of Mormon is true, and I promise you that you shall not want for words to speak." There isn't time to tell you how literally that was fulfilled. I remember one large conference held in Rotterdam where we had about fifteen hundred people present. Some of the leaders of the town came with their stovepipe hats and walking canes, and the mission president had promised me if I would take the minutes—I was secretary of the mission—he would not call on me to speak. Well, President Grant happened to be on the stand and he said, "Call Brother Richards next," and so I spoke unexpectedly. Now, I want to bear testimony to you here this day that the words of President Lund came to my mind, and I walked up to the pulpit and bore testimony to the restoration of the gospel, and the divine mission of the Prophet Joseph Smith. The Lord did something for me that day; he lifted me up until I felt that the floor could have passed from under my feet, and I would still have been there preaching the gospel of the Lord Jesus Christ. Later, when some of our people were baptized and I happened to be in that baptismal service, they told me that my talk that night, which I knew came from the Lord, was the thing that started them on the way to investigate the gospel.

FUTURE MISSIONARIES

Now, brothers and sisters—there are sisters on the air—I know of nothing in this world that can do for your boys and girls what a mission can. Jesus said, "And this is life eternal, that they might know thee the only true God, and Jesus Christ, whom thou hast sent" (John 17:3); and there is no way I know of in the world where men can learn to know God as they can in the mission field. I have heard President Grant say that the experience of his life that he regarded as richer to him than any other in his Church work was the time he spent in Great Britain as a missionary.

I would like to recommend to the bishops this thought, that every boy in the Aaronic Priesthood who lives worthy to go on a mission, be interviewed by the bishop, for a mission call initiates with the bishop. Do not attempt to be the judge whether he is financially able to go or not until you have interviewed him in the presence of his parents. I have tried that. I remember in one home we did not think they could possibly send their boy. We told the mother—the father was not a member of the Church—all we knew was we would be proud to have their boy represent our ward in the mission field, but we did not know whether they had any rich uncles or aunts, or grandparents that could help or not, and the mother said, "Bishop, if you will call my boy on a mission I will see that he gets the money if I have to work every day he is gone to provide it." Now, brothers and sisters, I feel that if we promote this spirit, keep it alive in the hearts of our people it should not be difficult at all for us to have one percent of our ward population in the mission field. We proved this could be done in two wards where I had the privilege of presiding. We have some ten to fifteen percent in the armed forces. The boys will bless you forever for the privilege that comes to them; and if they cannot go they will be stronger Latter-day Saints, proud of the fact that their bishop had interviewed them and given them an opportunity to go.

God bless us to do all we can for our boys, I pray in the name of Jesus Christ. Amen.

President Clark:

Elder Harold B. Lee, of the Council of the Twelve, will be our concluding speaker. I regret very much the time is so far spent there is so little left for you, Brother Lee, but we will ask those who are listening in, and we ourselves, to listen to you tonight on the air, and regard that as a part of this Conference.

ELDER HAROLD B. LEE

Of the Council of the Twelve Apostles

When one is called as the last speaker at the end of the seventh session of a general conference, when thirty-three of the finest minds in the Church have spoken, he isn't concerned about what he may have planned to speak, but he is concerned only about saying in those few minutes allotted him what his Heavenly Father would like to have him say. That is my prayer in these few moments.

THE QUESTION OF A DYING WOMAN

I heard a story told from one of the war fronts where our advancing soldiers were going into the land of a people who were fleeing from the ruthless enemy. These people believed in and worshiped a pagan god. As the conquering army made up of the allied nations advanced toward the stricken town, they met long lines of refugees with few or no belongings, fleeing from the enemy. The chaplain was called to administer aid to an old lady who had fallen, unable to go farther. She was in her dying moments. He knelt at her side to administer physical and spiritual aid. He told her about the Savior of the world, how the Savior had come and died for mankind, how he came as the Prince of Peace and how he ministered among those who were sick, needy, and afflicted, how he organized a work that had become a great work. This work had gone throughout the world under the banner of Christianity. As he finished his story of comfort, as he thought, to this dying woman, she looked up at him with dying eyes and asked, "Where have you Christians been all this time?"

FACTORS IN HELPING OUR BOYS IN THE SERVICE

As I thought of that question I thought of a visit I had with two of our Latter-day Saint marines who had just come back from the terrible fighting over Tarawa and others of the islands of the Pacific. They had found themselves through all these trying times in company with twenty-five Latter-day Saint boys. One of these two boys had been set apart by Brother Brown as the M.I.A. group leader and had ministered as the leader and the father of the group. As he told me about these boys, he said, "We kept most of them clean and sweet, but there are some of them that have slipped away from us. They have taken up habits that have not been good. I felt it was my responsibility, and I have done what I could to save some of them." Then I asked them this question, "Tell me, you two who have lived among these boys, what is the reason that some of our boys have kept themselves straight and others of our boys have slipped away from us?" Let me tell you what they said without any hesitancy: "The boys who have kept themselves clean have had regular correspondence with their wards and their priesthood quorums, and the boys who have fallen away from us are the ones who have never had a letter from their priesthood quorums or from their ward bishop." As I heard this simple testimony to the rightness of the instruction that you heard from this stand when this war had only just begun, and when I remembered that the priesthood of Almighty God was the power given by him to more than two hundred thousand of us to work and act in his name for the salvation of the souls of men—I paraphrased the words of that dying old pagan woman, "Where have the priesthood quorums been all this time?" I am hopeful that our boys won't return home without having had their quorums make some contact and some tie to which they can come when they do return.

I think if we could sum up the feelings of our boys as they return to us and have them tell us what it was that kept them firm and steadfast, they would say two things: First, that they have had an interest in life, and second, that they have believed there was someone at home who was concerned about them.

I listened to a doctor recently who said that the medical journals reported that the boys who had become mentally unbalanced in large majority, were the boys who had broken homes, whose wives or sweethearts had been unfaithful at home.

We have heard much in this conference about our boys. We have heard but little about our girls. How much preparation are you making for the girl who has changed during this trying period? How much concerned are you that she will "come home"? And I am talking to the ones that live in your homes, for they, too, during this period, have gone through a most difficult time.

WORK BEING DONE BY L.D.S. SOLDIERS

Shall I tell you what the boys have been doing among themselves to keep going and to help each other to come back to the point of sanity and rehabilitation after they have been through the struggle of war? Perhaps if I can give you three things that they have told us repeatedly maybe you bishops, you priesthood quorum presidents, you stake presidents, will take from their lessons, something to help you to build on the foundation that must be built upon for their salvation. In the first place, we don't know how the boys are coming back, nor what they will truly need. We are sure that when they come back they will be a little bit more of that which they were before they left. If they loved God and home and country a little before they went away, they will come back loving God still more and knowing him to be a reality, loving home more and with more faith. If they were boastful before they went into the war, they will come back unbearable braggarts. If they were inclined to immorality when they left us, they will come back slimy in their sinning, just as sure as we are here.

This is what they have done in their own little groups to try to help stabilize each other: In the first place, they have organized themselves into what they call ward teaching groups. At Fort Lowry, near Denver, down at Oak Knoll Hospital, for example, where our boys are coming back, they are sending out in pairs from their groups, those who are faithful, to visit the boys who will not come to their meetings, who have taken up habits that are keeping them out of sight. They talk to these boys and ask them, "Are you morally clean? Are you keeping the Word of Wisdom? Are you writing home to your parents? Are you true to your priesthood?" When I asked them, "Isn't that pretty plain language to talk to these boys," they replied, "But how are we going to help these boys if we don't know what is the matter with them?"

Are you as courageous, you ward teachers? Do you really want to help? Then you must do the kind of ward teaching that the Lord said we were to do, if you are to help. The next thing they do is to teach the gospel. They don't preach sermons in great generalities. They are searching into the scriptures. During these last few months, when I have had a somewhat intimate contact with the youth of the Church, I have found that they are hungry for the teachings of the gospel, and they tell me that rarely in the sacrament meetings where they attend do they hear the gospel taught to the members.

PREPARATION FOR RETURN HOME OF SOLDIERS

Now, if you want to help these boys when they come back, may I ask that you do like my little bishop friend who sits here on the front seat who came as a convert from another Church and who is now a bishop in one of our stakes? He says to speakers who come to his meetings, "We want speakers who come to our ward to preach the gospel. We would prefer you not come than to have you come and not preach the gospel to our people." May I urge that you take a leaf out of his book, and the books of our boys.

The third thing they are doing is to make sure that every boy of the group is given some responsibility in their group organization. Does that suggest anything to you? When these boys come home, will you take them to your hearts and see that they are given something to do, some activity that challenges their abilities and makes them feel they are a part of their Church community to which they want to belong, as quickly and as rapidly as possible?

God help us to understand these things and build the defense.

the refuge from the storm that the Lord said a stake of Zion was expected to be, where before his judgments would descend in their mighty power, this people might build a protection from those storms of adversity.

May the Lord help us so to do I pray in the name of the Lord Jesus Christ. Amen.

PRESIDENT J. REUBEN CLARK, JR.

First Counselor in the First Presidency

We will now close what I am sure all of us will agree has been one of our great conferences, great in the teachings that have come to us and great in the high spirituality which has characterized it. We have heard much that we should remember and that if remembered and put into practice will make of us the people whom God designed that we should be.

I will close with reading the passage read by Brother Mark E. Petersen from Joshua:

And if it seem evil unto you to serve the Lord, choose you this day whom ye will serve; whether the gods which your fathers served that were on the other side of the flood, or the gods of the Amorites, in whose land ye dwell: but as for me and my house, we will serve the Lord.

God Grant that that may be the determination not only of us who are here but of every member of the Church. We send our greetings to President Grant and ask God to bless him with his choicest blessings.

The congregation sang the hymn, "Come, O Thou King of Kings," L.D.S. Hymns No. 158, Hymn Book No. 192.

The benediction was pronounced by President Thomas O. Smith of the North Weber Stake.

Conference adjourned sine die.

The congregational singing was directed by J. Spencer Cornwall, Conductor, and Richard P. Condie, Assistant Conductor, of the Tabernacle Choir.

The Tabernacle Choir was in attendance at the Sunday morning meeting and presented musical numbers. The Tabernacle Choir Male Chorus, under the direction of J. Spencer Cornwall, rendered musical numbers at the Saturday evening meeting.

The music of the Tabernacle Choir and Organ Broadcast and the Church of the Air Broadcast was directed by J. Spencer Cornwall; organ presentations and organ accompaniments for these broadcasts were played by Alexander Schreiner; The Spoken Word was by Richard L. Evans.

Accompaniments and interludes on the great organ were played by Alexander Schreiner and Frank W. Asper.

Stenographic notes of the Conference were taken by Frank W. Otterstrom and Joseph Anderson.

Joseph Anderson,
Clerk of the Conference.

DANIEL HANMER WELLS

AND EVENTS OF HIS TIME

By Bryant S. Hinckley

As the polished facets of a diamond flash back brilliantly the rainbow of colors from the light which plays upon them, so do certain historic characters reflect the light and color of their times.

Daniel Hanmer Wells was one of these.

Bryant S. Hinckley, always illuminating and inspirational, turns the spot light of appraisal and appreciation upon a distinctive character in the great drama of Mormon history.

This book is in fact a new approach to the study of Church History. It offers the events of the history of Mormonism as one of the principal actors saw them happen and as he acted in, and was acted upon by them.

The book is a biography and more, a tribute of appreciation and more—it is a history throbbing with the pulse beats of great personalities as they struggle through one crisis after another.

His life ran the long span which included actively within it labors of love for and loyalty to every man who has been president of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints.

Daniel H. Wells saw it all happen: The rise of the Church in the Middle West; the glory of Nauvoo; the catastrophe of the martyrdom; the pain, travail, and power of pioneering; the building of the West; the crises of pre-statehood days; and the long, hard pull which finally established the Mormon people on the heights where they are now building.

Published privately by President Heber J. Grant, as a tribute to the loyal friend of his youth, it will stand as a welcome addition to the faith-promoting literature of the Church.

FIRST DAY MORNING MEETING

The opening session of the Conference commenced promptly at 10 o'clock a.m., Friday, October 5, with President George Albert Smith presiding and conducting the exercises.

The great Tabernacle was crowded to capacity, every available space being occupied. The Assembly Hall on the Tabernacle grounds was also fully occupied, and a large concourse of people assembled on the grounds, amplifying equipment having been installed in the Assembly Hall and on the grounds so that those who were unable to get into the Tabernacle could hear the services.

President George Albert Smith:

This is the opening session of the 116th Semi-Annual Conference of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints. We are convening in the Tabernacle on Temple Square in Salt Lake City. The Tabernacle is filled to overflowing and many people are standing outside.

There are on the stand this morning all of the General Authorities of the Church.

This full service will be broadcast over Station KSL, Salt Lake City, as will also the service this afternoon beginning at 2:00 p.m. The services tomorrow, Saturday, at 10:00 a.m. and 2:00 p.m. will likewise be broadcast over KSL, and also the two services on Sunday at the same hours. These same sessions will be broadcast over Station KSUB at Cedar City.

The singing today will be by the Relief Society Singing Mothers of the Salt Lake Stakes. Sister Florence J. Madsen is the director; Elder Alexander Schreiner is the organist.

The first song will be "America," sung by the choir and congregation.

The opening prayer will be offered by President David O. McKay of the First Presidency of the Church.

The choir and congregation sang "America."

President David O. McKay, Second Counselor in the First Presidency of the Church, offered the invocation.

The Relief Society Singing Mothers sang "The Lord's Prayer," by Gates.

President George Albert Smith:

The manner of voting today will be new to some of you. It will be desirable that we keep in mind that this is the Lord's house and that we are here in worship. While the form of voting may be somewhat extended over the usual Conference voting, it is desirable that we all participate, not only by raising our hands but that our hearts be full of gratitude to Him who is the Father of us all.

President Clark will now present the General Authorities of the Church in the order that will be described by him.

SUSTAINING OF GENERAL AUTHORITIES

President Clark:

We are met here in the Tabernacle on Temple Square, Salt Lake City, in a formal Solemn Assembly of the body of the Church to express the voice of the Church in a first sustaining vote for a new President of the Church. This proceeding is in accordance with the practice of the Church from the first sustaining vote cast by a General Conference for President Taylor, until the present time.

The Priesthood of the Church, in so far as the building can accommodate them, is seated in the Tabernacle by Priesthood quorums.

The First Presidency and the Council of the Twelve, with their Assistants, the Patriarch to the Church, the Presidents of the First Council of the Seventy, and the Presiding Bishopric occupy their usual seats on the Tabernacle stand.

The Patriarchs of the Church occupy the seats to the south of the stand.

The High Priests of the Church, including presidents of stakes and their counselors, the high councilmen, the presidencies of quorums, the quorum members, the ward bishoprics, occupy the center of the building on the main floor, as far to the eastward as the galleries. The ward bishoprics are seated just in front of the east gallery.

The Seventies occupy the north part of the building on the main floor under the north gallery.

The Elders occupy the south part of the building on the main floor under the galleries.

The Lesser Priesthood (priests, teachers and deacons) occupy the seats on the main floor, just back of the bishoprics, under the gallery on the east.

The general membership of the Church occupy the rest of the building. The voting will be by priesthood quorums first and then by the General Conference assembly.

The quorums and groups of quorums will vote in the following order:

1. The First Presidency.
2. The Quorum of the Twelve.
3. The Patriarchs.
4. The High Priests, including the Assistants to the Twelve, the presidents of stakes and their counselors, the high councilmen, presidencies of quorums, quorum members, the Presiding Bishopric, and ward bishoprics.
5. The Seventies.
6. The Elders.
7. The Lesser Priesthood (priests, teachers and deacons.)
8. The whole congregation here assembled including the priesthood.

The voting will be in the following manner:

As each quorum or group is called, they will be asked to vote to sustain the officer proposed: Those voting affirmatively will, when called upon, arise to their feet and bring their right arms to the square to witness to the Lord that they sustain the officer for whom they are voting. They will then drop their hands. Then those opposing will be asked to bring their right hands to the square to bear witness to the Lord that they are not willing to sustain the officer whom they are called upon to sustain.

When both affirmative and negative votes are cast, the members of the quorum will resume their seats.

All of the quorums will vote in this manner.

Every one is perfectly free to vote as he wishes. There is no compulsion whatsoever in this voting. When you vote affirmatively you make a solemn covenant with the Lord that you will sustain, that is, give your full loyalty and support, without equivocation or reservation, to the officer for whom you vote.

After all the quorums have so voted, a vote will be called of the whole congregation, those bearing the priesthood and those not bearing it. All will arise. Those voting to sustain will raise their right hands to the square, to witness that they sustain the officers for whom they vote. After they lower their hands the opposing vote will be called for and will be manifested by raising the right hand to the square.

The officers so to be voted for by quorums are the following:

The President of the Church.

The First Counselor to the President of the Church.

The Second Counselor to the President of the Church.

The President of the Quorum of the Twelve.

The Council of the Twelve.

The Patriarch to the Church.

The sustaining of the Counselors in the Presidency, the Council of the Twelve, and the Patriarch as Prophets, Seers, and Revelators to the Church.

After the vote by quorums to sustain these officers, the rest of the General Authorities, the general officers of the Church, and the general auxiliary officers of the Church will be sustained by voting as in the ordinary General Conference. This is in accordance with the procedure set by President John Taylor.

Please be ready to begin voting. Only Church members are entitled to vote.

Only one quorum or group of quorums, as the case may be, will stand at a time in voting by quorums. Each quorum or group of quorums will please arise when requested and remain standing until requested to be seated.

May the Lord guide us and may His Spirit attend us as we go forward in this solemn service, established by the Lord so that each member of His Church may have a voice in sustaining those whom He has called to preside over it and to direct its work, to the salvation and exaltation of mankind.

We shall first vote by quorums to sustain the President of the Church and his Counselors.

President Clark:

President Smith, so far as I have observed the voting in each case was unanimous.

President George Albert Smith:

If Matthew Cowley is in the audience we would like him to come now and take his place on the stand.

(Brother Cowley came to the stand)

The new member of the Council of the Twelve has taken his place, after being welcomed by the Church.

The choir and congregation sang the hymn, "We Thank Thee, O God, For a Prophet."

PRESIDENT GEORGE ALBERT SMITH

I wonder if anyone else here feels as weak and humble as the man who stands before you. I have been coming to this house since my infancy. I have seen all the Presidents of the Church since that time sustained by the congregation here, as their names have been presented from this stand. I have seen the Church continue to grow in numbers, and have realized throughout all my years that the Church of Jesus Christ is what its name implies. We who are members of this Church are indeed fortunate to have found the light and to have accepted the truth.

GROWTH OF THE CHURCH

In the year 1830, the Church was organized with six members. The adversary of all righteousness has from that day to the present sought to impede its progress and destroy it. I wonder if that great man, Joseph Smith, who gave his life that the Church might be organized and carried on as the Lord intended, can see the Church as it exists today, with its branches established in all parts of the world, and realize that each day since he was martyred, since he laid down his life and sealed his testimony with his blood, the Church has become stronger than the day before.

From this stand addresses have been delivered by some of the great teachers of the world. Some of the greatest students of the scriptures have explained the gospel from this stand, and men and women from everywhere have worshiped here. Yesterday, this house was apparently as full of the membership of the Women's Relief Society of the Church as it is today with both men and women together. Through that great organization, the Relief Society, begun by the Prophet Joseph, was given to womankind the dispensation of representing the Lord in their way as daughters, as wives, as mothers, and as representatives of their kind in all the world.

THE RESTORATION OF THE GOSPEL

We have had sustained here today various of the quorums of the priesthood, each one directed in its organization by our Heavenly Father. It was not a matter of personal wisdom on the part of individuals. In each case there was necessity for group organization, and as the Church grew and multiplied in numbers, the quorums have correspondingly increased until today in all parts of the world there are men divinely appointed, set apart, and endowed with divine authority, who state positively that they know whereof they speak when they testify that Jesus was the Christ, the Son of God, who died that we might all live. The Church that he organized in his day represented his Father and himself in all the parts of the world where it was established. In our day, by the direction of Jesus Christ our Lord, this Church was organized. It wasn't organized from just the imagination of men and women. There came a necessity that the priesthood of the living God be restored. A youth was selected to begin the work. When he was less than fifteen years of age, Joseph Smith lived at or near Palmyra, New York state, on a little farm. He was confused about what he should do, or which church he should join. The various denominations in that community were holding revival meetings and one group was saying, "This is the way," and another, "This is the way," until he, being of a naturally religious turn of mind, having lived in a home where the Bible, the holy scripture, was read, found in one passage of James:

If any of you lack wisdom, let him ask of God, that giveth to all men liberally, and upbraideth not; and it shall be given him. (James 1:5.)

THE COMING FORTH OF THE BOOK OF MORMON

Although a boy fourteen years of age, he went into the woods near his home, into one of God's first temples, bowed down upon the ground, and asked the Lord in his confusion, "Which of these churches shall I join?" I have no doubt he was surprised when the answer came to him, "Join none of them." And then he was told that if he would obey the direction of our Heavenly Father, an important mission would be given for him to perform under divine direction. That was not the idea of a man who desired to deceive; it was the humble, simple faith of a boy. So he continued following the inspiration of the Lord. He continued carrying out the directions that were given to him by holy beings, the result of which was the uncovering in the Hill Cumorah of the golden plates from which the Book of Mormon, the history of the ancestors of the American Indians, was translated and published. Since then that book has been carried to the ends of the world, having been published in many languages. He was only a young man when that occurred. When the time came for its publication, he was ridiculed. People derided him and called him a money digger because he worked for a living and had to earn that living part of the time digging in the earth. But they didn't look upon him as a servant of the Lord; neither did the majority of the people in the days of the Savior accept Jesus Christ of Nazareth as a servant of the Lord. The great majority rejected Christ and rejected each of his followers who became members of the quorum of the Twelve.

Joseph Smith persisted in his work; and when the Book of Mormon was finally about to come from the press, after having been translated through the gift and power of God, for it was in a language unknown to him, the people in the neighborhood of Palmyra agreed that they would not buy it, thinking that they would thwart the bringing forth of the book. They supposed that their refusal to purchase it would make impossible the completion of its publication.

There had been written in that book at the time of its compilation the statement that the book would be received by many people. Joseph Smith didn't eliminate that statement when it came to publication.

When the people said, "We'll not read it," he did not take it out and say, "Well, I can't fulfil this." If he had been writing the book himself, he probably would have changed the script, but it was not his script, and so it went to the world. I was present a few years ago when the Smith farm near the Hill Cumorah was purchased, and as I went through the neighborhood I found only one copy of the Book of Mormon. That was owned by a man named Pliny T. Sexton, who was chancellor of the University of New York and the banker at Palmyra. He had a copy of the first edition of the Book of Mormon as it came from the press. The leaves had never been cut, and he kept it in the safe in the bank. I asked him, "Is there any place here where I can find another copy of the Book of Mormon?" He said, "I do not know." I then began to inquire among the people and found that the people of Palmyra had kept their word. They had neither bought nor would they read it. At that time Palmyra was a village and is still a village, but the Book of Mormon that was discredited then has since been read and accepted by people in all parts of the earth, people from many nations, numbering hundreds of thousands, and the work is still going forward, fulfilling the prediction that it was to be made ... known to all kindreds, tongues, and people, that the Lamb of God is the Son of the Eternal Father, and the Savior of the world; and that all men must come unto him, or they cannot be saved. (1 Nephi 13:40.)

THE SAINTS MOVED FROM PLACE TO PLACE

Men may conspire to prevent the work of the Lord, as they have done when they are prompted by the adversary, but his work has continued to grow from that day until the present time. As the Church grew, the people were compelled to move from their smaller places. Palmyra became too small, and they moved to Kirtland, Ohio. That became undesirable, so they moved into Missouri, from which state they were banished by the edict of the governor, and many of them laid down their lives as martyrs to the cause. The people then passed across the Mississippi River into the state of Illinois. In fewer than seven years that group of people, led by the youthful Prophet who had now grown to be a man, erected buildings and a magnificent temple which was the finest building in its day in the state of Illinois. In less than seven years Nauvoo became the largest city in the state, regardless of persecution and everything that was done to prevent the growth of the gospel of Jesus Christ that the adversary could inspire, including murder and every other wrong that goes with it.

PROPHECY REGARDING SETTLEMENT IN THE ROCKY MOUNTAINS

At that time Springfield was a city of about twelve thousand and Chicago had a population of about five thousand. The Prophet of the Lord prophesied one day:

. . . the Saints would continue to suffer much affliction and would be driven to the Rocky Mountains; many would apostatize; others would be put to death by our persecutors, or lose their lives in consequence of exposure or disease, and some of them would live to go and assist in making settlements and build cities and see the Saints become a mighty people in the midst of the Rocky Mountains. (History of the Church, Vol. 5, p. 85.)

Think of such a prediction at that time. The Saints were then four or five hundred miles east from where Omaha now is, and Omaha is approximately a thousand miles from the Salt Lake Valley. For the Prophet of God to say that they would be driven from there and go fifteen hundred miles into the wilderness, and there become a mighty people was a remarkable statement indeed. Has that prophecy been fulfilled? Our presence here today attests that it has.

REVELATION ON THE WORD OF WISDOM

I could, if I had time, open to you the Doctrine and Covenants containing the prophecies, the revelations of God to the Prophet Joseph Smith, and show that one by one they have been fulfilled, not by Joseph Smith's power but by the power of God. In referring to the advice and counsel contained in the eighty-ninth section of the Doctrine and Covenants, the Lord made this promise:

And all saints who remember to keep and do these things, walking in obedience to the commandments, shall receive health in their navel and marrow to their bones; And shall find wisdom and great treasures of knowledge, even hidden treasures. . . . (D. & C. 89:18-19.)

While Joseph Smith might write those words, he couldn't fulfil that promise. I stand here today as one of the humblest among you, as the result of the observance of the requirements of that revelation and other commandments that God has given. Observance of that commandment has placed the membership of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints in the tops of these everlasting mountains in a class by themselves. Not only do we have the lowest death rate of any people in all the world, but we also have a high birth rate as well. That was the promise that was given by the Lord in the days of the Prophet Joseph Smith. The Lord said that the destroying angels should pass by us and not slay us if we kept his counsel. What has been another result? The age of men and women in the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints has increased until the average term of life among us is longer than among any other people in the world.

Another promise: The Lord said that he would give to those who would keep this word of wisdom, "great treasures of knowledge, even hidden treasures." I refer you to the February, 1944, number of The Improvement Era wherein was published a graph showing the relative position of the states of the Union as to the number of scientists born in those states in proportion to population. Strange as it may seem, if you began at the lower corner of that graph and followed up state by state, you would come to the state of Massachusetts next to the highest on the graph, yet you would not have reached the state of Utah. You have to go twenty percent points higher up the graph to find Utah, the state that has produced more scientists born within its borders per capita than any other state in the American Union. That wasn't an accident; it was a fulfilment of the promise of God as a result of observance of the Lord's commandments. And so I call attention this morning to the fact that when we do represent our Heavenly Father in the way that he has desired, these blessings follow and are not an accident. They are the direct fulfilment of God's promises through his Prophet.

A PROMISE MADE AS A REWARD FOR LOYALTY

And so today, my brethren, standing here in humility before you, I would like to express to you my gratitude that you have seen fit to promise that you will help the humble man who has been called to preside over this Church as he strives to carry on by the inspiration of the Almighty. For this promise I am grateful, and I thank you that you have offered to do the same thing with regard to the two men who stand by my side as counselors, loyal and true and devoted Latter-day Saints, who have done everything to make my responsibility easier for me to carry. You voted to sustain the Quorum of the Twelve, the quorum that I belonged to for so many years that I felt like a stranger, almost, when I walked out of it to occupy the position as President of the Church.

And so I might go on with all these quorums. You have held up your hands in the presence of God to sustain this body of men in the leadership of the Church. I assure you that if you will fulfil your promise, the blessings of our Heavenly Father will abide with you and in your homes and with your loved ones, and Zion will continue to grow and spread abroad, and the truth will be carried to every land and clime and the power of the priesthood will be made manifest among our Father's children in many places where it has never yet even been heard. You men who are here, or who hold the priesthood, have that responsibility, and as one of the number, I would like to say, we can't let our own personal affairs stand in the way. If the call comes for us to divide the gospel of Jesus Christ with our Father's other children, it will be our privilege as well as our duty to put our own affairs in order, and like Joseph Smith and the men who began with the Church in the early days, go where we may be called to go. One of our departed brethren, Melvin J. Ballard, used to sing so beautifully, "I'll go where you want me to go, dear Lord; I'll be what you want me to be." That's the spirit of the gospel of Jesus Christ. Great is the joy that comes into the hearts of the men and the women who devote themselves to doing what our Heavenly Father desires them to do.

PRAISE FOR THE WOMEN OF THE CHURCH

I would like to say to this great body of priesthood, you are fortunate men if you have been blessed with a good wife, a daughter of God, to stand by your side. And I want to say to you that God loves her just as much as he loves you. If you would have his blessings, you will treat her with love and kindness and tenderness and helpfulness. She will then be able to carry on under the responsibilities that come to her to bring children into the world and nurture and care for them and teach them the plan of life and salvation. And so I plead with you, my brethren, let your homes be the abiding place of love, and the authority that you bear should magnify that love in your soul and in the lives of your wives and your children.

Yesterday this house was filled with the daughters of Zion, and I say without hesitation that you could find no more beautiful picture of womankind in all the world than was here yesterday afternoon. These faithful wives, these faithful daughters, assume their portion of the burden and carry it on. They make their homes a heaven when sometimes without them the homes would be anything but heaven.

So today, my brethren, I feel to say to you, grateful am I for membership in this Church. Thankful am I that I have lived among this people. I want to express my gratitude to hundreds of you who are here today for the courtesies and the hospitality that many of you have extended to me. I realize that it is not because of the man that you have extended these courtesies, but because he represented the Lord as his humble servant. You have earned your blessing and will continue to have it for all your kind deeds extended to his servants.

WORK OF EARLY DAY LEADERS

Now, as I stand here I realize that those who gave their lives in the early rise of the Church, including Joseph Smith and Hyrum, his brother, could have run away from the danger that threatened them. They knew, however, that that was not the thing their Heavenly Father desired. So they remained behind, after having finished their work; and under the leadership and direction of the Prophet, who by the way was the younger of the two brothers, builded a temple to God on the banks of the mighty Mississippi River in the beautiful city of Nauvoo, and they built it to completion far enough so that the ordinances of the Holy Priesthood were administered, and marriage for eternity was consummated therein. And since the erection of the Nauvoo Temple, the same blessings given there have followed in the other temples to the number of nine. Think of it, my brethren. Beginning only a comparatively few years ago with six members, day by day the work of God has gone forward among the children of men. No longer are the Latter-day Saints despised as they used to be, because the adversary had misrepresented them, but they are now respected by great and good men everywhere because of what has been accomplished. We could not have made these achievements except that our Heavenly Father had made it possible for us to do it. So, we ought to be thankful this day.

I ask that the Lord may take us to our homes when we have finished our labors with this conference, and that each of us will go back to the roof that shelters us, wherever it may be, with the renewed determination that God, being our helper, we will prove worthy of him in whose image we have been created. If we will do that, there will radiate from our very presence, wherever we go, a power of righteousness, and the communities in which we live will be blessed thereby.

GRATITUDE FOR BLESSINGS

I am grateful to these wonderful organizations, without naming them, that have carried their part of the responsibility. You voted for the leadership of these here today. I am grateful for the Tabernacle choir and the other glorious choirs that we have throughout the Church. This marvelous Tabernacle choir and organ that hold forth every Sabbath day have preached the gospel to the ends of the earth, because its program has been carried everywhere. And then we have the Singing Mothers of the Relief Society. They not only do what the Lord desires them to do in their lives, but they sing praises to him and teach others to do the same.

How blessed we are in this house, sanctified to God by the teachings that have been given here by righteous men and women. Here we are today, not as a conglomerate community, but as a band of brothers and sisters, worshipping at the same shrine, praying to the same God, living the same gospel, keeping our homes under the supervision of the same spirit. I don't know how any one of us can enjoy these blessings without having his feelings exalted and from the depths of his soul thank him who bestows upon us all our blessings.

I pray that our Heavenly Father may continue his favor; that peace, comfort, and satisfaction may abide in your homes; that these men who are in the various mission fields of the earth, may be magnified before the people and exercise the authority that has been conferred upon them to build, not destroy, but to build a better world that our Heavenly Father will be delighted to honor and to bless because of its righteousness. The Lord bless you in your missionary fields of labor, and all of you men in your various callings, all you women in your homes and abiding places, and the organizations with which you are identified. May the Lord bestow every blessing, and I pray that his spirit may continue with us today, henceforth and forever; and when the time comes that we shall stand before the Great Judge, where we all will report some day, that we will find our record of such a character that the Lord will say to us,

... Well done, good and faithful servant; thou hast been faithful over a few things, I will make thee ruler over many things: Enter thou into the joy of thy Lord. (Matt. 25:23.)

I pray that this may be our blessing and the blessing of every soul that we can influence by lives of righteousness and worthy example, all of which I ask in the name of Jesus Christ, our Lord. Amen.

ELDER GEORGE F. RICHARDS

President of the Council of the Twelve Apostles

I feel very humble in undertaking to address this large congregation, but I have the assurance by your vote that you are my friends. If I have any enemies, I do not know of them. If I have done anything to injure any person, I am very sorry for it. If anybody has done anything in an effort to injure me, I cheerfully forgive him and pray God's blessings upon him. If any of us have done any wrong, I trust that we will discover it and repent of our sins and receive that Spirit from the Lord, the Holy Ghost, which brings peace to our souls, notwithstanding what may be going on about us.

EXPRESSIONS OF GRATITUDE

For thirty-nine and a half years, brethren and sisters, you have been sustaining me as a member of the Council of the Twelve in your semi-annual and annual general conferences and in your quarterly conferences in the stakes. I appreciate this, of course. Great kindness has been extended unto me and now today you have expressed your willingness still to sustain me as a member of the Council and President of the Council of the Twelve. I appreciate this greatly.

I am thankful with you for the gospel of the Lord Jesus Christ, for its restoration to the earth in these last days and for membership in the Church and for the blessings that we have received under the gospel. Everything is offered unto us that our Father in heaven has to give, if only we will be faithful as we have covenanted to do when we entered the waters of baptism into this Church.

TITHING A TEST OF FAITHFULNESS

I had thought that I might be privileged to speak at this conference, and I have thought to speak about a very important subject pertaining to the gospel of Jesus Christ, one that is dear to the hearts of faithful Latter-day Saints. I refer to the law of the tithe, which is the revenue law of the Church. When a member of the Church pays a full tithing, he has the satisfaction of knowing that he is in the favor of the Lord. It is an opportunity to us, brethren and sisters, to show to the Lord that we are willing to make sacrifices for the accomplishment of his mighty purposes in the earth, the saving of the souls of the children of men, for the tithes of the Church are a potent means of accomplishing that end. Those of us who have paid our tithing in full have done our full share in all that has been accomplished by the use of the tithing of the Church. Tithing is a test of the faith of the members of the Church. He is fortunate indeed whose faith has sustained him in meeting the obligation of the tithe. There are great blessings attached to the faithful observance of this law, and for neglect to pay tithing there are serious consequences attached.

THE WORD OF THE LORD

For I am the Lord, I change not; therefore ye sons of Jacob are not consumed.

Even from the days of your fathers ye are gone away from mine ordinances, and have not kept them. Return unto me, and I will return unto you, saith the Lord of hosts. But ye said, Wherein shall we return?

Will a man rob God? Yet ye have robbed me. But ye say, Wherein have we robbed thee? In tithes and offerings.

Ye are cursed with a curse: for ye have robbed me, even this whole nation.

Bring ye all the tithes into the storehouse, that there may be meat in mine house, and prove me now herewith, saith the Lord of hosts, if I will not open you the windows of heaven, and pour you out a blessing, that there shall not be room enough to receive it.

And I will rebuke the devourer for your sakes, and he shall not destroy the fruits of your ground; neither shall your vine cast her fruit before the time in the field, saith the Lord of hosts.

And all nations shall call you blessed: for ye shall be a delightsome land, saith the Lord of hosts. (Malachi 3:6-12.)

I, the Lord, stretched out the heavens, and built the earth, my very handiwork; and all things therein are mine.

And it is my purpose to provide for my saints, for all things are mine.

But it must needs be done in mine own way; and behold this is the way that I, the Lord, have decreed to provide for my saints, that the poor shall be exalted, in that the rich are made low.

For the earth is full, and there is enough and to spare; yea, I prepared all things, and have given unto the children of men to be agents unto themselves.

Therefore, if any man shall take of the abundance which I have made, and impart not his portion, according to the law of my gospel, unto the poor and the needy, he shall, with the wicked, lift up his eyes in hell, being in torment. (D. & C. 104:14-18.)

The law of the tithe is as old, as just, and as true as any others of the laws of God. It has come to us by revelation as a part of the gospel restoration, and in fulfilment of the prophecies of the holy scriptures.

And he shall send Jesus Christ, which before was preached unto you:

Whom the heaven must receive until the times of restitution of all things, which God hath spoken by the mouth of all his holy prophets since the world began. (Acts 3:20-21.)

A JUST LAW

It is God's own plan of distribution of the financial responsibilities of his Church. It exacts nothing that is unreasonable, unjust, or impossible, hence there can be no justification for non-compliance therewith. The law of tithing in the Church is regarded as being of such importance, as a test of faith, that a member who does not believe and practice it as a divine law is not accounted as being worthy of receiving the priesthood and temple blessings or occupying a position of presidency in any of the organizations.

The building up of the kingdom of God is a common cause in which we, as Latter-day Saints, are engaged. Each person anticipating an eternal inheritance therein should be willing to do his part according to his means. That is all the Lord has asked of us in giving to us the law of the tithe. A good member of any organization with which he may be affiliated will willingly bear his just proportion of the expense in its maintenance. We would not like to be known otherwise than as good members of the Church to which we belong.

In this connection, we might with profit be reminded of the experience of Ananias and his wife, Sapphira, of old, and not withhold any portion of our tithing from the Lord. If to do so would cause us to lose our faith and standing in the Church, it would be more serious than that which befell Ananias and Sapphira for a similar offense. In many instances the desire to get wealth militates against the payment of tithing.

The Lord understood that propensity in man and warned against it:

But seek ye first the kingdom of God, and his righteousness; and all these things shall be added unto you. (Matt. 6:33.)

Lay not up for yourselves treasures upon earth, where moth and rust doth corrupt, and where thieves break through and steal:

But lay up for yourselves treasures in heaven, where neither moth nor rust doth corrupt, and where thieves do not break through nor steal:

For where your treasure is, there will your heart be also. (Matt. 6:19-21.)

The Lord requires our undivided affection, our whole heart.

. . . Thou shalt love the Lord thy God with all thy heart, and with all thy soul, and with all thy mind. (Matt. 22:37.)

QUOTATIONS FROM MANY SOURCES

Quoting from "Gems of Thought" by George W. Brown, Rev. Dr. John Wesley Duncan says:

If the tithe is not a present obligation, not in force, then we reply the scriptures are meaningless in their teaching on the subject; and furthermore, if this be not God's plan for financing his kingdom, he has no plan.

Rev. E. M. Runyon says:

The man who religiously tithes his income is a doubly converted man. Tithing weans him away from covetousness, which in scripture is classed along with stealing, adultery and drunkenness, in its power to alienate a man from God. (p. 12.)

John H. Holliday says:

One of the plainest teachings of the word of God is the obligation of stewardship. Over and over again it is enjoined upon man as a duty under all circumstances. We are to give not only our substance, but our time, and our talents. God claims all. They are his gift to us. What he entrusts to us is to be used for his kingdom and his glory. With these commandments go promises of rich rewards that are received by those who obey, as myriads here and above can attest. The systematic giving that the tithe compels is full of blessing. It gives one the ability to have something always for a deserving object. It cuts out the roots of selfishness. It nourishes the virtues of brotherly love and helpfulness. It realizes the privilege of being a co-worker with God, and it creates that cheerfulness in the giver that makes God love him. How wonderful that we can endear ourselves to the great God in such a simple way. How wicked and foolish if we do not. (p. 23.)

Harry Whitcomb says:

While the tithe would fill a long-felt want, and abundantly finance all the great enterprises of the church, that is not why we should tithe. The reason why we must tithe is because the word of God clearly commands it. . . . God might have annulled the law of the tithe by the word of him who came "Not to destroy the law, but to fulfil it," but instead Jesus laid a tremendous emphasis, and an untold weight of obligation on the old law, when he said that men ought to tithe. How that ponderous "ought" from Jesus' lips should thunder in our ears, and in our hearts, and in our consciences. (p. 56.)

I quote from The Deseret News of September 23, 1915:

The Baptist state convention concludes its annual sessions this evening, after an eventful and pleasant meeting with an attendance gratifying to those in charge. A feature of today was an address by the Rev. Dr. L. S. Bowerman, pastor of the Immanuel Baptist Church of this city, on "Tithing, the Minimum Basis of Giving." He strongly advocated the ten percent tithing system, as it obtained in the Mormon Church, remarking, incidentally, "We ought to be as fully religious as the Mormons." "Since the days of Abraham, a thousand years before Moses was born," said Dr. Bowerman, "the tithing system was inaugurated, and so took the precedence of the Mosaic law."

The speaker traced the history of the tithing system through the Old Testament, and showed its indorsement in the New Testament, closing his address by showing the promises of God to the individual and the nation who paid their tithing to his service and for his cause, that they should prosper in the end not only in the goods of this world, but as recipients of spiritual blessings. Dr. Bowerman's address was very well received and was considered one of the most scholarly addresses of the convention.

Rev. A. N. Fisher of Pasadena, California, said that:

While the Methodist Church has not adopted the tithing system to raise funds for its support, the plan was sanctioned at the national convention of Methodists which was recently held in Indianapolis. Mr. Fisher said that this system was right and successful inasmuch as the church now employing it (L.D.S.) is in most satisfactory financial circumstances. The plan, he declared, appealed to the 3,700 delegates to the convention. It was, he stated, the most representative gathering ever held in the interests of the Methodist Church.

LATTER-DAY TEACHINGS AS TO TITHING

The Church of Christ is destined to bless the whole world by reforming it. It will eventually correct all the great evils of society and lift mankind to a higher level, physically, morally, and spiritually. It is a worthy cause in which to be engaged and for which to spend our means and talents. It is the greatest reform movement of the age. It is bound to succeed, for it is founded upon true principles revealed anew from heaven. Those who aid in its establishment and growth shall surely share in the happiness and satisfaction, as well as the honor and glory of such a mighty work.

The poor receive assistance from the tithes, and to withhold the tithing defeats that part of God's plan.

Therefore to him that knoweth to do good, and doeth it not, to him it is sin. (James 4:17.)

But he that doeth not anything until he is commanded, and receiveth a commandment with doubtful heart, and keepeth it with slothfulness, the same is damned.

Who am I that made man, saith the Lord, that will hold him guiltless that obeys not my commandments? (D. & C. 58:29-30.)

Behold, now it is called today until the coming of the Son of Man, and verily it is a day of sacrifice, and a day for the tithing of my people; for he that is tithed shall not be burned at his coming. (D. & C. 64:23.)

For, behold, the day cometh, that shall burn as an oven; and all the proud, yea, and all that do wickedly, shall be stubble: and the day that cometh shall burn them up, saith the Lord of hosts, that it shall leave them neither root nor branch.

But unto you that fear my name shall the Sun of righteousness arise with healing in his wings; and ye shall go forth, and grow up as calves of the stall. (Malachi 4:1-2.)

President Joseph F. Smith said:

There are other books which not only credit what has been paid, but show what ought to have been paid. (Temple Historical Record, p. 47.)

Does our tithing account balance?

President Heber J. Grant made this statement:

I desire the resignation of every man presiding over the people who does not believe in the law of tithing.

He that receiveth my law and doeth it, the same is my disciple; and he that saith he receiveth it and doeth it not, the same is not my disciple, and shall be cast out from among you. (D. & C. 41:5.)

And I give unto you a commandment . . . that ye shall live by every word which proceedeth forth out of the mouth of God. (D. & C. 98:11.)

Be diligent in keeping all my commandments, lest judgments come upon you, and your faith fail you, and your enemies triumph over you (D. & C. 136:42.)

May the Lord bless you, my brethren and sisters, and all of us, with faith to pay our tithing honestly, to give our offerings generously, and to maintain our integrity to the truth and help carry on the work to the end, I pray in the name of Jesus Christ. Amen.

PRESIDENT J. REUBEN CLARK, JR.First Counselor in the First Presidency*

There is time only for a word.

Today I have, by my uplifted hand, witnessed to President Smith, to you, and to the Lord, that I will sustain him as prophet, seer, and revelator, and President of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints. Each of you has made a like covenant. The Lord has said, "... if ye are not one ye are not mine." (D. & C. 38:27.) God give to each and every one of us the strength and the power to be loyal, to give up faultfinding, to give up trying to find new ways, to obey the commandments of the Lord—to obey those whom you have yourselves sustained to lead you, for without unity in leadership there cannot be progress and this Church cannot be built up. God give to all of us the power to do this, I humbly pray in the name of Jesus Christ. Amen.

President George Albert Smith:

The Relief Society Singing Mothers of the Salt Lake stakes will now sing for us. Before they do so, I would like to say that President Clark will not consider the remarks he has just made, I hope, as his address to the Conference. We will give him more time on another occasion.

Selection by the Relief Society Singing Mothers, "Sweet Is the Work."

President George Albert Smith:

I think this large audience would like to know that Aunt Augusta Grant, who for so many years took care of our beloved President who passed away not long ago, has been sitting through these services. We are so happy to have her here.

Elder Joseph F. Smith, Patriarch to the Church, offered the closing prayer. Conference adjourned until 2 o'clock p.m.

FIRST DAY AFTERNOON MEETING

The second session of the Conference was held in the Tabernacle at 2 o'clock p.m., Friday, October 5. Again the building was crowded to capacity.

President George Albert Smith:

You will notice we are trying to run this Church on time, and it has been on time all the way.

This is the second session of the 116th Semi-Annual Conference of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints. We are convened in the Tabernacle on Temple Square in Salt Lake City.

There are on the stand this afternoon all of the General Authorities of the Church as sustained this morning.

This full service will be broadcast over Station KSL, Salt Lake City, as will also the services tomorrow, Saturday, at 10:00 a.m. and 2:00 p.m., and also the services Sunday at the same hours. These same sessions will also be broadcast over Station KSUB at Cedar City.

The singing this afternoon will be by the Relief Society Singing Mothers of the Salt Lake stakes. Sister Florence J. Madsen is the director; Elder Alexander Schreiner is the organist.

Our first song will be by the choir and congregation, "Redeemer of Israel," after which the opening prayer will be offered by President Willard L. Smith of the Alberta Stake.

Singing by the choir and congregation, "Redeemer of Israel."

The opening prayer was offered by Elder Willard L. Smith, President of the Alberta Stake.

The Relief Society Singing Mothers sang the anthem, "Holiness Becometh the House of the Lord."

ELDER JOSEPH F. SMITH

Patriarch to the Church

For the time allotted to me this afternoon I pray that I may have an interest in your prayers that I may bear my testimony to our mutual benefit.

There are occasions, great occasions which come to us, which we would fain share with our brethren and sisters.

A MEMORABLE OCCASION

It is frequently said that the Lord has raised up a particular man to perform a particular mission. Everyone of us here has heard that discussed and has heard how the peculiar talents of each of the presidents of the Church have been of a special value during his respective mission. I wish that all the members of the Church could have witnessed the council meeting wherein the Presidency was re-organized. If ever there was a time when the Spirit of the Lord was indubitably manifest, it was on that occasion. Everyone present thrilled to it. Everyone present was aware, beyond doubt, of the absolute rightness of it.

It is not for me to say what particular mission President George Albert Smith has ahead of him. This I do know, however, that at this particular time in the world's history, never was the need for love among brethren so desperately needed as it is needed today. Furthermore, I do know this, that there is no man of my acquaintance who loves the human family, collectively and individually, more profoundly than does President George Albert Smith. Those two things coming in conjunction, the need for love, his presidency at this time, have for me at least, peculiar significance. And I should like this afternoon to be remembered as saying just this—We must love one another, and we must do more than that.

LOVE FOR FELLOW MEN THE NEED OF THE WORLD

The Savior told us what the two great commandments were. At another time he went beyond loving one's neighbor, at least he became more specific on another occasion:

But I say unto you which hear, Love your enemies, do good to them which hate you, Bless them that curse you, and pray for them which despitefully use you. (Luke 6:27-28.)

A little later on he continues:

For if ye love them which love you, what thank have ye? for sinners also love those that love them. And if ye do good to them which do good to you, what thank have ye? for sinners also do even the same. (Luke 6:32-33.)

In a world seething with hatred, in a world calling for harsh government of vanquished people, I hope that the Latter-day Saints can remember that we must love our enemies. There are those who say, "But we must be practical. It is no time for sentimentality. We must face facts." With that I heartily agree. We must face facts. We must be practical, and I bear you my testimony that the only practicality which will bring peace to the world is that we shall love our fellow men.

THE MEANING OF FREEDOM

So much has been talked about liberty; so much has been said about fighting for freedom. What good is the winning of battles if we shall negate them by acts of unwarranted hatred? About this matter of freedom, I should like to say this regarding personal responsibility: too many people think of freedom in terms of license. Freedom is not the right to do as one "jolly well" pleases. Freedom stops for someone when someone else commits an act detrimental to his neighbor. I have no right to any conduct which would impede the progress of my neighbor. I have no right to any act which would take the freedom from someone else. And that thought carried a little further is of tremendous significance to the Latter-day Saints. This is a missionary Church. Upon us rests the responsibility of crying the gospel to the world because only by it can peace and liberty come.

THE POWER OF EXAMPLE

It is very easy sometimes for Latter-day Saints to say, "What I do is my own business. If I break the Word of Wisdom a little bit, that's my business." There is no such thing as strictly private conduct. A Latter-day Saint, in a careless moment, may perform a thoughtless act which will stand in the way of someone else's accepting the gospel. I know of one little branch in the mission field that had been built up laboriously, and that little branch was all but destroyed by a careless act of a thoughtless missionary. It is well for us to take careful stock of any projected action, no matter how seemingly trivial, and ask ourselves, "If I do this, if anybody sees me do this, will it discourage his faith in the gospel of Christ?"

How tragic to have someone interested in the gospel, on his way in the path of investigation, see a Latter-day Saint violate one of his ideals, and then say, "If that's Mormonism, I want none of it. If they preach one thing and do another, I want none of it." Brethren and sisters, every one of us will be held responsible for any act which proves to be a stumbling block to someone else. We have no right to such conduct. Yes, we have the power to choose; we have the power to do, but we have no right to conduct which would discourage someone else from obtaining the blessings which come through faith and obedience to the gospel of Jesus Christ. It is easy in the modern tempo of living to be careless. It is easy to be unwise. It is easy to speak harshly. Let's take thought as Latter-day Saints; let's be contributors to peace. Let's be brethren. Let's love one another and remember that love can be deliberately developed. It can be cultivated through service. You love those whom you serve. Parents love children more than children love parents because the parents do more for the children. Their love grows out of service. If you would love a man, do something for him.

I pray that we may be Latter-day Saints. Bear in mind, ours is the responsibility to carry the message to the world, not merely by word of mouth, but by every act and the manner of every action which is perceived by others.

I pray that the Lord will help us to live according to his word, that we may love each other, that we may be just, that we may even learn to love our enemies, that we may so live that people observing our lives will be encouraged in their faith, and I ask it in the name of Jesus Christ. Amen.

ELDER OSCAR A. KIRKHAM

AN EXPRESSION OF LOVE

I trust that I may enjoy the blessings of the Spirit of the Lord. For fifteen years I had the pleasure and the inspiration of working at the side of President George Albert Smith, when he was general superintendent of the Young Men's Mutual Improvement Association and I was the executive secretary. I want to bear testimony to the knowledge that comes with intimate association, of how kindly this man has been in his judgment, the inspiration of his leadership, and his outstanding love of youth. The great national organization of scouting has presented to President Smith the Silver Buffalo award which is a recognition of one who has served and loved the youth of America with an outstanding record. There are not many men in the Union who have this privilege bestowed upon them, which has come to our beloved President. It is not only here in this land that he is loved. Just a few days ago I was in Canada with John Stiles, executive commissioner of the Scouts of Canada, who expressed to me personally his great delight in the coming of new responsibilities, as he said, "to the man I love, George Albert Smith."

THE WORK OF THE CHURCH GOING FORWARD

I am happy also at this conference time to know that peace has come again and especially as it relates to our own Church service and work. I was delighted to read the announcement that the Relief Society is going to have a new home, a home of its own. The great thing in life in working with people is forever to preserve their pride, the pride of organization, no matter what that group may be. I have always been very proud of the recognition that the leadership of this Church has given to the women of the Church. Now it has received another lovely expression through the approval of the building of a home of their own. I am happy to know that the Sunday Schools can now go forward. They have been progressing, but can now go forward with greater strength. I am happy to know that the Young Men's and Young Women's Improvement associations, with their great general boards can go forward; these organizations that work so closely with youth and with the spiritual growth of the Church. They deal with youth and youth's desires, trends, and aptitudes. Just think, I recall that in one year over one hundred twenty-eight thousand young people in this Church took part in the activities of those two great organizations. That's what youth needs—the opportunity to express itself in some worthy task. I hope that the leadership of this Church will turn more and more opportunities to youth. Let us stand on the sidelines and watch the unfoldment, yes, of destiny with youth. They are waiting; they are ready; and I have faith in them.

I remember at one of our great June conferences twenty-seven couples came to be married in the temple. They had played together; they had prayed together; they came to the house of God together.

I rejoice in the great Primary Association, especially in the one great activity of their hospital. I have a Jewish friend who for the past few years, if I don't call upon him to assist the hospital, calls on me and says, "Well, Oscar, what can I do this year?" and he has made a number of gifts to that institution. But I love the activity associated with it, for happy playing children give of their pennies to the handicapped. How beautiful that is!

I speak of these auxiliary organizations because we have so often, in our religious progress, and I think correctly so, paid our respects and our appeal to the great body of the priesthood, the great authoritative, responsible body of the priesthood of the Church, in its progress. But I, out of the years, feel restrained to say my humble words in support of these great auxiliaries. I have met with the boards and felt their spirit, heard their testimonies, known of their desires, and they have only one aim: to serve God and see his great work go forward.

OPPORTUNITIES FOR MISSIONARY WORK

I rejoice with you in the coming of the great opportunity in our Church for missionary service. I feel it very definitely personally. I rejoiced in an all-day session in the temple just day before yesterday with the mission presidents of the great missions of the United States, and heard their appeal for more missionaries and heard how they have tried to hold the ranks of scattered branches where they have no missionaries. Many of the states of the Union are without a missionary. May God grant that that spirit may come to us in rich abundance, for it is an outstanding purpose of this Church to carry the word of God to all people. How beautiful is the gospel of Jesus Christ, and how fortunate are they who have the privilege of carrying that message! Its simplicity, its beauty, its strength! Just take the first few fundamental principles: faith—how natural it is that God put in his great plan faith in God and his Son Jesus Christ, and for us in this dispensation, faith in the divine mission of the Prophet Joseph Smith. And repentance naturally comes when the heart and the soul are awakened; that repentance which means: "Sin no more, Live the righteous life." And how blessed is baptism, an admission and a testimony of our own willingness to enter into this great cause, and how blessed the divine benediction of the Holy Ghost that follows. See how natural the plan is of the gospel of Jesus Christ; how it unfolds in its simplicity, in its grandeur. The world is waiting for this message. The world is waiting for it. God put it into the heart of every soul this day, in the sound of my voice. I humbly pray that each shall say, "Here I am, Lord. If I am worthy, take me." And may I say this closing word, for it is also the spirit of missionary work.

I heard a young lady in El Paso say not long ago, "Well Brother Kirkham, you know I have an idea about missionary work. I believe if the Church would just live the gospel plan we wouldn't have to have much missionary work. The world would come to us and say, 'We must know more about this people, we must know more about how you live and do and the things you accomplish.'"

God help us to live our religion and catch the inspiration of carrying it abroad, for the greatest blessing will come back to us in so serving, and may God bless the great auxiliaries of this Church in the glorious work they are performing, I humbly pray in the name of Jesus Christ. Amen.

BISHOP LEGRAND RICHARDS

Presiding Bishop of the Church

My brothers and sisters, it is a wonderful privilege to be able to attend this conference with you today. I thank the Lord for membership in this great Church.

THE "PEARL OF GREAT PRICE"

When Jesus was among men, he said that the gospel was the pearl of great price, and one seeking goodly pearls would sell all that he had in order that he might acquire the pearl of great price. I thank God that I possess this pearl of great price through having membership with you in this great Church. And then Jesus indicated that if we would seek first the kingdom of God and his righteousness that all other things would be added unto us. Not that we seek last, that we give him the crumbs that fall, as it were, from the Master's table, but that we seek first the kingdom of God and his righteousness; and I thank the Lord that there are so many faithful Latter-day Saints who are seeking first the kingdom and they are enjoying the gifts and the blessings of the Lord which are above all other riches in this world.

KEEPING UNSPOTTED FROM THE WORLD

One of the means by which we can increase our spirituality and appreciation of the gospel is by doing what the Lord has suggested in a revelation to the Prophet Joseph Smith:

And that thou mayest more fully keep thyself unspotted from the world, thou shalt go to the house of prayer and offer up thy sacraments upon my holy day. (D. & C. 59:9.)

Is there any true Latter-day Saint who would not like to keep himself more unspotted from the world? Is there any father or mother in Israel who would not like his or her sons and daughters to keep themselves unspotted from the world? We have been greatly impressed by the letters we have received from our boys and girls away from home during this war—how they have traveled, in many cases in jeeps, for miles in order that they might meet with a few more of our boys and girls, and these letters have indicated the joy that these boys and girls have had when they could meet together. These letters have convinced us that such meetings have contributed largely to the ability of our boys and girls to go out into the world of men, wicked as it is, and keep themselves unspotted from the world.

Jesus said:

For where two or three are gathered together in my name, there am I in the midst of them. (Matt. 18:20.)

Wouldn't you like to go where he is? Wouldn't you like your children to go where he is, where they can visit with him through his holy spirit and feel his power? For I do know that when men and women meet together in his name, there he is present at least by the power of his holy spirit.

While I was attending a stake conference a short time ago a bishop handed me a copy of a letter written by a young man from Normandy just following D-Day, where he had been engaged in the conflict, and in substance he said to his bishop: "Bishop, when I was home I didn't bother you very much. I never came to your church, but when I come back I am serving notice on you now that I want a reserved seat, and I will always be there to occupy it." Well, he did not come back. He fell in action, but methinks that in the heavens above the heavenly hosts would recognize the expressed wish of that boy.

IMPORTANCE OF ATTENDANCE AT SACRAMENT MEETINGS

Brothers and sisters, I think there is nothing more important, if we would find joy and peace and the happiness the gospel has to give, than that we as Latter-day Saints form the habit of attending our sacrament meetings and taking our children with us. I think the Church has a right to expect that of its leaders. I think the Lord expects it of us. It always grieves me if I hear someone say, "Well, he or she is a general board member, a member of the high council, a member of some ward in a position of responsibility, and he does not attend sacrament meetings." I tell you we just cannot live our lives alone, either. We need the blessings that come from meeting together, and we need to set the example to those who are about us, for as with the priest so with the people, and the people are likely to follow if we set the example and point the way.

Jeremiah of old, speaking of our day said:

Turn, O backsliding children, saith the Lord; for I am married unto you: and I will take you one of a city, and two of a family, and I will bring you to Zion: And I will give you pastors according to mine heart, which shall feed you with knowledge and understanding. (Jer. 3:14-15.)

Many of us have spent many years of our lives inviting backsliding Israel, the children of God, to come to Zion, and when they arrive here they find out how marvelous is the organization of the Church and the priesthood quorums and the auxiliaries that Brother Kirkham has been speaking of, which the Lord has provided to feed them with knowledge and understanding if they will only come and attend their meetings; but if they do not attend their meetings, how can the Lord feed them with knowledge and understanding as he has promised?

I remember reading the remarks of President Grant where he said he knew Saints in foreign lands who would walk miles to be able to attend a sacrament meeting because they loved the truth and they loved the Church; and when they came here that love waxed cold and they would not even walk across the street; and then he indicated that just as the body without food will wither and die so also will the spirit of man wither and die without spiritual food. And I could not help thinking of the words of Jesus. After he had fasted forty days, (and there can be no question but what he was hungry), the devil came to tempt him and pointing to the stones said:

Friday, October 5

. . . If thou be the Son of God, command that these stones be made bread.

But Jesus rebuked him in the words of Isaiah, saying:

. . . It is written, man shall not live by bread alone, but by every word that proceedeth out of the mouth of God. (Matt. 4:3-4.)

We must go where the words of God are to be heard if we would not wither and die spiritually.

Brigham Young said:

Whether we be poor or rich, if we neglect our prayers and our sacrament meetings, we neglect the Spirit of the Lord, and a spirit of darkness comes over us. (Journal of Discourses 10:300.)

We do not want to neglect our prayers; we do not want to neglect attendance at our sacrament meetings. We do not want a spirit of darkness to come over us. I want to bear testimony to you Latter-day Saints, as a result of my own experience and training, and that of my children, that I know of no better way that we can keep the spirit of God burning in our souls and in their souls than by attending sacrament meetings. When I walked out of our fast meeting one day with my son, who was a teacher in the Aaronic Priesthood, he turned to me and said, "Daddy, if the bishop had not announced the closing song just when he did, I could not have kept my seat another minute." And I thanked the Lord that my boy was there to feel that spirit and that power, for

. . . where two or three are gathered together in my name, there am I in the midst of them. (Matt. 18:20.)

When I think of how marvelously the Lord has provided for our spiritual growth and edification and advancement, and how dilatory some of us are in accepting his invitation, I feel, as I imagine Alma did, of old, when he said:

O that I were an angel, and could have the wish of mine heart, that I might go forth and speak with the trump of God, with a voice to shake the earth. (Alma 29:1.)

that I might be able to make the Saints realize the importance of their responsibilities in these matters. I wonder when Jesus does meet according to his promise, and there are groups of two or three where there might be tens or hundreds, if he does not feel as he did when he stood overlooking Jerusalem and cried out,

O Jerusalem, Jerusalem, thou that killest the prophets and stonest them which are sent unto thee, how often would I have gathered thy children together, even as a hen gathereth her chickens under her wings and ye would not! (Matt. 23:37.)

Then he adds:

Behold your house is left unto you desolate. For I say unto you, Ye shall not see me henceforth, till ye shall say, Blessed is he that cometh in the name of the Lord. (Matt. 23:38-39.)

May we accept his invitation, mingle with the Saints, strengthen the wards in their meetings where we reside, that we may not have a spirit of darkness come over us and that our houses may not be left desolate unto us.

May God bless this great Church and kingdom and all its members, I pray, in the name of Jesus Christ. Amen.

ELDER MARVIN O. ASHTON

First Counselor in the Presiding Bishopric

There is always safety in either a silent prayer or a request aloud by one having this responsibility. Yes, it is safer to have the prayers in our behalf of those who are listening in. I am keeping in mind some of the words of President McKay in his prayer today, namely: "May those who take part today say those things they should, that when they have finished there will be no regrets." I have in mind also a few words uttered by Sister Kate Barker yesterday in Relief Society conference in her prayer. I thought those words just a little unusual. They were: "Lord we thank thee for another chance." She was speaking of the world war and that it is now over. In other words, we are all happy and thankful to the Lord that we are still here and have another chance to go on.

THE POWER OF THE ATOMIC BOMB

So much has been said of late about the atomic bomb that one mentioning it here shows considerable bravery. It takes considerable intelligence, they tell me, to know much about this discovery. Therefore, I can say very little about it. I know this (if you can believe what you read) that where that bomb struck, incident to the first real experiment in the dry hills of New Mexico, that it took the sand of the desert and made glass out of it, so terrific was the generated heat in the explosion. I don't know too much about the damage done by the atomic bomb to the cities where dropped, but I have a prayer in my heart that the explosion of those bombs and the realization of the possibilities of their destruction have done something to the human mind. I must say that years ago I didn't know whether or not I liked the expression "God-fearing people." I thought we shouldn't fear God too much and that we should have his love rather than to be afraid of him. As I grew older, however, I began to think and wonder if there wasn't some sound philosophy in having a kind of fear of God. I hope the realization of the power of this new force will mean a fear in us that is going to drive us closer together in doing right. Yes, I hope the inhabitants of this world will really get together, or to put it in the words of President Truman, "We are going to learn to live together or die together."

PEACE MUST COME FROM THE HEARTS OF MEN

The other night, I heard the observation of a lady whose husband was the president of the Rotary Club in San Francisco. She, by virtue of his position, was invited to the big banquet with those peacemakers there. This lady sat beside a delegate, I think, from the Lebanon country. This gentleman was not a Christian, but he turned to her and said something like this: "If this old world is going to get back on its feet, if there is really going to be peace, it is going to be when we get into our hearts kindness towards one another. We must do the kind things such as that One whom you worship who made the trail time and time again from Jericho to Jerusalem."

Someone else has said that we are never going to have peace in the world until peace is in our hearts. If you and I expect peace to come to the world simply by legislative bodies getting around big mahogany tables, we are certainly mistaken. It must come from our dear selves. It is going to come from the proper attitude, one towards another.

I always liked these words of Ella Wheeler Wilcox:

So many Gods, so many creeds
So many paths that wind and wind,
While just the art of being kind
Is what the sad world needs.

If there ever was a time when we should be broad-minded it is now. We are not going to get to first base in this grand game of peace in the world until we are more tolerant. I think that means you, and I think it means me.

Let us be righteous, but not too rigid. You know I have much respect for the rubber tire. Take the tire off your car and put on solid steel wheels. Let the steel fight the hard road instead of rubber doing the job. How far are you going to get? You'll grind up the road—you'll wear out the steel tire, to say nothing of the jolt and the uncomfortable riding you will get. The steel wheel would not last long. I have respect for a rubber tire because it gives and it takes. The fabric is made firm, but it accommodates itself to the road. Now let me not be misunderstood in this comparison. I don't want to be so broad-minded that I forget the standards of this Church and our particular message to the world. May I repeat again the words of Bernard Shaw: "Let's be open-minded, but let's not get in a draft." I have ringing in my ears the words of President Clark at the dedication of the Idaho Falls Temple: "To be tolerant doesn't mean to accept." Let's be tolerant, let's be kind, but let's hold to our own standards. The world is calling louder than ever for real tolerance.

I like the word "practical" used by our Patriarch who has spoken to us today. How practical are you in your thinking—how practical am I? This getting peace into the world—whose business is it? Again I say it is yours—it is mine. I am thinking of the sign in some of our fields, "No Trespassing. This means you." It means you and me. I won't forget one of the stories they told us while I was going to the L.D.S. University. I think it was in the psychology class. It was the story of the wealthy lady who went to the theater. It was in the days when the coachmen had to stay out in the storm and wait. They say that as she sat witnessing the heart-rending scenes on the stage before her that she wet several handkerchiefs with her tears. But while she was so weeping, her coachman was freezing to death on the outside. She was not practical. Her emotions were off in another world, but those that she should be mindful of, close at hand, were suffering. You good lady in the home, what is your attitude towards your hired girl? Mr. Man of the house, what is your attitude towards the humble man working for you? Yes, and let's go a little further. It works both ways. Mr. Employee, what is your attitude towards the man who gives you employment? What is your attitude towards your neighbor, whether he is a member of your Church or not?

I was very much impressed in the temple, day before yesterday, in listening to Elder Cowley speak of the virtues of his brown people in New Zealand. We learn some great lessons from these people. I will not forget in a hurry a little play I saw acted out a couple of years ago by the Papago Indians. The whole setup was teaching the lesson of America being the great melting pot and what the responsibility was of a new immigrant coming to this country in seeking shelter here. The first act showed the big melting pot in the center of the stage. Each immigrant came up to the pot and took a sip of the contents. The Indians made it very clear that when they tasted it, it was displeasing to them. They didn't like the soup. Each withdrew with decided dissatisfaction. Now we come to the second act: each child brought in his hands his heart and put it into the kettle mentioned above. I can see each little brown Indian coming in one at a time, putting his heart into the big melting pot. The last act showed these little people from all parts of the world coming in again to taste of the contents of the pot. Now as they smacked their lips on its contents, they liked the taste of it. They liked it because their hearts were in it. This means you and it means me. From now on we will have to look at this whole world as a big melting pot, and we must all put our hearts in it. "We will have to learn to live together or die together." We must take this thing of living happily together more seriously than we have ever done in our lives. We must respect, as never before, the viewpoint of others. If you are an isolationist, you are as far behind the times in your thinking as are the horse and buggy days.

HELP IN TIME OF NEED

I don't know of anything that has impressed me more the last few months than the little experience we had in Salt Lake City a few weeks ago when the flood came through the cemetery and did its damage. The unfortunate people of the north bench received more water and gravel in their basements and on their lawns than they had ordered. The thing that impressed me was how President Christensen of this particular stake and his people got together. They organized themselves and went into the basements and dug out the debris. They found some basements half full. What impressed me most about this whole program was that as they went from door to door to do the Samaritan act, the question was not asked, "Are the people under this particular roof members of our Church?" They went to every home that was afflicted. I thought that was a grand act. We will have to put more of that stuff, if you please, into our systems. I was interested in what they said of one particular man helping with this work. I don't know whether this man could write out a check for a million dollars or not. That's quite a lot of money, but he was a man of considerable wealth. There he was up to his knees in mud, using the shovel. Someone who knew him well and knew his wealth said to him, "You don't have to do this." Of course he didn't. He could have written a check out to have someone else do it, but what was his comeback when so approached? He said, "Sure, I don't have to do this, but I want to know what the taste of it is along with the rest of these good people." Now that's what is going to convert the world—that's what is going to bring peace.

May the Lord bless us and help us to be tolerant and kind and do unto others as we would like to be done by, I ask in the name of Jesus Christ. Amen.

ELDER RICHARD L. EVANS

Of the First Council of the Seventy

It is thrilling to me, my brothers and sisters, to see this tabernacle filled again at a general conference of the Church. It is a glorious sight to behold.

ACCEPTANCE OF NEW APOSTLE

I should like to express first of all my earnest appreciation for the appointment of Brother Matthew Cowley as a member of the Quorum of the Twelve Apostles. I heard him voice his testimony day before yesterday in the temple, with the mission presidents, and was thrilled with the conviction of it. I must confess that several months ago I had his name on a list which I was preparing for another purpose.

A TRIBUTE TO THE PRESIDENT OF THE CHURCH

Since this is an unusual day in Church history, one on which we have sat in solemn assembly and sustained a President of the Church, I should like to express to you my conviction and state to you my acceptance of him as a prophet of the living God, and of all of his predecessors; and likewise my testimony of the divinity of this work and of the divinity of Jesus the Christ. I should like to echo also some of the things that have already been said concerning President George Albert Smith, borne out in my own experience with him, as to his kindly consideration for all his brethren and all his fellow men. He is considerate and loving and kindly under all circumstances, and on all occasions in my experience, and I am grateful for the privilege of associating with him.

There has been a phrase running through my mind—a phrase as to the perishability of the opportunities for teaching our children. I say perishable because they are opportunities which pass quickly and which never come again. On many occasions I have been impressed with the fact that some of those who were teachers, and even Jeacons, when the recent war first broke in Europe, have since fought and died for their country. It would be impossible to say what the critical year of a boy's or a girl's life is. Indeed, it would be impossible to say what the critical year of a man's life is. All the years are or may be critical years in our lives; but I feel sure that as parents if we should become too busy or too preoccupied in any single year to keep close to our children, to keep counsel with them, we might find that that was a critical year, and that we had missed a perishable opportunity. They grow up so quickly, these youngsters of ours, and teaching cannot be safely postponed, and loving counsel and close contact with them are essential at all times.

KNOWLEDGE OF THINGS PAST IMPORTANT TO YOUTH

Often I think we assume that our children know more than they do know concerning the ideals which mean so much in our lives, and concerning the principles and the reasons therefor. Because we have lived longer and have learned the reasons for some of these things, we may assume that they likewise know the reasons for them, but frequently they do not. I was particularly impressed with this fact, one day, as I had a casual meeting with a young man in a shop where there were photographs on display of old Salt Lake City scenes. He was a young man whom I had set apart for missionary service, who had returned, was married, was rearing a family, and was then in army uniform, serving his country. I happened to see a picture of the old Salt Lake Theater and made some comments concerning it, as to my own impressions and memories of it, and there appeared on his face a rather unresponsive expression. Finally he said, "You know, Brother Evans, I don't remember the Salt Lake Theater."

Well, it astounded me. Here was a young man, having taken his place in the world, having assumed his obligations in life, who had no memory of something which was for long years one of the great institutions of this community, even up to and including my own arrival at manhood—and yet he had grown up in this community. I began to think back and to count back the years to the time when that glorious old structure was torn down, and I found that indeed he may well not have remembered it. He was probably not more than three or four years old when it was removed.

As it is with physical structures, so it is also with principles, with traditions, with events of history. Things which shape our beliefs and give foundation and stability and meaning to the glorious truths and safeguards in the lives of our parents and grandparents, and in our own lives, we too often assume will somehow, automatically, become understood by our children as we understand them; but, unless we do our duty in passing on a knowledge of these things, we shall find that the next generation have grown up without a knowledge of them.

And this isn't true only of the principles and traditions and truths of the gospel of Jesus Christ, but it is likewise true of the principles that govern this nation, and of the reasons for which they were established and the difficulties by which they were established—why they were fought for and died for, and how precious they are, and why we must be everlastingly vigilant to preserve them. These young people of ours have heard of the Constitution of the United States, of course. They know it to be an historic document with considerable significance, but, unless we find a way to teach them, they may grow up missing something of its significance as a living instrument of freedom and they may unfortunately be led to think that some of the old fallacies and ancient evils are new and smartly modern principles to be tried and followed. They may not know that such fallacies have been tried over and over again by foolish and unwise peoples in generations past, much to their sorrow and regret.

A PLEA FOR UNITY IN THE HOME

I plead not only for the constant teaching of our children, and for close association with them, but for unity in our homes as concerning what we teach them, so that parents may not be divided before their children. Our youth will grow up in confusion if parents are in any wise divided in what they stand for and in what they present to their children in their impressionable years. It is not uncommon to see a child "shop" between a mother and a father, picking his time and his purpose where he thinks he will find the greatest leniency at the moment. And while there must be a sympathetic understanding of the point of view of our young people, we must not be inclined to give in to them on things which we know to be improper or unwise—not even if they confront us with the age-old argument that all the other mothers and fathers are letting their children do it. It is a difficult argument to meet, but one which must be firmly and wisely met.

I am grateful, my brethren and sisters, for my membership in this Church, for my fellowship with you. May God's blessings be with us in our homes, and in all that we undertake in life, and may we not let the opportunities that we have to counsel with our children perish without our having made the most of them, I ask, in the name of the Lord Jesus Christ. Amen.

ELDER HAROLD B. LEE

Of the Council of the Twelve Apostles

I desire to bear testimony this afternoon, my brethren and sisters, to the great work in which we are engaged, that it is the work of our Father and that those who preside as the Presidency of the Church are prophets, seers, and revelators of whom the Lord has said he would do nothing save he would reveal his secrets to them. In this day, a day perhaps when the youth of the Church have been faced with the greatest problems with which the youth of any age have been faced, particularly so in this dispensation, it is not a mere coincidence that there should come to the Presidency of the Church a man who in our day has had more to do with presiding over youth organizations than any other man. He brings a wealth of experience that to me augurs a program of care and attention to the problems of youth, the like of which we need greatly this day.

A NEW APPRECIATION FROM SERVICE MEN

There came to our hands recently a resolution passed by a group of our servicemen who were in the European theater of war. They styled this document which they had prepared and had agreed upon, "A New Appreciation," and this is the way it read in part:

Out of a world of chaos and confusion, out of the hopeless depths of a universal catastrophe spring new convictions, a new appreciation for the finer virtues of life. We left a world where certain fundamental truths were accepted lightly, where our thoughts and actions were characterized by a tendency to be too proud and a little arrogant. We have been guilty of appraising the desirability of a girl by the standards established by a judge in a Hollywood beauty contest. Perhaps some of us have been more guilty than others but we have all been guilty. Last Sunday in a meeting we openly confessed that regrettable error; we asked forgiveness of all we may have neglected by that total misconception. We think we can speak for the greater percentage of L.D.S. servicemen all over the world when we say that through this new inlet God has given us the true light of real beauty. A girl is beautiful when her virtue cannot be questioned, when her stability and faith in the Church is steadfast. A girl is beautiful when she is sincere and humble, when she looks upon a child with affection, or upon a sufferer with compassion. She is beautiful because she has a smile and a cheerful word for her associates. Beauty does not lie in the face alone but rather it is measured by character and the sweetness of her disposition, as we expect it to be. But you can be sure of one thing, those of us who are yet single and have the desire for the companionship of a beautiful girl will be going to the Mutual Improvement Association to find her. We have traveled to many different parts of the world and such travel has only tended to convince us more thoroughly than ever that our greatest hope for complete happiness lies in Zion. There we can rest assured the girls are beautiful. (See Improvement Era, August 1945, p. 435.)

As I read that lofty sentiment, coming from out of the world where quite the opposite is found on every side, I thanked my Heavenly Father that these sons of Zion were holding up a standard and an ensign of moral purity to the world. If the faithful daughters of Zion were called upon, they would echo back that sentiment to these sons, and would say that if the young men of the Church are to measure up to the standards of the girls they must come home and bring to the marriage altar minds and bodies that are as clean and pure as the servicemen expect of their companions here. To true Latter-day Saint girls, far more to be desired than wealth and handsome profile is a young man who is virtuous, who is honest, who has integrity and is true to the teachings of the gospel.

As I think of our young people thus expressing themselves, I am mindful that they are heeding the words of our Father who gave us a divine injunction in these words:

Verily I say unto you all: [meaning every member of the Church] Arise and shine forth, that thy light may be a standard for the nations. (D. & C. 115:5.)

THE RESPONSIBILITY OF CHOICE

Clearly it was the intent of our Heavenly Father that this, our day, was to be a day of demonstration of the power and effectiveness of the gospel of Jesus Christ in the lives of all who are to be members of his Church. This likewise according to the scriptures, has evidently been his purpose, concerning his chosen people in every dispensation. To the unembodied spirits, so the scriptures record, the Lord said:

... We will go down, ... and we will take of these materials, and we will make an earth whereon these may dwell; And we will prove them herewith, to see if they will do all things whatsoever the Lord their God command them. (Abraham 3:24-25.)

Father Lehi explained to his son that in order to accomplish that eternal purpose there must be opposition in all things, and that to every individual upon the earth there had to be given the right of free agency and also that there must be in the world the power to entice to do evil and the power to entice to do good.

In the spirit world there were some who were valiant—more valiant than others—in choosing to do good, and thus they became the noble and great ones of whom the Lord said, "These I will make my rulers" (Abraham 3:23), and so in this earth, coming through a chosen lineage, those noble and great ones are expected, as members of the Church and kingdom of God in every age, to be rulers of the world of sin and wickedness.

It was of the same responsibility that the Master spoke to his disciples when he said:

Ye are the light of the world. A city that is set on an hill cannot be hid. Neither do men light a candle, and put it under a bushel, but on a candlestick; and it giveth light unto all that are in the house. Let your light so shine before men, that they may see your good works, and glorify your Father which is in heaven. (Matt. 5:14-17.)

Indeed he declared that his chosen children would be known by their works:

Ye shall know them by their fruits. Do men gather grapes of thorns, or figs of thistles? Even so every good tree bringeth forth good fruit; but a corrupt tree bringeth forth evil fruit . . . Wherefore by their fruits ye shall know them. (Matt. 7:16-17, 20.)

THE CHURCH OF CHRIST TO BE A LIGHT TO THE WORLD

To Noah the Lord declared that because all flesh had corrupted his way upon the earth, that he proposed to destroy man from the face of the earth. So, in a lesser degree, in every dispensation, the Lord has commanded that if members of his Church, having taken upon them his name, should sin grievously and refuse to repent, they should be cut out from among his people, lest they be a stumbling block to the world. To continue all such in membership would be to reflect discredit and dishonor upon the work of our Heavenly Father.

The Lord has told us that his purpose in sending to us, in this dispensation, the everlasting covenant was that it would . . . be a light to the world, and to be a standard for my people, and for the gentiles to seek to it, and to be a messenger before my face to prepare the way before me. (D. & C. 45:9.)

Hundreds of years ago the Prophet Isaiah saw our day and prophesied of it:

. . . the mountain of the Lord's house shall be established in the top of the mountains, and shall be exalted above the hills; and all nations shall flow unto it. And many people shall go and say, Come ye, and let us go up to the mountain of the Lord, to the house of the God of Jacob; and he will teach us his ways, and we will walk in his paths. (Isaiah 2:2-3.)

Obviously that prophecy had reference to the Lord's covenant children in this dispensation who were to be as a leaven to the world, to lead them to that glorious day of peace when men should "beat their swords into plowshares and their spears into pruninghooks" and when nations would learn of war no more.

WORDS OF WARNING AND BLESSING

The Lord spoke of this our day of terrible conflict as a day when the whole world would seem to be in commotion, but he counseled his people,

Wherefore, stand ye in holy places, and be not moved, until the day of the Lord come; for behold, it cometh quickly, saith the Lord. (D. & C. 87:8.)

And then he comforted his people with these words:

Friday, October 5First Day

And the glory of the Lord shall be there, and the terror of the Lord also shall be there, insomuch that the wicked will not come unto it, and it shall be called Zion. (D. & C. 45:67.)

And again he has said concerning the blessing that would come to the faithful in his day:

Mine indignation is soon to be poured out without measure upon all nations; and this will I do when the cup of their iniquity is full. And in that day all who are found upon the watch-tower, or in other words, all mine Israel, shall be saved. . . Therefore, let your hearts be comforted concerning Zion; for all flesh is in mine hands; be still and know that I am God. (D. & C. 101:11-12, 16.)

Against the daily temptations that come to influence us to live below the standards that we profess and teach, the Lord admonishes us first with a blessing as he has said to his disciples:

Blessed are ye, when men shall revile you, and persecute you, and shall say all manner of evil against you falsely, for my sake. . . for so persecuted they the prophets which were before you. (Matt. 5:11-12.)

And then he warns us:

Woe unto you, when all men shall speak well of you! for so did their fathers to the false prophets. (Luke 6:26.)

While it becomes us to seek the good will of righteous men and women everywhere, it is well for us to remember that when the lewd, the immoral, and the corrupt begin to compliment us and to curry favor with us, that we had better begin to examine ourselves to see if we are doing our full duty. The Apostle Peter said to the Saints in his day:

But ye are a chosen generation, a royal priesthood, an holy nation, a peculiar people; that ye should shew forth the praises of him who hath called you out of darkness into his marvelous light. (1 Peter 2:9.)

Our failure to be a "peculiar" people in maintaining our standards, despite the jeers and the criticisms of the crowd, will be our failure to be chosen for that calling to which we are called.

The Lord has told us,

Behold, there are many called, but few are chosen. (D. & C. 121:34.)

And then in the same revelation points out two reasons why men fail of their blessings. The first reason he gives is that their hearts are set so much upon the things of this world, and the second is that they aspire so much to the honors of men. So then as Church members let us beware lest we set our hearts upon the things of this world and lest we aspire so much to the honors of men that we compromise our standards. If we do so, we will be cut off in the day of judgment and will lose our blessings. Our reward for daring to live the gospel despite the oppositions from the outside world will be to have blessings added upon our heads forever and forever.

THE GOSPEL TAUGHT BY EXAMPLE

As the Lord counsels us in this day to be mindful of the standards that we should maintain before the world, I have remembered the repeated incidents that have been told which indicate that the eyes of the world are upon this Church and its young manhood and womanhood. In almost every incident where a young man has been converted to the Church by our boys in military service, he has told us that he was drawn to the Church because of the clean, pure life of some Latter-day Saint boy with whom he was associated. This is a day of demonstration when we as Latter-day Saints by our lives will preach more the gospel of truth than by all the words that we may conjure up. The Lord has said to us:

For Zion must increase in beauty, and in holiness, her borders must be enlarged; her stakes must be strengthened: yea, verily I say unto you, Zion must arise and put on her beautiful garments. (D. & C. 82:14.)

May the Lord bless us with the strength to do so, and may everyone who has named his name, be true to that name and live the covenants that he has taken as a member of the Church, and may youth everywhere echo the sentiments that these fine young men have reported to us, and remember that virtue and purity and integrity are the things that mark them as living above the things of the world. May the Lord bless us all with the power and strength to maintain the standards which our Father has given to us in his everlasting covenant, I pray humbly, in the name of the Lord Jesus Christ. Amen.

ELDER MATTHEW COWLEY

Of the Council of the Twelve Apostles

In the year 1939, down in New Zealand, we had a very destructive flood. In that flood there were twenty-two white men drowned. They were working on a railway line that was being constructed. There were a large number of native young men working on the same line. Not one lost his life. At the inquest that was held, one of our young natives was asked if he could give a reason why no natives had lost their lives and only white men had suffered. He said, "Yes. The white men ran for their money; we ran for our lives."

I feel at this moment like those natives: from now on I will be running for my life, rather than for money.

AN APPEAL FOR FORGIVENESS

If there is anyone here or within the sound of my voice whom I have ever offended, either in my professional career, in my political activities, my religious service, or in my social conduct, I plead humbly for forgiveness. I know that God does not look upon sin with the least degree of allowance; nevertheless, he that repents and does the commandments of the Lord shall be forgiven. The Lord will forgive whom he will forgive, but as for us it is required that we forgive all men. I appeal, humbly and sincerely, for forgiveness of all my offenses against my fellow men.

WILLINGNESS TO SERVE

When I was called to preside over the New Zealand Mission in 1938, that call was much greater than any aspiration I had ever had for ecclesiastical preference. I have never sought, neither have I refused, any call that has ever come to me within the endowing power of the priesthood of God. I appeal also to you, to sustain me in this position. If I am sustained by you, the body of the Church, I am sure that I will be able to go about doing good. If you do not sustain me, heaven help me.

I sustain, here and now, the Authorities of this Church, from the highest unto the least. I have known President George Albert Smith all the days of my life. I have had the arms of his father about me in my childhood and in my early youth. I have had his arms about me in my maturity. I think it was he who set me apart for my first mission. He married me to my good wife. He took me upon my second mission—and now this! It seems that all the difficulties that have ever confronted me in life he is responsible for. [Laughter.]

I thank God, my brothers and sisters and friends, that I was reared in a good home. I thank God that in that home I was taught that it was more important to be moral than to be careful, that I was taught from the days of my youth to honor the priesthood of Almighty God. I was frequently told, as were the rest of the members of my father's family, by our father, that if there ever came a time or an occasion to choose between loyalty to him and loyalty to the priesthood of God, always choose loyalty to the priesthood of God. I thank God that such an occasion never arose.

A SINCERE TESTIMONY

I bear my testimony to you that God lives, that Jesus is the Christ, that Joseph Smith was and is a prophet of God, that these men who have been called to build upon the foundation of him who stood at the opening of the dispensation of the fulness of times have builded well upon that foundation and are, therefore, worthy to be sustained as prophets, seers, and revelators of the Most High.

God grant, my brothers and sisters and friends, that I may sustain you. You are the members. The only aspiration I have had in life has been to be a good and honorable member of the Church, and now in having been called to this position, I promise you that I will not lose sight of that other aspiration. The greatest call in the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints is to be a worthy member. Every worthy member of this Church is a potential savior upon Mount Zion of the souls of men.

In conclusion, I thank God for the service that has been rendered by our men and women in the armed forces, and I hereby pledge my life to the ideals of government and religion for which they have offered their all. God bless you and God bless me, in the name of his Son, Jesus Christ. Amen.

President George Albert Smith:

You have just listened to Elder Matthew Cowley of the Council of the Twelve of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints.

We have had a delightful day. I am sure that the weather outside has been no more enjoyable than the influence inside. We have come together to worship the Lord in song, in testimony, and in prayer, and our desires have been realized.

The Relief Society Singing Mothers will now sing, "Peace I Leave With You."

The closing prayer will be offered by President J. Melvin Toone of the Minidoka Stake, after which, this Conference will stand adjourned until 10 o'clock tomorrow morning. The proceedings of that session will be broadcast over KSL at Salt Lake City and KSUB at Cedar City.

Bishoprics, Stake Aaronic Priesthood committees, stake committees for adult members of the Aaronic Priesthood, general secretaries of Ward Leadership committees, and the Aaronic Priesthood Quorum advisers will probably remember that they are invited to a meeting by the Presiding Bishopric in this building tonight at 7 o'clock. Stake presidencies and high councilmen are especially invited to attend. We are sure that you will have a very delightful evening.

The Singing Mothers sang, "Peace I Leave With You," by Roberts.

Elder J. Melvin Toone, President of the Minidoka Stake, offered the closing prayer.

Conference adjourned until Saturday morning, October 6, at 10 o'clock a.m.

SECOND DAY

MORNING MEETING

Conference reconvened at 10 o'clock a.m., Saturday, October 6. Again the building was crowded with people, every available seat being occupied and many standing.

President George Albert Smith:

Another lovely morning to be in the house of the Lord, and we know that you all feel happy to be here.

This is the third session of the 116th Semi-Annual Conference of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints. We are convened in the Tabernacle on Temple Square in Salt Lake City, Utah.

There are on the stand this morning all the General Authorities of the Church as sustained yesterday.

This service will be broadcast over Station KSL, Salt Lake City, as will also the services this afternoon and tomorrow at 10:00 a.m. and 2:00 p.m. These sessions are broadcast also over Station KSUB at Cedar City.

The singing this morning will be by the Wasatch Ward Choir. Elder Vernal Denning is the director; Elder Frank W. Asper is the organist.

The first selection will be, "Awake My Soul," by Stephens.

The opening prayer will be offered by President John M. Iversen of the South Los Angeles Stake.

The Wasatch Ward choir sang, "Awake My Soul," by Stephens.

Elder John M. Iverson, President of the South Los Angeles Stake, offered the invocation.

President George Albert Smith:

Brethren and sisters, there are quite a number of people standing around the edge of the building and in the gallery. I am sure that you can make a little more room on the seats if you will slide in so that they, too, can find a place to sit down. We would like to have those who are standing take advantage of these seats now that are being made vacant in all parts of the house.

Thank you very much.

Our next hymn will be, "By Babylon's Wave," by Gounod, this also to be sung by the Wasatch Ward Choir, after which Brother Stephen L Richards of the Council of the Twelve will be our speaker.

ELDER STEPHEN L RICHARDS

Of the Council of the Twelve Apostles

We stand on the threshold of a new day. We look out into the morning and see the rays of the rising sun tint the sky with the hopes of humanity. We see some clouds also, harbingers of storm, but the forecast is "generally fair for a season." So we go back to our work—back where the black night of war overtook us nearly a half-dozen years ago. It has been a long night and our work has been retarded, but good sentinels have kept the watches and safeguarded our establishments. Now in the daylight of peace, we go back to our work.

THE MISSION OF THE CHURCH

We know our work. It is laid out for us by the Master Builder.

We have full and complete plans and specifications, and we have, in good measure, too, the tools and equipment. Perhaps we could use a little more modern equipment, and the tools may need reconditioning and polishing, but a sufficiency is available, and we can begin our work again.

The work is not new to us. We, and our predecessors, have carried it forward for more than a hundred years. It was the first enterprise undertaken by those of sacred memory who initiated the lofty cause to which we give our allegiance. So soon as the first revelation of the latter days came to them, they lost no time in carrying the message to neighbors and adjacent communities. When the Church was organized, they accepted most literally the revelation that its mission should be to preach the gospel "... unto every nation, and kindred, and tongue, and people." (D. & C. 133:37.) That was their work. In their poverty and weakness they accepted it with such boldness and enthusiasm, fortitude and sacrifice, as history has seldom recorded.

Their faith and confidence were marvelous. They trusted God, and they did not trust in vain. They knew that he had said that "The weak things of the world shall come forth and break down the mighty and strong ones," (D. & C. 1:19) and that "... the fulness of my gospel might be proclaimed by the weak and the simple unto the ends of the world, and before kings and rulers." (D. & C. 1:23.) With this assurance our forebears went forth. They assumed their obligation, and it superseded everything else. Families were left without a competence, oftentimes in the care of relatives and neighbors and friends. Businesses were sacrificed. Such accumulations as they had were expended for the cause. If I were asked to name the outstanding, distinctive, organized accomplishment of the restored Church of Christ in the last century I would without hesitation set forth its phenomenal missionary labors. Nothing more truly characterizes the altruism of the gospel that it teaches; nothing more deeply signifies the devotion and sincerity of its members.

The enormous cost of the service has been widely distributed, shared by nearly every family in the Church. Many families have sent forth more than one missionary, and not infrequently has a home kept one or more missionaries in the field continuously for ten or a dozen years, sometimes for a quarter of a century. I know of no way of securing comparable data from other religious bodies, but I venture the assertion that no other church at any period in history for a century of time has ever given to missionary service such a proportion of its membership and its available resources.

MISSIONARIES AND CONVERTS

For a hundred years there were two armies constantly on the march, an army of missionaries outbound from Zion carrying the banner of gospel peace and liberty, and an inbound army of free and happy people, faith and hope shining in every face, seeking the shelter, the inspiration, and the glorious opportunities of a divinely appointed society. Contingents of these armies have passed on almost every highway of the world—in the States—from the Americas north and south, up and down the devious waters of the Mississippi where missionaries of the early days like Brigham and Heber, and Willard and Parley, and Erastus went on flatboats to embark on slow sailing vessels on their long tedious voyages to their fields in Britain, Scandinavia, and the continent; across Europe to the land of the Arab and the Turk and on into far-off India, over the broad expanse of the Pacific to and from Hawaii and the distant isles of the South Seas. As the missionaries have passed the immigrants in these great counter-marches of the century which has gone, whether in their ships at sea or as they paused to clasp hands in their weary trek across the prairies, one can fancy their salutations, not always spoken perhaps but ever in their hearts, the missionaries say, "We go to carry the gospel." "Thank God we have it," the convert replies, and then adds, "we will follow you later." So indeed they have in one heroic round; missionary to convert, then convert to missionary. Great has been their gift; generously have they given.

What has been given? Why, to every man what he needed. To the poor, they who are so many, the gospel of thrift; to the rich, who are so few, the gospel of giving; to the intemperate, the gospel of self-control; to the indolent, the gospel of work; to the militant, the gospel of peace; to the downcast, the gospel of hope; to the ignorant, freedom from superstition; to the cynical and the wavering, a satisfying philosophy; to the sinner, the gospel of repentance; and to all—faith, security, idealism, happiness, and exaltation.

Is it difficult then to discover the urge which has made possible this remarkable missionary achievement? I think it is not. Such gifts, such faith, such vital endowments are highly esteemed by man. They enrich his life. They enlarge his heart and fill him with gratitude. He thanks God and seeks to express his gratitude in terms of devotion and service. He sees no service comparable to that of giving to others the boon that he enjoys. So he goes forth, not grudgingly, not merely out of a painful sense of duty, but cheerfully, eagerly to requite the supreme blessing of his life and derive new and surpassing joy in the sharing of his joy.

BLESSINGS IN MISSIONARY SERVICE

I thank the Lord that the ardor for the service has not dulled with the passing of time. On every hand I see evidences which convince me that the members of the Church love to proclaim the gospel. Men who cannot go themselves send their sons and daughters. Widows toil and scrimp to keep a missionary. Girls work to provide the necessary expense for their brothers, young husbands, and for themselves. Quorums, wards, and societies contribute, and occasionally a rich man opens up a generous heart and maintains a half dozen in the mission field.

Those who go are blessed, and the homes and communities which send them also. Crude country boys from the farm and the range have been exposed to the education and culture of extensive travel and metropolitan life in great cities. Young men from the cities have been subjected to the rigors of the most primitive, rural life. The knowledge, the tolerance, the adventure, the polish, and the experience which worldwide travel brings have been, during the whole history of the Church, the product of our missionary system. I feel sure that in no other communities on the earth is the percentage of those who have "seen the world" so large as in the villages, towns, and cities of the Latter-day Saints.

Such benefits, however, while important, are but incidental. The more vital results are deeper than enlarged information and polish. The fundamental character of our manhood and womanhood has been improved. Sacrifice has taught self-control. Giving has made for generosity as it always does. Teaching the virtues has brought them into application, and high spirituality has ingrained testimony and soul development. The general uplift in all standards of living which the Church has brought to its adherents is in no small measure directly attributable to its missionary system. How it has blessed the home! Fathers who have paid and prayed; mothers, wives, sisters, and sweet-hearts who have been anxious and worried and true. Little tots whose first lisped prayers have been, "Please, God, keep our missionary," have made the home a sanctuary, indeed, the foundation of our religious life.

SIMPLICITY OF THE GOSPEL MESSAGE

This remarkable missionary work has been accomplished by humble men and women. Their equipment in the main has not been the training of schools. It has been the influence and discipline of good homes, Church organization, and individual testimony. Their testimonies and their lives have been more potential than their preaching. The only eloquence they have required to deliver their message is the eloquence of the message itself portrayed in the devotion and purity of their lives. They have never had to rant and yell, nor chant and sigh, to make a convert. They have carried the natural simple joyous message of the Christ in a natural, cheerful way. Was that not the Savior's way? Did he not ever suit the lesson to the people in their language and understanding? Have we any evidence that he employed rituals, ministerial garb, and sonorous phrases to make it impressive? I think we have not, and I advance as a worthy argument for the divine authenticity of the gospel we bear, the manner of its presentation by the missionaries of the Church.

What these ambassadors of the Lord have done for individuals, families, communities, and nations would fill books. A million hearts swell today in gratitude for their blessed service. A man contemplates his home, the loving family which surrounds him, his prosperous business, the esteem of his fellow men, the fraternity of his brethren in the priesthood, his faith, his contentment, his glorious hopes and from the depths of his soul he cries, "God bless the missionary who brought me this."

HOPEFUL OUTLOOK FOR THE SPREAD OF TRUTH

So this is our work—to spread the restored gospel of righteousness and peace throughout the world. I think I do not need to make a case for the need of it. It seems to me that experiences of the last few years and of the present hour are sufficient to convince every observant, thoughtful person of that need.

Here then, in the respite from the ravages of war, is a new day for the proclamation of the word of God. New and more extended opportunities are forthcoming. New methods of transportation and communication are available, and I can but think that hundreds and thousands of our gallant boys who have contributed so much to the liberation of the oppressed peoples of the world will find a kindlier reception than our missionaries have ever heretofore enjoyed.

Will you, my brethren and sisters in the Church of Christ, accept the challenge of this new day? Will you set your houses in order, temporally and spiritually, and send forth ambassadors of truth, good will, and peace to a destitute world, whose need for bread is great but whose need for the "bread of life" is greater? I believe you will. I believe that large numbers of our young men returning from the armed services will wish to fill missions before entering upon post-war employment. When they and other men who hold the priesthood can be relieved from the exactions which the war has placed upon them, they will want to go into the mission field. Then many of our sisters can go with them and render service under the protection and direction of the priesthood of God. I believe, too, that thousands of our families who have been blessed with comparative affluence in these times will wish to devote a portion of their means to this great altruistic endeavor.

What a blessing it will be to our members and establishments in distant lands to welcome the missionaries back again, and what a boon it will be to all people everywhere to hear the pure word of God spoken by his appointed servants. "How beautiful upon the mountains are the feet of those that bring glad tidings of good things, . . ." (D. & C. 128:19.)

God bless us, my people, that we may take up our work again with resolution to give generously as we have received generously, I humbly pray, in the name of our Lord, Jesus Christ. Amen.

ELDER NICHOLAS G. SMITH

Assistant to the Council of the Twelve Apostles

My brothers and sisters, this conference has been a thrilling one for all of us, I am sure.

JOY EXPRESSED AT SELECTION OF NEW APOSTLE

When President Joseph F. Smith was first voted upon as President of the Church in solemn assembly, I had the privilege of sitting here and voting for him. When President Grant was chosen, I was in Africa and missed that opportunity. Yesterday, as my own brother was voted upon, I thrilled to the very finger tips.

And in the selection of the new apostle I rejoice greatly. I was the bishop in the ward where his family resided, and on many an occasion I have had the opportunity of saying to President Grant: "President, that Cowley family is a model. Young Matt has been superintendent of our Mutual Improvement Association; his sister is president of our young women's organization; his brother, Gloyd, is in the superintendency of our Mutual. They are an inspiration." To see this young man come home from the mission field endowed with the great gift of spirituality and vision and be selected to sit in the same council in which his father sat and be one of the leaders of this people, shows us how our Heavenly Father works. I am so pleased with this selection. He has been giving in accordance with the thought that has been expressed throughout this conference, as have so many of our good people.

EXPERIENCE OF A YOUNG CHURCH MEMBER

This morning I saw and conversed with an eighteen-year-old girl. She had spent much of her life away from the wards and stakes, rather out amongst the people of the world, attending school. Her associates were not members of her own Church. She has been more or less on the defense all of her life. She spent last year in a private school in one of the large cities in the East. There, in attendance, were girls of prominent families, people who knew not God as she knew him, and in her association with these other girls, she said, "They seemed to be looking for something. They did not know what it was, but they were not at peace; constantly they were asking me why I was so happy. One girl I talked with for some hours, and this girl said, 'I see what you mean. I think I understand,' but she did not know just what to do about it all. And then she said, 'What is it that gives you this, that makes you so contented?'" This eighteen-year-old girl said: "I have been talking to you pure Mormonism."

A SERVICEMAN READY FOR MISSION

Those of our children who are reared in the homes of faithful Latter-day Saints, when they go out into the world have a great ability to do good. Just before coming to this meeting a father came into my office with his son twenty-two years of age. He had returned from overseas where he had spent a couple of years fighting, and he wants to go back on a mission of love. I questioned him as to his chastity, and he assured me that he had kept himself clean and spotless, although he had been engaged in a great conflict. He had seen sin, but in his visit over there he found Saints and associated with them, and their effect upon him had been of an uplifting nature. Now he is home for a few days, but he wants to go back. Having filled that mission, he wants to go on another mission. He wants to give and not to get.

THE SIN OF COVETOUSNESS

They speak of peace, but is there peace? When you read in the papers of the constant bickering, the avarice of men that has been spoken of from this pulpit during this conference, the desire to get that which other men have, how tragic it is. It is this thing that causes dissension and trouble throughout the universe, and that has been warned against since the beginning of time, which has such a hold upon the people. We Latter-day Saints have a great responsibility, and as Latter-day Saints if we could but live our religion, what an effect it would have upon the people. As we go through our villages and towns, and see our membership working in the fields upon the Sabbath day, we wonder what they are thinking of, whether they are thinking of giving or only of getting. If we could just mend that one thing and remember to observe and keep holy the Sabbath day, then we would be better able to give, because the Lord would bless us so that we could give in greater abundance.

In the Ten Commandments, the last one is a great sermon to this great world of ours, and if we are ever going to have peace and if we are ever going to do away with war and contention, then we must put our lives in line with that tenth Commandment:

Thou shalt not covet thy neighbour's house, thou shalt not covet thy neighbour's wife, nor his manservant, nor his maidservant, nor his ox, nor his ass, nor anything that is thy neighbour's. (Exodus 20:17.)

If we could but do that!

Jeremiah, in speaking of Judah said:

. . . From the least of them even unto the greatest of them every one is given to covetousness; and . . . [are] saying, Peace, peace; when there is no peace. (Jer. 6:13-14.)

God help us to appreciate and understand that in this modern day he has, through his Prophet Joseph Smith, given us a grave warning, and he means every one of us, for in the fifty-sixth section of the Doctrine and Covenants, he says:

Wo unto you rich men, that will not give your substance to the poor, for your riches will canker your souls; and this shall be your lamentation in the day of visitation, and of judgment, and of indignation: The harvest is past, the summer is ended, and my soul is not saved!

Wo unto you poor men, whose hearts are not broken, whose spirits are not contrite, and whose bellies are not satisfied, and whose hands are not stayed from laying upon other men's goods, whose eyes are full of greediness, and who will not labor with your own hands. (D. & C. 56:16-17.)

A just God has warned us, my brothers and sisters. Now the opportunity is opening up. These thousands of young men will be returning home. The experiences they have undergone have prepared them to go out into the mission field to tell of the restoration of the gospel of Jesus Christ through that fourteen-year-old lad, Joseph Smith. I pray that the spirit of which Brother Stephen L Richards has just spoken, the desire to give, may spread throughout the Church, that every boy and every girl who desires to go, may have that opportunity to go to the ends of the earth and warn this generation. This is my prayer in Jesus' name. Amen.

ELDER LEVI EDGAR YOUNG

Of the First Council of the Seventy

I wish to speak to the seventies of the Church today, and of course what is said will be in common to every brother who holds the priesthood of God. In a sermon delivered in the old tabernacle in Salt Lake City, October 11, 1857, President Joseph Young, who had been made president of all the seventies, in the Kirtland Temple, said:

Language is too frail to express the rich sentiments of the hearts of the Saints; the tongue fails to utter the glory and the pleasure of the kingdom of God. It cannot do it; language fails. There is an influence of the Holy Spirit in the understanding that surpasses all language.

MELCHIZEDEK

How true this is, when we speak of the restoration of the priesthood of God to the Prophet Joseph Smith. When John the Baptist came and gave unto the Prophet and Oliver Cowdery the Aaronic Priesthood, it was followed by holy baptism. They were given the promise of the coming of Peter, James, and John with the keys of the priesthood of Melchizedek. The promise was fulfilled.

In the days of Abraham, there lived in Palestine a "great king and priest of the Most High God." His name was Melchizedek. Beautiful is the thought we have when we are told by the prophet-historian Moses, that Abraham paid tithes of all that he had to Melchizedek, for he was the high priest appointed to keep the storehouse of God. Then we have another historic scene.

INCIDENTS FROM THE LIFE OF MOSES

The children of Israel had been with Moses at Mt. Sinai for many months. In fact it was not until the second month of the second year that things were ready for a new start. The children of Israel were headed for the conquest of Canaan. The arrangements for the vast camp were simple. Moses received the law direct from God, yet he had to descend to the people and present it to them. In the assembly at the foot of the mountain were men, women and children. These all had to live under the law, so they all pledged their assent, exclaiming: "We hear and obey." The commandments were ratified by the voice of the people, one of the noblest examples of pure democracy in the history of the world. Shortly after leaving Sinai, a council of seventy, of which Hur, founder of Bethlehem, seems to have been the head, was chosen by the people, and solemnly set apart to their dignity by Moses, as a kind of senate, or wise men to aid him by their counsel, and give him the support of leading families among the various tribes; for among a people so hard to govern, he often needed this added help.

And the Lord said unto Moses, Gather unto me seventy men of the elders of Israel, whom thou knowest to be the elders of the people, and officers over them; and bring them unto the tabernacle of the congregation, that they may stand there with thee. (Numbers 11:16.)

When Moses was called by the Lord to go unto the Mount, he was accompanied by seventy elders. "... the Lord," says the inspired narrative, "came down in the cloud, and spake unto him, and took of the spirit that was upon him, and gave it unto the seventy elders." (Numbers 11:25.)

In those far ancient days of the priesthood, the seventies seemed to have been called to many noble duties both individually and in groups. Moses had them with him in the holy rites of the tabernacle, and we find them responsible for clean government in the civic life of the towns of Palestine.

THE SEVENTY CALLED BY JESUS

When Jesus was concluding his missionary labors in Galilee, he summoned his followers together, and out of them chose seventy to prepare his way. The mission of so many to go before him, two and two, and prepare for his arrival in every place which he intended to visit, implies for this last journey an important event. The instructions he gave them closely resembled those which he had issued to the Twelve. It was a time when he was setting forth in sorrow, and some writers infer that they, the Seventy, going two by two, were announcing his divine teachings.

Some weeks passed, and one of the things that filled his heart with joy was the return of the seventy, as he approached the cities and villages, whither he had sent them. They came to give him an account of their successes. Their hearts were filled with astonishment and exultation. And Jesus, while entering into their joy, yet checked the tone of their exultation, or rather turned it into a holier channel. He bade them feel sure that good was eternally mightier than evil, and that their victory over Satan would be achieved. He gave them assurance that they would be protected from harm because he had set his love upon them. Their names had been written, and stood unobliterated in the Book of Life.

THE SEVENTIES' WORK IN LATTER-DAYS

My brethren of the quorums of the seventy, you are all endowed with this same priesthood and power which gives you a distinct hope and message. You have an exalted purpose—to teach the gospel to all the world today. You have the good news of salvation, of freedom, to show the way of eternal life. You are a body of men to help build a regenerated body of religious ideals and life. From this day, you are to stand for a moral awakening as never before, a spiritual upsurge, a deeper appreciation of the spiritual needs of humanity. People will receive the message if it is presented and taught as it should be. The demands are high; the spiritual discipline must be sincere; the sacrifice of material things great. The qualities which made Jesus a master teacher were: He was divinely inspired, profound in his simplicity, understanding, and sympathy.

As the ancient disciples came to know the truths of the Master, so we come to know in our day the importance of revealed truth as we look to him who is our Savior. The priesthood envisages the Church of God, which in time will be known to all peoples of the earth. Life is made over; men are made over; and as one evangelist says: "Men come from darkness into light."

A new missionary effort has come into the world, for men and women are thinking of life eternal. Missionaries are laboring with profound and undying zeal to awaken people to a sense of the meaning of life, and to prepare themselves for the future in this world and in the world to come.

There never was a time when it was more needful for us to recur to the reason of the power of Jesus Christ in the world than now; never a time when we were more in danger of throwing away true permanence for barren change; never a time when we were more in danger of sacrificing truth for wrong. Truly do we know that the man who holds the priesthood of God has a principle higher than any that has gone before; that man whose policy, whose statesmanship, whose legislation, whose faith involves the highest reach possible of the human understanding in the spiritual direction—that men will endure and will help save the world.

We can, my brethren, be honest, intelligent, truthful; we can be courageous, just, and valiant. We can bear witness that this is God's work, and we can be consciously grateful for all the resources, for all the opportunities which are ours. We can be faithful and zealous. These things we are certain of; if we will do our part, in faith, God will give the increase.

ELDER CLIFFORD E. YOUNGAssistant to the Council of the Twelve Apostles*

I do trust, my brethren and sisters, that what I may say shall not in any way detract from the great spiritual uplift that we have felt in the addresses that have been given here this morning; that you shall not feel that I am letting you down in what I wish to say.

MISSIONARY SERVICE FOR RETURNING SOLDIERS

I, with you, am deeply interested in the welfare of these boys who are coming home from the service. They are facing some acute problems and they need our help and our sustaining faith and power. I recognize the fact that the boys who have gone into the service—and there are thousands of them—have come back with their spiritual attitude greatly strengthened. They are reflecting a great faith, and many of them have acquired testimonies that they heretofore did not have. There are many evidences of the divine interposition of Providence in their behalf, and these boys are coming home renewed and strengthened. Many of them will wish to go into the mission field, and I can think of nothing that they can do that will do more for them to heal the wounds—not the physical wounds, but the wounds that they have had and experienced while in war. War inflicts many wounds, and many of them never heal. These boys of whom I speak are coming home strong spiritually, their testimonies increased, and there is evidence of great faith. The mission field will afford a wonderful opportunity for them to give expression to these high impulses. Then, too, many of them will want to go to school, and that we can endorse wholeheartedly, and under the G. I. Bill of Rights provided by the government, many of the boys, who will, may be given the opportunity of completing their college work or their high school work, and thus better fit themselves for the affairs and experiences of life. These are the boys for whom we need not have so much concern. There is another class for which we need to have, and do have, considerable anxiety. They are the boys who are coming home rather cynical.

DIFFERENT ATTITUDES TOWARD LIFE

Just recently I had the experience of contacting two returned servicemen, both of whom wanted some financial help, both of them qualified under the new G. I. Bill of Rights program. One of them had lost his forearm in battle. He had been confined in the hospital where he had been provided with an equipment whereby he felt he could meet the problems of life, and earn a living. He wanted to begin with a little poultry farm, and that was perfectly legitimate. He had married shortly before going into the war and has a wife and two children. His attitude is very fine. He has no money, but under the program the way is opened for him to undertake such a project. When we asked him how he would pay it, he said, "I'll pay it. I'll pay every cent of it." He outlined his plans of operation, and it was very evident that his morale was strong and that he would not fail.

Another returned soldier came to us wanting financial help, and when we asked him how he was going to meet the obligation, he sharply replied, "Oh, that's somebody else's worry and not mine." And thus you have two attitudes that we have to meet. Our boys must learn that an obligation is an obligation, and when entered into, it must be paid. We must not permit our boys to let down in their morale. I realize it is going to be difficult, but we need, as never before, to inculcate in our youth, in the boys of whom I speak, the fundamental concepts that have always prevailed in this Church, namely, that we must stand largely on our own. I do not decry the necessity of helping our boys—they need it—but we must help them to help themselves. We must follow the injunctions that have been fundamental in this Church, that are part of the great welfare program of the Church, namely, that we teach our boys that they be self-sustaining. Hardship and poverty did not hurt your parents and mine, nor our grandparents. Indeed, the very foundation of this Church, its growth here, its strength here, was made possible because of the hardships and the struggles, because of the fact that our parents had to pay, and they had to pay from their own resources. And so in this day, when every effort is being made, (and I hope you will pardon me if I say this, but it is a fact), every effort is being made to soften our youth, we must stand firm and secure and abide by those concepts that have made us what we are today, that have given us character and strength.

WARNING AGAINST DEBT

So, my brothers and sisters, may we maintain this attitude in handling the problems of our youth. They are mighty; they will be hard for our boys. We must give them counsel and guidance. We must advise them to keep away from debt, just as far as they can. They should go in debt only when they can see the way out to pay. That is the only justification, that and the justification of helping them to sustain themselves. In the last world war we had ample experience to illustrate the dangers of going in debt. Money was made easily, and when the depression came, one of the great contributing factors to the distress of so many of our people was the bondage of debt, and they were unable to pay because the resources they had would not earn sufficient to pay. Those who had no debt went through the depression and came out maintaining their integrity. And I'm sure, my brothers and sisters, that if we encourage too much debt, our boys will encounter the same difficulties, because some day they will have to pay. May we use every effort that we have, to preserve the integrity of our youth in meeting these acute problems.

THE OBLIGATION OF PARENTS

One other phase of this matter, I can only touch on. Our first obligation as parents is to our boys, and it is to us as parents to whom our boys should first look for help. That is fundamental. The family first, then the quorum, then other agencies if these fail, but my obligation first, above all, is to help my boy to readjust when he comes home, to help him to find employment, to get him back on the farm, or in the business that I may be interested in. That is primarily an obligation with us as parents, and if we will keep that in mind, we will not go off in byways that might lead to disaster, not become complacent and feel that someone else should shoulder this responsibility.

My time is up. May the Lord impress upon us the absolute necessity of following the concepts that are a part of this Church. By arising and raising our hands we have indicated our willingness to sustain those who direct us. May we sustain them in the counsel that they give in these important matters, I humbly pray, in the name of Jesus Christ. Amen.

ELDER ALBERT E. BOWEN

Of the Council of the Twelve Apostles

There is perhaps nothing so important to the individual as what he believes nor nothing so important to communities and nations as what their peoples in the aggregate believe. I mean really believe. And there is often a wide distinction between what men say they believe—the professions they make—and the reality of their convictions. I want to talk a little today about the significance of belief.

THE SIGNIFICANCE OF BELIEF

Jesus seems to have attached supreme importance to it. His concern was that men should believe him, accept his message. Conscious that this shaping of thought and establishment of conviction would be a slow process, extending far out beyond the span of his earth life, he spent a good portion of the years of his ministry in training a few disciples, whom he had gathered about him, to carry on after he himself should be gone.

He had no temporary or ephemeral communication to impart; it was a world-shaking doctrine and was intended for perpetuity. Neither was it provincial in its scope. Though his whole life had been spent in a small subject province, apparently more tempestuous and troublesome than important, his vision ranged out over the whole earth wherever men are. Accordingly, he gave those disciples he had taught, a commission accompanied by a promise. The commission was to go into all the world and teach his message to every creature. The promise is: "He that believeth . . . shall be saved." (Mark 16:16.) Thus is belief made the starting point of all progress. It is true that certain other things were required to be done as a condition to the fulfilment of the promise, but these of necessity must come as a consequence of belief. Without that there is no chance that compliance with requirements would follow. There is no promise except to him who believes. Belief here signifies a complete acceptance which in its turn compels conformance to the teaching espoused. The condition is not satisfied by a mere lip service. Professions of belief, no matter how vehemently protested, amount to nothing unless they eventuate in conforming deeds.

Jesus had ample demonstration of this during his own ministry. The multitudes followed so long as they were recipients of his material benefactions. It is said that his fame went throughout all Syria, and they brought their sick, and he healed them. They came from Galilee, and from Decapolis, and from Jerusalem, and from beyond Jordan. They sat at his feet on the mountainside where he fed them because whereof they would forcibly have crowned him king, but he escaped from them and went by night to the other side of the lake where the crowds next day clamorously sought him out. Then when he began to unfold to them the personal requirements devolving upon recipients of his teaching they melted rapidly away, and the record says, "They walked no more with him." They had no belief. They were seekers after personal gain without appetite for reformation from practices which centered in themselves.

Contrast with that his belief in his own message. It cost him his life, but he carried through. And what about those disciples he had picked and taught? The message was just as unwelcome coming from them as it had been coming from their master. They too were hounded and scourged and hunted down. As believers multiplied, persecution intensified until finally extermination was decreed. Then came the supreme test of their sincerity of belief. Believers were ferreted out, confined to dungeons, and condemned to die. They were thrown to wild beasts for the entertainment of the populace at the arena. They suffered themselves to be torn limb from limb because their belief had settled into convictions so deep seated that they would die rather than recant. They did not have to die. They could have saved themselves by a very simple act. They had only to renounce and they could have gone free but that was not their kind of belief. It was more precious to them than life itself. It was the kind of which Jesus spoke when he promised that "He that believeth . . . shall be saved." That is to say, a saving belief must be one that persists in all extremities. Where is it to be found in the earth today? It does not deal in expediences. It does not inquire about the trend of popular favor. With principle-sacrificing compromises it has no commerce.

LIVING FAITH INVINCIBLE *

It may be thought or said that this quality of faith is exemplified in the armed conflict just closed. Our soldiers and sailors and airmen sacrificed their lives for a cause. That, however, was in resistance to a physical assault. It was meeting physical force with physical force. We believed that we were in danger of physical subjugation with consequent penalties. Our countrymen went out to repel that danger and keep us free from physical domination with a consequent train of other ills. The test comes now. Have we a set of principles believed by us to be right which we are willing to preserve at any sacrifice and at any cost—principles affecting our internal integrity founded in righteous law and justice? That question is not answered yet. So far as the signs indicate, the outlook is not promising. The indications seem to point to the rule of expediency and bartering with evil for the best bargain we can get. But I do not now want to talk about that. Was the course taken by the early Christians justified? Might there not have been some other way, some expedient, some give-and-take accommodation to reconcile antagonisms without going to the extremity of death? Was it prudent to flout the power of the great Roman empire and persist in a course which it condemned? It would seem indeed presumptuous that a little handful of despised people, destitute of wealth or influence, should resist the edicts of the greatest secular power of the world. But such is the force of doctrine, the power of unwavering belief, the strength of sincere men with resolute conviction that their teachings flourished in the face of the direst persecution. The might of the empire could not crush that kind of faith living in the human heart. It did not extinguish Christianity. And to that circumstance is owed the perpetuation of Christian teaching in the world. If we want to know how great that debt is, we have only to ask what kind of void would be left if the effect of nearly two thousand years of that teaching were blotted out. We should lose substantially all that distinguishes the Christian nations from the non-Christian nations. We should lose the sense of distinction which has led us in this day so heartily to condemn barbarities which have shocked humanity. The very freedom of which the western world boasts, reaching its greatest perfection in the United States of America, owes its existence to the Christian teaching about human brotherhood and the worth and dignity of the human soul. These are fruits of that message which Jesus commissioned his disciples to bear to all the world. The very progress of invention and scientific discovery itself, which has done so much for the material emancipation of man, is born of that freedom, as comparison with the backward nations of the world will disclose. It is to Christ's message—not to scholastic research—that we turn for what we know about the meaning and purpose of life and the controlling power of spiritual and moral law. No one may conceive the degree in which the world would be impoverished if that little band of disciples had not devoutly believed and through their belief perpetuated the teaching.

THE TEACHINGS OF CHRIST A STANDARD FOR ALL AGES

Its doctrine has been so thoroughly absorbed into the life of Christian nations, particularly our own, that quite unconsciously men resort to it as furnishing the standard for measuring the validity of the acts of their fellows. When we call some things good and others bad, some courses right and others wrong, we are evaluating them by comparison with the standards set in the teachings of the Master. When the politician condemns the practices of his adversary in matters of human behavior, he resorts to Christ's teachings, perhaps unknowingly, for the ideal by comparison with which the criticized acts are revealed as wrong. His own promises of betterment likewise are in the pattern of ideals drawn from the same source. All that we have that is best in our individual lives and in our national life we draw from what was preserved to the world by those sacrificing early Christians who through suffering and death perpetuated the teachings that had been committed to them. It is fresh in the memory of all of us, growing out of recent and earlier example, that tyrants seeking to impose their evil despotisms have to begin by a crusade intended to root out and destroy the doctrines ingrained in their peoples through centuries of absorption of Christian thought. In these considerations lies the answer to the question whether the sacrifices made were justified and whether by compromise, accommodation, and the practice of expediency those early sufferers might have avoided persecution and conflict with the empire. Over and beyond all these, those doctrines taught the achievement of immortality through the Lord's death and the plan for achieving eternal life, which is exaltation in the celestial kingdom of God.

CONVICTION MAKES A PEOPLE STRONG UNDER TRIAL

Let us take another example out of our own history. Our people began the building of their city at Nauvoo stripped bare. They had been pillaged, despoiled, and driven. In a scant six years they had established a flourishing city. Many of their houses still stand, respectable dwellings in this modern day. They were driven out in winter. From the Iowa shores of the river they could see the lights in their comfortable homes while babes were born in wind and sleet with no other protection than that afforded by their canvas-covered wagons. From there they made their weary journey across prairies, through rivers, and over mountains to these desolate valleys. The line of their march was marked by the graves of their dead. Here they endured privation, hardship, hunger. They didn't have to do any of that. They would have had only to renounce their belief to be let alone where they were. This is demonstrated by the fact that some did just that and remained unmolested. They chose rather to endure the want and misery and suffering that became their portion because they believed. That is the quality of belief that saves. There is no lip service in that. It transcends the bounds of pretense and sham and self-seeking, and anchors itself in unyielding conviction.

It is possible to say that they were wrong—mistaken in their belief. It is possible to say that they were imprudent and unwise. But it is not possible to deny the depth of their conviction nor the integrity of their manhood. Neither may the power of their belief be gainsaid. Their achievement stands revealed to the world. Men do not gather grapes from thorns nor figs from thistles. Those who do not accept their beliefs may feel themselves justified. But we who profess their faith may not escape its high demands. Are we willing to endure what they endured for our beliefs? Do those beliefs mean so much to us? Are they that important in our appraisals? Either those beliefs are founded in truth or they are not. If not, then the system reared upon them should in the nature of things have fallen apart long ago. If they are so founded, then those who profess them may not temporize. We today may not meet the same tests they did, but we shall have to face tests just as searching and perhaps harder to be borne.

We still have to carry the banner. The doctrines by which they lived still require to be perpetuated and spread. Their perpetuation exacts of us the same unwavering steadfastness of conviction as actuated those who established us here. We may not be dispossessed, or driven out, or find a wilderness to reclaim. But we shall be engaged by counter influences perhaps more insidious and therefore more difficult to discern, less easy to understand or to sense the danger of, for we live in a world seething in a welter of confusion.

BELIEF IN AND PRACTICE OF TRUE RELIGION THE SAFETY OF THE WORLD

Whether we recognize it or not, it is beliefs—the beliefs that get themselves accepted—that rule the world. Those beliefs may exalt a nation or drag it down to degeneracy and degradation depending upon their inherent quality. Ships and tanks and airplanes and guns, while necessary implements for waging physical warfare, are not the real source of a nation's strength. Its strength lies in the basic integrity of its people and that depends upon the beliefs they cherish which fashion their lives. The shooting war is over, but peace in its accurate sense is not here. It will not be until it is set up in the hearts of men. The war of ideas is still raging in the world. Opposing beliefs are contending for supremacy. All are clamorously recruiting converts. The business of shaping thought, establishing beliefs, getting ideas accepted, is the most important as well as the most active and flourishing business in the world today.

It is with ideas, beliefs, that we are concerned, for the very safety of the world and of mankind depends upon the nature of the beliefs that get themselves adopted. Our message is the same message Jesus gave to his disciples, namely that men should believe in him, a belief with a conviction that eventuates in living his doctrines. The commission to spread it in the world still stands. The means remains the same, teaching by those who believe. It cannot be done by unbelievers. The doctrines still possess saving power. "He that believeth . . . shall be saved." But there can be no compromise of principles.

There will be scoffers and deriders. Can we stand derision and still stand unmoved? There will be those in and out of our own membership who will deplore as trivial the differences of belief which set us apart by ourselves, who will recommend that for the sake of easy fraternization we relax in our distinguishing doctrines enough to extinguish apparent differences. It is so much easier and more comfortable to conform to the customs and ideas about us. A little dilution of our beliefs, it will be said, can do no harm.

Probably the disciples of Jesus could have escaped persecution if they had been willing to yield a little and had contended themselves with proclaiming him as a great teacher. If they had just refrained from declaring that he was the Son of God, they probably would have had little difficulty. That would have made their teaching palatable and improved the social and fraternal relations between them and their neighbors. But his Messiahship was the essence of his message. It is the thing that gave it authority. It was that which gave it saving power. Delete that, for purposes of courting favor and being agreeable, and you have robbed it of its whole value. It is to his doctrines, including his achieving for us immortality, that we must turn for understanding of the meaning and purpose of life out of which understanding must ultimately come the peace for which the world longs. Those doctrines embrace a whole course of living as a preparation for eternity of life in God's kingdom. And if political persuasions or economic prejudices or social theories or fraternal felicity collide with those teachings, the teachings must still stand. Unfortunate indeed is any man who has exalted any of these above or on a plane of equality with the teachings of his religious faith.

If we really believe in our souls in the doctrines of our faith, then they must take precedence over all other philosophies or enticements. They cannot take second place to any persuasion.

I am sure that no one will suppose that I am advocating aloofness or presuming to suggest that we regard ourselves as being above or better than others. I do not wish to incite any antagonisms nor to invite unfriendliness of intercourse. I am only trying to say that having as we profess God-given, saving principles, we must hold them sacred, for on them the hope of eternal happiness as well as earthly peace hangs. We should poorly serve humanity if for convenience we gave them a stone when their crying need is for bread.

May God give us the sincerity of conviction to meet every test, I pray, in the name of Jesus. Amen.

The nineteen-year-old Argentine Mission is a mission of great promise. For some fourteen years it rarely had more than a half dozen missionaries. For one year only the mission counted seventy-five missionaries, but in the following three years they dwindled until now there are five: President and Sister Young, their son Carl, and two missionaries from Mexico. On an average this mission has had less than six missionaries in it at any one time. However, though without missionaries or very few from the United States, the mission is organized in branches, and districts, with eager, capable workers.

It is also still reaping the benefit of the work of the fine missionaries who labored there. Older families still remember with joy the visits of President Ballard, President Wells and President Pratt, and of the first missionaries who went into their homes.

If the missionaries who worked in the mission when Sister Barker and I were there are representative of the young men of the Church, then the Church need have no fear whatever for its future missionary work, or for its future life at home. A future, brilliant and fine, is assured.

The mission numbers some 800 members, eager to learn and live the Gospel. There are a few more who have been lost track of.

Argentina is a great nation, a great and fine people. It is thoroughly European, very much like the United States, except that its basic first population was not English but Spanish. All the European nationalities are represented. However, the majority of our members are of Spanish or Italian descent. Sometimes members have gone to Argentina, even from the United States, not knowing why they went. Perhaps they were led there. Italian families moved from the United States to Argentina. Here it is quite likely they would never have heard the Gospel. There they had no chance to hear it in Italian, but they heard it in Spanish, eagerly accepted it, and like members of all nationalities, they have lived it faithfully and well and are only eager to do more and more whenever the opportunity is presented.

We have not preached the Gospel to the Italians, the Spaniards and others in Southern Europe. We sometimes have said perhaps they won't accept it. They have never had a chance. Not one hour's work has ever been done in Spain; not one hour—that is an exaggeration perhaps—not one month's work has ever been done in Italy, in the Italian language. Perhaps the fine members in Argentina may be a help and a means of spreading the Gospel to their countrymen in Europe.

The members are exceedingly faithful. We have at least one branch in which, as far as I know, every man and woman who should pay tithing is paying a full tithing. The mission needs more literature. We have fewer books and tracts than the German Mission had forty years ago. Members are sensitive to this lack. They also regret that they do not have the privilege of being married in the temple, and also of receiving patriarchal blessings. The Saints are eager to learn and when possible, learn English, and translate books from English and circulate typewritten and handwritten copies. They also have a great deal of talent. President Young and Sister Young are much liked and appreciated by all the members who knew them on their former mission six years ago, and they are greatly aided in their work by willing, capable local workers.

The workers who have been there, that I knew at least, I believe without exception to be willing to go back. I can understand that. No blessing is so great to me, with the exception of my first mission, and no blessing greater to Sister Barker and me ever came to us than the opportunity of going to South America. It is to be hoped that the great people to the south of us may have a chance to hear the Gospel, that more missionaries will be sent to them, that they will not be in twos, in threes, and fours, but in much larger numbers. They are hungry for the Gospel.

We especially appreciated, Sister Barker and I, the opportunity we had of working with the fine young men who worked in the mission field. They never complained of any hardship; they never complained of any difficulty; they had faith and devotion, and were desirous of doing more in the mission field, in the Church. Personally I think that those who have the opportunity of going on missions, wherever that may be—and the greater the opportunity, I think, the greater will be their blessings—will be the really favored ones, the blessed of the Lord.

The faith of the people in the Argentine Mission is great. There were manifestations of the power of our Heavenly Father. There were healings; there were other manifestations, and I came to believe and to know in my soul that when someone is not healed by the administrations of our Church, there is some reason known to our Heavenly Father alone or more often perhaps some reason in ourselves. Somewhere, sometime we have not obeyed His inspiration. But His power is with His missionary work. His power is with the Church. His inspiration and His revelation are with the Presidency of this Church and with the Apostles of this Church, and with every man and woman in his own sphere, inasmuch as he and she do their best.

God help us, brethren and sisters, to do that which we know to be right, that which is more than faith, that which is more than belief, which is absolute knowledge, I pray in the name of Jesus Christ. Amen.

President George Albert Smith:

You have just listened to President James L. Barker, former president of the Argentine Mission.

The Wasatch Ward Choir will now sing "Almighty God of Our Fathers," by Daynes.

The closing prayer will be offered by President J. Doyle Jensen of the Lost River Stake, after which this Conference will be adjourned until 2 o'clock this afternoon. The proceedings of that session will be broadcast over KSL of Salt Lake City and KSUB at Cedar City.

We would like to call your attention to the fact that the streets are somewhat congested. Be as careful as you can whether walking or driving.

The house has been filled this forenoon, and people are standing in the doorways of the auditorium and in the gallery. This afternoon when you come back, brothers and sisters, try to make as much room as possible on the seats without making yourselves uncomfortable.

Closing selection by the Wasatch Ward choir, "Almighty God of Our Fathers," by James.

Benediction by Elder J. Doyle Jensen, President of the Lost River Stake.

Conference adjourned until 2:00 p.m.

SECOND DAY

AFTERNOON MEETING

The fourth session of the Conference was held at 2 o'clock p.m., Saturday, October 6.

President George Albert Smith:

This is the fourth session of the 116th Semi-Annual Conference of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints. We are convened in the Tabernacle on Temple Square in Salt Lake City, Utah.

There are on the stand this afternoon all the General Authorities of the Church.

The house is packed, people are standing, and there is an overflow meeting on the block and another in the Assembly Hall.

The singing will be by members of the Tabernacle Choir under J. Spencer Cornwall as director; Elder Frank W. Asper is the organist. They will first sing, "God So Loved the World," by Stayner.

The opening prayer will be offered by President Thomas B. Croft of the Big Horn Stake.

The Tabernacle Choir sang, "God So Loved the World."

Elder Thomas B. Croft, President of the Big Horn Stake, offered the opening prayer.

The Choir sang an anthem, "Jesus, Word of God," by Liszt.

ELDER ALMA SONNE

Assistant to the Council of the Twelve Apostles

My brethren and sisters, no one can arise on an occasion like this, before an audience so large and so eager, without feeling a sense of deep responsibility. I rejoice with you in the growth and progress made by the Church. I have been greatly uplifted by the proceedings of this conference.

THE LIGHT OF THE WORLD

The other day, before a large audience of Relief Society workers, in this tabernacle, Dr. Howard R. Driggs made a remark that has been sounding in my ears since I heard it. "The word light," he said, "appears frequently in the scriptures." It is the responsibility of the Church to spread this light among men. Jesus is the light of the world. His gospel is the beacon light to direct you and me in our journey through life. Jesus also said on one occasion:

. . . this is the condemnation, that light has come into the world, and men loved darkness rather than light, because their deeds are evil. (John 3:19.)

He also admonished:

Let your light so shine before men, that they may see your good works, and glorify your Father which is in heaven. (Matt. 5:16.)

I feel that this Church, in carrying forward the great program entrusted to it, is actually and truly spreading light throughout the world.

The Prophet Joseph Smith in a revelation has said this:

For thus shall my church be called in the last days, even The Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints. Verily, I say unto you all: Arise and shine forth, that thy light may be a standard for the nations. (D. & C. 115:4-5.)

I wonder if you catch the boldness and the audacity of that statement, made in the early days when the Church was not so well established nor so well organized as it is today; and yet the Lord said then through his servant,

Arise and shine forth, that thy light may be a standard for the nations. (D. & C. 115:5.)

FAITH GIVES PURPOSE IN LIFE

Brethren and sisters, great things have been accomplished by the Church, but as we view the situation now, with its many problems, there is still much to be done. All of us can contemplate the history of the Church with supreme satisfaction. As I think of these things I feel that the Latter-day Saints will never surrender their heritage of faith. That faith has given purpose and significance to their lives. It has opened the Holy Bible to their understanding. It has sustained them in adversity and trial. It has offered them every inducement to right living. It has been their refuge and their strength in sorrows and disappointments, and it has established their belief in moral and spiritual values, a most important belief. Faith in God is always the pathway to power and achievement; it is the motive power of progress and advancement.

On one occasion I discussed with a minister of another church some of our religious views. Finally, he said to me, "I cannot believe that Joseph Smith was divinely called, but I do believe," he said, "in the principle of tithing taught by your Church." "Why then," I asked, "is it not practiced by your church?" He hesitated for what seemed to me a long time, and then replied, "Because we do not have the faith and the conviction among our members which is characteristic of the Latter-day Saints."

Brethren and sisters, I have always regarded that as a great compliment coming as it did from an outside source and certainly a worthy tribute to the faith and integrity of the Latter-day Saints.

TEMPLE WORK PART OF GOSPEL PLAN

Two weeks ago we dedicated a beautiful temple at Idaho Falls. Why do we build temples? Because we believe in temple work; we believe in salvation for the dead as well as for the living. It is a part of the gospel plan. We believe, too, in the eternity of the marriage covenant as solemnized in the holy temples. That doctrine is sound, reasonable, consistent, and in harmony with Paul's teachings when he said:

... neither is the man without the woman, neither the woman without the man, in the Lord. (I Cor. 11:11.)

SUCCESS OF MISSIONARY WORK IN HAWAII

A year ago today I was traveling on a steamer headed for the Hawaiian Islands. On Sunday morning a beautiful service was conducted by a protestant minister. At the conclusion of the service the minister approached me. After asking some questions about our faith, he turned to me with this remark, "The greatest missionary enterprise in modern times," he said, "was launched by the Mormons on the Islands when they began to preach to the natives." As soon as I reached the Islands I began to inquire. I was told that three or four missionaries in the early days were laboring in Honolulu with little or no success. Finally, one of them suggested that they give up their missionary labors on the Islands and return to the mainland. George Q. Cannon, then a young man of vigor and faith, said to his associates, "No, we cannot return home; we will continue our labors on these Islands, not among the white population as we have done, but among the natives." The response to that missionary endeavor was great, and these people on the Islands in whom the spirit and blood of Israel were strong, joined the Church by the hundreds, and many of them have remained true and faithful to the covenant so that today branches, wards, and a stake are organized and functioning among them.

May God bless us in our responsibilities. May he give us faith, wisdom and determination to carry forward his great work in these, the last days, I pray in the name of Jesus Christ. Amen.

ELDER THOMAS E. MCKAY

Assistant to the Council of the Twelve Apostles

President Smith, brethren and sisters, it is a delight to welcome our sisters into our midst again. I was thrilled, and I am sure all of you were, with the splendid tribute that our President, in his wonderful opening remarks, paid to the mothers and daughters of our Church. It was also refreshing in the meeting in the temple, with the mission presidents, to hear nearly all of them express appreciation for the work their wives are doing in helping them in their great responsibilities. I wish their wives could have been there to hear them. I commend the example of these mission presidents to all the men of the Church, to feel appreciative not only of what our wives are doing for us but also to express that appreciation. I am sure there would be more sunshine and love in our homes, and in the world generally, if all, not only felt but expressed such appreciation.

A TRIBUTE TO THE BRETHREN LEFT IN CHARGE IN EUROPE

In the early spring of 1940 the last of the missionaries, American missionaries, left Europe. Sister McKay, our daughter, Louise, and four very choice missionaries sailed from Italy and came home by way of Gibraltar. Brother Gaston Chappuis and his bride sailed from Lisbon. Since that time, nearly six years now, our missions, nine of them in Europe, have been directed by local elders; and at this time I wish to pay tribute publicly and express appreciation for the work that these fine brethren have done. They have been working under unusual and very difficult conditions but they have carried on. They've held their meetings nearly all of them, including branch, district, and annual conferences. The missions have been self-supporting. The tithing, in fact, has increased from year to year. They have visited the branches as often as possible under the trying conditions. Many of them have attempted to maintain a missionary system, and most of the missions have had a few missionaries, and some of them quite a large force. The British at one time, Brother Anastasiou reported, had three hundred and twenty-five part-time missionaries. Brother Anastasiou, his wife, and two children are here now. The British Mission is again presided over by President Hugh B. Brown, who is doing a wonderful work, not only as president of the mission but also and especially among the servicemen. He writes that he needs more missionaries. Our acting mission presidents are also looking forward to the time when missionaries will be again in their midst.

In a recent letter from President Brown he states: "We need missionaries, experienced men, preferably older men such as ex-bishops or men who have had experience in presiding."

THE DANISH MISSION

In the Danish Mission, Brother Orson West is in charge. He is a very fine man. He writes and speaks English quite fluently, although he was born and has always lived in Denmark. In a recent letter he states:

Address: Priorvej 12, Copenhagen F

We are all looking forward to receiving missionaries again in the Danish Mission. . . . A problem which has been a serious one during the war is the coal and fuel situation. For the time being it is worse than ever. Peat is not the best fuel, but we will have to do with that during the coming winter. I am sure it is not good for our central heating plant to use only peat, which deposits so much soot. Regarding help to families and persons in our mission, I beg to inform you that as far as food is concerned we can get along. Our people in Norway and Finland need it much more than we do. We would be more than happy, however, to receive underwear, shirts, stockings, and socks. Especially the babies need these things very much. It is almost impossible to buy babies' clothing.

THE EAST-GERMAN MISSION

In the East-German Mission when we left—I happened to be in Berlin when war was declared—Brother Herbert Klopfer was placed in charge, another fine young man who speaks English fluently. In fact, all of our mission presidents except two speak or write English, and those two have secretaries who can translate for them. Brother Klopfer, before we left Switzerland, was called into the service, not as a soldier, but to do secretarial work. The next we heard of him after we returned home was through Sweden; he was in Denmark and had attended services there and had taken part in their testimony meeting. The last word is that he is reported missing on the Russian front. The members are carrying on, however, and his counselors, Elder Richard Ranglack, now acting mission president, and Elder Paul Langheinrich are doing a splendid work. A letter dated August 19, 1945, states:

Had two wonderful meetings today. At two p.m. just a priesthood meeting with forty-five present. At four we held a memorial service in honor of President Grant. There were at least two hundred fifty to three hundred present in a hall big enough to hold one hundred seventy-five. It was just as full of spirit as it was of people. The old mission home at Händelallee is a pile of rubble. A sign in front gives the information that the office is now at Rathenower Str. 52, Berlin N.W. 21, only two blocks north and east of the old location.

THE FRENCH MISSION

The French Mission, as you know, is divided into three districts, Belgium, France, and French-Switzerland. This mission was not left in charge of one acting president, but three district presidents, very fine young men who have been carrying on in the same effective way as have our acting presidents. They are Brother Paul Devigne of the Belgium District, Brother Leon Fargier for France, and Brother R. Simond for the French-Swiss District. Brother Simond has managed in some way to send a monthly report during the entire war.

THE NETHERLANDS MISSION

In the Netherlands Mission the branches are also carrying on. Brother J. Schipaanboord writes:

During the war years we have endeavored to keep the right course. Our old buildings, and the rented halls, too, we have improved if possible so that they have become more valuable for our services. In the Rotterdam Branch we have built a baptismal fount. . . . A new organ was also secured. Owing to the food scarcity, many of the faithful Saints had to be supported by money or in kind. You no doubt know that the mission house in The Hague had to be evacuated, and we finally moved and rented a place in Utrecht, Maarten Harpertzoon, Trompstraat 36.

THE NORWEGIAN MISSION

In Norway, Brother O. Sonstebj, also a very fine man, has been carrying on. He writes:

Address: Osterhougs Gt. 27, Oslo.

I have been on a visit to North Norway and saw the Saints there. We held three meetings at Narvik, probably the most northern branch in the world. The branch has scarcely been visited during the war, but the Saints there have kept together in faithfulness and held their meetings regularly. The branch has been visited in the past by some of the leading authorities from Zion during their stay here in Norway, among others, Apostles David O. McKay, and Joseph F. Merrill. As travel conditions are today, the trip was very strenuous, but it was a great joy to me to see the Saints.

THE SWEDISH MISSION

From the Swedish Mission we have received letters and reports all during the war, and Brother Fritz Johansson<sup>1</sup> has done a splendid work, not only in keeping us in touch with the Swedish Mission, but also the sister missions of Denmark and Norway. August 7th to the 22nd he also made a trip in the north up to Finland. Two people were baptized, and they organized a Relief Society. "I discern," he says, "the awful poverty that prevails in Finland. They need food as well as clothing in order to keep them from freezing this winter."

THE SWISS MISSION

We have heard from the Swiss Mission, also a neutral country, occasionally. Brother Max Zimmer, Sr., Leimenstr. 49, Basel, is the acting mission president; he has been especially helpful to our servicemen who were interned in Switzerland and in prison camps in Germany. A conference held at Easter time in their own chapel in Basel, the only Church-owned chapel in Switzerland, is reported as being one of the largest conferences ever held in the Swiss Mission.

THE WEST-GERMAN MISSION

In the West-German Mission, the home and office is one of the few buildings still standing in beautiful Frankfort on the Main.<sup>1</sup> It is only slightly damaged with a few broken windows; a bomb had hit near the building but only cracked the walls slightly and left a large crater where it struck. Most of the rest of Frankfort on the Main is just piles of rubble. Our meeting place was completely burned out. Brother Friedrich Bühl, Jr., was left in charge; a very fine young man, but he was called into the service before we left, and Brother Christian Heck, another young man, was called to take his place. Brother Heck was also called into the service, and Brother Anton Huck, an elderly brother, was called to preside and is doing so now. It is reported that the two young men who had been called into the armed service were both killed.

AUSTRIAN REPORT

In Austria, our meeting places have not been damaged except in Vienna but our members are still meeting in No. 20 Seidengasse. A Russian cannon grenade struck high in the rear of the church building, breaking only a few windows in the chapel part, but inflicting a good-sized hole in the upper region of the apartment building. When the occupying Russians looked over the building, our Church occupying about one-third of it, they were told it was an American church and so they left it alone. Later, when the Americans came, they in turn, looked over the building but when they saw the work of the grenade they also left, and so the members continue to meet in their accustomed place. "Vienna," our correspondent continues, "is a hungry city, a city with ever so little food, fuel, light, housing, and transportation.

"These are difficult times, and I fear that the coming winter will be one long to be remembered. Just recently, I visited the Allgemeines Krankenhaus, the largest and most famous hospital in Vienna, and there the situation was the same, even in a hospital."

WORD FROM CZECHOSLOVAKIA

"In Czechoslovakia," Brother Joseph Roubiek, Trysova ul-c 8, Prague 2, writes, "I wish to inform you that after six years of war, all members of the Church have remained well and alive. It has been a terrible time. We have remained faithful however, and we await you." (This letter was written to Wallace F. Toronto, last president of this mission.) "The work of the Lord here has not been disturbed. We often think of you and the missionaries. Here there is great need and distress, great hunger among the people. The Saints, however, have continued to enjoy the blessings of the Lord.

Their testimonies of the truthfulness of the gospel have not wavered, even in the worst moments of the great conflict."

The two branches in the Palestine-Syrian Mission are carrying on as usual, and food is also scarce there. In fact, it always is.

OUR SERVICEMEN PRAISED

Much of this information that has been received has come from our servicemen and several of our chaplains assigned to these European countries; and I should like to take this opportunity to express appreciation publicly for these servicemen. They have done, and are doing, a wonderful work. Our members are also very thankful for the kindness and help of our servicemen. I will take time to quote from one letter. It is typical of many others. After referring to the splendid work that President Brown did in his recent visit to Belgium, the writer says:

Our good friend and brother, Chaplain Howard C. Badger, has reported to you about activities in this country but he failed to point out the successful mission that he filled in our branches. Not only did he deliver stimulative sermons supported by a strong background, but although a serviceman, he assisted the needy and was somewhat like Father Christmas to our children, some of whom never knew chocolates or sweets before. We will surely remember him over here for his attractive character, personifying the successful missionary. It was also my privilege to welcome and to greet a great many servicemen since September 1944. Although we never met before, we felt immediately like best brothers ready to help each other with all our might.

He speaks of going to a cemetery and with reference to that I should like to read a paragraph from a young French sister. She says:

On October 19, 1944, I copied a dedication from the tomb of a military Mormon which is found in the cemetery of Henri-Chapelle in Belgium. We have promised to visit the cemeteries and search out the tombs of our brother Mormons who died to liberate us, and we will do all we can to place flowers on their graves just as though they were our own beloved sons.

I just cannot say too much for our servicemen. I have heard directly from more than a score of them, and indirectly from more than a dozen others. Several of our chaplains, as I stated, are also in these occupied countries and are also doing an outstanding work. We have had letters from them from the Scandinavian missions, the Netherlands, Belgium, France, and quite a large number from Germany and Austria.

The only way we can get letters and help to Germany and Austria is through these servicemen. We are permitted, however, to send eleven pound packages by parcel post to the other missions, but these must be mailed to some person direct. We have now received from our acting mission presidents several hundred names and addresses and we had hoped to get these packages over before Christmas. There has been some delay, however, but the names are on file in the welfare office and are awaiting the go-ahead signal from a special committee appointed by the First Presidency to supervise this matter. In all the missions, as you have noted, shoes, underwear, and other warm clothing, especially for babies and young children are needed. I do hope and pray that we can get help to them so that they will not suffer too much from cold and hunger this coming winter.

THE WAY TO PEACE

May our servicemen and our members in these war-torn countries, and all of us, live lives of Latter-day Saints. May we cultivate tolerance and love for one another and for all mankind. This war is but an awful chapter written in the eternal-long struggle between right and wrong, between love and hate, chastity and unchastity, greed and unselfishness. As long as hate and lust for power control the hearts of men, real peace can find no resting place in the world. Only love can bring peace. Anyone who permits himself to hate any person, or any people, makes his own small but vital contribution towards the discord and trouble, while he who seeks to love others, even his enemies, makes his own priceless contribution to peace. True, lasting peace, when it comes to the world, will be made up of the many tricklets of love flowing from the hearts of the people to a common understanding and a common goal. The gift of peace on earth and good will to men was offered to the world in the gospel of living taught by our Savior in his earthly ministry. He made love of God and love of mankind fundamental, and declared, "On these two commandments hang all the law and the prophets." (Matt. 22:40.) The power of love alone can permanently disarm the world.

May our Father in heaven help us to realize this and to govern our lives accordingly, I pray in the name of Jesus Christ. Amen.

ELDER CHARLES A. CALLIS

Of the Council of the Twelve Apostles

As I witnessed that impressive vote sustaining the General Authorities of the Church, a Latin phrase came to my mind which runs as follows: "The voice of the people is the voice of God." While this does not hold strictly true in all cases, yet yesterday morning the voice of God was heard in this great tabernacle. It is a wonderful thing, a blessing of comfort that we have the more sure word of prophecy in this Church. In fact this Church is the treasure house of all the gifts of God, and gives the knowledge that will make men eligible for entrance into the celestial kingdom of God. The Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints is a universal Church; it is not only a worldwide Church, but it is as wide as eternity.

THE DAWNING OF A NEW ERA

The prophet Isaiah—and of this prophet, Jesus said that his words were great—had a vision so glorious and splendid that in heavenly rapture he exclaimed:

Who hath heard such a thing? who hath seen such things? Shall the earth be made to bring forth in one day? or shall a nation be born at once? (Isaiah 66:8.)

We are on the threshold of remarkable events. If God, centuries ago, could incline the hearts of the people to seek him so that they had no disposition to do evil, why cannot he do that today? The inhabitants of the earth are his children, and God loves mercy more than judgment. I believe that we are entering upon an era of conversion so great that the human mind cannot conceive its magnitude. We are told in holy writ that every knee must bow and every tongue confess that Jesus is the Christ. With all my heart I believe that divine prediction will come true, for Jesus Christ is the King of kings and the Lord of lords.

THE APPEARANCE OF JESUS TO THE JEWS

Orson Pratt and Charles W. Penrose declared that prior to the glorious coming of the Son of God, the Jews are going to be beleaguered by the nations who threaten the very existence of the Jewish race. Then, according to Zechariah, down through the gates of heaven shall come the Lord Jesus Christ, the Captain and King for whom the Jews have wept and prayed so long, and he shall set his feet upon the Mount of Olives, and the Mount shall cleave asunder, and the Jews shall escape destruction. The God of heaven shall then, with the armies of heaven, have judgment upon the wicked, and the wicked shall be destroyed. When Jesus stands before the Jews, they will see the wounds in his hands and, recognizing their Lord and God, they shall say: "... What are these wounds in thine hands?" And then Jesus shall break the hearts of the Jews by saying: "Those with which I was wounded in the house of my friends." (Zech. 13:6.) And that nation then, and not until then, shall be born in a day. By the authorized servants of God they shall receive the baptism of repentance; they shall receive the gift of the Holy Ghost, and become the children of God their Father and the servants of the great Jehovah. At that time a fountain shall be opened up unto the Jews and the inhabitants of Jerusalem, a fountain for the cleansing of sin and iniquity, and that fountain shall be as it always has been, the Lord Jesus Christ.

We read in the Book of Mormon:

... because of the Spirit of the Lord Omnipotent, which has wrought a mighty change in ... our hearts, ... we have no more disposition to do evil, but to do good continually. (Mosiah 5:2.)

THE DESTINY OF THE LATTER-DAY SAINTS

And if the elders of Israel will preach the gospel in its plainness, not worldly philosophy, but the gospel of faith, repentance, baptism by immersion for the remission of sins, and the laying on of hands for the gift of the Holy Ghost, then shall the hearts of the people be changed by the almighty power of God and they will press into the kingdom of God. This Church is destined to evangelize the whole earth. That is its mission, and by the grace of God we are going to accomplish it.

There is a wonderful prophecy in First Nephi, fourteenth chapter, uttered about the time that Isaiah delivered his great prophecy. Listen to it:

And it came to pass that I, Nephi, beheld the power of the Lamb of God, that it descended upon the saints of the church of the Lamb, and upon the covenant people of the Lord, who were scattered upon all the face of the earth; and they were armed with righteousness and with the power of God in great glory. (1 Nephi 14:14.)

How rapidly this wonderful prophecy is being fulfilled! President Joseph F. Smith in Bern, Switzerland, declared that "there will be churches built here [that is, in Europe], and temples built here and there all over Europe."

What a glorious destiny God sent us here to perform. Brethren and sisters, how can we be dilatory, how can we be negligent, when, shining as the sun in heaven, is the purpose and the destiny of this people? A people that has not an ideal or a noble purpose is like a painted ship on a painted ocean, but we must cherish and nourish these wonderful ideals that God has given and press on to the mark of eternal perfection. And the elders in the field ought not to be kept coddling the Saints, but they should be sent out among the Gentiles and derive that strength and power which comes from preaching the everlasting gospel.

RIGHTEOUSNESS REQUIRED TO MAKE A MIGHTY NATION

God be praised for this mighty republic! Oh, if the leaders of this nation could realize the purpose for which this nation is created, a might nation, the greatest in the world, that stands preeminent among all the nations, I believe that they would highly resolve in their hearts that corruption, extravagance, infidelity, Sabbath-breaking, and all the evils which form the accursed things in this nation, would be removed. I believe that this nation would then receive such a mighty uplift that it would be the wonder of all the world, that it would go forth assisting God and Jesus in establishing the religion which can bring permanent and perpetual peace and lasting glory to this nation.

Brethren and sisters, let us go forward. We are trying to awaken the world for the conflict of justice, preaching the gospel as a special witness for the second coming of the Son of God. Standing in the front ranks of this battle, we shall know, we do know now, that we are battling for the Lord through rendering service for our fellow creatures.

"O God, our help in ages past, our hope for years to come," be thou our guide we pray thee, lead us on to victory in this great spiritual battle. May we be thy humble instruments in bringing repentance into the world and salvation to our fellow beings, we humbly pray in the name of Jesus. Amen.

Selection by the Choir, "Speak Low to Me," by Ford.

ELDER JOHN H. TAYLOR

Of the First Council of the Seventy

I have a thought, brethren and sisters, that I would like to bring to you this afternoon. It came to me when I was coming into the tabernacle grounds.

A HOUSE BUILT UPON A ROCK

There was a little lady rushing out through the gates going to her work. On her way she had come into the temple grounds because to her it was home—home, because this is where she found God, where she found a testimony of the gospel of Jesus Christ, where she was baptized, where she went to the house of the Lord and obtained blessings in his holy house. As I saw her going out, I said to myself, "This place is truly a home, because, like a home, it brings us blessings and safety, strength, courage, and faith that endures."

You remember the parable of the house that was built upon the sand and the house that was built upon the rock. A house that is built upon the sand is always in peril. When the rains of regret and disappointment fall upon the house, and the winds of discord and suspicion beat upon it, the house falls, and great is the ruin thereof. Truly it is the ruin of happiness for the father and mother and the children. Fortunately, in order that theirs will not be a total loss, the house that is built upon the sand and is washed away, may be rebuilt again by the family. This time, if they are wise, they will build upon the rock of faith and confidence and cooperation, and the house will always be safe from the storm. When a house is built upon the rock of love, of good will, of sacrifice, and of tolerance, and the rains of temptation and misunderstanding fall upon it, and the winds of derision and mockery blow against it, it will still stand because it is built upon a rock.

HIS FATHER'S LOVE FOR HIS HOME

I used to wonder why my father did not want to move away from his home. It was a large house and most of the family had married and gone away. I wondered why he did not also go away and find a smaller place. I found out later when I understood what life was about. A long time before, he brought his wife to this house. In it his children had been born and some of them had died. From it sons were sent out into the field to preach the gospel. One of them was brought home by his mother and laid away on the hillside. He had planted the trees; he had remodeled the house. Truly it was built with his love and with his confidence. It represented a lot of sacrifice and doing without many comforts. That is why he wanted to stay in the house that was built upon the rock of his life. And so it became a rock, to us who were born in the house. We knew about the things that happened. We were grateful for the blessings of a father and mother who taught us the gospel of Jesus Christ, who helped us to travel along the right road and find success. That was our home; that is why we loved it; that is where stability and goodness came to us.

PLACES OF WORSHIP BECOME HOMES

Nearby was another home which we loved and which was the meeting house, the old Fourteenth Ward. I went there during all of my youth. There I found a testimony; there I came to know something about the gospel of Jesus Christ; there I found the priesthood of God. There I went to my first dance, and my mother was my partner: a mother so kind, a mother so beautiful, that all the many years that came to her, her large family, all the struggles, the trials and sorrows, yes, even the tears, could not wash away, nor wear away her beauty. She had not only the physical characteristics of beauty, but was beautiful in all the things that God gives to mothers to make them beautiful.

In this block is the tabernacle, another house that is built upon a rock, and one that I love, because of what it did for me. As a little boy, mother brought me to hear the sermons, and we sat here on the side and listened to the servants of God. When I became tired, I cuddled up to her, and she put her arms around me and I went to sleep. This is a home. When I was eight years of age I went over to the Endowment House to be baptized. Then I knew what it was to receive baptism and forgiveness, and as I went out of the door and walked up by the side of this building, I said to myself, "Well, John, you've been baptized and the Lord has forgiven you your sins." I tried to think of all the sins I had committed, and there seemed to be a lot and even then I couldn't find, it seemed to me, enough, and so I magnified what I had that I might leave them with the Lord.

This is the place where I came to see a girl that I wanted to marry. She came here each Sunday afternoon to meeting. When I went on my mission, and came back, she was still sitting in the same place on the Sabbath day. A little later we went into the House of the Lord and received his blessings. Truly the houses of life are a part of us, and to bring us happiness or joy they have to be built upon a rock, otherwise the storms of life will wash away the sand from beneath the house, and it will go down to ruin and destruction.

One day I went out into the great home called missionary life, and there I found a greater testimony. The sweetness of living for others and doing for others increased my testimony so that it became stronger and better than it had been before.

A MISSIONARY INCIDENT

One day I had been out in the country and as I was walking home, I came to a house where some Saints lived. It seemed too late, but I saw a light and therefore decided that they must be up. They were a poor family and had been out of work. When I opened the door and went in, to my surprise I found that they were just eating their supper. The lady of the house said: "Brother Taylor, have you had your supper?" and I said hesitatingly, "No, not tonight." She said: "Come and sup with us." She drew up another stool to the table, and I sat down with the husband and three or four little children. She got a plate and a spoon and I thought she was going over to the stove to get a portion for me, but she went to her own plate and took a few spoonfuls and put it onto my plate. Then she went to the father and to all the children doing the same thing, and then brought it to me, a servant of the Lord.

I prayed in my heart that to this home should come the kindly spirit of the Christ, that he would bless the food as he had the loaves and the fishes, and that the little children should not go from the table hungry. That house, so humble, was built upon the rock of kindness and love of God. When the meal was over, we knelt down around the same little table in family prayer, and as a servant of the Lord, I left my blessing and went away humbly with the desire in my heart that God would surely bless that home.

THE MANSIONS ABOVE

Some day, brethren and sisters, we will all have another home to go to. We are building it as we live our lives on the earth. I trust that we won't be disappointed in the place that we have chosen for it. If it is to bring us the maximum of happiness and security, and be numbered among the mansions of the Lord, we must build it on a foundation of faith, good works, and obedience to the commandments of the Lord. May we be like unto the wise man who built his house on the rock, and when the rains came and the winds blew, it fell not, because it was founded upon a rock.

May our Heavenly Father bless us in our homes, whether they have to do with where we live, or where we meet to worship him, or where we go to get his special blessings; and when we go back to him, these final homes be pleasant places where God dwells and his spirit is always with us, I humbly pray, in Jesus' name. Amen.

ELDER SEYMOUR DILWORTH YOUNG

Of the First Council of the Seventy

For seventy-eight years these buttressed walls have echoed with the words of the great men of the Church, giving advice, counsel, and the word of the Lord to this people. A person is fearful lest his words, mingling with the dust of those long ago spoken, and long forgotten, might not be in harmony with them. For as they were led by the Holy Ghost, their messages are timeless and of equal importance to us today.

WORDS FROM THE PAST

Seventy-six years ago a great voice spoke these words to the people of that day:

"I was about as poor a man as ever gathered with the Saints. The little property I had when I came into the Church I gave to my friends, and I went preaching the gospel everywhere I could until I was called to the gathering place. The first inquiry of mine to the Prophet was, 'What can I do to build up Zion?' The Prophet told us never to spend another day to build up a city of the world, for the business of the Latter-day Saints was to build up Zion. . . . I have worked for Zion from that day to this."

I am not afraid to bring back to you, from the memories of this house, those words. I cannot do as was done last May, and bring back a voice [when KSL rebroadcast parts of President Grant's sermons]—but the words ring true. Words like them in portent and meaning have been uttered here and recorded in our hearts a great many times. They are of especial importance today. Our young men are coming home—home from the wars—from China, the Philippines, from Germany, from Italy, from Africa. Some of them are here already, their golden discharge buttons, an honorable decoration, on their new civilian coats. Others will follow in a mighty stream until our joy at their returning will be as a great flood. And they are going to say—most of them—"What can we do to build up Zion?"

THE WORK AWAITING OUR SERVICEMEN

My young fellow servants, it will not be hard to answer your questions if you come home with a sincere desire to serve the Lord. We at home believe that you do desire to serve. Have you not written home many times from all parts of the world: "I was in danger. The bullets were flying all around—I thought I was a 'goner"—then I prayed and I was saved. God answered my prayer." And did you not write also: "I was shot down. How I got into that little rubber boat I don't know. I floated on the ocean for days. I prayed to my Heavenly Father—and I was rescued. And God did it." Did I not hear you when you reported the bombing flight over

Berlin when the flak was so thick that your plane was riddled like a sieve and you marveled that you ever came out of it alive, and again you gave the credit to your Maker?

Now you may wonder why your lives were spared. Perhaps it was so that you might be able to ask, "What can we do to build up Zion?" Some had to be spared to ask that question. You bear on your shoulders a double burden. Not only must you ask the question for yourselves, but you must ask it also for your absent comrades who wanted so desperately to come home and work for the kingdom of our God but who never will, and who must depend on you.

You will soon be faced with a decision—a most important one, I can assure you, for the gospel of the kingdom must be preached in all the world. And who will preach it? You, my brethren of the returning hosts, you will preach it. You are the youth and the strength of the Church—there aren't many others to ask to go forth and preach it. So you will be asked by those in authority—when the time comes—and in response to your question, "What can we do to build up Zion?" you will be told to go to China, to Japan, to Russia, to India, to Europe, to Asia, to Africa, to South America—to all the world, bearing, as did the apostles of a hundred years ago the kingdom on your shoulders.

What will you say? Will you ask, "But what about my college? When shall I get that? I've already lost three years! When do I make up my lost time?"

I should like to remind you that you have in the past three years been given a greater knowledge of the peoples of the earth than has ever been given before to our young people—you have seen not just a few, but most of the nations of the world. And now will you take to them the gospel of peace instead of that of war?

I can bear to you solemn testimony as your friend of many years, that you will be borne up in spirit, in health, and in power if you will put yourselves into the hands of the Lord and go when and where his servants send you.

Can you believe that the God who sustained you as you came into the battle, can supply you with your needs if you go about his business? Do you think that you will lose time, or college, or money, or business, if you place yourselves in his service for a year or two or three?

This building was built by those who gave time and money without stint. The temple on this block is a monument to your grandparents who gave in faith. Many of you are American citizens and living in this land of promise because, one time, a boy said to himself, "I'll go and preach to the people of that other land." And he went forth in faith. Your grandparents heard and had faith—and now you will have faith that God lives, that Jesus Christ lives—and that this is his Church. You will heed the call that will come, and by the thousands you will carry the glad tidings to the weary, the hungry, the heavy laden over all the earth.

I think I know the timbre and the temper of the youth of Zion, and when the question is asked: "Will you go forth now to build up Zion?" the affirmative roar of assent will be so great that the earth will tremble at its power and beauty. And in power you will teach salvation to the world—and in giving your lives to this service you will cleanse the world from its bath of blood and justify the sacrifice to liberty of your fallen comrades.

God grant you the faith and courage to do it I ask in the name of the Lord Jesus Christ. Amen.

ELDER MARK E. PETERSEN

Of the Council of the Twelve Apostles

One of the parables of our Savior reads as follows:

. . . The Kingdom of heaven is like unto a merchant man, seeking goodly pearls: Who, when he had found one pearl of great price, went and sold all that he had, and bought it. (Matt. 13:45-46.)

REVERSING THE PARABLE REGARDING THE PEARL OF GREAT PRICE

We have always felt that that merchant was an extremely wise man, because he was willing to give up all that he possessed in order to acquire the pearl of great price. But let me ask you, what would you have thought of that merchant had the parable been reversed and he had given up the pearl of great price in exchange for something of little or no value?

We have some among us who are doing that very thing. In their own lives they reverse the parable of the Lord and they give up the pearl of great price for a fleeting fancy. They actually sell their birthright in the kingdom of God for less than a mess of pottage.

From time to time in the Church section of The Deseret News—which section I do recommend to all of you as one of the finest publications that you can have in your home—from time to time that publication carries a list of names of individuals who have been excommunicated from this Church. These excommunicants at one time were all members of the kingdom of God, and at one time they all possessed the pearl of great price. But each one of them has reversed that parable in his own life and has given up the pearl of great price with all its values and with all its blessings. What a pity! What a tragedy!

FALSE TEACHERS DECEIVE MANY

How do people do such a thing as this? One of the reasons people apostatize from this Church is that they have failed to heed the warning of the scriptures against listening to false teachers who raise their voices in our midst. In spite of the fact that these warnings of the scriptures are crystal clear, many of our people fail to heed them.

Note how clear they are. Peter said:

... there shall be false teachers among you, who privily shall bring in damnable heresies, even denying the Lord that bought them, and bring upon themselves swift destruction, And many shall follow their pernicious ways. (11 Peter 2:1-2.)

Jesus said, "... Take heed that no man deceive you, For many shall come in my name ... and shall deceive many," (Matt. 24:4-5) and again the Lord said, "... many false prophets shall rise, and shall deceive many," (Matt. 24:11) and once again the Lord said, and keep in mind that when he said this he was speaking to members of the Church who were already in possession of the pearl of great price:

... if any man shall say unto you, Lo, here is Christ, or there, believe him not; For in those days there shall also arise false Christs and false prophets, and shall show great signs, and wonders, insomuch, that, if possible, they shall deceive the very elect who are the elect according to the covenant. (Pearl of Great Price, Joseph Smith 1:21-22.)

Who are the elect according to the covenant? They are those persons who have entered into the new and everlasting covenant by accepting membership in this Church.

When the Apostle John was speaking of the false teachers in his day he branded them as antichrists. Said he, "... even now are there many antichrists: ... They went out from us." (1 John 2:18-19.) In other words they had been members of the Church, and they had been led into paths of apostasy because of false religious notions.

They went out from us, ... for if they had been of us, they would no doubt have continued with us: but they went out, that they might be made manifest that they were not all of us. (1 John 2:19.)

How do these false teachers lead people astray? They do so by attacking the fundamental doctrines of the Church. They attack the Authorities of the Church. They attack the teachings of the Authorities. They seek to develop doctrinal disputes among the people to undermine their faith, and they lead people into apostasy when they do such things as that. Very often false teachers who have come among us endeavor to justify their position by claiming to have received some revelation or dream directing them, they say, in the paths which they tread.

There were disputes anciently among the Jews, over the doctrines of the church, and these disputes led people to apostasy. There were disputes among the ancient Nephites likewise, just as there are disputes among some of our people today, disputes, let me remind you, which lead to apostasy and excommunication from the Church.

In the days of the Savior, or rather before he appeared among the Nephites, there were many doctrinal disputes among the Nephites. Some of those who stirred up the hearts of the people said that there was no Christ. They denied his very existence. When the righteous Nephites looked forward to the coming of the Lord, these false teachers declared that he would not come, because he did not so much as exist; and so, when finally Jesus did make his appearance among the Nephites, after his resurrection on the other continent, he stood before them, and settled then and there the dispute over whether or not he existed. He stood before the multitude, and invited them to come up, one by one, and examine his body, his resurrected body. He invited them to feel his hands and feet and to thrust their hands into his side, to feel the imprints of the crucifixion; and after they had all come up and found that he was the Christ, they fell down and worshipped him.

Then he began to preach the gospel to those Nephites and the very first thing that he said to them in beginning his preaching was this:

... there shall be no disputations among you, as there have hitherto been; neither shall there be disputations among you concerning the points of my doctrine, as there have hitherto been. For verily, I say unto you, he that hath the spirit of contention is not of me, but is of the devil, who is the father of contention, . . . and he stirreth up the hearts of men to contend . . . one with another. Behold, this is not my doctrine, to stir up the hearts of men with anger, one against another; but this is my doctrine, that such things should be done away. (III Nephi 11:28-30.)

Giving a similar warning to the Prophet Joseph Smith the Lord said:

... Satan doth stir up the hearts of the people to contention concerning the points of my doctrine; and in these things they do err, for they do wrest the scriptures and do not understand them. (D. & C. 10:63.)

So, Latter-day Saints, beware of false teachers. When men come among you and begin to preach doctrines unto you which tend to destroy your confidence in the holy scriptures, when men come among you, as they are now coming, declaring to you that the appointment of George Albert Smith as President of this Church is not valid, because they say this Church should only have seven presidents and no more, when people come among you declaring that Christ is not divine, or when they come among you advocating the so-called practice of plural marriage, contrary to the teachings of this Church and contrary to the law of the land, when they come among you declaring that you can enter into domestic relations with another man or another woman without committing adultery, when you do not have a marriage bond which is recognized as legal by the law of this land, or when people come among you declaring that the Church is out of order, because we are at the present time not practicing the United Order, or when a man comes among you declaring that the Church is off the track and that he is one mighty and strong sent to set the Church in order, or when anyone comes and tells you that temple marriage is just a fad and that it has no relationship to your exaltation in the kingdom of God, or when someone comes to you, as one group is now doing, preaching that reincarnation is a Christian doctrine, or when men come to you declaring that predestination is one of the doctrines of the gospel, declaring that one group of the Saints is predestined to go to one degree of glory and another group of the Saints is predestined to go to another degree of glory, or when they come among you declaring that they have had dreams and visions about some get-rich-quick scheme by which they are going to save the Church financially in some period of distress, or when they come to you and declare that the method of administering the sacrament of the Lord's supper is to be changed, contrary to all the teachings of the scriptures, or when they come to you and say you can serve two masters, that you can serve the Church and also one of these wild-cat cults that are starting up, when you hear teachings of this kind you remember that such doctrines cause dissention among the people, that they cause disputes which lead to apostasy and that the Lord condemned disputes of that kind. When you have persons come to you teaching doctrines of this kind, remember also the words of the Savior when he said:

... neither shall there be disputations among you concerning the points of my doctrine. . . . for verily, verily, I say unto you, he that hath the spirit of contention is not of me, but is of the devil, who is the father of contention, and he stirreth up the hearts of men. (III Nephi 11:28-29.)

Remember, too, the Savior told the Prophet Joseph Smith that it is Satan who "doth stir up the hearts of the people to contention concerning the points of doctrine," and that when individuals put themselves in the hands of Satan in doing these things "they do err, for they do wrest the scriptures and do not understand them."

SAFETY IN FOLLOWING COUNSEL OF LEADERS OF THE CHURCH

Surely the Latter-day Saints, of all people, should be on their guard against false doctrines. Have we forgotten the warning that was given to us by the Savior, as he appeared to the Prophet Joseph Smith in the sacred grove during that first vision? Have we forgotten that there the Savior declared that man-made religious doctrines are an abomination in his sight?

The Lord has foreseen the fact that the Saints would need protection against false teachers, and he foresaw the need of setting safeguards in the Church to give them that protection.

Paul in his letter to the Ephesians clearly explained what these safeguards are, and he gave us the reason the Lord established these safeguards. If you will remember your reading of the fourth chapter of Ephesians, you will recall that he outlined the organization of the Church, and as part of that organization he declared that in the Church there were to be some prophets and some evangelists and some pastors and teachers. The reasons he said these officers were set in the Church were: First, for the perfecting of the Saints—remember that the Savior had commanded us to be perfect, even as our Father in heaven is perfect. Second, they were set in the Church for the work of the ministry; third, for the edifying or the instruction of the membership of the Church; fourth, to help us to come to a unity of the faith; fifth, to help us to obtain a knowledge of the Sons of God; sixth, to help us to achieve the measure of the stature of the fulness of Christ. And then he gave us a seventh reason, telling us that the Lord put apostles and prophets and pastors and teachers in this Church—and mark these words carefully—

That we henceforth be no more children, tossed to and fro, and carried about with every wind of doctrine, by the sleight of men, and cunning craftiness whereby they lie in wait to deceive. (Eph. 4:14.)

So if you really desire to avoid deceptions, if you really desire to do that which is right and proper, then you take advantage of the safeguard that the Lord has given you in the organization of this Church. And you remember that if you will follow the teachings of your inspired prophets, seers, and revelators, of your apostles, of your pastors and teachers, your bishops and your stake presidents, you won't need to wonder whether or not such and such a doctrine is a deception, whether it is false or whether it is true, because those authorized servants of the Lord will lead you into paths of righteousness, and they will keep you on the right track.

Salvation comes not by being tossed about by every wind of doctrine but by learning the truth as it is taught by the inspired, authorized leaders of the Church, and then having learned that truth, by living up to it and enduring in faithfulness unto the very end.

Not every one that saith unto me, Lord, Lord, shall enter into the kingdom of heaven; but he that doeth the will of my Father, which is in heaven. (Matt. 7:21.)

If you would know the will of the Lord, so that you may obtain your salvation, then obtain your knowledge of the will of the Lord from his authorized servants whom he has set in this Church. That we may have the common sense to do this, I earnestly pray in Jesus' name. Amen.

President George Albert Smith:

We have had a wonderful day in the worship of the Lord. We have been at peace with ourselves and with everybody else today and have had a lovely time.

Tonight there will be a Priesthood meeting held in this building at 7 o'clock, the services of which will not be broadcast.

Members of the Tabernacle Choir will now sing, "Thanks to Thee, O Lord," by Handel.

The closing prayer will be offered by President James D. Hoggan of the Burley Stake, after which this Conference will stand adjourned until 7 o'clock tonight. As I have already stated, that will be a Priesthood meeting.

The sessions at 10:00 a.m. and 2:00 p.m. tomorrow will be broadcast. At the morning session everyone should be in his seat fifteen minutes before 10:00 a.m. We hope you will pay attention to that, because the doors will necessarily be closed and it will require some patience to stand outside until they open again. Therefore, all who are coming to the meeting in the morning, be sure to be here at the time specified, fifteen minutes to ten.

Another thing, brethren and sisters. The city is filled with people; there are large numbers of vehicles that have been unused for a long time, and now that gasoline can be obtained, these cars are coming from every direction and at very unexpected times. We want you to be very careful, watch your step, and watch the other fellow's driving as well.

Singing by the Choir, "Thanks to Thee, O Lord," by Handel. Elder James D. Hoggan, President of the Burley Stake, offered the invocation.

Conference adjourned until 7:00 p.m.

GENERAL PRIESTHOOD MEETING

The General Priesthood meeting was held Saturday evening, October 6, at 7:00. The Tabernacle was filled with men, many of whom were unable to obtain seats because of the large attendance.

The Men's Chorus of the Tabernacle Choir was in attendance and furnished numbers for this meeting.

President George Albert Smith:

I hope that all of the brethren who have seats will squeeze over, if they have not already done so, and let some of those who are still standing come in and get a seat. I think you can make room for about two hundred people.

We will begin tonight by the singing of the men of the Tabernacle Choir; director, Elder J. Spencer Cornwall, and organist, Alexander Schreiner. We are going to sing a real Latter-day Saint hymn. The choir and congregation will sing together. It will give you an opportunity to sing something you all know.

After the first song the prayer will be by President Elmer A. Graff of the Zion Park Stake.

They tell me I did not tell you which one of the Latter-day Saint hymns we are going to sing, but you ought to know after listening to what we have been talking about all the time: "Do What Is Right."

The congregation and the Men's Chorus joined in singing the hymn, "Do What Is Right."

Elder Elmer A. Graff, President of the Zion Park Stake offered the opening prayer.

The Tabernacle Choir Men's Chorus sang, "Hark! What Means Those Heavenly Voices?" by Bortniansky.

President George Albert Smith:

This is a very remarkable sight, to see this house packed with men, and many standing.

That brings to my mind the question as to how many of these men who are here tonight do not know where they are going to sleep and have no place to stay. If there are any such, I think it would be advisable for you to raise your hands so that your neighbors who are near you who have a place to stay and probably an extra bed, will be able to take you home with them so that you will not have to sit around the lobby of some hotel. All of you who are in this house tonight who have not a place to stay after you go from this meeting, raise your hands, and keep them up. If there are any such, we do not want anybody to be left out tonight. If any of you see anybody's hand raised, please watch that person and see that when the meeting is out, somebody takes him home.

We are met here as brethren, servants of the Lord. We are met here to worship. I trust that as the meeting progresses we shall continue to feel the power of the Lord upon all those who shall address us and all of us who may be listening.

Our first speaker tonight will be Elder Joseph Fielding Smith of the Council of the Twelve.

ELDER JOSEPH FIELDING SMITHOf the Council of Twelve Apostles*

It is my purpose tonight to plead with our brethren who hold the responsibility of conducting the priesthood for a better supervision of priesthood quorums. In a revelation given to the Prophet for the benefit of the first elders of this Church he said: "... thou shalt not idle away thy time, neither shalt thou bury thy talent that it may not be known." (D. & C. 60:13.) Too many of those who hold the priesthood have idled away their time and have buried their talent. We would like to have a revival among all the quorums of the priesthood.

ORGANIZATION ESSENTIAL TO PRIESTHOOD

In that great revelation known as section one hundred seven, the priesthood revelation, there are three expressions I would like to read, first from the twenty-first verse:

Of necessity, there are presidents, or presiding officers growing out of, or appointed of or from among those who are ordained to the several offices in these two priesthoods.

Then in the sixtieth verse the Lord says:

Verily, I say unto you, saith the Lord of Hosts, there must needs be presiding elders to preside over those who are of the office of an elder.

And then again in the eighty-ninth verse:

Again, the duty of the president over the office of elders is to preside over ninety-six elders, and to sit in council with them, and to teach them according to the covenants.

Organization is an essential requirement in the government of the Church. The entire universe is organized on a divine plan. Without organization there would be confusion, chaos, and that would lead to disorganization and destruction. The quorums of the priesthood are organized for a definite purpose. I've jotted down several of these: first, to keep the members holding the priesthood active and alert in the performance of every duty which the priesthood requires at their hands; second, to teach the members how to assume responsibility and magnify their callings; third, to train them in methods by which they may effectually teach others and officiate in their behalf; fourth, to encourage them in their responsibilities pertaining to the salvation of the dead as well as for the living.

A quorum, properly appointed, must seek out the needs of every individual member and attempt to supply these needs that may be discovered, both temporally and spiritually. No quorum of the priesthood is assuming the full obligation placed upon it by the Lord which does not sufficiently extend temporal need. Each member should dedicate himself and use his talent to advance the cause of Zion. He must be loyal and faithful to the Church, to the quorum, to the priesthood in general, to his family and to every divine principle of eternal truth.

RESPONSIBILITY OF PRESIDENT OF QUORUM

The responsibility of the quorum president is, as stated in this revelation, to sit in counsel, to advise and instruct and teach those who are under his direction. The Lord has placed the responsibility for the training and the conduct of the members of the quorum upon the shoulders of the president of the quorum. He has given him two counselors to assist him in that work. This direction and care of the quorum may not be transferred to the shoulders of some other. Men who are the most capable for these positions of presidency should be sought. Too frequently it is thought that the supervision of a quorum, especially of elders, is not of great importance, but the Lord thinks otherwise. There should be, however, a division of responsibility among the presidency. The presidency should see that the quorum is fully organized, and that every man is performing his duty. If there are delinquent or wayward members, these should be labored with until brought to repentance and full fellowship.

The stake presidency and the high council have supervision over the quorums of the Melchizedek Priesthood. It is their duty to see that the quorums are fully organized and properly functioning. The stake Melchizedek Priesthood committee is to act as an aid to the stake presidency. It is recommended that such a committee be maintained. It must be understood, however, that the stake Melchizedek Priesthood committee does not preside, but is to supervise and counsel quorum members, under the direction of the stake presidency. It is proposed that a member of the stake presidency be the chairman of this committee. He may have as many members of the high council on that committee as it is deemed wise, but not less than three. It is further understood that this committee has authority in the supervision of the elders, seventies and high priests within the stake, under the direction of the stake president.

The presidency of a quorum of priesthood should hold weekly council meetings. They must not wait for something to arise which they deem important to be considered. If they will meet, many things will arise for their consideration which were previously not thought of.

There are three great needs of a quorum. We believe that the work falls naturally into three divisions: first, the need to help every bearer of the Melchizedek Priesthood to attain to the degree of economic independence and material well-being that will assure adequate food, clothing, fuel, housing, and other needs, physical and educational, for himself and family as well as spiritual; second, the need to establish a feeling of true brotherhood should characterize the work of priesthood quorums. There should be the endeavor to provide through the quorum activities, including socials and outings, the feeling of fellowship, faith, and love that shall meet all the needs of the membership; third, a need to search out the facts and make available all the information and statistics concerning the quorum and its members.

DIVISION OF RESPONSIBILITY

We suggest that the responsibility having to do with personal welfare be assigned to the quorum president. It would naturally follow that the other divisions would be assumed by the counselors, one taking the quorum activity and Church service, the other fact-finding and statistical responsibility. These responsibilities must not be shifted to the shoulders of others, but it is very proper that help be obtained from standing committees as the presidency of the quorum may determine. It is suggested that these responsibilities may be designated as follows: one, personal welfare; two, quorum activity and Church service; three, fact finding and statistics.

In the past we have had four standing committees but our observation and the information coming from stake priesthood committees lead us to conclude that these three committees may be all that are required. However, the presidency, if they desire, may call task committees whenever the occasion seems to warrant it.

MONTHLY LEADERSHIP MEETING

There should be in each stake a monthly Melchizedek leadership meeting at which the stake presidency and the stake Melchizedek priesthood committee shall meet with the officers and leaders of quorums and groups, including quorum presidencies, quorum secretaries, group leaders, committee members, and class instructors. It is suggested that the secretaries meet with the fact finding and statistical group of counselors. It is also recommended that a special department to take care of instructors be conducted under the leadership, or at least the direction of a member of the stake Melchizedek Priesthood committee. In this department teacher-training helps and assistance should be given, lesson material enlarged and developed. It should be borne in mind that class instruction and related problems are the responsibility of the member of the quorum presidency assigned.

On the day of the monthly priesthood leadership meeting, the stake committee should hold a preliminary meeting with the presidencies of the Melchizedek quorums. We recommend that separation be had on a department, not quorum, basis. At the time of separation, brief opening exercises should be held. In the matter of reports, it is to be hoped that attention will be given to the instructions which are sent to the quorums. More detailed information and an outline of procedure and instruction will, within a short time, be furnished each stake president and quorum president.

THE COURSE OF STUDY

The course of study that will be considered by the priesthood quorums for the year 1946 was prepared by Elder Milton R. Hunter of the First Council of the Seventy. The title is, The Gospel Through the Ages. I have read this manuscript and some of the other brethren have read it, and I can assure you brethren that we are going to have a very profitable time in considering a subject of this nature.

Now, if I may spend a little time, after giving these details and stating that more information will soon be furnished, I would like to say a few things about our responsibilities as men holding the priesthood. On the one hundred and twenty-first section of the Doctrine and Covenants, the quotation that we have heard so many times from the lips of President Heber J. Grant, I would like to make a comment.

THE WORD OF THE LORD

Behold, there are many called, but few are chosen. And why are they not chosen? Because their hearts are set so much upon the things of this world, and aspire to the honors of men, that they do not learn this one lesson—That the rights of the priesthood are inseparably connected with the powers of heaven, and that the powers of heaven cannot be controlled nor handled only upon the principles of righteousness. (D. & C. 121:34-36.)

Now who are those who are called? I take it that every man who is ordained to an office in the priesthood has been called. The Lord is willing that any man should serve him.

In the early revelations given to some of the brethren who came asking of the Lord what he would have them do, he told them to bring forth the cause of Zion, to thrust in their sickles with their might that they might lay up in store.

I think a great deal of this short section, section four, for two good reasons: first, it was given to my great-grandfather, but it wasn't given to him alone, and I have said many times it was also given to me; and second, it was given to you, each one of you, and in this revelation the Lord says:

Therefore, O ye that embark in the service of God, see that ye serve him with all your heart, might, mind and strength, that ye may stand blameless before God at the last day. (D. & C. 4:2.)

Then it follows that if we don't serve him with all our heart, might, mind, and strength, if we're not loyal to this calling which we have received, we are not going to be blameless when we stand before that judgment seat. It is a very serious thing to hold the priesthood. I wish when our young men were called and ordained, that is, recommended to be ordained to the office of elder in the Church, they could be impressed before they were ordained with the importance of the calling which they are about to receive.

In section eighty-four of the Doctrine and Covenants, the Lord has this to say:

For whoso is faithful unto the obtaining these two priesthoods of which I have spoken, and the magnifying their calling, are sanctified by the Spirit unto the renewing of their bodies; They become the sons of Moses and of Aaron and the seed of Abraham, and the church and kingdom, and the elect of God; And also all they who receive this priesthood receive me, saith the Lord. (D. & C. 84:33-35.)

And if we receive the Lord, then, surely the Lord receives us, and we are in fellowship with him.

For he that receiveth my servants receiveth me; and he that receiveth me receiveth my Father. (D. & C. 84:36.)

Now, here is the great blessing, which I think many of us have overlooked, and especially these young men when they are called and sustained to be ordained to the office of elder:

"And he that receiveth my Father—" and of course we receive the Father through our faithfulness and our obedience, "receiveth my Father's kingdom; therefore all that my Father hath shall be given unto him." (D. & C. 84:38.)

Can you think of a greater blessing the Lord could offer to any man holding the priesthood? But this is based upon faithfulness and the magnifying of the calling.

In other revelations, you know, the Lord says:

And [they] who overcome by faith, and are sealed by the Holy Spirit of promise, . . . They are they into whose hands the Father has given all things . . . they are gods, even the sons of God. (D. & C. 76: 53, 55, 58.)

And this according to the oath and covenant which belongeth to the priesthood. Therefore, all those who receive the priesthood, receive this oath and covenant of my Father, which he cannot break, neither can it be moved. (D. & C. 84:39-40.)

Here is a definite, positive statement that every man who receives the priesthood, receives it with an oath and covenant that he will magnify his calling, that he will be faithful and true, and his reward will be to become a son of God and a joint heir with Jesus Christ in having the fulness of the Father's kingdom. No greater blessing could be offered. And then the Lord has said:

Therefore all those who receive the priesthood, receive this oath and covenant of my Father, which he cannot break, neither can it be moved. (idem.)

Now, these promises were not made to high priests alone, but to all who receive the priesthood. And then the Lord is promising us everything that he has if we will be faithful. Isn't it only fair, that the punishment for violation of that covenant and the trampling of that priesthood under our feet should bring a punishment, on one hand, as severe, as glorious will be the reward on the other? And so the Lord says:

But whoso breaketh this covenant after he hath received it, and altogether turneth therefrom, shall not have forgiveness of sins in this world nor in the world to come. (D. & C. 84:41.)

Oh, if we could only impress that upon the mind of every man when he is called to receive the priesthood! Now, only those who magnify their callings will be chosen.

The Lord bless you, I pray, in the name of Jesus Christ. Amen.

ELDER JOSEPH L. WIRTHLIN

Second Counselor in the Presiding Bishopric

I sincerely trust, my brethren, that I might enjoy the spirit of the Lord the few minutes that I stand before this magnificent body of the priesthood of the Lord Jesus Christ. As I listened to the opening prayer of this session of our conference tonight, there was one thought expressed that made a deep impression upon me, and that was the thought that we should put our arms around those who have become inactive and indifferent in the Church. Our responsibility to those who become indifferent brings to mind the scripture presented by Elder Mark E. Petersen in his most inspirational address. It is found in Ephesians 4:11-13.

ASSIGNMENTS FOR THE PRIESTHOOD

And he gave some, apostles; and some, prophets; and some, evangelists; and some, pastors and teachers; For the perfecting of the saints for the work of the ministry, for the edifying of the body of Christ: Till we all come in the unity of the faith, and of the knowledge of the Son of God, unto a perfect man.

As I analyze these words of Paul, they seem to fall into two distinct parts. The first part has to do with those who are the designated servants of the Lord. The second part outlines the assignments to these servants; first, the assignment of perfecting the Saints; second, the work of the ministry; third, the edifying of the body of Christ until we all come to a unity of the faith; and fourth, a knowledge of the Son of God unto a perfect man.

THE TEACHER'S DUTIES

We are all familiar with the responsibility of each group of these servants of the Lord, but I should like to make particular reference to the group that Paul calls the teachers. Considering the office of teacher in the Church first, and secondly the assignment of perfecting the Saints, establishing faith in their hearts, and giving them a complete knowledge of the mission, the sacrifice and resurrection of the Lord Jesus Christ, it would seem that in the scriptures there should be a plan or formula whereby these teachers might accomplish the objectives outlined in the declaration of Paul. The formula or plan is found in a revelation given to the Prophet Joseph Smith in section 20, verse 53 of the Doctrine and Covenants wherein the Lord said:

The teacher's duty is to watch over the church always, and be with and strengthen them; And see that there is no iniquity in the church, neither hardness with each other, neither lying, backbiting, nor evil speaking; And see that the church meet together often, and also see that all members do their duty.

This is the Lord's plan, and in it there are found five distinct steps: first, the teacher's duty is to watch over the Church always, which indicates that the assignment of teaching the people isn't an assignment for any specified period of time but one that might be a life's mission, for the Lord used the word "always." The second step involves the teacher being with and strengthening them. The third step is to see that there is no iniquity in the Church, neither hardness with each other, neither lying, backbiting, nor evil speaking; fourth, to see that the Church meet together often; fifth, and also see that all the members do their duty.

In analyzing this great priesthood assignment of perfecting the Saints, it will require constant motivation, teaching, and particularly in guarding the Saints against those who come as wolves in sheep's clothing, teaching the doctrines of men which are always false doctrines. The untiring effort, prayers, and presence of the teacher, the guardian of the flock, are necessary in order to strengthen the Saints in knowledge, in their faith, and in their testimonies, to the end that they will know of a surety that the restored gospel of Christ is being taught by the teacher of the Lord, and to enjoy a testimony that whispers constantly to them that the gospel as restored to the Prophet Joseph Smith is the Lord's plan wherein they can enjoy salvation and exaltation in the kingdom of our Heavenly Father.

It logically follows that if the Saints are to be perfected, of necessity iniquity, hardness with each other, lying, backbiting, and evil speaking must be eliminated from their daily lives. If you will think of iniquity, think of hardness, think of lying, backbiting, and evil speaking, inevitably you think of Satan, who is the source of these sins which have caused and do cause sorrow and death. The emotions of hate, criticism, and backbiting that he inculcates into the hearts of men are the causes for apostasy, for whenever a man in this Church finds fault, practices backbiting and evil speaking, he becomes hardened in his heart, and the spirit of God departs from him. Unless there is a change, this course leads to apostasy and degradation. The teachers of the Church being the watchmen on the towers of Zion should have as one of their objectives so to teach the Saints that they will have the strength to overcome these vices and evils to the end that the perfection spoken of by Paul will ultimately be their achievement and blessing.

The duty of the teacher to see that the Church meet together often is of utmost importance, for in meeting together often, the Lord has promised that his spirit will be present in rich abundance; and where his spirit is found, truth, love, and light will be the blessings of those who are in attendance. The teacher should encourage the Saints to meet together on the Lord's day, to rest from their labors, and, most important of all, to partake of the emblems of the Last Supper to the end that the body of the crucified Redeemer will become so edified that the people will know that the broken body that hung on the cross and the spilled blood brought about the atonement and made the resurrection possible. Furthermore, through the edification of the body of the Savior as represented in the sacrament, the Saints will have a testimony of his divine calling and always be willing to remember him and keep his commandments.

The teacher should so inspire the Saints that all of them will do their duty as the Lord commanded, for out of duty is personal development and spiritual progress possible, for "faith without works is dead." Personal development and spiritual progress go for perfection in character, in noble deeds, and in doing the will of our Heavenly Father, and the reward, therefore, is one which is divinely given in the form of a testimony, a testimony of the divine mission of the Savior, a testimony of the mission of Joseph Smith, a testimony of the fact that those who now guide and direct the destiny of this work do it under the inspiration of our Heavenly Father's holy spirit and with the mantle of authority upon their shoulders which was restored through the instrumentality of John the Baptist, Peter, James, and John. Activity is the strongest bulwark against the temptations and snares of the evil one. Activity is the lifeblood of this great organization. It is the foundation for an enduring testimony which can be lost when an individual does not do his duty and becomes inactive and indifferent.

The servants of the Lord, these teachers, were assigned to watch over the Church always and to be with and strengthen its membership and are selected by the Lord's representative, the bishop. But who are to be chosen to this great priesthood assignment? This question is not difficult to answer, for the bishop and his counselors have the right to call on every high priest, every seventy, every elder, every priest, and every teacher, who is worthy of this great and holy calling.

Ofttimes the remark is heard, "I have been teaching for ten or fifteen years and feel that because of this long tenure in office, I have graduated from this field of activity." I want to say emphatically, brethren, that any man who makes such a declaration might as well add, "I have graduated from the priesthood that I hold." The man who holds the priesthood of God is expected to render service as long as he lives, for his priesthood is endless. Furthermore, he is expected to respond to any and all calls that are made of him by the proper authority. Anything short of this is comparable to renouncing one's priesthood.

There is no honor with more distinction attached to it than the honor of teaching the people. The Savior set the proper example. His whole ministry was devoted to the welfare of the people and particularly to teaching them the doctrines of the kingdom. Surely, no one holding the priesthood will forego the privilege of following the example of the great Teacher. The Lord commanded Joseph Smith that we should teach one another the doctrines of the kingdom, and there is no better way than visiting among the people and teaching them the doctrines of the restored gospel. There are those who feel that they should be excused from teaching the people because of other duties, but it is felt that although members of the priesthood are engaged in other activities such as the auxiliaries, the assignment of teaching the people should take precedence for it is a priesthood activity, and the priesthood comes first. There is only one exception to this rule, and this exception is made by the First Presidency and the Council of the Twelve: in the case of stake presidencies and high councils, they are exempt from teaching because they constitute a court of the Church, and it is felt to be necessary that their minds be free of bias or prejudice. If they were to visit among the people as teachers or arbitrators, these men who constitute the high council court might find themselves in situations where their minds might become prejudiced because of contacts with those who are engaged in controversy. But the stake presidency and high council are responsible for the ward teaching in their stake, to see that it is done in all the wards and that the commandment of the Lord as revealed to the Prophet Joseph is carried out fully.

QUALIFICATIONS OF TEACHERS

What are the qualifications of a teacher? A teacher should be a man who teaches by example and lives every doctrine and principle that he advocates. I am not hesitant in saying to you that when a man goes forth to teach the principles of the gospel, having a clear conscience and knowing in his own heart that he is obeying and abiding by the principles of the gospel to the best of his ability, he can with certainty know that he will teach the Saints with the inspiration of God's spirit resting mightily upon him. He can teach in the spirit of sincerity, and the impression that he will make upon those who listen to him will be lasting and will sow the seeds of faith and obedience. A teacher should always be prepared. My observations indicate that many times teaching is done without proper preparation and that the monthly ward teachers' message prepared by the Presiding Bishop's Office is the crutch upon which many of our brethren lean. The message may be read before visiting the people, but there are many instances where it is read for the first time in the home of some Latter-day Saint, which is a confession that the teachers have come unprepared, and the impression made under such circumstances is very unfavorable. Proper preparation is of utmost importance, for upon it success depends.

Teachers should know the families which constitute their flock. More important, they should know each individual to the end that they can provide the bread of life that is needed, not only collectively but individually, rendering such counsel as will encourage and stimulate greater activity. Teaching on this basis will preclude the use of a printed message, the teachers being prepared and inspired to give such message as is needed in each particular home. I am sure the time is coming, and it isn't too far distant, when the printed message, which has been placed in your hands and is known as the monthly ward teaching message, may be eliminated entirely, and we shall go back to teaching the people, relying upon the Lord's spirit and making careful, prayerful preparation in order to be fully qualified to carry out the mandate of perfecting the Saints, of bringing them to a unity of the faith through the elimination of iniquity, backbiting, evil speaking, and hardness with each other. Servants of the Lord should be in constant communication with him in the performance of duty to be done. Nothing is of more importance than getting down upon one's knees with a junior companion, a teacher or a priest, and supplicating the Lord for his blessings and assistance in this great assignment. I do not hesitate to promise any pair of teachers who kneel down and ask God for his help, after having made proper preparation, that they will be impressed to do those things which will be most efficacious in the lives of their flock.

Teaching the people requires regularity. In other words, we should establish in the Church the practice of teaching the people on the first and second Thursday of each month. Thereby it would be only a short time until the people would become accustomed to having the teachers visit on a definite night, that over the Church generally, these two nights will be known as ward teaching nights, and most people will set them aside in anticipation of the teachers' visit.

It must always be remembered that the teachers visit the people with definite objectives in mind, to strengthen them to see that they do their duty. Therefore, all material foreign to this important assignment should be deleted from the conversation. Much of our time and the time of the people is spent in discussing such topics as the weather, politics, and the war, and in so doing we are wasting our time, the people's time, and most important of all, the Lord's time, because teachers are in his service and he expects us to devote the time involved to the welfare and good of the people.

TRAINING OF AARONIC PRIESTHOOD MEMBERS

I should like to draw to the attention of you older men the responsibility that you have and the privilege you enjoy in the companionship of a member of the Aaronic Priesthood. This young man looks to you for leadership and rightfully, too, and if you disappoint him in keeping the appointments made, if you fail to assume responsibility of leadership in teaching, if you fail to give him the opportunity of expression, it logically follows that the young man will look upon teaching as something of small consequence. On the other hand, with the right kind of leadership, this young man receives a training and an experience that will qualify him for the mission field and, most important of all, burn into his heart a testimony that he is a servant of the Lord. I recall my experience as a teacher. My first companion was an old Scandinavian brother who could hardly speak the English language distinctly and correctly. When the bishop assigned me to go with him, I had many reservations and rather reluctantly consented. This grand man came to me and said, "I am happy to have you as my companion. You come to my home on such and such a night that we might make proper preparation." I went to his home on the designated night with some misgivings. I was invited to kneel down with him in his humble home and ask for the blessings of the Lord, and, brethren, I testify that although this Scandinavian brother spoke broken English, he enjoyed the spirit of God in rich abundance, and I soon discovered in the thirteen families we visited, among whom were the rich and the humble, that this good man was received with the highest degree of respect.

I ask you older brethren to manifest a keen interest in the priests and the teachers of the Church to the end that they will come not only to know but to feel in their hearts that they are in the service of the Master, the service of perfecting his Saints and bringing them to a unity of the faith.

WATCHING OVER THE CHURCH

The Lord's declaration to watch over the Church always entails the responsibility of being willing to visit and be with the Saints whenever necessary, which should eliminate from our thinking that teaching the people requires but one night a month. It might require two nights; it may require three nights; it may require as many nights as are necessary to complete the assignment and to be ever on guard against any influences that are detrimental to the spiritual and temporal welfare of the people. It is essential that the ward teacher should attend all of his meetings for two reasons: first, for his personal benefit; and secondly, to perform his duty of watching over the Church always, which implies that he will take a mental roll of all his little flock that are present. Those who are absent should be contacted with the thought in mind of stimulating them to activity and to carry out the mandate of the Lord to see that the Church meet together often.

There may be those who are in temporal difficulties. If you are watching over the Church always, you will be able and be sufficiently qualified to report the temporal circumstances of such families to the bishop. If you are watching over the Church always, you will be available to render assistance to those who are ill and to the home of death. Surely, the heartfelt interest of the true shepherd of the flock will return to him the rich blessings of appreciation, gratitude, and love for his thoughtful and kindly administrations to those in difficulty.

RECEIVING THE TEACHERS IN THE HOME

I have drawn to your attention a few of the responsibilities of the teacher, but there are other responsibilities. There is another phase of this great and important assignment that has to do directly with you and me who are being and who are to be taught by these servants of the Lord. I ask the question, "Do I receive these men, do you receive these men, with the highest degree of respect and hospitality, or do we merely tolerate them out of superficial courtesy?" It is my feeling, brethren, that we assume an attitude of indifference. Many times we fail to lay aside the evening paper, turn off the radio, call in the family to receive the message of the Lord's servants. If we expect to be built up in our faith, to achieve perfection in our lives as Paul said, these men should be received with all the courtesy and respect at our command. Certainly, if the President of the Church were to come to our door or the president of the stake or the bishop of the ward, we would feel highly honored to do all within our power to show him proper deference. The teacher comes to our door, holding the same priesthood as the President of the Church or the president of the stake, or the bishop of the ward and, being the representative of the Lord, should receive a wholehearted welcome. If we will open our hearts and minds, these men as the instruments of the Lord will feed us the bread of life, and if there ever was a time when we need divine direction and the bread of life, it is in this day of distraction and difficulty. Furthermore, the visit of the teachers extends an excellent opportunity for our sons and daughters to come into the family circle in the presence of the Lord's servants, feeling free to ask any questions they might have. I feel convinced that the youth of Israel have many questions that go unanswered because there was no opportunity nor the right place to answer them, but in the presence of father and mother and the teachers, the shepherds of the flock, these questions can be discussed freely and openly to the end that these young people will be built up in their faith and testimonies.

SAVING THOSE WEAK IN FAITH

It is my duty in the Presiding Bishopric's Office to consider the names of those who request their names to be deleted from the records of the Church. Only yesterday six such names came to my attention, the names of individuals who requested that they be relieved of Church membership because some of them had joined other faiths and felt that they had found the truth. There can be no greater fallacy than believing that one has found the church of the Lord when he has already been in it and leaves it for the organization of some man, but it is my conviction that some of these people leave the fold, some of them are excommunicated, because you and I, the watchmen on the towers, the shepherds of the flock, are not doing our full duty. I want to tell you that no man will give up his faith, will give up the restored gospel of the Lord Jesus Christ or will give up his membership in this Church for any other faith or any other organization if he has a full understanding and comprehension of the gospel as it has been restored in this day. The reasons they leave are that they do not fully understand it and that many of them become critical and disobedient, which necessitates, on our part, greater activity and more alertness, a greater willingness to watch over the Church always and be with them and strengthen them. Many of these people could be saved to the Church if the teacher were doing his full duty.

It is as the Savior said to Peter:

So when they had dined, Jesus saith to Simon Peter, Simon, son of Jonas, lovest thou me more than these? He saith unto him, Yea, Lord; thou knowest that I love thee. He saith unto him, Feed my lambs. He saith to him again the second time, Simon, son of Jonas, lovest thou me? He saith unto him, Yea, Lord; thou knowest that I love thee. He saith unto him, Feed my sheep. He saith unto him the third time, Simon, son of Jonas, lovest thou me? Peter was grieved because he had said unto him the third time, Lovest thou me? And he said unto him, Lord, thou knowest all things; thou knowest that I love thee. Jesus saith unto him, Feed my sheep. (John 21:15-17.)

Brethren, you have the great honor, yes, the great responsibility of feeding the sheep of the Lord Jesus Christ. If I were to ask you, "Do you love Jesus Christ?" with one accord I am sure you would respond in the affirmative, and in response to such, I feel sure the words of the Christ would come down through the centuries, declaring again, "Feed my sheep; feed my lambs."

May God bless each and every one of us that we will feel highly honored in teaching the people to the end that we might have a part in the Lord's greatest plan and work, best declared in his words:

For behold, this is my work and my glory—to bring to pass the immortality and eternal life of man. (Moses 1:39.)

which I humbly pray each and every one of us will endeavor to do, in the name of Jesus Christ. Amen.

ELDER MILTON R. HUNTER

Of the First Council of the Seventy

It is indeed an inspiring sight to stand here and look into the faces of the thousands of holders of the priesthood in the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints. I have been thinking while sitting here tonight that there is more divine authority, more right to use that divine authority in this building tonight than in all of the rest of the world combined. We have here the President of the Church, who holds the keys of the priesthood, the keys of the kingdom of God; we have here the General Authorities, who have been delegated certain rights, authority, and power of that priesthood, and we have many other holders of the priesthood in this audience. I trust and pray that we will carry on our work in this priesthood in a desirable way before our Heavenly Father. I trust that the few words that I say tonight will be inspired by the Spirit of God, because I do feel a weakness in standing before this great assembly.

THE CONDITIONS AT THE CLOSE OF THE WAR

We are all rejoicing during recent days in the fact that the terrible war has come to a close and that the ruthless killings and destruction have been replaced by peace. I, with all of you, hope and pray that all of God's children throughout the entire world will cooperate with our Heavenly Father and his Only Begotten Son in bringing about a permanent peace; but such will be the case only when we all accept and obey the pattern of life established by the Savior, which is conducive to peace.

For a number of years human life has been regarded by the leaders of many nations of the earth as being very cheap. Thousands, yes, millions, of men and women have been ruthlessly sacrificed on the fields of battle. The philosophy of some of the major races of people has completely disregarded the sacredness of human life. Instead of honoring the dignity and worth of mankind, these nations referred to have honored and practically worshipped the glory of the group—that is, the strength, power, and hope of worlddominance by their nation or race. I believe that throughout the world, generally speaking, the philosophies of men have almost completely disregarded the sacredness and purpose of human life; therefore, I feel a definite need today to present a few ideas regarding the Mormons' concept of the sacredness and purpose of life.

MAN'S EXALTED POSITION IN THE UNIVERSE

Human life is sacred to the Latter-day Saints—as sacred and precious as anything that exists—because of its divine nature. God has revealed to the Prophet Joseph Smith and to the other holy prophets that we are his children, the divine offspring of heavenly beings. Men and women in general are the greatest of God's creative work, being made in his own image, and endowed through inheritance from our heavenly parents with godly characteristics just as mortal children are endowed with the characteristics of their earthly parents. In other words, we are gods in embryo, for, as Paul, the apostle to the Gentiles, has said:

... [God] hath made of one blood all nations of men for to dwell on all the face of the earth, ... For in him we live, and move, and have our being; ... For we are also his offspring. (Acts 17:26-28.)

All the prophets of the Church from Joseph Smith's day to the present time have confirmed the teachings of Paul. The following statement was made by President Joseph F. Smith:

Man, as a spirit, was begotten and born of heavenly parents, and reared to maturity in the eternal mansions of the Father prior to coming upon the earth in a temporal body to undergo an experience in mortality.

This beautiful doctrine of the divinity of man does not detract in the least from the glory and great exaltation of God the Eternal Father. It merely dignifies and exalts man and makes human life more sacred and purposeful. It fills the universe with meaning, with design, and attaches to life a goal; and an understanding of this doctrine should fill man's heart with love, charity, and good will toward all of the human family.

If one accepts that he is a son of God, in contrast to the concept that he is the offspring of an animal, he becomes impressed with the unlimited potential possibilities which are his. His eyes are turned heavenward instead of toward the ground. His hope is to become glorified—exalted—even like unto his heavenly parents.

Because of the closeness of the relationship between God and man and because of the great value and sacredness of human life, the Eternal Creator has always shown a special interest in the human family. He revealed to Father Adam the gospel plan of salvation, and has continued to reveal to his children from that day forward eternal truths to the full amount and extent that they were capable of receiving. He has established several gospel dispensations upon the earth; and throughout the entire course of human history he has earnestly pleaded with men to live in peace, in love, and in harmony with each other, as advocated in that divine plan. But ruthless and ungodly men from time to time have disregarded the sacredness of human life, and have brought wars, suffering, disease, and shame upon the human family.

HUMAN LIFE PRECIOUS IN THE SIGHT OF GOD

In spite of the actions of his children, God has continuously retained his interest in them. He sent his Only Begotten Son into the world to teach us that we should love the Lord our God with all our hearts and that we should love our neighbors as ourselves. This divine teacher—the Man of Galilee—attached a sacredness to human life that has never been fully appreciated nor comprehended by mortals. It is true that chosen Israel had known the perennial law of "Thou shalt not kill"; but the magnificent doctrine declared by the Son of God was that "... there is joy in the presence of the angels of God over the sinner that repenteth." (Luke 15:10.) In words of tenderness and power the Master of life and death told his eager listeners the beautiful parables of "The Lost Sheep," of "The Lost Coin," and that the well need no physician, but he who is ill. With open arms he cried, "All ye who are sick and weary come unto me, and I will give you rest." Never before had the downtrodden, the outcast, and the discouraged of the human family received such a powerful ray of light to heal them of their afflictions and to turn them unto God and unto a better life as when they felt the power of the message of the Master. Even the sinner learned that he and life were important, and that there was hope for him to receive something more beautiful, more joyous, and more godly than he had hitherto experienced.

After delivering a message of peace and hope to a troubled world, Jesus Christ gave his life as a voluntary sacrifice in order that we might live. Human life is so sacred and so valuable to the Eternal Father "that he gave his Only Begotten Son in order that we might gain eternal life." Even in our day Jesus has again emphasized the importance of a human soul in the following declaration:

... if it is so be that you should labor all your days in crying repentance unto this people, and bring, save it be one soul unto me, how great shall be your joy with him in the kingdom of my Father! And now, if your joy will be great with one soul that you have brought unto me into the kingdom of my Father, how great will be your joy if you should bring many souls unto me! (D. & C. 18:15-16.)

It is no wonder that the angels of heaven rejoice when God's children repent and seek after eternal life.

THE RELIGION OF THE LATTER-DAY SAINTS A PRACTICAL ONE

Another reason why Mormons maintain that life is sacred is that God has revealed to them that life is eternal. We believe that we build our own characters through the actions we commit—whether they be evil or good; and the type of characters we mould for ourselves will be ours throughout the eternities.

Thus, thinking upon the sacredness and eternal nature of life leads us into the doctrine of the purpose of life. One of the most clear-cut statements given in the scriptures on the purposes of life was a remark made by Father Lehi to his children. In his own words: "Men are that they might have joy." That concept is basic in the philosophy of Mormonism. We maintain that life and religion are the same thing; that religion is a seven-day-a-week concern of our people, and that it concerns itself with the temporal as well as the spiritual phases of life. To the Mormons the bread-and-butter problem is as much religion and of interest to our Church as is attending meetings or taking care of the other spiritual duties. If men have joy in sufficient abundance, they must have a proper amount of economic prosperity. Therefore, one of the purposes of life is to arrange, distribute, and equalize wealth in such a manner as to bring joy to the largest number of people. If the gospel of Jesus Christ were lived as the Master intends that it should be, all of God's children throughout the world, would enjoy the blessings derived from economic security.

A life of joy is a life free from sin. In the words of another Nephite prophet: "Sin never was happiness." It should be said, then, that one of the main purposes of life is to have opportunities to learn the will of God and choose for ourselves the amount of obedience which we desire to render. In fact, Mormonism teaches that one of the main purposes of mortal existence is to give us the opportunity to partake of all the good experiences of mortality, and through the great principle of faith follow the road of progression and righteousness which will eventually bring us back into the presence of our Eternal Father and his Only Begotten Son.

In other words, the Mormon concept of the purpose of life is growth—growth intellectually, growth physically, growth morally, and growth spiritually. We call that principle of growth, eternal progression. Mortality marks one short span in the process, but to us today it is the most important period, because God has declared that if we keep this estate in righteousness we shall have glory added upon our heads forever and ever.

The immortal beings in the unseen world and the children of men upon the earth are working in cooperation to bring about this perpetual growth of human personality. The greatest revelation ever given on this subject was when God informed Moses as follows:

For behold, this is my work and my glory—to bring to pass the immortality and eternal life of man. (Moses 1:39.)

If we add to this statement the following pertinent remarks made by the Master of life, wherein he said:

I am come that they [men] might have life, and that they might have it more abundantly. (John 10:10.)

And again,

... this is life eternal, that they might know thee the only true God, and Jesus Christ, whom thou hast sent, (John 17:3.)

then we see more clearly God's purpose of our mortal and eternal existence.

THE WAY TO KNOW GOD

The only way we can know God is to live as he lives, to think as he thinks, and to experience what he experiences. Interpreted in this light, we are brought face to face with the powerful Mormon doctrine which declares that "As man is God once was, and as God is man may be." It is positively true that the growth, the eternal progression, for which life offers opportunities reach their culminating point in a life patterned after that of Jesus; therefore, it is the purpose of life to live as the Savior taught us to live and as he himself lived.

I trust in faith to our Heavenly Father that he will help us that we may live that type of life. Before closing I wish to bear testimony that I am sure that we are all engaged in the work of God. I feel thankful to him for the opportunity that I have and that you have in the priesthood, in helping in his great cause. I know that the prophets of the Lord from Joseph Smith's time, to and including the present President of the Church, are divinely inspired and called of God our Eternal Father, and I wish to sustain the President of the Church with all my heart in the name of Jesus Christ. Amen.

The Tabernacle Choir Men's Chorus sang the hymn, "I Need Thee Every Hour."

PRESIDENT DAVID O. McKAY

Second Counselor in the First Presidency

Truly, as sung so impressively by the male chorus, we "Need Thee Every Hour"—especially the men who lead this Church, not only the General Authorities, but those in stakes and wards, in quorums, in organizations, and in the missions—all who in any way have the responsibility of guiding the people.

SOURCE OF POWER IN PRIESTHOOD

Jesus the Christ is the source of the power of the priesthood. Yesterday morning when the quorums voted as groups, there radiated a power which I am sure was felt by everyone. We felt it tonight when the thousands here assembled sang: "Do What Is Right." You sang with a force which indicated your intention to do just that thing.

As long as the priesthood merits the guidance of Christ by honest and conscientious dealing with their fellow men, by resisting evil in any of its forms, by the faithful performance of duty, there is no opposing power in this world which can stay the progress of the Church of Christ. I am happy to be numbered with you. I am grateful to have the privilege of laboring with this group of men and thousands of fathers in the promulgation of the principles of the gospel of Jesus Christ.

I've been instructed and gratified by the instructions of the brethren who have spoken here tonight.

WARD TEACHING

Without further comment I wish to mention one phase of ward teaching discussed so eloquently and impressively by Bishop Wirthlin. You noted that he mentioned two teachers, each accompanying the other in the performance of their duty. There is a growing tendency for teachers to go alone. We decry this practice. We commend those men who, when they fail to have a partner, are willing to assume the responsibility of visiting the Saints without a companion, but for seventy-five years, and probably longer, it has been the practice of the Church that teachers should go two by two. And Bishop Wirthlin very eloquently told us why. It is not sufficient for a teacher to say, "I cannot get anybody to go with me." There are too many young men in the Aaronic Priesthood who hold the office of teacher or priest, and who will accept an appointment as ward teacher to justify any teacher's going alone. Call a young man to go with you. Kneel down with him, as we have been instructed, and then go two by two.

Do this for three reasons: first, because we are instructed so to do; second, because it's for your own protection. You think about that. And third, because you need mutual strength, mutual guidance in giving correction, where it is necessary, and in teaching the doctrines of the Church.

INSTRUCTIONS REGARDING CALLING OF MISSIONARIES

I wish to say a word also about the calling of missionaries.

Go ye therefore, and teach all nations, baptizing them in the name of the Father, and of the Son, and of the Holy Ghost: Teaching them to observe all things whatsoever I have commanded you: and lo, I am with you alway, even unto the end of the world. (Matt. 28:19-20.)

That commission given by the Savior to the ancient apostles is applicable today. I need not elaborate upon the magnitude of missionary work. That has been done most eloquently today by Elder Stephen L. Richards and others of the General Authorities who have emphasized this theme. I have just two thoughts to express tonight. I have just two further suggestions regarding it. To the question whether returning soldiers or others, who because of some physical defect, have been excused from military service, could be called as missionaries, the answer is yes. The presidents of missions are calling for young men. Missions in Europe, in South America, and the Islands are waiting for messengers to come to them, so please recommend these young men who are worthy of a call to service. Presidents of missions are pleading for young men capable of assisting in office work. If presidents of stakes and bishops of wards can find a dozen such within the next month we shall appreciate it greatly.

In making your selection, however, please choose only young men and young women, who are worthy to represent the Church. The missionary field is not a reform school. True, it does bring about a reformation in those who need reforming. Missionary experience develops character, and brings the sincere laborer into spiritual contact with his Father in heaven, but no young man and no young woman should be sent out to be reformed. Stake and ward organizations of the Church are established for that purpose. We have been rather embarrassed even within the last few months, because of the insistence on the part of parents or, as in one case, of a bishop, that a young girl should go on a mission when she did not want to go; and, in another case, a young man who was unworthy.

Margaret Johnston Graflin, in a poem entitled "To My Son," said:

Remember the world will be quick with its blame.
If shadow or stain ever darken your name,
"Like mother like son" is a saying so true
The world will judge largely of Mother by you.

I should like to apply that thought to the sons and daughters of the Church, particularly to the representatives who go into the missionary field. The Church will be judged largely by your actions and by what you say. "Remember the world will be quick with its blame. If shadow or stain ever darken your name. . . ." It is a great responsibility to represent this Church, and every missionary is a representative. You men in business would not think of choosing a representative unless you could trust him or her. Make that your ideal, bishop, ask yourself, "Can this man be trusted as a representative of this Church? Will this young lady reflect credit upon this great organization?"

Call young men, yes; but see to it that they are worthy of the trust thus placed in them. These boys who have been out in conditions and in environments that have upset their whole nature—God bless them—they have been true, many of them, but they have been under a strain, they are changed. Now as they come home, put them in an environment where they will become normal, where, above all things, they can render the service of love instead of hate, of salvation instead of death. Many of them have been missionaries while they have been out fighting, but see to it that they are worthy. Talk to them, be kind to them, and when they are worthy, give them the opportunity to go out and preach the gospel.

The world is hungry to hear the truth as never before in its history. We have it. Are we equal to the task—to the responsibility

God has placed upon us? I am sure with the power we have seen in this priesthood meeting we can answer "yes."

God qualify our youth and our men in the priesthood everywhere to supply the present crying need of the nations for the truth of the restored gospel, I pray, in the name of Jesus Christ. Amen

PRESIDENT J. REUBEN CLARK, JR.

First Counselor in the First Presidency

A TRIBUTE TO PRESIDENT GRANT

My brethren, as I look into the faces of this great congregation, my mind inevitably goes back to the time when President Grant sat here with us, for this was the meeting that he dearly loved. Out of it, he got inspiration, and to it he gave inspiration and revelation. President Grant has finished his work and gone, and President Smith has come to take his place. And the loyalty which we gave to President Grant we give to him in fullest measure. President Grant did as President Smith will do, command the love and respect of all of us. President Grant was a great man, great in his integrity, in his honesty, in his straightforwardness. He never lied and never deceived. He had the good opinion of all men who knew him. The Church owes him much. He has left it so that it comes into the hands of President Smith in the best financial condition in its whole history.

President Grant rarely preached doctrinal sermons but his whole teaching and his whole life was an exhibit of the righteousness and the righteous way of living which should come to all Latter-day Saints. We, all of us, thank God for President Grant and for his work. And I repeat, all that we gave to him we shall bestow, not only fully but willingly and gladly, upon President Smith.

THE TRUE MEANING OF LOYALTY

I want to say a word or two about this question of loyalty and of sustaining the Authorities. I think every time I have spoken to you for two or three years I have talked about unity, and I come back to it again,

. . . and if ye are not one ye are not mine. (D. & C. 38:27.)

I say again, unless we are one we cannot do the things which God expects of us. Loyalty and sustaining do not consist, merely, in raising our hands when we are called upon to vote to sustain. Sustaining consists in carrying out the things which we are asked to do. That bishop does not sustain President Smith who does not do what President Smith asks him to do, in a church way. That president of a stake does not sustain President Smith when he ignores direction and requests which come from President Smith. There are no two ways in this, my brethren, there is only the straight course, right down the middle of the road.

At the beginning of this war, the First Presidency sent out to the bishops of the Church a request for certain information regarding men going into the service. There are several bishops who, up to this day, have never made any return upon that request even though it was repeated time after time. That is not sustaining the President of the Church.

Brethren, we have read enough about war and heard enough about it to know that an army to be successful must carry out the commands of the one who directs. We know enough and have read enough to know that when that is not done, disaster comes. As with an army, so with the Church, at least in the main. If we are to succeed, if we are to go forward in the way in which the Lord has directed, if we are to guide and direct those over whom we preside, then inevitably we must work according to one plan. Inevitably we must follow the lead of our commander-in-chief, him whom we have sustained as Prophet, Seer, Revelator, and President of the Church. There is no other way.

May God give us the power and the will and the humility to see where our duty lies, and the strength to go forward when we so see, I humbly pray in the name of Jesus. Amen.

PRESIDENT GEORGE ALBERT SMITH

My brethren, you have been very patient for the last two days; you have been in meeting very much of the time. Ordinarily, one would become exceedingly weary, but if we enjoy the spirit of the Lord, it relieves us of that weariness and we are happy.

INCIDENTS FROM MISSIONARY LIFE

I remember as a young man and missionary in the Southern States, the first conference I attended. It was out in the woods on a farm in Mississippi. We didn't have comfortable seats to sit on. The brethren had been permitted to cut down a few trees and lay the trunks of those trees across the stumps which were left. We balanced ourselves on those or else sat on the ground.

Our meeting started right after breakfast time, and we didn't even think it was necessary to have anything more to eat until evening. We stayed and enjoyed the inspiration of the Almighty, and we certainly were blessed, notwithstanding the inconveniences and discomforts which surrounded us. At that time there was considerable hostility manifested in Mississippi and other states in the South, but we just felt as if we had walked into the presence of our Heavenly Father, and all fear and anxiety left. That was my first experience in the mission field attending a conference, and from that time until now I have appreciated the fact that the companionship of the spirit of the Lord is an antidote for weariness, for hunger, for fear, and all those things that sometimes overtake us in life.

I have enjoyed the addresses of my brethren. There were several others that we had hoped to reach today, men who have filled missions in foreign lands and who never have had an opportunity to report. I think that on the morrow we will try to give them time enough to say at least that they are glad they were permitted to come home.

We sang, "Do What Is Right." When I was in the mission field first, I went into a section of country where that hymn was known to the community, apparently. Two humble missionaries after walking until late in the afternoon in the sun, in the heat of summer, came to a small house that was at the bottom of a hill. When the missionaries arrived, they found friends who invited them in to partake of their meager refreshment. And then they were asked to go outside in the cool of the afternoon shade, on one of those comfortable, open southern porches between two rooms and sing some hymns. The people were not members of the Church, but they enjoyed Latter-day Saint hymns.

The missionaries had been threatened in that section. One of the men who had threatened them had kept watch of the road and in that way learned when they arrived. He sent word to his associates, who saddled their horses and took their guns, and rode to the top of the hill overlooking the little house. The missionaries knew nothing about it; they did not know that right over their heads, not very far away, were a considerable number of armed horsemen. But they had the spirit of the Lord, and as they sat there in the cool of the afternoon and sang hymns, the one hymn that seemed to have been prepared for the occasion was, "Do What Is Right." They happened to be good singers, and their voices went out into the quiet air. They had only sung one verse when the leader of the mob took off his hat. They sang another verse, and he got off his horse, and the others got off their horses, and by the time the last verse had been sung, those men were repentant. Upon the advice of their leader, they rode away without making their presence known. The leader was so impressed with what he heard the missionaries sing that he said to his associates: "We made a mistake. These are not the kind of men we thought they were. Wicked men can't sing like angels, and these men sing like angels. They must be servants of the Lord."

The result was that this man became converted to the Church and later was baptized. And I never hear that hymn sung but I think of that very unusual experience when two missionaries, under the influence of the spirit of God, turned the arms of the adversary away from them and brought repentance into the minds of those who had come to destroy them.

EVENTS OF LAST DAYS PROPHESED

While the brethren were speaking today, I was reminded of a scripture, and I would like to read a portion of it because it seems to me that we are living in the particular time referred to. I have in mind the third chapter of Second Timothy as follows:

This know also, that in the last days perilous times shall come. For men shall be lovers of their own selves, covetous, boasters, proud, . . . unthankful, unholy, without natural affection, trucebreakers, false accusers, incontinent, fierce, despisers of those that are good, . . . having a form of godliness, but denying the power thereof: from such turn away. For of this sort are they which creep into houses, and lead captive silly women laden with sins, led away with divers lusts. . . .

But evil men and seducers shall wax worse and worse, deceiving, and being deceived. But continue thou in the things which thou hast learned and hast been assured of, knowing of whom thou hast learned them; And that from a child thou hast known the holy scriptures, which are able to make thee wise unto salvation through faith which is in Christ Jesus. All scripture is given by inspiration of God, and is profitable for doctrine, for reproof, for correction, for instruction in righteousness: That the man of God may be perfect, thoroughly furnished unto all good works. (II Tim. 3.)

And so, my brethren, we are living in the latter days; we are approaching a time, if we are not already in that time, when ". . . peace shall be taken from the earth, and the devil shall have power over his own dominion." (D. & C. 1:35.) Fortunate are we who have been gathered from the nations of the earth into the Church. Fortunate is this great body of men tonight, perhaps the largest group of priesthood that has ever assembled in this house at one time, each one a representative of the Lord.

EXHORTATION TO FAITHFULNESS

I am grateful to see so many of you here tonight, leaving aside other things that might have been done. You have been busy in many cases all day, and yet when the priesthood is called together you come as if to say, "Here Lord, am I." If we in our homes shall so live that the spirit of the Lord abides with us, we will always be prepared to say when the call comes, "Here, Lord, am I."

Tonight, I congratulate myself with you, that in the peaceful quiet of these everlasting hills, in the comfort of this great house of God, we are permitted to assemble ourselves together, not to plan our financial uplift, our social uplift, but to plan how we may find our place in the kingdom of heaven, to dwell there eternally with Jesus Christ, our Lord. We will all be tempted; no man is free from temptation. The adversary will use every means possible to deceive us; he tried to do that with the Savior of the world without success. He has tried it on many other men who have possessed divine authority, and sometimes he finds a weak spot and the individual loses what might have been a great blessing if he had been faithful. So I want to plead with you, my brethren, be as anchors in the community in which you live that others may be drawn to you and feel secure. Let your light so shine that others seeing your good works will have a desire in their hearts to be like you. Wherever you go, keep in mind the fact that you represent him who is the author of our being. The priesthood that you hold is not the priesthood of Joseph Smith, or Brigham Young, or any other men who have been called to leadership of the Church at home or abroad. The priesthood that you hold is the power of God, conferred upon you from on high. Holy beings had to be sent to earth a little over a hundred years ago in order to restore that glorious blessing that had been lost to the earth for hundreds of years. Surely we ought to be grateful for our blessings.

Remember that as long as we seek the Lord, and keep his commandments as best we know, the adversary will have no power over us to lead us into transgression that may forfeit for us our place in the celestial kingdom.

THE LINE OF DEMARCATION BETWEEN GOOD AND EVIL

I think I would like to repeat something I have told many times as a guide to some of these younger men. It was an expression of advice of my grandfather for whom I was named. He said: "There is a line of demarcation well defined between the Lord's territory and the devil's territory. If you will remain on the Lord's side of the line, the adversary cannot come there to tempt you. You are perfectly safe as long as you stay on the Lord's side of the line. But," he said, "if you cross onto the devil's side of the line, you are in his territory, and you are in his power, and he will work on you to get you just as far from that line as he possibly can, knowing that he can only succeed in destroying you by keeping you away from the place where there is safety."

All safety, all righteousness, all happiness are on the Lord's side of the line. If you are keeping the commandments of God by observing the Sabbath day, you are on the Lord's side of the line. If you attend to your secret prayers and your family prayers, you are on the Lord's side of the line. If you are grateful for food and express that gratitude to God, you are on the Lord's side of the line. If you love your neighbor as yourself, you are on the Lord's side of the line. If you are honest in your dealing with your fellow men, you are on the Lord's side of the line. If you observe the Word of Wisdom, you are on the Lord's side of the line. And so I might go on through the Ten Commandments and the other commandments that God has given for our guidance and say again, all that enriches our lives and makes us happy and prepares us for eternal joy is on the Lord's side of the line. Finding fault with the things that God has given to us for our guidance is not on the Lord's side of the line. Setting one's self up as a receiver of dreams and visions to guide the human family is not on the Lord's side of the line; and when men, as they have sometimes done in order to win their success along some line or another, have come to an individual or individuals and said, "I have had this dream and this is what the Lord wants us to do," you may know that they are not on the Lord's side of the line. The dreams and visions and revelations of God to the children of men have always come through his regularly appointed servant. You may have dreams and manifestations for your own comfort and for your own satisfaction, but you will not have them for the Church unless God appoints you to take the place that he gave to his prophets of old and in our day, and unless you have been divinely commissioned to do the thing he wants you to do.

So, brethren, we need not be deceived—it will be easy to be deceived—but we need not be deceived if we will honor God by honoring ourselves and our families and loved ones and our associates in the places which they occupy in righteousness.

THE GOSPEL TO BE PREACHED

It is a wonderful day and age in which we live. It will not be long until the servants of the Lord will go again to the nations of the earth in great numbers. I have been asked within the last few hours, "Are we going to open the European Mission?" I may say to you the European Mission has never been closed. We had to call home many of those who were there, but we left men holding divine authority. By appointment they have been ministering to the faithful, and the work of the Lord is still anchored in those lands. It will not be long before there will go forth from the headquarters of the Church, leadership to set in order everything that needs to be set in order, in power and might and faith, giving to those people over there another opportunity, in many cases opportunities they had neglected in the past, and in some cases opportunities they have never yet enjoyed.

We must preach the gospel to the South American countries which we have scarcely touched. We must preach the gospel to every African section that we haven't been in yet. We must preach the gospel to Asia. And I might go on and say in all parts of the world where we have not yet been permitted to go. I look upon Russia as one of the most fruitful fields for the teaching of the gospel of Jesus Christ. And if I am not mistaken, it will not be long before the people who are there will desire to know something about this work which has reformed the lives of so many people. We have some few from that land, who belong to the Church, fine, capable individuals who may be called to go, when the time comes, back to the homeland of their parents, and deliver the message that is so necessary to all mankind. Our most important obligation, my brethren, is to divide with our Father's children all those fundamental truths, all his rules and regulations which prepare us for eternal life, known as the gospel of Jesus Christ. Until we have done that to the full limit of our power, we will not receive all the blessings which we might otherwise have. So let us set our own homes in order, prepare our boys and our girls, and ourselves, so that if we are called to go to the various parts of the earth, we will be prepared to go. This will be our great mission.

JOY IN WORK IN THE CHURCH

I want to thank you again for the joy I have had in your companionship during my long ministry. I have been laboring many years. My first ordination to an office in the Aaronic Priesthood was to that of a deacon, within two blocks of where I now stand. I was baptized in City Creek within one block from here. I was confirmed a member of the Church within two blocks from here. But since that time and since I received that gift from my Heavenly Father, for which I have no words to express my gratitude, he has called me to go to many parts of the earth, and more than a million miles have been traversed since I was called into the ministry. I have traveled in many lands and climes, and wherever I have gone I have found good people, sons and daughters of the living God who are waiting for the gospel of Jesus Christ, and there are thousands, hundreds of thousands, millions of them, who would be accepting the truth if they only knew what we know.

Brethren, let us be humble, let us be prayerful, let us be generous with our means, let us be unselfish in our attitude towards our fellows. Let our lives be such that our homes will always be the abiding place of prayer and thanksgiving, and the spirit of the Lord will always be there.

PROMISES MADE TO THE FAITHFUL

In conclusion, let me say, wherever we are, let us remember that there has been conferred upon us a portion of divine authority, and therefore we represent the Master of heaven and earth. And so far as we honor that fine and wonderful blessing we will continue to grow in grace before the Lord; our lives will continue to be enriched; and in the end, eternal happiness in the celestial kingdom will be our reward. That's what the gospel is for. Let us live to be worthy of it every day of our lives, and I pray that when the time comes for us to go, we will not feel as though we have neglected any of our own dear ones, any of our neighbors and friends, by failing to divide with them that which is more precious than anything that the world can give, because it is the gift of God himself.

I pray that peace and love and happiness may abide in your hearts and in your homes, and that we may go forward with renewed determination to be worthy of peace because it can only dwell with us when we ourselves are living the commandments of our Heavenly Father and honoring him.

May peace abide with you and with your loved ones, and brethren, surround your families by the arms of your love and unite them together in that bond of affection which will insure eternal happiness.

I invoke upon you the favor of our Heavenly Father in the name of Jesus Christ. Amen.

President George Albert Smith:

The Tabernacle Choir Men's Chorus will now sing "Discovery," by Grieg.

I would like to announce, however, that we will meet in the Tabernacle tomorrow morning. Everyone should be in his seat fifteen minutes before 10 o'clock, and if you want a seat, you had better be here before that time.

Again God bless you and peace be with you, in the name of Jesus Christ, Amen.

There have been 8,639 souls counted here in this meeting tonight, every one of them precious, and on your way from here we hope you will be more careful than you have ever been before, because of the traffic and perhaps the darkness in some places. It is your privilege and your duty to be careful of one of those 8,639 souls.

The Tabernacle Choir Men's Chorus sang "Discovery," by Grieg.

President Archie Johnson of the Uintah Stake offered the closing prayer.

Conference adjourned until Sunday, October 7, 10:00 a.m.

THIRD DAY

CHURCH OF THE AIR

The Church of the Air program was presented Sunday morning, October 7, at 8:00 a.m., over Radio Station KSL and the Columbia Broadcasting System. Elder Spencer W. Kimball delivered the address, which address appears below:

ELDER SPENCER W. KIMBALL

Of the Council of the Twelve Apostles

The storm has passed, the clouds are lifting, the sun will shine again. Hope is reborn and a vision of a new world is in the making. For the most destructive war of history is ended. Countless millions dream and hope again.

THE PRICE OF PEACE

What is this for which they pray? The hope of humanity, peace. Peace is obtainable, but what is the price of peace? Let the Lord himself answer:

If ye walk in my statutes, and keep my commandments, and do them; . . . I will give peace in the land, and ye shall lie down, and none shall make you afraid. . . . And I will walk among you, and will be your God, and ye shall be my people. (Lev. 26:3-12.)

In a word, then, the foundation for peace is righteousness.

The efforts of peace conferences, and the prayers of suffering humanity, may bring an armistice of uncertain length, but peace with totality and permanence can come only when men repent and turn to the Lord.

What have we learned by this war? We have learned nothing if hatred, bigotry, and intolerance have not diminished; if covetousness, selfishness, and adultery are unabated; if parents are less dear and the Sabbath of the Lord less holy. In short, if righteousness has not increased, then is our fighting vain, the sacrifices of our sons to no avail, and our tears wasted.

THE HISTORY OF THE RISE AND FALL OF NATIONS

We have come far in material progress in these centuries. But the sins of the ancients still afflict the hearts of men.

Can we not learn by the experiences of others? Must we also defile our bodies, corrupt our souls, and reap destruction as have peoples and nations before us?

Both sacred scripture and profane history give us the tragic stories of young nations rising in power, then in the luxurious and degenerate years of their glory being replaced by vigorous peoples yet unspoiled by the decay of self-indulgence, political intrigue, and immoral shamelessness.

Long centuries ago the Lord commanded the Prophet Jonah:

Arise, go to Nineveh, that great city, and cry against it; for their wickedness is come up before me. (Jonah 1:2.)

That "great city" was the envy of the ancient world in its magnificence and power. Historians describe it as surrounded by walls one hundred feet high and broad enough that three chariots could drive abreast. Fifteen hundred towers held watchmen to note the approach of enemies.

Jonah arrived, and so powerfully preached repentance that the people reformed their lives, and the promised destruction was averted. But Nineveh turned again to sin.

Through the Prophet Nahum, the Lord calls them again to repentance. He indicts them for their debauchery and gives them an ultimatum: repentance or destruction, saying:

... while they are drunken as drunkards, they shall be devoured as stubble fully dry. (Nahum 1:10.)

The gates of the rivers shall be opened, and the palace shall be dissolved. (Nahum 2:6.)

In fulfilment, the river overflowed, inundated the walls for miles, the gates were burned, the king and his concubines and his wealth were consumed with the palaces, and the unconquerable city, now made vulnerable by flood and fire, was taken by the invaders while its boasted defenders lay in drunken stupor and lolled in licentiousness. Today the canals of Nineveh are gone, leaving the country a desolate waste. Sheep and cattle seek scanty pasture among the mounds of the once greatest city.

God cannot be mocked! His laws are immutable. True repentance is rewarded by forgiveness but sin brings the sting of death.

Nineveh is not the only instance. Historians are still puzzled regarding the annihilation of the infamous cities of Sodom and Gomorrah. Whatever happened to these peoples, this we know, that swift destruction came to them. Perhaps the Japanese of Hiroshima were no more completely nor quickly destroyed. At least students agree that there was a devastating holocaust which enveloped the cities, leaving the monuments and the people in utter desolation, never to be rediscovered nor rebuilt.

Why were these ancient cities destroyed? The scriptures make it clear:

And the Lord said, Because the cry of Sodom and Gomorrah is great, and because their sin is very grievous; I will go down now. . . . And Abraham drew near, and said, Wilt thou also destroy the righteous with the wicked? Peradventure there be fifty righteous within the city. . . . And the Lord said, if I find in Sodom fifty righteous, . . . then I will spare all the place for their sakes. (Gen. 18:20-26.)

And Abraham continued to plead with the Lord for a few faithful whom he hoped to find in the city. He asked if it could be spared for forty, then thirty, and twenty, and finally ten. But when ten righteous were not found, Lot and his daughters alone escaped.

Then the Lord rained upon Sodom and upon Gomorrah brimstone and fire. . . . And he overthrew those cities, and all the plain, and all the inhabitants of the cities, and that which grew upon the ground. . . . And Abraham gat up early in the morning . . . and he looked toward Sodom and Gomorrah, . . . and, beheld, and, lo, the smoke of the country went up as the smoke of a furnace. (Gen. 19:24-28.)

Historians say the area has remained in "deathlike solitude and unmitigated and supreme desolation."

In the famed city of Babylon we find again unrestrained wickedness of a dissolute people. We hear the prophets calling to repentance, and in the end, dire threats. Again we see a people disappear into oblivion as they fail to follow the commands of God.

Babylon the Great is fallen! Its temple of Bel and the royal palace were magnificent structures, sumptuously adorned. Its hanging gardens were regarded anciently as one of the seven wonders of the world. The river Euphrates ran through the center of the city. The defense walls rose to three hundred feet in height. The gates, a hundred in number, were of brass.

But King Nebuchadnezzar forgot the foundations for peace. His people sank in sensuous indulgence.

The prophets pleaded for repentance. But why should Babylon worry? Was not Babylon the ruler of nations? Was not Nebuchadnezzar king of kings?

. . . all people, nations, and languages, trembled and feared before him: whom he would he slew; and whom he would he kept alive; and whom he would he set up; and whom he would he put down. (Dan. 5:19.)

Was not this city impregnable? Who could scale its walls? Who could crash its gates? But the monster of sin came. Though impenetrable the walls, and numerous the armed defenders, yet all must fall and crumble as sin makes impotent, weak, and fat the people who become slaves to it.

Some years ago we visited Rome, the Eternal City, but what we saw was not the Rome which ruled the world, but a nation long since relegated to an inferior place. We found its imposing monuments in ruins, its extravagant arches obelisks, and gateways grim reminders of glorious days. The Colosseum skeleton bore witness of beasts torn, human blood spilt, Christians martyred in the arenas, while lecherous humans betrayed their sadistic depravity. Imperial Rome adorned with masterpieces of art, and priceless treasures stolen from the courts of the conquered was now in ruins. The fountains of Rome, its theaters and sumptuous villas all brought to our minds the magnificence of that Rome of world supremacy.

We saw the picture of Roman profligacy in excavated Pompeii, the Mediterranean resort, where the idle rich of Rome reveled in riotous living. The eruption of Vesuvius buried the city with its vomit of dust and stones and ashes.

We walked the streets of Pompeii where chariots had worn tracks in the stone. We saw the homes of the people, their bakeries, hospitals, and circuses. We saw their laundries, drugstores, and baths; their liquor houses and brothels. The latter were padlocked, too revolting to open to general public gaze, as the walls carried pictures in colors, still preserved, depicting the depth of their degradation.

Will history repeat itself again? What of our world of today? Are we not forgetting in our own great America the high and lofty principles which can preserve the nation? It is refreshing to note that our military men too sense the spiritual needs of the hour. The following are the words of General Douglas MacArthur on the occasion of the Japanese surrender:

Military alliance, balances of power, League of Nations all in turn failed, . . . we have had our last chance. If we do not now devise some greater and more equitable system, Armageddon will be at our door. The problem basically is theological and involves . . . improvement of human character. It must be of the spirit if we are to save the flesh. (Gen. Douglas MacArthur, "Last Chance," under "Religion," Sept 10, 1945, Time.)

CONDITIONS IN OUR OWN NATION

How can we save the flesh when our nation is drinking one hundred sixty-five million gallons of liquor a year; when we spend seven billion dollars in a year for intoxicants, or more than twice our education budget ( World Almanac, New York World Telegram; The Foundation Says, Dec. 1944, Jan. 1945); and when our films present drinking as the smart and proper thing for youth and adults? Are we not aping the fallen empires with the disintegration of homes, desecration of marriage, making divorce too common. The unbelievable increase in divorces of five hundred percent since the Civil War and the prediction that in twenty years, half of all marriages will be legally dissolved, certainly should arrest our attention. (Life Magazine, Sept. 3, 1945.) God will not tolerate an unvirtuous people. A current magazine indicates that ninety percent of all the mounting divorces are caused by the sin of adultery.

Are we not inviting eventual destruction as we desecrate all things holy and sacred, even to the common and irreverent use in our daily talk of the names of Deity and making his holy day, the Sabbath, a day of work and of pleasure?

How then can we hope for peace? The answer came thundering down from Mt. Sinai and remains the answer today:

Thou shalt have no other gods before me.
Thou shalt not take the name of the Lord thy God in vain. . . .
Remember the sabbath day to keep it holy. . . .
Honour thy father and thy mother. . . .
Thou shalt not kill.
Thou shalt not commit adultery.
Thou shalt not steal.
Thou shalt not bear false witness. . . .
Thou shalt not covet. . . . (Ex. 20.)

The impregnable wall of wicked Nineveh was unconquerable till God reached the limit of his endurance and permitted the elements to undermine the wall and fire to consume the gates so that swift destruction followed.

The three-hundred-foot wall of drunken Babylon, impenetrable as it was by ladder or battering ram, was violated when the dissolute inhabitants stupefied in sin, permitted the river to be diverted and the nation perished.

Israel suffered captivity for its adultery, the loss of its treasures for its idolatry, and was scattered to the four winds for its corruption. God's laws cannot be broken with impunity!

Profligate and sensual Rome decayed and died as it ignored the foundations of peace and set at naught the principles of righteousness.

And now in the year of our Lord 1945, there are among us those same vices which we have seen wreck empires, and we see them becoming flagrant in our own beloved nation. Shall we, like Belshazzar, sow the wind and reap the whirlwind? Shall we permit the home to deteriorate, and marriage to become a mockery? Shall we continue to curse God, hate our enemies and defile our bodies in adulterous practices? And when the patience of the Lord with us is exhausted shall we stand trembling while destruction comes upon us? Or shall we wisely see the handwriting on the wall and profit by the sad experience of the past and return unto the Lord and serve him?

THE WORD OF THE LORD

To our own land, the Americas, the land of Zion, the burial ground of decadent empires, there is a divine promise. Would that all Americans knew of it! It was spoken by the Lord to the ancient inhabitants of this country and brought forth by Joseph Smith, the prophet of the latter days. This is the promise:

Behold, this is a choice land, and whatsoever nation shall possess it shall be free from bondage, and from captivity, and from all other nations under heaven, if they will but serve the God of the land, who is Jesus Christ. . . . (Book of Mormon, Ether 2:12.)

I testify that he is the God of this land and I know that we can achieve our destiny and build enduring peace only upon the foundation of his righteousness.

We call upon the nations and our fellow men everywhere to repent, to cleanse their lives, and to place themselves in harmony with the Lord our God.

May our hearts go out in praise and thanksgiving that the earth which did tremble is now still. May the precious blood of our young sons, their agonies and sacrifices and the deep sorrow of all of us commend us to the Father and may he help us as we strive to live his laws and to achieve a permanent peace on earth, I pray in the name of Jesus Christ. Amen.

THIRD DAY
MORNING MEETING

Sunday morning, October 7.

President George Albert Smith called the assembly to order a few minutes before ten o'clock, preparatory to the opening of the sixth session of the Conference.

President George Albert Smith:

The Tabernacle is crowded almost to suffocation, and the Assembly Hall and the grounds outside are still unable to hold the people. Two or three minutes ago many were packed at the gates trying to get in. I do not mean that the block won't hold them, but as Zion continues to grow, I doubt that the grounds will hold them.

We have had a lovely Conference. The people have responded in such a kind, sweet way, and now, on His holy day, as we begin our services, we will commit ourselves into His keeping.

The invocation will be offered by President George F. Christensen of the Nebo Stake. Every sound is carried in this building and causes confusion, so let us feel that during the organ recital during the prayer preceding it, and during the entire morning we are waiting upon the Lord as His guests, and we will observe decorum and quiet such as He would like to have.

The opening prayer was offered by President George F. Christensen of the Emigration Stake.

President Smith: This meeting now will be turned over to the Choir for their Broadcast. Richard L. Evans will be in charge at the radio.

TABERNACLE CHOIR AND ORGAN BROADCAST

During the period from 10:00 to 10:30 a.m., the regular Sunday morning nationwide broadcast of choral and organ music and brief spoken comment was presented as part of the General Conference proceedings. The program was presented by the Tabernacle Choir and Organ, and broadcast through the courtesy and facilities of the Columbia Broadcasting System's coast-to-coast network, throughout the United States. The broadcast, written and announced by Elder Richard L. Evans, originated with radio station KSL, Salt Lake City, and was presented as follows:

(Organ began playing "As the Dew," and then the choir and organ broke into "Gently Raise," singing words to end of second line of that hymn, from which point choir hummed for announcer's background to end of verse.)

Announcer: Again, with music and the spoken word, we welcome you to the valleys of the mountains, at the Crossroads of the West, as another week of life begins for all men.

At this hour the Columbia Broadcasting System and its affiliated stations bring you the 847th presentation of this traditional broadcast from Temple Square in Salt Lake City.

J. Spencer Cornwall conducts the singing of the Tabernacle choir. Alexander Schreiner is at the organ. The spoken word by Richard Evans.

We begin this day with the reassuring message of the 23rd Psalm—but in a setting different in character from the musical mood in which it is usually sung. To the tune known as Brother James Air, the Tabernacle Choir sings: "The Lord is My Shepherd, I Shall Not Want."

(Choir sang—"23rd Psalm")

Announcer: "And Jesus made as though he would have gone . . . but they constrained him, saying, abide with us; for it is toward evening, and the day is far spent." (Luke 24:28-29.) The relentless passing of time and the unknown events toward which it ever moves us has been musically portrayed by Louis Vierne in a sounding symbol of reminder—"For all things must come to pass in their time." (Doctrine and Covenants 64:32.) "The day or the hour no man knoweth—but it shall surely come." (Doctrine and Covenants 39:21.) "Therefore, be ye also ready." (Matthew 24:44.) We are urgently moved along with the drama of the hours—with the breathless sweep of the days and the years—as Alexander Schreiner presents "Westminster Chimes."

(Organ presented "Westminster Chimes"—Vierne)

Announcer: Many composers have turned their hands to the blessed theme of peace; and many have turned their thoughts to the scripture which now follows, in the musical setting given it by F. Flaxington Harker, as sung by the Tabernacle Choir: "How beautiful upon the mountains are the feet of him that bringeth good tidings, that publisheth peace, that sayeth unto Zion, thy God reigneth!"

(Choir sang "How Beautiful Upon the Mountains"—Harker)

Announcer: There is an old Scotch proverb which reads: "If the devil find a man idle, he'll set him to work." It was by no mere whim that the Lord God gave man his work to do and commanded him to do it. Yet men often suppose that they would enjoy themselves everlastingly in idleness. But let them be forced to idleness, and it would quickly become more irksome than work had ever done. In fact, he who supposes a heaven without work supposes no heaven at all, but a place of boredom—a place of restless, discontented souls. Of course there are extremes of work, as there are extremes of idleness. Some work becomes burdensome soon; all work may become burdensome if continued without respite, but so does all leisure. Sometimes we hear of those who suppose that we have a surplus of hands or brains—those who seem to fear that one class of men, or all men, are going to run out of things to do, and who would restrict, therefore, how much a man may do. As to this, we need but ask a few self-answered questions: Was there ever a time when even the meager and modest wants of men were fully satisfied? Was there ever a time when everything was made that should be made—or when everything was built that needed building? Were all things ever beautified that needed beautifying? Were all the children ever taught that needed teaching? Were all the souls ever saved that needed saving? We might even ask if all the worlds were ever made that could be made? Who under heaven is ever going to run out of work! Or in heaven, either—for that matter. To withhold labor contributes but to impoverishment, because the world is enriched only by the total effort of all, and the less there is for all of us, ultimately the less there is for each of us. Progress has been the gift of those who were fearful that they couldn't do enough—and not of those who were afraid they were doing too much. Progress comes by letting good men do their best—and we assume much when we assume the power and privilege of wasting human energies, of making needed things scarce, or of retarding the progress of men. Either men are free to work, or they are not free at all; for work, even for its own sake, is essential to happiness, as well as for what it creates. Of course, free men must also have their freedom not to work—but it is written: "Thou shalt not be idle; for he that is idle shall not eat the bread nor wear the garments of the laborer." (Doc. & Cov. 42:42.) "Blessed is he who has found his work" (Thomas Carlyle)—and who pursues it with all his mind and strength.

(Organ selection: "How Great the Wisdom and the Love.")

Announcer: "And now, after the many testimonies which have been given of him, this is the testimony last of all, which we give of him: That he lives! For we saw him, even on the right hand of God; and we heard the voice bearing record that he is the Only Begotten of the Father." (Doc. & Cov. 76:22.)

In closing now from Temple Square we have time yet to sing the glorious tribute by George Frederic Handel to Jesus the Christ. We hear the "Hallelujah Chorus" from the Messiah.

(Choir sang—"Hallelujah Chorus"—Handel)

Announcer: Until we beckon your thoughts again unto the hills, may peace be with you, this day, and always.

This concludes another presentation in the 17th year of this traditional broadcast from the Mormon Tabernacle on Temple Square, brought to you by the Columbia network and its affiliated stations, originating with Radio Station KSL in Salt Lake City, at the Crossroads of the West.

With the passing of another seven days, those voices which now fade within these echoing walls will return once more, at this same hour, with music and the spoken word, over your Columbia station.

J. Spencer Cornwall conducted the singing of the Tabernacle Choir. Alexander Schreiner was at the organ. The spoken word by Richard Evans.

President George Albert Smith:

As I have listened this morning and yesterday, I have asked myself this question: Were any of the children of our Heavenly Father in any age of the world blessed as we have been blessed?

The national broadcast by the Tabernacle Choir, to which you have just listened, has been the opening devotional music and comment of this, the sixth session of the 116th Semi-Annual Conference of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints. The opening prayer was offered before the beginning of the broadcast by President George F. Christensen of the Nebo Stake.

Elder Spencer W. Kimball of the Council of the Twelve was the speaker on the Church of the Air program which was given at 8 o'clock this morning.

The regular session of this Conference will now continue, and our first speaker will be President David O. McKay, Second Counselor in the First Presidency of the Church.

PRESIDENT DAVID O. MCKAY

Second Counselor in the First Presidency

And they shall beat their swords into plowshares, and their spears into pruninghooks: nation shall not lift up a sword against nation, neither shall they learn war any more.

But they shall sit every man under his vine and under his fig tree; and none shall make them afraid: for the mouth of the Lord of hosts hath spoken it. (Micah 4:3-4.)

THE TRAGEDY OF WAR

So wrote the Prophet Micah, probably quoting Isaiah, seven hundred fifty years before Christ. Nearly twenty-seven hundred years have passed since the eye of prophecy visioned a time when "war shall be no more." During the intervening centuries, many nations have lifted up sword against nations; and war has continued to be one of mankind's greatest evils. Truly it seems that human beings are more prone to war than to peace.

The latest (I wish we could say confidently the last) was one of the most devastating in the history of the world. What destruction, sorrow, and suffering it has caused. According to reliable estimates, its direct cost is over one trillion thirty billion dollars, not counting the destruction and damage of property. There have been over a million casualties in the United States. Another million and a half in Britain, making a combined loss in these two countries alone of killed, wounded, missing, and prisoners, of two and a half million. Flying bombs cost British civilians a hundred and forty-seven thousand seven hundred and sixty casualties. Of these, fifteen thousand three hundred fifty-nine were children under sixteen. (A half thousand bodies never have been identified.) The Russian and Chinese losses exceed those numbers by millions. Add the millions of dead, wounded, and missing by the Germans, the Japanese, and those of the crushed countries of Europe, and the cost in wealth and in human life becomes staggering. We are close enough to the tragedy to realize that war is "the greatest curse that can be entailed upon mankind." "Under its standards gather violence, malignity, rage, fraud, perfidy, rapacity, and lust."

We wonder how many more years will pass before "they shall sit every man under his vine and under his fig tree; and none shall make them afraid," when, in Alfred Lord Tennyson's words:

The war-drums shall throb no longer, and the battle-flags be furled,
In the Parliament of man, the Federation of the world.

FUTURE SAFETY OF THE WORLD DEPENDS UPON CHANGE OF HUMAN HEARTS

Restrictions incident to the great conflict have largely been abrogated, and once again we meet in a general conference of the Church without fear of molestation from a murderous enemy. We join the Allied Nations in giving thanks that gangsters who, through evil manipulations and clever strategies, seized control of nations, have been defeated; that their attempt to set up dictatorial government has been frustrated; that freedom has been preserved, and liberty kept within the grasp of those who cherish the right of self-government.

In the outcome of this great conflict God's overruling power has been manifest. Let the nations not forget him in the hour of victory.

Because of terrible forces, newly discovered, scientists and military experts are now saying that all present means of defense are inadequate, are in fact already antiquated, and must be changed if the world is to be protected from future devastation.

I would that these men of reputed wisdom and foresight would lay equal emphasis on the fact that the future safety of the world depends not so much upon the changing of defenses as upon the changing of men's way of thinking, and acting. Men and nations must have a change of heart. Hate and envy, suspicion and greed must be supplanted by sympathy, forbearance, tolerance, and justice before the hoped-for time comes that "nation shall not lift up sword against nation, neither shall they learn war any more."

Now that another terrible war is over, the paramount question is—are human minds equal to the problems they must face; are hearts sufficiently filled with virtues needed in the present crisis? I echo the cry of one who pleads—

O human hearts, beating through fear, through jealousy, through pride, through avarice, through bitterness, through agony, through death; beating shame and forgiveness, bewilderment and love.

O my own country, my new world, prepare, prepare—not to avenge wrong, but to exalt right. Not to display honor, but to prove humility. Not to bring wrath, but vision; not to win war, but a people. And not people only, but all peoples. Not to exact justice from your enemies only, and not from your friends only, but from yourselves!

Truly,

The world is in the Valley of Decision.

And out of it there is but one sure road;

Eyes unsealed can still foresee the mighty vision

Of a world in travail turning unto God.

Yes, World War II is ended, but old battles are yet to be fought; new victories yet to be won before the peace for which we pray can be realized.

One is man's suspicion and lack of trust in his fellow man.

Man's suspicion and lack of trust is one of the greatest enemies of peace. Nations are distrustful of one another. Russia is afraid that Britain will scheme to win Germany as an ally. Great Britain and the United States look with suspicion upon Russia and fear her possible alliance with China or Japan. Argentina impugns the motives of the United States, and the United States is suspicious of Argentina. Thus the seeds of envy and enmity are sown.

This lack of confidence in one's fellow man is even more of an individual than a national vice. We are prone to magnify weaknesses and to imagine vices in others that do not exist. We chew the cud of slander with satisfaction—slander, "whose whisper over the world's diameter, as level as the cannon to its blank, transports his poisoned shot." Talk about battles yet to be fought! Backbiting and evil speaking head the list!

If any man among you seem to be religious, and bridleth not his tongue. . . . this man's religion is vain. (James 1:26.)

THE GOSPEL TAUGHT BY THE SAVIOR A SURE GUIDE

The battle against godlessness must still be fought. Nietzsche even before the first World War denounced Christianity as a cunningly devised system that has "debauched and undermined and sapped the vigor of the modern European world, and is the most powerful instrument of racial degeneration ever devised by common herd."

Nietzsche is dead, but the poisonous seeds that he and others like him have sown in blindness and bitterness still produce fruit of skepticism and unbelief. In charity we can say that the Christianity Nietzsche condemns is not the gospel of Jesus Christ as taught by the Redeemer of man. But egotists and misled people who cannot discriminate between truth and error still find themselves wavering with respect to the divine mission of Jesus Christ. Every true Christian, and especially every faithful member of the Church of Christ should be militant in defending the principles of the gospel as given by our Lord and Savior, for, in the words of Mark Hopkins, true Christianity "promotes industry, honesty, truth, purity, kindness. It humbles the proud, exalts the lowly, upholds law, favors liberty, is essential to it, and would unite men in one great brotherhood. It is the breath of life to social and civil well-being here, and spreads the azure of that heaven into whose unfathomed depth the eye of faith loves to look."

There has been but one perfect character in this world—the peerless personality of Jesus of Nazareth, the Son of God, the Redeemer of the world. No man can do better than to accept Christ as the great Exemplar and the safest Guide.

It is not an easy thing in this old world to make God the center of our being. To do so we must determine to keep his commandments. Spiritual attainment, not physical possessions, not the indulgence and the gratification of the body, must become the chief goal.

Only in the complete surrender of our inner life may we rise above the selfish, sordid pull of nature. We should seek first the kingdom of God and his righteousness. What the spirit is to the body, God is to the spirit. As the body dies when the spirit leaves it, so the spirit dies when we exclude God from it. I cannot imagine peace in a world from which God and religion are banished.

SELFISHNESS THE CAUSE OF THE WORLD'S ILLS

Another old battle still raging, and one we must win before permanent peace is established on earth is the battle against selfishness.

Selfishness is the root from which spring most human ills and suffering. Selfishness promises satisfaction, but its fruit is disappointing, and produces only ill will and unhappiness. Selfishness and enmity caused the first recorded murder and the first implied rejection of the great truth that man is his brother's keeper.

It was selfishness that caused the violation of the Munich Pact, which led, in September, 1939, to the murderous invasion of Poland, and the subsequent destruction of European nations with all its attendant horrors and human suffering. It was selfishness and inordinate ambition that caused the Pearl Harbor tragedy.

Unless the battle against selfishness is won at the peace table, our hopes for a permanent peace may be shattered, and the world again stricken in warfare.

Nature's law demands us to do everything with self in view. Self-preservation is the first law of mortal life. But Jesus says:

He that findeth his life shall lose it: and he that loseth his life for my sake shall find it. (Matt. 10:39.)

Jesus on the Mount of Temptation triumphed over all appeals to selfishness, and thereby set an example to all men who would strive for spiritual attainment. As Jesus resisted the tempter, so selfishness must be overcome by subjugation and resistance. There is no development of character without resistance; there is no growth of spirituality without overcoming.

And he that overcometh, and keepeth my works unto the end, to him will I give power over the nations. (Rev. 2:26.)

INTEMPERANCE AN ENEMY TO PEACE

A fourth battle still raging, and in which the opposition seems to be gaining ground, is the battle against intemperance. The attitude of the Church of Jesus Christ towards temperance is unmistakable. February 27, 1833, the Prophet Joseph Smith received what is known as the Word of Wisdom for the benefit of the council of the high priests assembled in Kirtland, and the Church, and also the Saints in Zion, given by revelation which sets forth the order and will of God in the temporal salvation of all Saints in the last days. Wine and "strong drinks" are condemned as beverages, and the use of them discountenanced in all cases except in the use of wine for sacramental purposes, and even this should be "pure wine of the grape of the vine, of your own make."

Tobacco is condemned also as being "not good for man."

At the time the Church took this decided stand against whisky and tobacco, no state in the Union had passed any law against the liquor traffic. It is true that temperance societies had been organized, and the cause of temperance was gaining impetus, but it was not until 1851—eighteen years after the revelation on the Word of Wisdom—that the first permanent prohibition law was passed in Maine. Later religious denominations began to organize temperance societies. It appears, therefore, that the Mormon Church was among the very first organizations, if not the first organization or church in the United States to legislate as an organized body against the use of alcoholic drinks and tobacco.

In 1908, President Joseph F. Smith in his opening address at the seventy-eighth annual conference said:

There is a general movement throughout the land looking toward local option of temperance among the people of our state and adjoining states. I sincerely hope that every Latter-day Saint will cooperate with this movement in order that we may curtail the monstrous evils that exist especially in our cities. I wish to say that I am in sympathy with this movement, and I know my brethren are united with me, and in harmony with the efforts that are being made to establish temperance throughout the land.

Many of you will remember how President Grant pleaded with the people of Utah to retain the Eighteenth Amendment. To the day of his death he regretted that Utah was in the column of states that repealed the prohibition law.

Statistics today seem to indicate that our fight for temperance is making little progress. For example, there was spent in Utah during the fiscal year ending June 30, 1945, for

Cigarets .....	$ 4,978,196
Beer .....	11,197,806
Liquor .....	10,862,677
Total .....	$27,038,679

Intemperance goes hand in hand with lawlessness, and lawlessness is an enemy of peace.

TRUE RELIGION ALONE BRINGS PEACE

I know of no force so potent in eradicating these and all other enemies of peace from the human heart as the gospel of Jesus Christ. True religion is today the world's greatest need—in a sense by the individual of a relationship with God—that indefinable something which enters into the soul of man and which unites him with his Creator.

The wind bloweth where it listeth, and thou hearest the sound thereof, but canst not tell whence it cometh, and whither it goeth: so is every one that is born of the Spirit. (John 3:8.)

A celebrated British statesman, Edmund Burke, in the latter half of the eighteenth century wrote: "True religion is the foundation of society. When that is once shaken by contempt the whole fabric cannot be stable nor lasting."

"I have now disposed of all property to my children," said Patrick Henry; "there is one thing more I wish I could give them, and that is the Christian religion. If they had that, and I had not given them one cent, they would be rich. If they have not that, and I had given them all the world, they would be poor."

Only through the application of righteous principles by individuals and by governments, can nations learn war no more, and establish a permanent peace.

O Brother Man! fold to thy heart thy brother;
Where pity dwells, the peace of God is there;
To worship rightly is to love each other,
Each smile a hymn, each kindly deed a prayer.

Follow with reverent steps the great example
Of him whose holy work was "doing good";
So shall the wide earth seem our Father's temple,
Each loving life a psalm of gratitude.

Then shall all shackles fall; the stormy clangor
Of wild war music o'er the earth shall cease;
Love shall tread out the baleful fire of anger,
And in its ashes plant the tree of peace.

After the passing of centuries God has given mankind another opportunity to end war. The most momentous decision of all time must now be made by the peoples of the world.

God grant that they will never again revert to the law of the jungle but will "beat their swords into plowshares, and their spears into pruninghooks, neither shall they learn war any more," I earnestly pray with you in the name of the Prince of Peace, our Lord and Savior, Jesus Christ.

ELDER JOSEPH F. MERRILL

Of the Council of the Twelve Apostles

Brethren and Sisters:

Conferences of this kind are primarily for members of the Church, but nonmembers are welcome to attend the public sessions and of course to listen to the broadcast proceedings. However, it is to members that most of us who speak direct our remarks. This I shall do during the few minutes I occupy.

A PRACTICAL RELIGION

We teach that our religion is a very practical one and, being a way of life, touches every phase of our daily living. We believe with the Apostle James that faith without works is dead. We also believe with the Apostle Paul that "... by grace are ye saved through faith; and that not of yourselves: it is the gift of God: Not of works, lest any man should boast." Some readers seem to stop here, but let us read the next verse which says:

For we are his workmanship, created in Christ Jesus unto good works, which God hath before ordained that we should walk in them. (Eph. 2:8-10.)

This statement of Paul's is in harmony with that made by Jesus in his great Sermon on the Mount, when he said:

Wherefore by their fruits ye shall know them. Not every one that saith unto me, Lord, Lord, shall enter into the kingdom of heaven; but he that doeth the will of my Father, which is in heaven. (Matt. 7:20-21.)

The Apostle Paul also wrote, as you also know, these words:

Know ye not that ye are the temple of God, and that the spirit of God dwelleth in you? If any man defile the temple of God, him shall God destroy: for the temple of God is holy, which temple ye are. (1 Cor. 3:16-17.)

A LAW OF HEALTH

As a means of preserving our bodies from certain types of defilement (destruction) the Lord gave to the Church in its very beginning, and to the human family generally, what has been properly called a law of health, better known among us as the Word of Wisdom. Qualified specialists in the field of science and medicine have said that food and drinks are the things that have more to do with bodily health than any other ordinary factor. So in recent years the science of dietetics—the science and art of feeding—has come into prominence and is based upon an immense amount of experimentation and research. The health of the individual and the health of the people in mass are extremely important, not only to the individuals themselves but also to the public. Hence civil governments, private humanitarian organizations, the Church, etc., are vitally concerned with problems of health.

It is my purpose now, however, to make some remarks relative to only one of the many problems in the big field of things that affect human health. In section eighty-nine of the Doctrine and Covenants we find a revelation given to the Prophet Joseph Smith in February 1833, less than three years after the organization of the Church, in which abstinence from wine, strong drinks, tobacco, and hot drinks is enjoined, because they are not good for man. By hot drinks was meant primarily tea and coffee, though subsequent researches found that any drinks at high temperatures, such as hot water and soups, are harmful. The ideas voiced in the Word of Wisdom were expressed in words having the meaning current at the time. In those days hot drinks were commonly understood to be tea and coffee. The Church now interprets the words, wine and strong drinks, as meaning all alcoholic beverages, of which there are many varieties.

In passing, it may be well to remark that the revelation on the Word of Wisdom was given at a time when scientific men knew but little, if anything, about basic facts of the science of dietetics. Since those days, and within the last fifty years, a vast amount of research has been done, and that pertinent to matters spoken of in the Word of Wisdom is confirmatory of the truths therein revealed. This fact should give joy and satisfaction to all Saints, for it is irrefutable testimony of the divinity of that great document. Time will not permit me now to go into detail concerning this testimony. I repeat, however, that a multitude of scientifically discovered facts support the Word of Wisdom, and, so far as I know, none refute it.

MISLEADING ADVERTISEMENTS

Among these is the irrefutable fact that liquor and tobacco are not good for man. Science, experience, and revelation are in agreement on this statement. Then, why do people continue to use liquor and tobacco? Ask Satan, he knows. Satan is a deceiver, the father of lies, the inspiration of avaricious men engaged in promoting evils and cunning designs calculated to mislead the people, particularly the youth, into habits of drinking and smoking. To this end huge sums of money are continually spent in advertising propaganda material, much of it honeycombed with misleading and partially or wholly falsifying statements. A few years before the great global war began, an able investigator found that more than sixty million dollars was spent annually in the United States for advertising cigarets and alcoholic beverages. Since all of us have some idea of the power of money, is it any wonder that publicity agencies that accept liquor and tobacco advertisements, such as newspapers, magazines, and radios, are opposed to prohibition?

Let me say here that smoking and drinking in this country have become so general that the enormous sum of ten and one-half billion dollars was spent during 1944 for liquor and tobacco, so it was authoritatively reported.

I have just said that science, experience, and revelation agree that liquor and tobacco are not good for man. Let me specify a little.

INJURIOUS EFFECTS OF TOBACCO

Concerning the use of tobacco, it affects injuriously the heart and circulatory system, the lungs and respiratory system, the brain and mental powers, the nervous system, the kidneys and elimination organs, the muscular system, etc., thus weakening the body with the result that it is less resistant to diseases of various kinds. Recently there came from the press a new book relative to tobacco and its effects written by Dr. Frank Leighton Wood, entitled What You Should Know About Tobacco. Dr. Irving Fisher of Yale University wrote a foreword for the book in which he said:

The tobacco problem has for years engaged my attention, both as to its economic and hygienic aspects. As treasurer of the Committee for the Scientific Study of the Tobacco Problem and as chairman of the Hygienic Reference Board of the Life Extension Institute, which has contributed more perhaps than any other agency toward solving the basic problem of tobacco, I have had unusual opportunities to become familiar with this many-sided problem. . . . The evidence now exists sufficient to show that no one who smokes can achieve the best of which he or she is capable, whether this be a foot race, a prize fight, a golf game, tight-rope walking, a rifle score, bombing the Reich, writing, speaking, singing, acting, performing on a violin, piano, or typewriter, attainment of health, strength, endurance, working power, beauty, glamor, or any other excellence on which men and women set their hearts. Prize fighters and acrobats know this. It is time that those ambitious in all other lines of work should learn it.

Relative to the effect on the muscular system I give this illustration found in the 1938 edition of the standard book How to Live by Fisher and Emerson:

Some years ago Dr. W. P. Lombard, professor of physiology in the University of Michigan, conducted a series of observations for the purpose of determining the influence of smoking upon muscular work. He reported: "The record of these successive observations shows that the effects of one cigar of moderate strength was to lessen the work of which the subject was capable from seventy-five foot-pounds to fifteen foot-pounds, the number of times that the weight could be lifted being reduced from eighty-six to twelve—over eighty percent. These figures indicate how seriously tobacco cuts down one's strength and endurance!"

In his book, after pointing out many deleterious effects of the use of tobacco, Dr. Wood says:

There is an aspect of the tobacco habit which, to some, is more important than its effect on life itself. A large number of people, including many doctors, are quite indifferent concerning their health or the possibility of dying prematurely. When confronted with facts concerning the life-shortening effects of tobacco or other habit-forming drugs, they may accept them but, in a spirit of bravado, may add that they would rather live their fifty years than exist for one hundred. In saying this they assume that the smoker lives a more happy, contented, and useful life than the nonsmoker. But does he? In the following chapters we shall show that, on the average, not only does the smoker die at a much earlier age than the nonsmoker but that he is more often afflicted with painful and disabling diseases of long duration and that in addition to this, he experiences various minor ills, such as annoying coughs, hoarseness, rawness of the throat, heartburn, shortness of breath, and many other disagreeable symptoms or diseases which are peculiar to those who use tobacco in any form. We shall show that he cannot excel in sports, as most people already know; that he will be handicapped in acquiring an education and for this reason may be likewise handicapped in satisfying his other aspirations in life. We shall show that even his character may be unfavorably affected. . . . We shall show that girls and boys and men and women who begin to smoke with the avowed intention of smoking in moderation and quitting the habit when they find that it is becoming harmful to them, nearly always smoke to a great excess and seldom quit the habit. No one can be at his best if he uses tobacco any more than the boxer, the runner, or the ball player can, for the use of this drug interferes with the blood supply, not only of the heart muscles but of every organ and part of the body, including the brain, the liver, the stomach, and the reproductive organs, as we shall show.

The use of tobacco shortens life. This fact was demonstrated satisfactorily to the whole scientific world on the appearance of a report by Dr. Raymond Pearl of Johns Hopkins University, published in the journal Science, March 4, 1938. Dr. Pearl and his associates made complete life tables on 6,813 white men between the ages of thirty to seventy. He divided this group into three—2,095 nonusers of tobacco; 2,814 moderate smokers; 1,905 heavy smokers. He found that between the ages of thirty and seventy the heavy smoker died, on an average, ten years younger than nonsmokers; that moderate smokers, on an average, also died from one to five years sooner. And as I have already quoted, smokers are less free from bodily ailments than are nonsmokers. So I repeat, the fact is that smokers die earlier than nonsmokers.

May I quote a few words from the late Dr. A. L. Warner, who devoted a long life to the study of the evil effects upon the mind, body, and character of tobacco and was widely known for his writings on the subject? He wrote:

A large majority of the young men of the United States have used tobacco. We are breeding a race of tobacco degenerates. The children inherit the narcotic craving from tobacco-using ancestors, making them as they grow older, easy addicts to tobacco, liquor, and other dope. Juvenile crime, vice, and degeneracy, steadily increase with the increased use of tobacco. The average age of crime in the United States has come down in sixteen years from age twenty-eight to nineteen.

Extremely regrettable as it is, young women in the last few years have taken up smoking and the habit is rapidly growing among them. From an article written by Alonzo L. Baker, associate editor of the magazine Good Health, and entitled "Should Women Smoke?" I make a few quotations as follows:

Here are two facts that should be borne in mind by every girl and woman in America:

1. Tobacco harms women more physically than it does men.
2. Tobacco does more damage to the race through mothers than through fathers.

Naming some bad effects, he continues:

A vital question is the effect of tobacco in pregnancy. These two facts are indisputable: (1) Nicotine is one of the few substances that passes through the placenta to the fetus; (2) Nicotine passes to the infant in its mother's milk. In view of the virulence of the poison that nicotine is, damage both to the unborn child and to the nursing child is inevitable when he is nicotineized before and after birth. . . . The smoking habit has become widespread among women of recent years only in America. Preliminary reports . . . thus far made indicate that the number of stillbirths and premature children born to habitually smoking mothers is markedly higher than for mothers who are abstainers from tobacco. . . . Just cause for alarm is the rapidly growing number of girls who form the tobacco habit before they have come to physical maturity. Smoking on the part of girls during their teen years is nothing less than a tragedy, for those are the years when nicotine does its greatest damage to the growing nerve and glandular systems of the female body.

Dr. D. H. Kress, another well-known objector to smoking, wrote on this particular point saying:

For both man and wife to be addicted to smoke inhalation is destructive of everything that is good. Children born to such a pair had better never been born; . . . anything that is injurious to the child after its birth is equally injurious to it before its birth when indulged in by the pregnant mother.

United States Surgeon General Hugh S. Cummings once wrote:

When women generally contract the smoking habit (as they are now doing) the entire nation will suffer. The physical tone of the whole nation will be lowered. This is one of the most evil influences in American life today. The habit harms a woman more than it does a man.

President Charles W. Eliot of Harvard University once in talking to his freshman class on the subject of tobacco gave the following advice:

My dear freshmen, I want you to remember that tobacco in any form destroys the brain, and you have none to spare.

ALCOHOL A CURSE

Time will not permit my saying much relative to liquor. It is perhaps unnecessary to do so since the effects of drinking are more or less widely known. However, I ask your indulgence while I give two or three quotations from keen observers. The Journal of the American Medical Association said:

Alcohol is a poison inherently, absolutely, essentially; in a drop or in a gallon, in all quantities and in every quantity, it is a poison. Plainly the quantity cannot effect its chemical constitution.

And from the eloquent pen of the late keen-minded Robert G. Ingersoll, who knew how to describe alcohol in all its hellish effects on humanity, I give the following:

Alcohol is the blood of the gambler, the inspiration of the burglar, the stimulus of the highwayman, and the support of the midnight incendiary. It suggests the lie and countenances the liar, condones the thief, and esteems the blasphemer. It violates obligation, reverences fraud, turns love to hate, scorns virtue and innocence. It incites the father to butcher his helpless offspring, and the child to sharpen the patricidal ax.

Alcohol burns up men, consumes women, destroys life, curses God, and despises heaven. It suborns witnesses, nurses perversity, defiles the jury box, and stains the judicial ermine. It bribes voters, disqualifies votes, corrupts elections, pollutes our institutions, endangers the government, degrades the citizen, debases the legislature, dishonors the statesman, and disarms the patriot. It brings shame, not honor; terror, not safety; despair, not hope; misery, not happiness; and, with the malevolence of a fiend, calmly surveys the frightful desolation, and reveling in havoc, poisons felicity, destroys peace and ruins morals, wipes out national honor, curses the world, and laughs at the ruin it has wrought. It does that and more. It murders the soul; it is the sum of all villainy, the father of all crime, the mother of all abominations, the devil's best friend, and God's worst enemy.

And from the inspired voice of the Church—that of the First Presidency—the following was said three years ago in this conference:

Drink brings cruelty into the home; it walks arm in arm with poverty; its companions are disease and plague; it puts chastity to flight; it knows neither honesty nor fair dealing; it is a total stranger to truth; it drowns consciousness, it is the bodyguard of evil; it curses all who touch it.

Drink has brought more woe and misery, broken more hearts, wrecked more homes, committed more crimes, filled more coffins than all the wars the world has suffered.

Yes, in accordance with the divine will, the Church stands absolutely and continuously opposed to smoking and to the consumption of all kinds of alcoholic beverages. It persistently calls to its members and to all others to abstain from the use of these body, mind, and soul destroying poisons. May the Lord give us all the desire and the strength to do so, I pray in the name of Jesus Christ. Amen.

ELDER JOHN A. WIDTSOE

Of the Council of the Twelve Apostles

My dear brethren and sisters, I pray that while I stand before you I may be guided by the Holy Spirit in all that I say.

A SOLEMN ASSEMBLY

Two days ago, at the first session of this conference, the people present were organized into a sacred, solemn assembly. The men holding the priesthood were placed in groups, according to their offices in the priesthood. The women and those not holding the priesthood were placed in another group. Then, before the people assembled, were presented the Authorities of the Church, the General Authorities. The President of the Church, his two Counselors, the president of the Council of the Twelve, and the Patriarch to the Church were voted on successively by these different groups, and the Council of the Twelve as a group was voted on likewise.

It was an impressive hour, such as seldom comes to the Church. It was only the second time that I had been at such a gathering. This method of voting, this procedure, was known by our fathers in this dispensation. It was known by those of other dispensations, and undoubtedly is patterned after the order in the courts of heaven. It has profound meaning, much more than we can begin to discuss this morning when there is much to be done.

Among other things, at that meeting, we sustained George Albert Smith as prophet, seer, and revelator, and President of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints. That word, "revelator," has remained in my mind as I am sure it has in the minds of many who were here on that occasion. It implies many things. It implies, as we know, we Latter-day Saints, that God is still speaking to his children, and that revelation, continuous revelation, is a vitalizing, life-giving element of the gospel of Jesus Christ. It is the principle which distinguishes us from many other groups of believers; it is the principle that gives us the strength and power to accomplish the work which may be placed upon us from time to time. It means that God, our Father in heaven, is still watchful over his children placed here upon earth; that in this changing day, he has not closed the Book of Revelation. His voice is still heard, and as new problems arise, he speaks, as we may need his help.

REVELATION THE FOUNDATION OF THE CHURCH

This Church was founded in revelation. It was born in revelation. Upon his knees, the Prophet Joseph Smith, just a lad, lay in the grove and prayed for light, and light came. In that light stood the Father and the Son who gave him information and commissioned him with respect to the work he was to do. Later on, through the process of revelation, by the operation of that principle, the Book of Mormon came into existence, and revelation followed revelation until we have a sound foundation on which to build throughout the ages to come. We believe in revelation, in continuous revelation. That, as a people, we must never forget.

When the Church was organized, on April 6, 1830, Joseph Smith was chosen President, the first President of this Church. On that day, before the day was over, the Lord gave a revelation that relates to what we did two days ago. I believe the words of God, then spoken, may be applied from generation to generation for our good. If he has given us a man to stand as the mouthpiece of God, a revelator, there must be some obligation resting upon us as members of the Church of Christ. This is in part what the Lord said on that day:

Behold, there shall be a record kept among you; and in it thou shalt be called a seer, a translator, a prophet, an apostle of Jesus Christ, an elder of the church through the will of God the Father, and the grace of your Lord Jesus Christ. (D. & C. 21:1.)

And then comes the admonition to us, our own obligation:

Wherefore, meaning the church, thou shalt give heed unto all his words and commandments which he shall give unto you as he receiveth them, walking in all holiness before me;

For his word, [the word of the president of the Church], ye shall receive, as if from mine own mouth, in all patience and faith. D. & C. 21:4-5.)

Now, we covenanted two days ago to sustain George Albert Smith as President of the Church. Let us not forget the obligation placed upon us by the Lord with respect to him and our own covenant.

Not only did the Lord say this, in this very interesting and important revelation, but he pointed out the common cause for apostasy, the common cause for falling away from the truth. He said:

For by doing these things the gates of hell shall not prevail against you; yea, and the Lord God will disperse the powers of darkness from before you, and cause the heavens to shake for your good, and his name's glory. (D. & C. 21:6.)

In other words, if we violate our covenant and fail to recognize the leadership of him who is called to be the President of the Church and God's prophet, the gates of hell may prevail against us. Too often, I am sorry to say, they have done so.

But he will give us strength, if we seek it, for later on the Lord says:

For, behold, I will bless all those who labor in my vineyard with a mighty blessing, and they shall believe on his words, which are given him through me by the Comforter, which manifesteth that Jesus was crucified by sinful men for the sins of the world, yea, for the remission of sins unto the contrite heart.

This is found in section twenty-one of the Doctrine and Covenants.

Some would say, reading these words, "Why this is just plain autocracy." They would say that it takes away from us our free agency if by sustaining a man we accept his words as if they were from God. That is not quite so, the gift of free agency is never taken from man. Moreover, the doctrine of this Church is that every man and woman, in his or her respective field, may receive revelation from Almighty God. This is a Church of revelation and revelation is not limited to one man alone. One man is called to speak for the Church. I have my problems from day to day, and I have equal right with him to call upon God for help in the problems of my day. By the spirit of revelation we accept the guidance of the revelator. That is always understood. The principle of revelation, that God still speaks, that he has not forgotten us, gives full freedom to act intelligently. If that were understood by the world, the peace spoken of here this morning would soon come. But, men depend upon themselves. They fail to call upon God. They fail to listen to his words, and floods of hate and discontent and evil stalk the world. We have had the experience of war the last few years; we know what it means when men try to depend upon themselves and their own power.

Every person may receive inspiration or revelation. The stake presidents have the right, in their positions, to ask for revelations from God, the bishops, in their positions; the housewives, in their daily tasks can claim real help from God, provided, of course, that they are sensitive to such help, provided that they are able to hear the voice of God.

When God speaks, some of us fail so to live as to understand the message that comes from eternity. I know some people say, "Well, how can I so conduct my life as to be responsive to the messages from the unseen world?"

There is an old illustration, a high school illustration, that bears on this subject. We may take a rod of soft iron, and place it with some iron filings, without apparently causing any change; the rod is not magnetic; but if we wrap that rod of iron with a wire carrying an electric current, it becomes a magnet. Though the rod has not changed, in shape and width and length, it has undergone a deep change. It has become changed so that it attracts iron filings or whatever else is subject to magnetic action. Just so, if we, men and women, could wrap ourselves in obedience to God's law, live as we should live, a wonderful change is effected in us, and we, too, can then hear the messages of the unseen world. The principle of revelation and fitness for revelation, should be remembered by all of our people, by you, by me, and by all of us.

A SURE GUIDE

There is another thing to be remembered. How can I, a poor human being, distinguish between an impression from God and an impression from an evil source. The devil is always ready to deceive us. You heard Brother Petersen's remarks yesterday recounting a dozen or so of the devices the devil uses in this day to mislead humanity. The test of truth, given us is very simple, easily understood. When an impression comes, call it inspiration or revelation, compare it with the words that issue from the mouth of the prophet who stands at the head of the Church. Then, if your impression is in harmony with his expressed words, it is from God. If it runs counter to the prophet's teachings, your impression is from an evil source.

The Lord wants to speak to us; he wants to guide us. He wants us to hear. His Holy Spirit permeates the universe, touches every heart, and if it is permitted, will carry messages to us from the throne of God. The manner of our lives will help us to receive such messages and to distinguish between those that may come from God and those that come from the evil one.

This Church lives and moves and has its being in revelation—continuous revelation. May we remember our relationship to the living prophet, as we recall the great events of two days ago. God bless us and be with us, and magnify us in our labors, that we may stand as a light before the nations, I pray, in the name of Jesus Christ. Amen.

ELDER ANTOINE R. IVINS

Of the First Council of the Seventy

What a comfort it would have been if I had known last Saturday that I was not going to have any more time than has been allotted to me.

SUSTAINING THE PRESIDENT OF THE CHURCH

I have climbed this stairway for fourteen years, and I find it gets no shorter. I used to look into the sympathetic eyes of my father and gain support, and then into the eyes of my uncle, the President of the Church, where I found it. I still look into the eyes of the men who occupy these seats and feel a sympathy, a strength, and a support. My testimony is that it comes from the Spirit of God.

For the first time I have witnessed the inauguration of a President of the Church, and have pledged him my support. I pray that God will make me equal to that pledge. I do not expect him to do his work in exactly the same way as his predecessors have, and I hope that I will not judge him by the yardsticks which they left behind. I grant him the privilege to move in his office as he is inspired by the Spirit of God, and hope that I may have the strength always to support and sustain him, that I may see in the policies which he initiates the advance of the kingdom of God.

I once asked one of my friends what would happen if the President of the Church should die unexpectedly, and he said, "Nothing. It will go right forward." And contrary to the expectations of many people in the Church, this transition has been made with absolute smoothness and without friction so far as I have been able to observe. It is a great and lasting testimony to me.

THE CHURCH GIVEN STRENGTH TO CARRY ON

The gospel of Jesus Christ is the plan of life and salvation. It applies while we are here as well as after we shall leave this sphere. It is based on the correct principles that should govern the lives of men. It is the statement of those principles. The Church of God is the vehicle destined to carry into the lives of the people those principles and develop the people to eternal joy and happiness. It would be a sad commentary if this Church should not be so constructed that it could carry on from age to age and meet its opportunity. It has done so in the past. I have seen it work, myself, over a number of years.

There came a time when it moved the people into a desolate region without any opportunity whatsoever, so far as the world thought, and we saw it develop an organization which conquered an arid land, which established principles of right living, and which developed the country and brought distinction to its people. The Church is properly formed; it meets its opportunity.

It teaches us to till the soil. It teaches us cooperative effort. It teaches us the value of education, and sends us on to unlimited efforts in that direction. It meets all the exigencies of life. The Church is a virile, strong, true organization. My worry is not as to the Church so much as to how I shall serve it. If I can serve it faithfully and well, I shall be fortunate.

I pray that God may give me the strength and the power to do it, to hold up the hands of these men who stand at its head, and as I go throughout the Church ministering to the people, that I may be able to carry to them the gospel of love, and sympathy, and true fellowship; in other words, that I may be true to the charge that has been given to me, and if God will give me that power, then I shall be happy. And what I pray for myself, I pray for all of you who are here, evidencing by your presence that you desire to do the same thing. God bless us all, I ask, in the name of Jesus. Amen.

President George Albert Smith:

Brother Richard E. Folland or William W. Seegmiller, if either one is here, will please come forward. I would like to explain to you, my brethren and sisters, that these men have given years of their lives in the missionary field, but we are so crowded for time at this Conference, it is not always possible to hear from them. Brother Seegmiller has filled a long term in the missionary field. His last mission was in Brazil. Brother Seegmiller will now address us.

ELDER WM. W. SEEGMILLERFormer President of the Brazilian Mission*

I am one of the derelict to whom Elder Thomas E. McKay referred when he inferred that some of the mission presidents in reporting their labors to the Quorum of the Twelve, did not pay due recognition and homage to the services of their wives. In a spirit of penitence I now undertake to make proper restitution.

The other day I was seeking the home of a returned Brazilian missionary. I found the number and rang the bell. A lady came to the door with that indifferent expression on her face—you know what I mean. (laughter) I said: "I am President Seegmiller of the Brazilian Mission." She said: "Oh, President Seegmiller, our son loves you so much, especially Sister Seegmiller." (laughter) There are parents of 500 missionaries who feel the same way. So it seems to me that my puny efforts at expressing my appreciation of my missionary companion are all unnecessary.

Brazil is a great country, an undeveloped country, resources everywhere untouched, the greatest iron deposit in all the world, a mountain of iron such as the Wasatch Mountains, rich from top to bottom in iron. It can be hauled to the smelter without mining, just pick up the rocks, blast them down and take them, but it is undeveloped. The deepest gold mine in the world,—So I will not be misunderstood again, not the richest—is in Brazil. The great Doce River Valley which furnishes quantities of water for irrigation and hydro-electric power where five million people could make their homes and be prosperous, lies untouched. American engineers have surveyed it. It seems that the day of its development approaches.

The Brazilian people are kind; they are friendly to the United States. When I was ready to go to Brazil a friend of mine said: "Don't forget that the people of Brazil hate North Americans." I testify that that is not true. People of Brazil love to refer to Uncle Sam as Santa Claus, and maybe it is a good thing for us to be Santa Claus to that great people.

When I was set apart for my mission, President Clark said: "Now, Brother Seegmiller, cultivate patience." And in a few moments he said again: "Do not forget to be patient." And after a line or two he said: "Please remember, Brother Seegmiller, with all your kindly disposition, you must cultivate patience." I did not realize fully what that meant until I became better acquainted with Latin America, and oh how I needed patience! I have now come from the "land of tomorrow" I hope with more patience, because every time I tried to get anybody to do anything they said amanha, and so now that I have come back to the country of today, I hope I have not so much patience that I shall always say amanha.

When President McKay told me that I was to evacuate the missionaries from the Brazilian Mission, I said: "What will we do then?" He said: "Just do your best." I said: "I do not know the Portuguese language." He said: "That isn't what we are sending you down there for." After a few more questions I realized again, as I have many times, that I was expected to assume my own responsibility, as you are, and to do the best I could. Well, of course we profess to do our best.

The day came when all the missionaries were evacuated and we went with our son and the last missionary to Rio de Janeiro to bid them good-bye. Sunday before they left, they baptized some people, and among them a man named Claudio and his wife Mary. In that last meeting before we took them to Rio de Janeiro, I could hear the members whispering in Portuguese and German, "Well, it is too bad we cannot hold services any more. President Seegmiller cannot stay here all the time." So I told them: "Services will be held as usual every Sunday." After I had said that I just wondered how, and I had already written to the First Presidency and told them that there was no prospect for presidency in the Brazilian Mission, there was no prospect for priesthood.

But we came back from Rio the next Sunday and I asked the Saints: "Will you sustain Brother Claudio, who was baptized last Sunday, to be ordained as an elder?" They did. I said: "Now, will you sustain him as president of the Sao Paulo Branch?"—the most important branch in the Brazilian Mission. They sustained him.

I ordained him an elder and set him apart as president of the Sao Paulo Branch and said: "Now, Claudio, select your counselors; that is your privilege." He said: "I select Jorge Vasaliedes for my first counselor," who had been baptized just a few weeks. And then he said: "I select Reuben Pellegrine for my second counselor." He had been baptized longer. So I ordained them elders and set them apart to their respective positions, and the branch was organized.

We did this throughout the Brazilian Mission. After this was done I felt justly ashamed of myself for having written to the First Presidency and said: "There is no opportunity for presidency and priesthood in Brazil. We have no men. The few we have are not worthy." I forgot, as you forget, that God is at the helm, that all things under his direction are possible, and this work has been set up never again to be torn down or given to another people. I hope I shall remember that so that if ever again I shall be called to a position of presidency, I will remember that I am never alone. Sister

Sunday, October 7Third Day

Seegmiller and I were more than eighteen months alone in the Brazilian Mission—I mean no members of our family and no regular missionaries. But we were not at all alone in the true sense of the word. We would have remained there indefinitely and been happy had we not been called home by the same authority that called us there. But after the shock of reading that letter of release had cooled off, we paraphrased the song of Brother Ballard and said in our hearts: "We'll come where you want us to come."

Notwithstanding the many friends we have in Brazil, and notwithstanding the great love we have for them and they for us, Brigham was right when he said: "This is the Place!" This is our home. There is no place like our own dear home. I wonder if we fully appreciate this fact. I read in magazines where young men are encouraged to go to Latin America. I have read in magazines where the wonders and opportunities of Brazil have been extolled and young men advised to go there. Now, my brethren, you younger brethren of mine, I advise you quite to the contrary unless you are called there, and then go with a heart full of love and patience. But in the organization of the Church of Jesus Christ among our people in this country is the best place for my boys, and I know it. There are good people everywhere. I love the Latin Americans. I remember when President McKay called me down to his office soon after we returned from Denver and he said: "President Seegmiller, have you any prejudice against the Latin American people?" I said, "No, I do not know anything about them." I did not even know that Portuguese was the language of Brazil. Did you? I do not know much about Brazil yet. I was almost totally ignorant about our Latin American friends, but I know something about them now, and I know that there in Brazil, with all the immorality, with all the sexual degradation, there are men and women who have resisted, they are pure and true, they are honorable and worthy, and we are sent out to find them, and not only to find them but to warn all others, and we have found many of them.

We have only 417 members in that great nation of over forty million people, and that was our mission, all of Brazil. I remember when we arrived in Rio de Janeiro my predecessor was expected by the First Presidency to be there, and Brother Murdock had advised him to be there with money when we arrived, because we did not have any. We were in Miami so long our hotel bill was $350, and we three got on the plane with $20 in our pockets, and they advised the president to be there with money. He was not. The missionaries there were detained, and the president's wife, and I said: "Have all of you together got the equivalent of $9.00?" They did not have. I said: "I have a legal paper in my office written in English, which was given me by the court that says if I enter Brazil without paying $9.00 in school tax, I will be incarcerated. Now you had better rustle me $9.00." They could not. I said: "Well, we will go through the gates and see what happens." Nothing happened; it never has happened. So we went on about our business. I said: "Now I would like to stay here tonight with these missionaries." But the good sister said, "No, we have your reservations for Sao Paulo, and we must go." We got on the train, and oh, what a train! We rode all night. The next day when we arrived at the mission home, we said: "We will have a bath and a rest." And she said, "No, we have your reservations for Porto Alegre, the last city before the border of Argentina and Brazil."

We were on that train—or was it a train?—for three days and four nights without getting off. And then we took a bus up the Atlantic coast for three days and nights with the waves of the Atlantic going through the wheels of the old shattered bus, and it was packed so firmly in the aisle and everywhere else with people that there was no chance to fall out, we just sat there. (laughter)

When we got to the mission home, I said to my predecessor: "That is the last time."

He said: "What do you mean?"

I said: "I will never take a train or a bus on this trip again."

"He said: "How will you do it?"

"The Pan-American World Airways, I notice, have airports all along the line. That is how I will travel."

He said: "Just wait and see what the First Presidency says to you about that."

I said: "I have been working under their direction for many years and they have never reprimanded me very seriously yet."

So we traveled by air for three years and a half and came home the same way. God was with us and we were safe always.

I know that the Gospel of Jesus Christ is true. I doubt it not. I hope that we shall have strength of character to serve him all our days because I know that if we do, he will be with us even to the end of the earth, in the name of Jesus Christ. Amen.

President George Albert Smith:

You have just listened to President William W. Seegmiller, former president of the Brazilian Mission, who has represented both himself and his wife before this great audience. I would like to have the privilege of telling Brother Seegmiller that the missionaries are not the only ones who think he has a fine wife. I would like to say of them that they do the finest team work in the missionary field that anybody can find. They do great missionary work.

We will now conclude this morning's session by listening to the incomparable choir and organ rendering, "The Heavens Are Telling." Brother J. Spencer Cornwall is the director and Alexander Schreiner is the organist.

The closing prayer will be offered by President Harold B. Morris of the Deseret Stake, after which this Conference will be adjourned until 2 o'clock this afternoon. The afternoon session will be broadcast over KSL at Salt Lake City and KSUB at Cedar City.

Again, let us caution you when you go out into the streets, be careful and do not run over one of those automobiles.

The Choir sang an anthem, "The Heavens are Telling," after which the closing prayer was offered by President Harold R. Morris of the Deseret Stake.

Conference adjourned until 2 o'clock p.m.

THIRD DAY

AFTERNOON MEETING

The concluding session of the Conference was held Sunday afternoon at 2 o'clock p.m.

President George Albert Smith:

This is the seventh and closing session of the 116th Semi-Annual Conference of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints. We are convened in the Tabernacle on Temple Square in Salt Lake City. There is an overflow meeting in the Assembly Hall and there are many people on the grounds outside unable to find seats in either building. This building is packed again to suffocation.

There are on the stand this afternoon all the General Authorities of the Church.

The proceedings this afternoon will be broadcast over KSL, Salt Lake City, and KSUB, Cedar City.

The singing will be by the Tabernacle Choir. Elder J. Spencer Cornwall is the director, and Frank W. Asper is the organist.

The first hymn will be, "Lend Thine Ear To My Prayer," by Archangelsky.

The opening prayer will be offered by President Paul R. Wynn of the Oneida Stake.

The Tabernacle Choir sang, "Lend Thine Ear to My Prayer," by Archangelsky.

President Paul R. Wynn of the Oneida Stake offered the opening prayer.

An anthem, "O Praise Ye God," by Tschaikowsky, was sung by the Choir.

ELDER SPENCER W. KIMBALL

of the Council of the Twelve Apostles

Thus saith the Lord:

And it is my purpose to provide for my saints, for all things are mine. But it must needs be done in mine own way. . . . Thus saith the Lord. (D. & C. 104:15-16.)

Two years ago today I began my official work in this capacity. They have been two years of great joy and happiness for me. It has been my privilege to go throughout the Church and to have that incomparable opportunity of entering the homes and lives of the people.

"IN MINE OWN WAY"

In these two years I have seen a great drama played before my eyes. The title of the drama is: "In Mine Own Way." The stage is the earth; the scenery consists of the mountains and plains, the streams and oceans, the forests and deserts; its actors are the people, the sons and daughters of God.

A TYPICAL "HOME NIGHT"

The curtain rises on the first act, showing a world of night life with its theaters, banquets, and night clubs. Throngs of people have left homes and firesides seeking diversion in commercial amusement and riotous living, but off in one corner of this huge stage I see a modest home in which a family is assembled. It is a family of five. They are having a typical Latter-day Saint home evening. Little Grace is taking her turn tonight. She has arranged the program and is conducting. All of the family sing the song "Love At Home." The father tells a story from the Bible; then little Jimmy, just starting out with his violin, plays a simple little tune. Little Grace sings: "Jesus Wants Me for a Sunbeam." And then the little three-year-old, unable to do anything else, turns somersaults to entertain the group. Some games are played and the mother serves the refreshments, which tonight happens to be popcorn. I see them now at the close of a perfect home evening, kneeling all together in prayer as they retire. And I seem to hear the voice of God saying:

And parents . . . shall also teach their children to pray, and to walk uprightly before the Lord. (D. & C. 68:28.)

BLESSINGS THROUGH FAITHFULNESS

The scene is changed. The setting this time is a world of selfishness, of overspending, of debt, of grasping humans accumulating the things of the world. There is one spot on this huge stage that arrests my attention. I see a young family, the father of which is still in his twenties. The lovely home is bright and resounds with children's voices and beyond the walls of its loveliness, I see prosperous mercantile establishments owned by him. His conference visitor is talking to him, commending him for his faithfulness in the payment of his tithing which he has paid on his prosperity. And then I hear this young, devout Latter-day Saint say: "I deserve no commendation. I am doing only my duty and my privilege. When I came home from my mission, wholly without funds or program, I knelt and asked for the blessings of the Lord, and I promised him that I would give him not only the tenth of my increase, but all that I possessed and accumulated would be his for his work and at the call of his servants, the Authorities of his Church."

Sunday, October 7Third Day

As that scene closes I reflect again upon the title of the drama, "But it must needs be done in mine own way."

MISSIONARY WORK GOING FORWARD

The curtain is parted again and I see a discordant world, full of hate and envy, insincerity and frustration. Some are seeking righteousness but great numbers are satisfied to "eat, drink, and be merry" and let the world go merrily on in its sin. Then at one side of the great stage, I see the membership of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints in all its activities, including its missionary work. I see, going forth from the wards, great numbers of messengers of peace, giving the gospel to a world freely. An old couple, arranging their affairs, are gathering together the funds which they have earned and saved from their poultry farm throughout a period of years. They are leaving their home for the mission field. In another part of the stage is a group of missionaries coming into the rooms of the General Authorities to be set apart for their missions. In one room is a father with his young daughter. He is a patriarch and though many are his years, light is his heart. And after the girl has been set apart, her proud father whispers to the General Authority as they go out of the room, "Maybe you would be interested to know that this is my eleventh missionary to go into the mission field. It isn't a sacrifice," he quickly adds, "Every one of those missionaries has brought a blessing to our home. And I have three more children yet to go." The gospel preached in the Lord's own way without price or compensation! And I seem to hear the Lord's comment:

... freely ye have received, freely give. As my Father hath sent me even so send I you. (Matthew 10:8, John 20:21.)

A STRONG CONTRAST

Another curtain. The scene this time is of the workers of the world, cursing in their labor; youth who use irreverently the name of Deity in their games and sports, and socialites indulging in vulgar and obscene stories in their parties. In contrast is presented a group of fourteen men on the Weber River. They are stake authorities spending a night and a day in the canyon. They are hiking, pitching horseshoes, playing volley ball, "swapping" stories through the afternoon, and in the evening they gather together to eat, and then to spend hours exchanging experiences and in solemn worship around the fireplace. As the men retire one of the number whispers to a companion, "Do you realize that through this long day and evening fourteen prominent men were together but never once was the name of Deity used improperly, nor a single story related that had even a shady background?" And as that scene closes I find myself thinking: "What a sweet and abundant life a Latter-day Saint may have," and I remember the words of Paul:

Unto the pure all things are pure: but unto them that are defiled and unbelieving is nothing pure; . . . (Titus 1:15.)

HELP IN TIME OF NEED

Another scene: I see a world of people confused with social problems, "each for himself and the devil take the hindmost." There is evidence of riches and poverty, luxury and want; and then within this world of selfishness there is presented a scene of devastation where floods in their fury had played havoc with many homes, and here are fifteen hundred members of the priesthood of the Church with their sleeves rolled up, with their boots on, digging filth and debris from mud-filled basements resulting from a terrible storm that damaged homes and destroyed valuable possessions of the people. I see other floods where crops were washed away, animals drowned, farms gutted, and adobe homes melted by a raging river. I see the people from neighboring wards and stakes come to the rescue—with food, bedding, clothing for the needy; scores of truckloads of hay and grain for livestock; wire and posts for fencing; cash for leveling the farms, and building materials for dwellings for the homeless.

And I see priesthood quorums with saw and hammer, building homes for members in distress.

And I thank the Lord for a people who follow the injunction: "Love thy neighbor as thyself," and, the family enters the newly constructed home, I seem to hear the Master say:

. . . Inasmuch as ye have done it unto one of the least of these my brethren, ye have done it unto me. (Matthew 25:40.)

TWO WAYS OF SPENDING THE SABBATH

The curtain rises again on a Sabbath day—church bells are ringing. The populace, however, seems motivated by the spirit of "holiday" rather than "Holy Day." All over this great stage on the Lord's day people are picnicking in the canyon, men are in the fields doing their work; hunters and fishermen are in the mountains; men and women and children are in long queues before picture houses, ball games and rodeos. But off in another little corner in this great stage there is a sacrament meeting in progress. The meetinghouse is filled with worshiping people keeping holy the Sabbath day. The bishop is conducting, and down in the congregation, in one side pew is a family of six—a young couple with four children under twelve. And then at the conclusion of the meeting it seems the bishop is commending the young parents for their faithfulness, and the father of this little brood says: "We are happy to come to sacrament meeting each Sabbath. It is a privilege to worship. We always like to come together as a family. Our life would not be complete if our play, our work, and our worship were not all together." And I was grateful for the many who worship on the Lord's day, and I seem to see Moses coming down from Mount Sinai with the plates on which was engraved:

Remember the sabbath day, to keep it holy. (Exodus 20:8.)

THE LAW OF CHASTITY

And then the scene changes again, and I see a world of sin. Here are displayed the hellholes of vice and crime. Here are the divorce courts and people filing in and out, notables many times divorced but unashamed. Homes are broken and children divided, and I hear someone say that ninety percent of all the divorces that break up these homes are caused by the sin of adultery, and that a staggering percentage of the people on this stage are immoral and unrepentant. Backstage is a small picture in contrast. Here is a community of about four hundred Latter-day Saints far away in the southland. A physician-surgeon, not a member of the Church, is telling his friend: "Now I've finished five years of practice in this little community of Mormons. Oh, the Mormons are not perfect but a pretty good sort though. I have attended them in their child-births, in their operations, and in all of their ailments, and after five years I have yet to find the first case of social disease among them." And I seem to hear the warning of Paul, heeded by these Latter-day Saints:

Know ye not that ye are the temple of God, and that the Spirit of God dwelleth in you? If any man defile the temple of God, him shall God destroy; for the temple of God is holy, which temple ye are. (1 Cor. 3:16-17.)

Here is the law of chastity lived "in mine own way."

TWO MARRIAGE SCENES

Another scene is presented. It is a world parading in pomp and show, in display and pretense. Upstage I see a minister standing before a young couple, all elegantly dressed. And I see the best man, ladies in waiting, the ring bearer, many actors with parts prepared and gowns that are gorgeous. Large groups of people are on either side of the aisle with curious expectant faces. And then it seems that I see in another small corner of this huge stage, a young girl and her mother talking quietly together in their home. I hear the daughter saying: "You have been a sweet mother to me. I am grateful for your teaching me the beauty and importance of a temple marriage. I saw Betty's spectacular wedding with all of its flowers, costly gowns, and expensive appointments. I felt the labored formality of it all, the gasps of the curious onlookers. Mother, I desire a sweet, simple temple marriage; I want no rice, no old shoes, no wild demonstration. I want no pageantry no matter how colorful—marriage to me is a holy ordinance. What I would like would be for John and me to go through the sweet holy rites of the temple with just my folks and his, and a few intimate friends, where all is white and calm and beautiful and serene. Mother, I want no one unsympathetic to be present and nothing to be done which, in any sense, will mar the solemnity of that sacred occasion. This is a time when I want no hilarity, no crude or vulgar jokes. And as we walk out together, united for time and eternity, I want us to face the world with our minds and hearts still on that same high plane we found in the sealing room of the temple. I want us always to retain that sweet spirit of prayer and worship and peace. Thank you, Mother, I want to be married in the Lord's own way."

And as the curtain closes I stand in contemplation — grateful and happy that in the drama of life on the great world stage there are here and there episodes of contrasting brilliance and beauty which show the way to live the commandments of God in his own way.

My brothers and sisters, let us be true devoted Latter-day Saints. Let us love the Lord and our fellow men and live the commandments of God that we may have a full and abundant life leading to exaltation, I pray, in the name of Jesus Christ. Amen.

ELDER MARION G. ROMNEY

Assistant to the Council of the Twelve Apostles

In harmony with what has been said in this conference, about supporting the new President of the Church, I want to pledge to President George Albert Smith here before all of you, that I have every intention of rendering to him the same kind of loyalty that I gave our late departed great President, Heber J. Grant, whom I loved as I have loved few men.

In speaking of President Grant, I want to express my regret also for the loss which the Church has sustained since last conference in the passing of his son-in-law, Robert L. Judd, who rendered such yeoman service in the welfare work.

TESTIMONY COMES THROUGH SERVICE

The welfare program of the Church is very dear to me, and with the help of the spirit of the Lord, for which I pray, I want to say a word about it.

You are witnesses that when, with all your hearts, you work at a Church assignment, the Lord gives you a testimony that it is of him, and you have joy and satisfaction therein. That is the way it is with me in the welfare work, which now for four years has been one of my major assignments.

During the weeks following April conference, 1941, while I was wondering what I would be asked to do as an Assistant to the Council of the Twelve, my wife said that she believed she could guess, and of course, she did guess, many times. Once she said, "I think they will ask you to help Brother Lee in the welfare work." and I replied, "Oh, my goodness, I hope not! There is nothing for which I am less qualified."

Well, in a few days I received a letter from the First Presidency, appointing me assistant managing director of the Church welfare plan, "to labor under the advice and direction of Elder Lee and the General Committee." Within sixty days I closed up my personal affairs, and went to work in earnest on this new assignment. I read and studied everything the brethren had said about it. I asked members of the General Committee and office staff hundreds of questions. I fasted often over an extended period, and prayed humbly for an understanding of the welfare plan. Twice I traveled through the Church into practically every stake and saw the welfare projects in operation.

I believe I have heard almost all the objections which have been raised against it, and also the labored arguments in justification for not living it. As I have listened to these objections and arguments, I have been painfully aware of the dull spirit in which they have been urged. All over the Church, on the other hand, and this is the thing which has encouraged me, I have seen the sparkle in the eyes, the spring in the steps, and felt the joy in the spirits of those who have tested the plan by the Savior's formula:

If any man will do his will, he shall know of the doctrine, whether it be of God, or whether I speak of myself. (John 7:17.)

I believe I have made a rather complete study, and I now testify to you that I do know beyond any doubt, by the same power that Peter knew that Jesus was the Christ, that the Church welfare plan in its inception was and now is inspired of the Lord; and that the great principles implemented by it are eternal truths, which the Saints of God must abide if they are to purify and perfect themselves as the Lord has commanded.

Very often in welfare meetings bishops and others are asked what results they expect from the plan. Almost invariably one of the answers is that through it they expect the members of the Church to be fed, housed and clothed, when present sources of supply fail. This is a good answer, and I believe that the truth of it will yet be a demonstrated fact.

SPIRITUAL MEANING IN THE CHURCH WELFARE PLAN

To me, however, Church welfare is more than just a plan to provide for the physical needs of the Saints. I am convinced that in addition to being a way of economic salvation in the days of necessity, it has deep spiritual significance; and that should other means always be available with which to supply the physical needs of the people, still the welfare plan, or some similar plan sponsored by the Church under the inspiration of the Lord, requiring us to serve and minister to one another in temporal affairs, would be necessary in order to bring us to that oneness, equality, and

... union required by the law of the celestial kingdom. (D. & C. 105:4.)

Unity, above all else, is the one thing characteristic of the Church of Christ. The burden of the Master's great prayer

... in the hour of his approaching death was, that the oneness subsisting between himself and the Father should also subsist between himself and his apostles, and ... between them and all those who should receive the gospel through their teachings. (B. H. Roberts, The Falling Away, pp. 1-2.)

The way to this oneness and unity has always been mutual consideration and helpfulness to one another. This the Lord declared to ancient Israel when he said, "thou shalt love thy neighbor as thyself" (Lev. 19:18), and during his earthly ministry he reaffirmed this command as one of the two great requirements upon which hang all the law and the prophets. (Matt. 22:37-39; Mark 12:29-31; Luke 10:27.)

In this dispensation, the Lord has made it clear that loving one's neighbor as oneself includes administering to his temporal needs. He said to the members of the Church before it was a year old:

... be one; and if ye are not one ye are not mine. (D. & C. 38:27.)

And he prefaced this command by calling to their attention the inequality among them in worldly goods. Among other things he said:

... the poor have complained before me, and the rich have I made, and all flesh is mine, and I am no respecter of persons. ... Wherefore, hear my voice and follow me, and you shall be a free people ... let every man esteem his brother as himself. ... And again I say unto you, let every man esteem his brother as himself. (D. & C. 38:16, 22, 24-25.)

And then he illustrated the meaning of esteeming one's brother as oneself by a parable in which he disapproved of having one of his sons clothed in robes and given a seat of honor, while another son of equal faithfulness is clothed in rags and given a lesser place. (D. & C. 38:26.) It was against this background of instructions that the Lord gave the command,

... be one; and if ye are not one ye are not mine.

Fourteen months later, he said:

... the time has come, and is now at hand; and behold, and lo, it must needs be that there be an organization of my people, in regulating and establishing the affairs of the storehouse for the poor of my people, . . . for a permanent and everlasting establishment and order unto my church. (D. & C. 78:3-4.)

Through this organization a certain equality in earthly things was to be obtained in order that the Saints might be equal in the bonds of heavenly things (D. & C. 78:5), and the Church was to be enabled to stand independent above all other creatures beneath the celestial world. (D. & C. 78:14.)

Keep in mind that this organization was to be built around a storehouse from which the needs of the poor among the Lord's people were to be supplied. Some folk regard this as a menial temporal activity; but the Lord said its purpose was to advance the cause which the saints had espoused for the salvation of men and to the glory of their Father in heaven. (D. & C. 78:4.) He thus associated it with his loftiest endeavor, that of bringing to pass the immortality and the eternal life of man, which he has declared to be his work and his glory. (Moses 1:39.)

Who but the Lord himself could devise a way by which the members of his Church, rich and poor alike, can be so motivated that by the exercise of their own free agency they will administer to each other's needs in such a spirit of love as to move toward these great objectives? No one. And the Lord intended to direct the way, for said he:

I, the Lord, stretched out the heavens, and built the earth, my very handiwork; and all things therein are mine. And it is my purpose to provide for my saints, for all things are mine. But it must needs be done in mine own way; and behold this is the way that I, the Lord, have decreed to provide for my saints, that the poor shall be exalted, in that the rich are made low. For the earth is full, and there is enough and to spare; yea, I prepared all things, and have given unto the children of men to be agents unto themselves. (D. & C. 104:14-17.)

UNITY REQUIRED OF THE SAINTS

In another revelation the Lord prescribed loyalty to his way as a prerequisite to obtaining a place in the celestial world. (D. & C. 78:7.) Now, my brethren and sisters, when members of the Church, our own fathers, and mothers, brothers and sisters, and children, are provided life's necessities from sources other than those approved by the Lord, it is not being done in his way and does not fulfil the law.

The way prescribed for the Church, when these revelations were given in the early 1830's, was the United Order. The Saints, however, did not prove obedient to the things required at their hands in connection with this order (among other things they did "not impart of their substance, as becometh saints, to the poor and afflicted among them" [D. & C. 105:3]), and were therefore not successful in becoming "united according to the union required by the law of the celestial kingdom." (D. & C. 105:4.) As a consequence, the requirement to practice the United Order was withdrawn from the Church. The Saints were driven and afflicted, and the redemption of Zion is yet delayed.

To us and for our day, the Lord has given the welfare plan whereby we may demonstrate to him through mutual consideration and helpfulness to one another in temporal things, that we do love our neighbors as ourselves, rich and poor alike, and thereby move toward the equality, oneness, and unity which the Lord requires of us. This plan is not meant for any one class alone. We all need the training it affords. The day for the ushering in of the great millennium approaches, and for that day we must be prepared to live as one in perfect unity. We cannot come suddenly to that happy state. It will take training. By putting the welfare plan fully into operation, we can move forward toward this high objective, and also to the perfection of the welfare program itself, "until it becomes perfect in all respects to the care and blessing of" the Lord's "people," as prayed for by President George Albert Smith in the dedicatory prayer at the Idaho Falls Temple.

May the Lord help us, my brethren and sisters, to understand the great principles underlying the welfare plan and comprehend the full purposes for which it has been given to us, that through living it we may move toward that "union required by the law of the celestial kingdom," I humbly pray in the name of Jesus Christ. Amen.

ELDER EZRA TAFT BENSON

Of the Council of the Twelve Apostles

I have felt confident that this time would come. This is a sobering experience, my brothers and sisters. Our great benefactor and leader said at one time regarding this great responsibility: "You cannot hide the heart when the mouth is open. If you want to keep your heart secret, keep your mouth shut." But he also added that when it becomes our duty to talk, we ought to be willing to talk.

QUESTIONS BEING ASKED

I desire to repeat one sentence from the revelation which Brother Romney indicated has already been quoted two or three times in this conference:

And it is my purpose to provide for my saints, for all things are mine. (D. & C. 104:15.)

During recent weeks it has been my pleasure to visit with many young men and some older men, during which time they have asked several questions regarding some of the temporal matters pertaining to the Latter-day Saints. They have asked questions regarding the Church's interest in agriculture and farming. They have commented that they do not hear as much now about these things as was once spoken in the Church. Some of them have suggested that they would like to know whether or not the Church looks with favor on young men going abroad to various parts of the country to establish themselves in farming and in business, or whether they should remain close to Church headquarters. Others have asked regarding co-operative business enterprises, and other cooperative activities.

I realize, my brethren and sisters, that in discussing temporal matters, the Lord has said:

... all things unto me are spiritual, and not at any time have I given unto you a law which was temporal. . . . (D. & C. 29:34.)

MAN'S PLACE IMPORTANT IN THE WORLD

The objective, of course, is spiritual. We live, however, in a material, physical, temporal world. Man is the center in Mormon philosophy.

For behold, this is my work and my glory—to bring to pass the immortality and eternal life of man. (Moses 1:39.)

The earth upon which we live was established for man. The Church is for man, not man for the Church.

We are blind until we see that in the human plan
Nothing is worth the making if it does not make the man.
Why build these cities glorious if man unbuilted go;
In vain we build the world unless the builder also grow.

But to us man is a dual being, temporal and spiritual, and in the early revelations to this people, the Lord took occasion, many times, to give direction and commandment regarding temporal matters. He directed the Saints and the leaders of the Church in the purchase of land and other property; in the construction of temples; even in the establishment of a printing press, and a store, and in the building of a boardinghouse for the "weary traveler." In the great revelation known as the Word of Wisdom, he not only indicated what is good and what is not good for man, but he outlined a plan for the feeding of livestock, which, through more than a hundred years, has gradually been sustained through the scientific investigation of man. Whatever affects human welfare has always been and ever will be the concern of the Church. Our people have always been counseled in temporal affairs.

COOPERATION IMPORTANT IN TEMPORAL MATTERS

I read again recently some of the early discourses of President Brigham Young and other Church leaders as the Saints came into these valleys. The people were truly counseled in temporal affairs. Various types of projects were inaugurated under their direction. They were taught to conserve ranges and forests and to conserve water. They were taught also to conserve food and feed and other materials. They were encouraged in the production of more profitable crops and in more efficient methods of production. They were taught to work together, to cooperate, to sustain each other. Listen to the words of President Young:

Any people who will cooperate on correct principles will increase in material wealth and prosperity. . . . If the people called Latter-day Saints do not become one in temporal things, as they are in spiritual things, they will not redeem and build up the Zion of God upon the earth. This cooperative movement is a stepping stone. We say to the people, take advantage of it, it is your privilege. (Journal of Discourses 13:3.)

Later he gave cooperative support to private enterprise and encouraged men to enter private business. Should not the counsel given by President Brigham Young in the early days of the settlement of these valleys be heeded today? The principles of cooperation and working together were used to develop the resources of these valleys and permit people to survive. We need to adopt these same principles, which have been tried and tested by the experience of the last hundred years, to preserve and conserve these resources and to raise our economic standards. I do not mean by this that our people should go out and in every priesthood quorum and in every ward organize cooperative business organizations. A warning has been given, and wisely so, that cooperative enterprises, business cooperatives, require efficient business management and direction. At the same time it is recognized that there is a place for cooperative endeavor, among our agricultural and rural groups particularly, as there is also an opportunity and a place for private enterprise.

ZION EMBRACES ALL OF AMERICA

We live in an area, my brothers and sisters, where we face rather peculiar problems, and to some extent, some limitations. Water is our most limited factor in the agriculture of the area in which the Latter-day Saints are concentrated. The topography of our country presents other serious problems. We have, in many areas where the Latter-day Saints live, a very serious pressure of population on the land. There is a tendency for our farms and farming units to be divided and redivided until many times they have become somewhat uneconomic because of their limited size. Because of this pressure there has been a tendency for many of our young people to go out into other areas where land seems to be more abundant and probably where the opportunities are greater. This is not a thing to be discouraged if they act wisely. All of America is the land of Zion.

I was pleased in visiting the Northwestern States Mission recently to find that many of our young people have gone into that fertile area, have established themselves in agriculture and in business, and are sinking their roots deep, becoming a part of the community life and a support to the branches of which they are loyal members. To me this is a condition that will likely increase as the years pass. As the Church grows and increases in numbers, no one state or area will be able to contain the Latter-day Saints.

ADVICE IN MATTER OF DEBT

There are some things, my brethren and sisters, those who live in the rural communities particularly, that I would like to call to your attention which I think might be helpful in aiding us to improve the efficiency of our operations. One of them was referred to by Brother Clifford Young in his excellent address yesterday: the matter of debt. We face at the present time a great adjustment period. If history repeats itself, we may expect a declining price level in the case of agricultural products particularly. That will mean that more bushels of wheat, more tons of sugar beets and more farm products generally will be required to pay off a given amount of debt. It is well for Latter-day Saints to make a special effort during this period when prices are relatively high, to reduce our debts to the very minimum in order that we might be prepared to meet the adjustment period as it comes without losing our farms and without making undue sacrifices.

WAYS OF MORE EFFECTIVE FARMING

There are many things that we could do to enlarge our farming units, not only by the acquisition of land, but by the more effective use of irrigation water, much of which is wasted through seepage and excessive irrigation. More acres on given farms can often be brought under irrigation through a wiser and more efficient use of water. We can add intensive units to our farming program without enlarging the area with such units as poultry, livestock feeding, production of truck crops, seed production, new crops, and other things. On many of our farms I believe we could reduce waste areas, corners, fence lines, ditch banks, and yard space.

There is a need to increase forage production to supplement our ranges, which, in many areas, are becoming seriously depleted. We need to use the information which has been developed by the United States Forest Service, by our agricultural colleges, and tested by leading ranchers, to plant improved grasses on our ranges, and thereby increase the number of livestock that can be carried. Many of our communities are built largely on a livestock economy.

Ofttimes the rearrangement of fields and the enlargement of fields, permits the more efficient use of power and heavy, horse-drawn farm machinery, which is a common need on many farms. The use of better breeding stock and better feed and seed will all tend towards a more efficient type of agriculture, a more profitable farming enterprise, and a more satisfactory community life.

We need to work together more than we do. In the joint ownership of heavy equipment such as combines, balers, tractors, drills, and in the cooperative ownership of breeding sires, and in many other ways, we can join together as farmers in our communities in order to make our farming operations more efficient and more effective.

In many areas our system of marketing and distributing our farm products and purchasing farm production supplies needs to be improved. Farmers need to improve their bargaining power. There is a tendency among many of our people, and not confined alone to our people, to sell their products in rather large quantities at wholesale, and to buy back in small dabs, here and there, their needed supplies at retail prices. As one of our distinguished financiers, Bernard M. Baruch, has said:

The farmer selling in unlimited competition with himself, has been buying at more or less controlled prices from industries which have organized their production and marketing.

We need to improve the distribution of our farm products. That does not mean that in every area we need to organize cooperative associations. There are limitations on these organizations. The need should be determined. Possibly the work is being done efficiently through private channels. We should determine whether or not there is a need for improvement in the marketing and distribution of our products in a given area.

The farm is largely a manufacturing plant where land, labor, fertilizer, supplies, seed, and feed are combined to produce a product for market. It is no easy matter to become an efficient farm operator today.

It is important that we keep our thinking straight, my brothers and sisters. Let us ever keep in mind that all material things are but a means to an end, that the end is spiritual, although the Lord is anxious and willing to bless his people temporally. He has so indicated in many of the revelations. He has pointed out, time and time again, that we should pray over our crops, over our livestock, over our households, our homes, and invoke the Lord's blessings upon our material affairs. And he has promised that he will be there and ready and willing to bless us.

THE SOUNDNESS OF PRINCIPLES OF SELF-HELP

Let us stand together on our own feet. Let us cooperate to accomplish these so-called material objectives. A sound agriculture is vital to the national economy. I like the words of that great Irish pioneer in cooperative effort, Horace Plunket, who labored for many years among the poor, down-ridden farmers of Ireland, when he said:

For the longer I live, the more certain do I become that what the best of governments can do for farmers is of insignificant importance compared with what, by carefully thought out and loyal cooperation, they can do for themselves.

Let us as Latter-day Saints stand on our own feet. Let us not be inclined to run to a paternalistic government for help when every problem arises, but to attack our problems jointly, and through effective cooperative effort, solve our problems at home.

To me one of the greatest bulwarks we have in this country against all the foreign isms, "crackpot" theories, and the unsound social reforms is the people who live on the land, close to the soil.

Dr. Widtsoe emphasized a year ago at our conference the important part which the rural people of America play in the safety and security of this great land. Certainly no group of people in all the world know so well that, "As ye sow, so shall ye reap." And as Brother Widtsoe said in that excellent address, which I commend to you, "A strong rural membership brings safety to the Church, not otherwise obtainable. It is so in the nation."

The principles of self-help are economically, socially, and spiritually sound. The Lord will not do for us what we can and should do for ourselves. But it is his purpose to take care of his Saints. Everything that concerns the economic, social, and spiritual welfare of the human family is and ever will be the concern of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints.

May the Lord bless us with inspiration to guide us in all of our material affairs that we might be successful. And may we ever keep in mind the great objective of life and the purposes of God in establishing us here in the earth, namely, to bring to pass our immortality and eternal life in the celestial kingdom, I pray, in the name of Jesus Christ. Amen.

The ladies of the Tabernacle Choir sang "O Divine Redeemer," by Gounod.

PRESIDENT J. REUBEN CLARK, JR.

First Counselor in the First Presidency

My brothers and sisters, I trust that the few moments that I stand before you, I may have an interest in your faith and prayers, that what I say may be helpful, at least to some of us.

The wide range of subjects which have been talked about at this conference shows the scope of the gospel of Jesus Christ and shows us how in that gospel and in the gospel plan the Lord has provided for all of our needs. There is no phase of life, that we have to live, that is not fully covered by the principles of the gospel.

CONFIDENCE EXPRESSED IN CHURCH LEADERSHIP

As has been repeatedly observed, and I myself have mentioned, we are beginning a new era in the history of the Church. We have had great leaders in the past: President Smith, President Young, President Taylor, President Woodruff, President Snow, President Smith, President Grant, and now President George Albert Smith. Each of those brethren in the past had the love, confidence, and respect of every Latter-day Saint who was living as he should live. Those only have spoken ill who were not serving the Lord. As in the past, so it is today.

May I say, we miss today and through this conference, not only the presence, but the admonitions of President Grant—a great man, so esteemed by all who knew him in the Church and out, a man of steadfast principle, a man who lived as he preached, a man who knew no guile, a man who was honest and truthful, a man respected and loved, to whom I gave all the loyalty I had. The world will not soon forget President Grant.

Now we come to President Smith, and again I say that to him I give all of the loyalty, all the respect, and I shall give to him all the love that I gave to President Grant. If I did not do so, I would not be worthy of the choice he has made. May God help me to do my duty.

CONTINUAL INSPIRATION NECESSARY TO GROWTH OF CHURCH

Brother Stephen L Richards yesterday said a few words, along with others, in connection with the growth of this Church. There has been a marvelous growth. You will remember that after the Savior died, Paul tells us some five hundred assembled together and he appeared before them. We may assume, I think, that that number was more or less the total of the congregation he had been able to bring together. A few days after Pentecost, Peter, preaching in the temple, talked to five thousand, many of whom seemed to be believers. But the growth of the church from then on, while great, seems not ever to have approached our growth in the matter of numbers. I dimly remember having read somewhere, that there were perhaps a hundred thousand members at the end of the first hundred years. We number almost a million. That one hundred thousand, or whatever number it was, went forward, but the records show that after the apostolic age, after the apostles died, people began to wander away from the truth. Some writers affirm that inspiration ceased. Perhaps that is why they did not grow more rapidly and certainly we have grown so rapidly because inspiration and revelation, of which Brother Widtsoe spoke, have continued with us during all these years. But even during the time of the apostles there began to be a falling away, as is clear from the Epistles of Paul, of Peter, John, James, and Jude. People began to wander off, and that wandering was increased in the succeeding centuries, accumulating speed, it seems, as it went on.

They began to gather into church teachings things to make Christianity a little more palatable to the philosophers of the time. They brought in something of Plato's doctrines, something from the philosophies of the Orient, they brought in dualism, and they mixed up with it a little Christianity and in reaction created the cult and the beliefs known as Montanism. Imperceptibly they went away. Why did they go? Because they were trying to satisfy the thought and the philosophy and the reasoning of men, in order that they might have their support and probably their praise. Thus came Gnosticism. Montanism was an attempted return to the early principles of the gospel. Out of the two, with other doctrines of philosophy and thought which came in, were developed the Christian beliefs and practices that were finally established with headquarters at Rome.

WARNING AGAINST CHANGES IN ESTABLISHED ORDER OF CHURCH

There is a deep lesson in all of that for us today. Already there are coming in amongst us doctrines that have no part or place in the pure doctrines of the restored gospel. These heresies are creeping in insidiously. They come to us from the philosophies of men, in no small part from the philosophies of the Christian scholars of the day. They make our doctrines, as they made the early Christian beliefs, more palatable to our philosophers, but so surely as they destroyed the Christian church in the early days, just so surely will they destroy us if we do not stop them where they are.

It is easy to see, too, how the early Christian church got away from the simple practices that the Lord established and that his apostles followed with.

I want to say a word particularly to you brethren and sisters who come from long distances, you who are in the outlying areas of the Church, surrounded as you are by the mass of the people who do not believe as you believe; you are subject to their influences, their social contacts, their habits, and their customs. You find inevitably that they try to lead you away, and you, being human, must struggle not to be led. Preserve, I say to you, brethren and sisters, the simplicity of our rites, few as they are, and our ceremonies. Do not begin to introduce elaborate dress and pageantry in connection with the administration of the sacrament. I would amaze you if I should tell you how far it is reported some have gone.

Please do not say to us: "You do not understand, you are up here, and we are away in these great, metropolitan areas, and you do not know our problems." Well, some of us do. Some of us have lived in great metropolitan areas. There is no area in which, for example, the sacrament may not be simply administered. Yours is not a peculiar situation, unknown.

Again: you do sometimes have long distances to go to reach your meetings, but so have the people in many, many rural areas in this state, the state to the south, and the state to the north. They get along, and so can you. Do not try to get into the position where you can get through with all of your worship in a couple of hours on Sunday morning. Do not do that. The point I hope you are getting is: do not try to change the established order of the Church to suit what seems to you to be a peculiar situation of your own. You are not dissimilar, you are the same, and if you change and someone else changes to suit his convenience and his peculiar situation, and then someone else, somewhere else, and so on, we shall come to a time when our unity not only of observance, but of faith, will cease.

I plead with you, my brethren and sisters, hold fast to the iron rod.

You will never make a mistake by following the instructions and the counsel of him who stands at the head as God's mouthpiece on earth.

May the Lord give us faith and strength, may he give us determination, may we be valiant, may we have courage, may we live always simply, may we worship God in our hearts, not merely ceremony; may we be in truth his people, I humbly pray in the name of Jesus Christ. Amen.

PRESIDENT GEORGE ALBERT SMITH

President J. Reuben Clark, of the First Presidency of the Church, has just spoken to you and it now falls to my lot as your presiding officer to say a few closing words as we finish this conference.

Nobody could stand where I am and look into the eager, upturned faces of a congregation such as this and not be impressed with the responsibility that attaches to counseling and advising such a remarkable group of people.

BLESSINGS ENJOYED BY THE SAINTS

The world is in a ferment. The conditions of the world in many places are anything but desirable, and yet we are permitted to meet together today, in peace, in this glorious weather, on this block that is so delightfully beautified. We are permitted to live here in the fresh air of these grand valleys and mountains, unafraid of any impending danger. What a grateful people we ought to be! When I think of the comforts and the blessings and opportunities, that have come into my life, because my forebears accepted the gospel of Jesus Christ and went through all kinds of undesirable and uncomfortable experiences in order that they might be permitted to worship God according to the dictates of their conscience, I am most grateful to my Heavenly Father.

No other country in the world is as blessed as this country. The Lord himself raised up the men to prepare the Constitution under which we live. Free opportunity to serve God, untrammled, has been vouchsafed to us by that Constitution, and the people of the United States of America, who have continued to honor God and keep his commandments, have retained an understanding of the purpose of life and a faith that is worth more than all of the wealth of the world.

THE CHURCH OF JESUS CHRIST

We in this Church, are only a handful of people. There are many churches in the world, many in the United States, which bear the names of the men who organized them, such as the Wesleyan Methodist Church, and others. Great and good men have come forward and sought to improve the conditions of the people, and the country in which they lived. We have the peculiar distinction of belonging to a Church that does not have the name of any man, because it was not organized by the wisdom of any man. It was named by the Father of us all in honor of his Beloved Son, Jesus Christ.

I would like to suggest to you, my brothers and sisters, that we honor the name of the Church. It is not the church of James and John, it is not the church of Moroni, nor is it the church of Mormon. It is the Church of Jesus Christ. And while all these men were wonderful and notable characters, we have been directed to worship God in a church that bears the name of his Beloved Son. I wish that our young people as they grow up would keep that fact in mind. We have become so accustomed to being called the Mormon Church by all our friends and neighbors throughout the world, that many people do not know the proper name of the Church, and I think the Lord would expect us to let them know that.

In all these churches there are good men and good women. It is the good that is in these various denominations that holds them together. It has been my privilege to be with people in many parts of the world and to be in the homes of many people of the various denominations of the world, both Christian and Jew. I have been with the Mohammedans; I have been with those who believe in Confucius; and I might mention a good many others. I have found wonderful people in all these organizations, and I have the tremendous responsibility wherever I go among them, that I shall not offend them, not hurt their feelings, not criticize them, because they do not understand the truth.

As representatives of the Church we have the responsibility to go among them with love, as servants of the Lord, as representatives of the Master of heaven and earth. They may not altogether appreciate that; they may resent that as being egotistical and unfair, but that would not change my attitude. I am not going to make them unhappy if I can help it. I would like to make them happy, especially when I think of the marvelous opportunities that have come to me because of membership in this blessed Church.

THE SAVIOR'S MINISTRY

Today, in many parts of the world, people are worshipping God in the way that they have been trained to worship. The people of the great nation of China worship, as they believe, in a way that will be pleasing to the Creator, if they understand that we had a Creator. And so do many others. That was also true in the days of Jesus of Nazareth. When he came into the world, there were many denominations. There were people scattered in different parts of the world that did not believe in the God of Abraham, Isaac, and Jacob. When Christ came to instruct the people, he told them that there must be faith in God and righteousness in life or they would not please our Heavenly Father. And so the Savior of the world came with kindness and love. He went among the people healing the sick, unstopping the ears of the deaf, and restoring sight to those who were blind. They saw these things done by the power of God. Comparatively few of them could understand or believe that he was the Son of God, but what he did was in kindness and patience and love and forbearance. Yet his experience was such that upon one occasion he said:

. . . Foxes have holes, and the birds of the air have nests; but the Son of man hath not where to lay his head. (Matt. 8:20.)

That was your Savior and mine, in his own world, if you will, in the world belonging to his Father. All that was here belonged to God and yet his only Begotten Son in the flesh had to call the attention of his associates to the fact that with all his majesty and his royalty, he still must live like other men. And when the time came for him to die, and be hung upon the cross, and cruelly tortured by those of his own people, his own race, he did not become angry, he did not resent the unkindness.

When the one thief on the cross railed against him, the other thief called attention to the fact that they were only receiving their just deserts, while here was a righteous man being unjustly punished. The one thief prayed, as best he knew how to pray, and the Savior of the world said to this man who was suspended alongside him on another cross:

. . . To day shalt thou be with me in paradise. (Luke 23:43.)

The people of the world do not understand some of these things, and particularly, many men can not understand how the Savior felt when in the agony of his soul, he cried to his Heavenly Father, not to condemn and destroy these who were taking his mortal life, but he said:

. . . Father, forgive them; for they know not what they do. (Luke 23:34.)

That should be the attitude of all of the members of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints. That should be the attitude of all the sons and daughters of God and would be, it seems to me, if they fully understood the plan of salvation. But it has remained for a little group, the group to which you and I belong, to call the attention of our Father's other children, day by day, to the fact that anger and hatred in our hearts will not bring us peace and happiness. So it is our privilege, possessing divine authority that has been conferred again in our day, to go into the world and teach men the message of the Savior that would have redeemed the world if people had accepted it.

This world might have been free from its distresses long ago if the children of men had accepted the advice of him who gave his all, as far as mortal life is concerned, that we might live again.

Christ answered those who asked him which was the greatest of all the commandments:

. . . Thou shalt love the Lord thy God with all thy heart. . . .
And the second is like unto it, Thou shalt love thy neighbour as thyself.
(Matt. 22:37, 39.)

That is the spirit of the Redeemer and that is the spirit all Latter-day Saints should seek to possess if they hope some day to stand in his presence and receive at his hands a glorious welcome home.

THE TRUTH TO BE PREACHED

When I think of the opportunities that the Lord has offered to us! One of the most difficult problems that we have had has been to carry this gospel to the nations of the earth. Hundreds, yes, thousands of our fellows have gone, in many cases without purse and without scrip, to the islands of the sea and to the nations of the earth, and to what end? To say unto our Father's other children: "The gospel has been restored again." The scriptures indicated that a true knowledge of the gospel would be lost; that the time was to come when men would run to and fro in the earth, seeking the word of God and not find it. It is our privilege and has been that of our forebears to say to mankind: "The time has come when the truth may be found. Surely you can see that the manner and form of worship that the people have been following all through the ages has not succeeded in bringing peace and happiness. Now, why not listen to the Lord."

Our missionaries have gone out and have said to the children of men:

"A humble boy, believing the Bible after he had read it, believing that there was a God who could hear and answer prayers, went out and knelt down in the woods near his home in the state of New York, and prayed unto the Lord, asking guidance. This boy had read in the scriptures where the Lord had said:

If any of you lack wisdom, let him ask of God, that giveth to all men liberally, and upbraideth not; and it shall be given him. (James 1:5.)

And so this boy, not yet fifteen years of age, because of his implicit faith in the promises of our Heavenly Father, had the heavens opened to him and God the Father and God the Son appeared and instructed him as to what he should do. Although a youth, he was older than the Savior of the world when His parents lost Him. When they found Jesus in the temple, they chided him because they had been delayed. It was at twelve years of age that Jesus said to his parents:

... wist ye not that I must be about my Father's business. (Luke 2:49.)

So, it is not surprising that a boy fifteen years of age, if he were inspired by the Lord, should desire to know what he should do.

Joseph Smith was able, notwithstanding the opposition of the adversary of all righteousness and all his emissaries, to face the contumely and hatred of a wicked world and finally he gave his life as a testimony of the truth of the gospel of our Lord that had been restored in its fulness to the earth.

The Church began with only six members. It has grown day by day in spite of the opposition of the adversary. But for the powerful arm of righteousness, but for the watchcare of our Heavenly Father, this Church would have been crushed like a shell long ago. However, the Lord has said that he would safeguard us, and has promised us protection if we will honor him and keep his commandments. The Church in its early existence moved from place to place, and finally was driven through the wilderness and came out into this western land and established itself here, by the blessing of God, in a land then so undesirable that other people did not think they could live here and develop a satisfactory community. We can now see the results. Our forebears had the same faith that led the children of Israel out of Egypt and into the Promised Land, the same faith that led the Pilgrim Fathers across the mighty deep to the land choice above all other lands, the same faith that inspired the men who wrote the Constitution of the United States, the same faith that characterized the lives of the Hebrew prophets, who one by one were willing to give their lives in order that they might maintain their standards and continue the teaching of the gospel that the Lord had given to them. When we think of some of the prophets and the experiences through which they passed, it is marvelous.

ELIJAH AND THE PROPHETS OF BAAL

I have in mind now, the prophet Elijah who said to the people: Build two altars and let one be for God and the other for Baal. Then let us put the offering that is customary on each altar.

And call ye on the name of your gods, and I will call on the name of the Lord: and the God that answereth by fire, let him be God. . . .
(1 Kings 18:24.)

The priests of Baal were challenged by the true prophet of God, and so they called to Baal to send down fire from heaven, and they continued to cry. Elijah said: Cry aloud, perhaps he is asleep, or he may have gone on a journey. And when these men, these priests of Baal, who had been leading Israel astray, discovered their helplessness, it is said they jumped upon the altar, and they gashed themselves with knives. Then, Elijah, the true prophet of God, said: Father in Heaven, in order that the people may know that thou art God, wilt thou send fire down from heaven and consume the offering that is on the altar that has been built to thee. And not only were the altar and the offering consumed, but the water that had been poured over the offering to prevent its being easily burned was licked up, and the people stood there to find that of the hundreds of men claiming divine authority, there was only one man that God would recognize.

TEACHINGS OF JOSEPH SMITH

Now, when Joseph Smith, just a youth, announced that he had seen the Father and the Son, it appeared ridiculous to many people. They had been taught that it was not possible for the Lord to appear to the children of men, that such manifestations were past and that the Bible contained all the information that was necessary. But the boy prophet knew because he had seen the Father and the Son. Knowing that it was not some imaginary thing, he continued his work, and under the direction of the Lord, organized the Church. Then our Heavenly Father sent holy beings to confer upon him divine authority, which had been lost to the world, as we read in the scriptures that it was to be lost to the world. There came John the Baptist who conferred the Aaronic Priesthood, and there came Peter, James, and John who conferred the Melchizedek Priesthood. These four men had lived upon the earth and offered their lives in testimony of the divine mission of Jesus Christ. When the time came for them to come and bring back the authority of the priesthood, they were not maimed and bruised as a result of the handling they had received by wicked men, but they were immortal, glorified, resurrected beings, who came to the earth and thereby established in the mind of the boy prophet, Joseph Smith, the truth that there was in reality a literal resurrection from the dead.

And may I say that there are comparatively few people in all the world who understand that there will be a resurrection. The Lord has again revealed this in our day. He has impressed it upon us and has given us to understand that when the time comes for that resurrection, if we are worthy that we will be quickened celestial bodies, and from then on, we will dwell in the celestial kingdom, the highest of all kingdoms. But he has taught us also that there are other places where we may go. If we don't want to go to the celestial kingdom, by being less careful and particular about keeping the commandments of God, we may go into the terrestrial kingdom, and if we are still more careless, we may find our way into the telestial kingdom, which is the least of the kingdoms of glory.

There are some people who have supposed that if we are quickened telestial bodies that eventually, throughout the ages of eternity, we will continue to progress until we will find our place in the celestial kingdom, but the scriptures and revelations of God have said that those who are quickened telestial bodies cannot come where God and Christ dwell, worlds without end.

The gospel of Jesus Christ was given to the world to prepare us for a kingdom that we would not be prepared for with any other gospel. And so the truth has come in our day. How thankful we ought to be to our Heavenly Father for that truth, how patient we ought to be with one another. How grateful we ought to be to those who have been willing to teach us the truth, and how willing we ought to be to keep our bodies clean and undefiled by the wicked things of life, knowing that we have been created in the image of God and that he expects us to take care of these bodies and keep them pure.

A HAPPY HOME LIFE

These are some of the thoughts that have come into my mind this afternoon as I have looked into the faces of this wonderful audience. I am grateful for the association and companionship of such as are here today.

I thank my Heavenly Father that I was born in this day and age of the world, and that I was blessed with goodly parentage that I might begin my earth life under favorable circumstances, for I want to say to you that I never knew anything wrong to happen in my father's home. There were always peace, happiness, and love; the rules of the Church were observed, and family prayers were as regular as our meals. While we did not have very much sometimes, we thanked God for what we had and it was sweet to the taste and sufficient to take care of us. When my father passed away, he left two families of children, and two mothers of those children. His life had been such that if there had been any problem among us, any question as to what should be done with reference to his affairs, all that was necessary for us was to say, as we united together, we will do whatever father would have done. We knew how fair and just and honorable he was, and so our problems were never difficult of solution, and we have lived together in the bonds of love, just as all the people of the Church should live. The gospel teaches us to love our neighbor as ourselves, and if we will do that, we will not be distressed, we will not have our feelings wounded, part of us will not be well-to-do while others are living in poverty. If we love our neighbor as ourselves, we will all do our full part, and our Heavenly Father has promised us his blessings in return.

RESPONSIBILITY TOWARDS OTHERS

Let me say I realize the great responsibility that is upon my shoulders. I know that without the help of our Heavenly Father, the organization with which we are identified cannot be successful. No man or group of men can make it successful, but if the members of this Church will continue to keep the commandments of God, live their religion, set an example to the world, love their neighbor as themselves, we will go forward, and increasing happiness will flow to us.

Today as I stand here I realize that in this city, in the Catholic Church, the Presbyterian Church, the Methodist, the Baptist, the Episcopalian, and the other churches, I have brothers and sisters that I love. They are all my Father's children. He loves them and he expects me and he expects you to let our light so shine that these other sons and daughters of his, seeing our good works, will be constrained to accept all the truth, not a little part of it, but accept all the truth of the gospel of Jesus Christ our Lord. Think what a marvelous opportunity we have! Think what a blessing it will be if we do our part here, as we stand on the other side of the Great Divide, when our Father shall summon his great family together as he shall, to have these wonderful men and women, hundreds and thousands of them who have been our neighbors, and who have watched our lives, stand there and say: "Father in Heaven, we owe it to these thy children of the humble organization that bears the name of thy Son, we owe it to them that we have understood the truth and that we are here at the supper of the Lamb." That is our privilege, and our blessing.

Let us not complain at our friends and our neighbors, because they do not do what we want them to do. Rather let us love them into doing the things that our Heavenly Father would have them do. We can do that, and we cannot win their confidence or their love in any other way.

PRAYERS FOR LEADERS OF OUR COUNTRY

Fortunate are we to live in this great land of America. Fortunate are we to have had raised up from time to time great men to preside over the nation. I want to tell you that we can influence them, and we can help them, if from the depths of our hearts we will pray to the Lord to give them wisdom to carry on and not be swayed by the foolishness and avarice and wickedness of many of those who dwell in this land. It is your duty and mine to remember in our prayers the President of the United States of America, to remember the men who represent us in the Congress of the United States, to remember the executives of the states of the nation, and to pray for them that they may have divine aid. They are God's sons, every one of them, and he wants them saved and exalted. It will be our responsibility, with the added information that has been bestowed upon us, to carry the message to them in love, not in criticism and faultfinding, but with love in our hearts. And I want to say to you, I am sure we will win many of them to an understanding of the truth, and they will bless us forever.

HUMILITY EXPRESSED

I know that there are many problems and there will be greater problems as the days come and go, but the same Father in heaven that led the Children of Israel, that saved Daniel and the three Hebrew children from destruction, the same Heavenly Father that preserved our forebears that came into this western land and established them here, and blessed them and made it possible in the poverty of the people to have this great temple and other great temples, and houses of worship like this, that same Father, your Father and mine, is ready to pour out his blessings upon us today.

Let us evidence our faith; let us evidence our belief; let us set the example day by day, that no one shall be kept out of the Church because of any conduct of ours.

I thank you for the confidence that has been manifested, my brothers and my sisters, in hoping that I may succeed, and promising as some of you have, that you will help me to succeed, because I am only a man, one of the humblest among you, but I have been called to this service—and I would not be here if I did not know I had been called—by the authority of our Heavenly Father. I will need the help of every man and every woman and every child, not for my blessing, but for your blessing, and for the blessing of the children of men wherever they may be. That is not my responsibility, that is our responsibility.

A FERVENT TESTIMONY

I know that God lives. I know that Jesus is the Christ. I know that Joseph Smith was a prophet of the living God, as I know that I stand here and talk to you. I realize, however, when I make that statement, that it would be a serious thing if it were not true, and there are those who will question its truth, but I have no question in my mind. If I did not know it were true, I would not dare to make that kind of statement to you or to anybody else, for in the not-far-distant future, in the natural course of events, we will all stand before the bar of God, and this man who is talking to you will stand there to answer for the things that he has said and done in life. Knowing that, and realizing the seriousness of saying that which is not true, and that if I have falsified I would lose my blessings, in love and kindness, I want to bear this testimony to you, my brethren and sisters who are here, to those who may be listening in, and to those whom I may meet from time to time, that I know these things are true, and I know that the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints possesses divine authority and is guided by the Father of us all, and knowing that, in love and in humility, I bear you my witness that these things are true, in the name of Jesus Christ, our Lord. Amen.

President George Albert Smith:

The Tabernacle Choir will now sing "Hosanna," by Stephens.

The closing prayer will be offered by President Thomas M. Wheeler of the Sugarhouse Stake of Zion, after which this Conference will be adjourned.

Again let us suggest to you that in the crowded condition of our city you drive carefully, not too fast, and walk carefully, and be watchful as you cross the streets.

The Tabernacle Choir sang "Hosanna," by Stephens.

The benediction was offered by President Thomas M. Wheeler of the Sugar House Stake.

Conference adjourned.

The congregational singing was directed by J. Spencer Cornwall.

Sunday, October 7Third Day

Conductor, and Richard P. Condie, Assistant Conductor, of the Tabernacle Choir.

The Tabernacle Choir was in attendance at the Saturday afternoon and Sunday morning and afternoon sessions and presented musical numbers at those meetings. The Tabernacle Choir male chorus was present at the Priesthood meeting and rendered musical numbers on that occasion. The Relief Society Singing Mothers of the Salt Lake stakes, Florence J. Madsen, Director, were present at the Friday morning and afternoon meetings and rendered musical numbers for those sessions. The Wasatch Ward Choir (Sugar House Stake) rendered special numbers at the Saturday morning meeting.

The music of the Tabernacle Choir and Organ broadcast was directed by J. Spencer Cornwall, Alexander Schreiner was at the Organ, and the Spoken Word was by Richard L. Evans.

Accompaniments and interludes on the great organ were played by Alexander Schreiner and Frank W. Asper.

Stenographic notes of the Conference were taken by Frank W. Otterstrom and Joseph Anderson.

Joseph Anderson,
Clerk of the Conference.

DANIEL HANMER WELLS

AND EVENTS OF HIS TIME

By Bryant S. Hinckley

As the polished facets of a diamond flash back brilliantly the rainbow of colors from the light which plays upon them, so do certain historic characters reflect the light and color of their times.

Daniel Hammer Wells was one of these.

Bryant S. Hinckley, always illuminating and inspirational, turns the spot light of appraisal and appreciation upon a distinctive character in the great drama of Mormon history.

This book is in fact a new approach to the study of Church History. It offers the events of the history of Mormonism as one of the principal actors saw them happen and as he acted in, and was acted upon by them.

The book is a biography and more, a tribute of appreciation and more—it is a history throbbing with the pulse beats of great personalities as they struggle through one crisis after another.

His life ran the long span which included actively within it labors of love for and loyalty to every man who has been president of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints.

Daniel H. Wells saw it all happen: The rise of the Church in the Middle West; the glory of Nauvoo; the catastrophe of the martyrdom; the pain, travail, and power of pioneering; the building of the West; the crises of pre-statehood days; and the long, hard pull which finally established the Mormon people on the heights where they are now building.

Published privately by President Heber J. Grant, as a tribute to the loyal friend of his youth, it will stand as a welcome addition to the faith-promoting literature of the Church.

FIRST DAY

MORNING MEETING

Conference commenced Friday morning, April 5, with President George Albert Smith presiding and conducting the exercises.

Every available seat in the Tabernacle was occupied.

PRESIDENT GEORGE ALBERT SMITH

This is the opening session of the 116th Annual Conference of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints. We are convened in the Tabernacle on Temple Square in Salt Lake City. There are on the stand this morning all the General Authorities of the Church except Elder Ezra Taft Benson of the Council of the Twelve, who is in Europe in charge of the European Mission, and Elder Matthew Cowley, also of the Council of the Twelve, who is at home in obedience to his physician.

Elder Joseph Anderson is the clerk of the Conference.

This full service will be broadcast over Station KSL, Salt Lake City, as also the service this afternoon beginning at 2:00 p.m. The services tomorrow, Saturday, at 10:00 a.m. and 2:00 p.m. and 7:00 p.m., will also be likewise broadcast over KSL, also the two services on Sunday at 10:00 a.m. and 2:00 p.m. These same services will be broadcast over KSUB at Cedar City and KID at Idaho Falls. The session on Saturday at 2:00 p.m. will also be broadcast over KXFD at Nampa, Idaho.

The singing will be by the Relief Society Singing Mothers of the Salt Lake Region. Sister Florence Jepperson Madsen is the conductor, and Elder Frank W. Asper is the organist.

The first song will be "Come, Thou Glorious Day of Promise."

The opening prayer will be offered by President Virgil Smith of the Liberty Stake, Salt Lake City.

The Relief Society Singing Mothers sang the hymn, "Come, Thou Glorious Day of Promise."

Elder Virgil Smith, President of the Liberty Stake, offered the invocation.

Selection by the Relief Society Singing Mothers, "O Savior of the World."

PRESIDENT GEORGE ALBERT SMITH

This audience this morning would be an inspiration to any thoughtful person in the world. As I stand and look at your faces and realize that the house is filled to capacity, (at least there are people standing in various parts of the building who have not yet obtained seats) and this on a busy weekday when so many people are occupied with other affairs and unable to leave their homes, I know that this fine attendance indicates a faith that is commendable.

THE UPLIFT OF MUSIC

I am sure we have been uplifted by the glorious music of our Singing Mothers this morning, representing the greatest women's organization in all the world given to the work of charity and uplifting womankind. This group this morning who have just sung to us represent this particular region; and if you were to travel in different parts of the world, even into the South Seas, you would find a group of Singing Mothers in the various missions of the Church, who sing the same music that we sing here, but the hymns have been translated into their own languages, and they rejoice in singing praises to our Heavenly Father.

I wonder if there are any people in all the world who have as great reason to be thankful as this group assembled here this morning. Coming from various parts of the world, various mission fields are represented by those who have gathered for conference; many of you have come a long way to be present this morning.

SAFETY OF HAWAIIAN MISSIONARIES

For the comfort of those who are here or who may be listening in who have missionary representatives in the Hawaiian Islands, we are pleased to inform you that this morning we received a cablegram from Hawaii to the effect that while there has been considerable damage wrought by the recent tidal wave, much destruction of property, and some loss of life among our members all the missionaries are reported safe.

THE WAY FOR PEACE

With the confusion and uncertainty that exist everywhere, surely we are blessed who are permitted to assemble under this spacious roof this morning in worship. What a privilege it is to live in an age of the world when we know that God lives, when we know that Jesus Christ is the Savior of the world and our Redeemer, and when we know that the Lord continues to manifest himself to his children who have prepared themselves to receive his blessings! I am looking into the faces of a great audience this morning, most of whom enjoy the inspiration of the Almighty, and when they pray, they pray to their Father in heaven knowing that their prayers will be answered in blessings upon their heads. We live in a day when the scripture is being fulfilled among the nations wherein the Lord said through one of his prophets, that in the latter-day, "... the wisdom of their wise men shall perish, and the understanding of their prudent men shall be hid." (Isaiah 29:14.) With all the wisdom of the world, no group thus far has been able to point the way for peace with the certainty that it is the way. We who are assembled here this morning are fortunate to know that there is a way for peace that alone will produce results, and that way is to keep the commandments of God as revealed to the children of men anciently and in our day. If that way were followed, all the problems that are so serious in the world could be solved, and peace would come to this unhappy earth.

DIVINE WATCHCARE

So, this morning, under the influence of prayer, coming as we have come to wait upon the Lord, surely his promise will be fulfilled to us that when even two or three shall meet together in his name, he will be there to bless them. What a comfort it is to realize that there is no mistake about it, that we are the children of our Heavenly Father, that he does love us, and because of his anxiety for our peace and welfare, in our day, sent another prophet to restore the gospel of Jesus Christ and to place in the Church divine authority, that men, as of ancient times, may hold the priesthood and officiate in the ordinances of the gospel of our Lord. No other people have that assurance as we have it. I do not say boastfully, but gratefully, that we know there is a God in heaven, that he is our Father, that he does interest himself in our affairs, and he has done that ever since the world began, when his first children were placed upon the earth.

One of his prophets long ago made the statement, and it has been fulfilled literally, "Surely the Lord God will do nothing, but he revealeth his secret unto his servants, the prophets." All the important things that have happened in the world up to now have been foretold by the servants of the Lord, and the things that are oc-curing and that will occur that are important will be revealed, if they have not already been, before those things occur. I think it is marvelous to know how close we are to our Heavenly Father, and I also think it is deplorable that some of us do not appreciate how near he is, for the reason that we have failed to measure up in many cases to his wise counsels.

A CHOICE LAND

We live in the most wonderful land in all the world, "... a land which is choice above all other lands," ((Ether 2:10) so stated by a prophet. Advantages are enjoyed by the people in this great western hemisphere, and particularly in the United States of America and Canada—opportunities and blessings that are not known in many parts of the world. We are permitted to worship God according to the dictates of our consciences. We can make our adjustments according to his rules and regulations and not be interfered with by those who are godless and who are anti-Christ in their attitude toward the human family. So this morning I feel that I am talking to a great family. We are all brothers and sisters. We are here to worship. This is not merely a convention. This is a conference of the representatives of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints, who have come from their homes into this edifice which has been rendered sacred by those who have spoken from this very pulpit and who have assembled here ever since this building was constructed. It was erected in the poverty of the people, and no other place like it may be found in all the world. Often when it is vacant there is a spirit here that you will find in few places in the world. Many people have come here on a busy weekday as tourists, and as they have come under the shadow of this roof and looked through the building and have seen this great organ, with everything quiet, many of them have been moved to tears by the inspiration and influence that they have found here.

THE BLESSING OF LIFE

We are here as sons and daughters of the Living God, trying to work our way through life until we shall be worthy of an exaltation in the celestial kingdom. What a privilege it is! Oh, how I hope we appreciate it this morning and will continue to appreciate it as long as we live upon the earth! I hope that during the sessions of conference we may all come prepared to be fed the bread of life. I hope that we will come with a prayer in our hearts that those who address us may be inspired, that they may draw the inspiration necessary from our Heavenly Father to feed his flock. If we shall do that, when conference has been concluded, and the last prayer has been offered, there will return to our homes in the valleys of these everlasting hills and in the other states and territories and missions represented here, men and women who have realized fully and completely that we waited upon our Heavenly Father and he did not disappoint us.

PRAYER AND BLESSING

It is not my purpose to talk long this morning. I greet you and welcome you on behalf of the Church and say to you, it is a joy to look into your faces and be with you to worship and wait upon the Lord, with the assurance that he will hear and answer the prayers that have already been offered and that will continue to be offered, not only by those who speak audibly but by those who come here with a prayer in their hearts. I pray that the Spirit of the Lord may be in our homes and abiding places, that there may go out from this great conference influences that shall enrich the lives of those present and absent, that day by day we may let our light so shine that others seeing our good works will be constrained to glorify the name of our Heavenly Father.

I pray that his Spirit may be here in rich abundance this day that we many partake of its influence and be instructed and informed under that power that will enrich our lives and give us a feeling of gratitude that we are able to be here this morning, and that the Lord may add his blessing and his peace to be upon you and our Father's sons and daughters everywhere.

How I pray in my soul this morning in your hearing that the President of the United States and those who are working with him may live in such a way that the power of the Lord will be with them, that they may not be misled but that they may so adjust affairs at the seat of government that the people of this nation will be blessed because of their desire to honor God and keep his commandments, and that these and all other blessings may be ours.

I am thinking this morning of our poor people in the various war-torn countries. We hear almost daily from some source from people who have not enough food to nourish their bodies as they should be nourished, people who are wearing the same clothing they wore when the war broke out and have no way of replacing it, people whose homes have been blown to bits by bombs and destroyed by the great war. Those people this morning, many of them, knowing where we are, are praying that they too may be inspired. We are blessed, brethren and sisters, and I pray that we may appreciate our blessings and live to be worthy of them, in the name of Jesus Christ. Amen.

President George Albert Smith:

It has been customary to read the financial statement here in this meeting, and President J. Rueben Clark, Jr. will now read that statement to you and make such explanation as he may see fit.

President J. Reuben Clark Jr.:

My brothers and sisters: Figures are never very interesting, though I am bound to say they are more interesting when they indicate prosperity, the use of funds in a proper way, for proper purposes, than they are at other times. I might say to begin with that so far as the expenditure of the tithing is concerned, this has been under a budget which is set up and passed upon by a Committee on the Disposition of Tithes consisting of the First Presidency, the Quorum of the Twelve, and the Presiding Bishopric. This is in accordance with the revelations of the Lord, as you will find it in Section 120 which was given at Farr West on July 8, 1838.

After that Committee has passed a budget, then the expenditure under the budget is directed and approved by a Committee on Expenditures made up of the First Presidency, a committee from the Twelve, and the Presiding Bishopric. They pass upon every cent that is covered by the budget. The budget also covers the expenditure of some funds, as you will see, which do not come from the tithes but come from other resources. All of our accounts are audited, and to the glory of this people may it be said that the misappropriation of funds is microscopic in amount and effects. I should suppose, one-tenth perhaps of 1%, perhaps not so much as that, of all the peoples who handle the funds in this Church.

NOTE: This December 31, 1945, inventory is not included in the grand totals of expenditures already given; the amounts distributed during the year are included.

Activities of the Program during 1945. Canning and Processing for Storehouse Program:

Vegetables, Fruits, Jams and Spreads .....	375,822 quarts (494,457 cans)
Meat, Fish, and Fowl .....	20,286 pounds ( 21,076 cans)
Milk, canned (each can equivalent to one quart of fresh milk) .....	57,120 cans
Miscellaneous Food (Spices, Flavoring, etc.) ....	10,439 pounds
Flour, Cereals and Livestock Feeds .....	1,630,600 pounds

NOTE: Of these quantities, there remained on hand December 31, 1945, the inventory of that date given above; the balance was distributed.

Group Canning:

The following canning was done at Welfare canneries for their own use by 497 groups, consisting of 35,556 people:

Fruits and Vegetables .....	377,516 quarts (565,309 cans)
Meat and Fish .....	17,294 pounds ( 20,315 cans)
	(585,624 cans)

NOTE: No account of this production is taken in any of the figures and totals given above.

At this point it might be stated that as careful an estimate as can be made indicates that the members of the Church in all parts of the country, covering 122,886 families, processed in their homes last year a minimum of 40,399,794 quarts of fruits and vegetables and 4,039,977 cans of meats and vegetables—this is in addition to the group canning done in our Welfare canneries in the amounts just given (585,624 cans). The public stock piles were thus relieved of a great load. We urge our people everywhere to produce and process the maximum amounts possible during this canning season, both to provide for themselves as fully as may be, so relieving the public stock piles by just that much so that more can be sent to the suffering millions in Europe, and next so that they may have enough to share some of their own stocks with their brothers and sisters in Europe and elsewhere who may be in want.

Field Activities:

Field activities carried on in the production of the 1945 Welfare Budget include 682 crop projects, cultivating of 2,471 acres of land; 206 livestock projections, which produced 474 head of livestock, 8,735 chickens, 687 rabbits, and 91 stands of bees.

In addition to the work done on these projects, 12,168 man days of donated work were done in the storehouses and processing plants.

For purposes other than the production of the budget for the bishops' storehouse program, there were 113 crop projects, 13 livestock projects, and 90 manufacturing projects operated during 1945. These projects utilized 632 acres of land and produced 24 head of livestock.

Assistance Rendered:

There have been from 17,913 to 55,460 persons assisted through the bishops' storehouse program each year since 1938. In 1945 there were 30,937 persons so assisted.

During this period more than 952 families have been helped to become self-supporting; 7,059 persons have been assisted in other ways; and 1,629 construction projects have been completed in addition to the construction for the bishops' storehouse program.

Welfare Meetings Being Held:

Of the 145 stakes reporting, 111 hold Stake Welfare Committee meetings monthly or oftener; 23 hold them less frequently; and 11 are not holding any meetings. Of the 1,219 wards reported, 135 hold weekly Ward Welfare Committee meetings; 505 hold them less frequently; and 579 are not holding any meetings.

Persons Taken from Government Relief Rolls:

During 1943, 215 persons; during 1944, 492 persons; and during 1945, 633 persons (total 1,340 persons) have been removed from government relief rolls. Of this number 525 have been rehabilitated and are receiving no aid from the Church; 537 are receiving part of their support from the Church; and 278 are receiving all their needs from the Church.

Clothing Collected and Food and Clothing Shipped to Saints in European Missions:

From October 29, 1945, to March 20, 1946, 339,940 pounds of good used clothing were collected, sorted and boxed for shipment to Saints in European missions. In this same time 14,353 parcel post packages of clothing and bedding (143,530 pounds) were mailed for distribution to 6,872 Saints residing in the Belgian, Czechoslovakian, Danish, French, Netherlands, Norwegian and Swedish (Finnish section) Missions. This amounts to 21 pounds per person.

Between February 15 and March 20, 1946, 5 freight carloads of food and 3 of clothing have been shipped to the Netherlands and Norwegian Missions. The 5 cars of food contain 144,696 cans of fruits and vegetables, 10,750 pounds of cracked wheat, and 12,816 pounds of beans. The value of the contents of the 8 cars is $83,225.00. The cost of all parcel post and bulk shipments (including cost of packing boxes) is $33,087.00.

Emergency Activity:

During the year the Welfare Program successfully met one major individual problem, involving a catastrophe similar to the Arizona problem in 1942 when the Gila River had a great flood. On August 19, 1945, in the late evening a rain fall of cloudburst proportions fell on the foothills that lie to the northeast of Salt

Friday, April 5

First Day

Lake City. A destructive flood resulted that ran through the Salt Lake Cemetery and then southward where it filled basements, covered lawns, destroyed gardens, and left a barren silt covering everything over which the water flowed. The area affected was in Emigration Stake. Four wards were involved. The Stake and Ward Welfare Committees assumed responsibility for the work of cleaning up the area. The homes of members and non-members were cared for. The Welfare organizations of neighboring stakes came to help. One hundred fifty yards and sixty basements were involved, in addition to street parkings and alleys. Before the work was finally completed several furnaces and water heating units were dismantled, cleaned, and rebuilt. The Salt Lake City Commissioners undertook the removal of the debris after it had been removed from the homes and gardens. Food, clothing, and furniture were provided where needed. Cash funds required were secured from Ward and Stake Fast and Welfare offerings. Assistance was extended to 38 non-members. The work group on the first evening had 100 men; one work group on one evening had 900 men; neighboring stakes sent 1,250 men, who furnished 2,500 hours of work. Three thousand more men than were needed volunteered to help. All told 8,000 man-hours were used in the project. The Relief Society of the stake and wards provided refreshments for the workers.

We feel this, like the Arizona flood of 1942, is a demonstration of what the Welfare Program can do in cases of dire emergency.

President George Albert Smith:

We have just heard the report of President Clark and if you have been able to absorb it, I think you will take a great deal of information home with you.

I think it would be interesting to recapitulate far enough to say that we have recently shipped a total of  $8\frac{1}{2}$  cars of bedding and clothing from the Welfare Organization and  $9\frac{1}{2}$  cars of food, including meat, and other carloads are going forward from day to day. That was all ready to go when the time came for it to be used, because the Latter-day Saints had been working to preserve the food and the bedding and clothing for those who were about to be in need, and they certainly have been in need now.

The singing Mothers and the congregation sang the hymn, "How Firm a Foundation," Hymn Book page 260, L. D. S. Hymns No. 329)

President George Albert Smith:

Brother Orval W. Adams, one of the Church Auditing Committee will now make the report for that group.

ELDER JOHN A. WIDTSOE

Of the Council of the Twelve Apostles

My brethren and sisters: So far, this has been a very impressive session of the conference. We have heard the voice of the prophet of God. It is a pity for any people not to have a prophet to lead them. For our possession of prophet-leadership we are deeply grateful. We must have felt also very grateful as we heard the statistics read concerning the progress of the Church.

EVENTS OF A CENTURY AGO

My mind has been turned in comparison during this hour from the Church of today to the Church of yesterday. One hundred years ago the evacuation of Nauvoo began. John R. Young writes in his autobiography that one morning in February 1846—he was then about nine years of age—he awoke, dressed, and went down to the yard; there he saw people, some of his own and some strangers, loading the household furniture into two big wagons. He went to his mother and said: "Mother, what does all this mean?" She gathered him into her arms and said, "Son, we are going to leave our home, and we shall never see it again."

As I recall the date, it was about February 4 when the first two families crossed the Mississippi River among the ice floes. One of those families—unless I am very much mistaken—was headed by the great-grandfather of the present President of the Church, John Smith, famous in Church history. A little later, amidst a bitterly cold season, the water froze over the Mississippi; and the people were able then to take their wagons, their horses, and themselves on foot, across the ice on the way to the West. They began what in the history of the world is the greatest adventure of the kind ever known. Between fifteen and twenty thousand persons were moved bodily from a well-established city, in orderly fashion westward to an unknown destination. There were hardships on that trip; there was sickness; there was death; babies were born; but the procession moved onward. Contrast that with our happy surroundings here today: a great people, by the thousands, gathered together peacefully. This remarkable exodus—unique in the history of the world—makes us proud of our heritage. There are hundreds of descendants of the people who made that journey in this congregation today; and all of us are spiritual descendants of that group. We have all accepted the faith that they held. The achievements of these people, one hundred years ago, thrill us as we think back.

They knew in advance, some months before, that the evacuation had to be now. So, in Nauvoo all were busy. Wagons were being built; tires for the wheels were shaped; it was a busy season of preparation for the trip into the unknown West. Yet, in the midst of that labor and anxiety, my brethren and sisters, these people completed, as best they could, the building of the temple in Nauvoo. Eagerly and at any cost, at any sacrifice, the temple of God would have to be completed, sufficiently, at least, to enable these wanderers-to-be to receive their endowments in the holy temple of Almighty God. In fact, they were obliged first to dedicate that temple in part. The upper floor was dedicated first, in November, before the February of the exodus. There, then, many hundreds received their endowments. Later on, just before the presiding brethren left in April, they gathered quietly, privately, to the temple, and dedicated it to Almighty God. That having been done, they left it in the hands of Almighty God. But they brought with them to us, to these valleys of the mountains, and to all the Church thenceforth, as fruits of their labors, all the blessings from the temple, in which we are participants today.

These are thoughts that came to my mind as we heard the splendid address of our President, and the great report of the present condition of the Church.

PROPHECY OF JOSEPH SMITH FULFILLED

At least one prophecy of the Prophet Joseph Smith has been literally fulfilled. When he was not much more than a boy, in the early years of his manhood, before the Church was organized, the Lord said to him:

A great and marvelous work is about to come forth unto the children of men. (D. & C. 6:1.)

Unknown, untaught, with no reputation, he should have been forgotten in the small hamlet, almost nameless, in the backwoods of a great state; but he dared to say that the work that he was doing, under God's instruction, was to become a marvel and a wonder in the world. We know, my brethren and sisters, that whether it be friend or enemy who speaks of us, if he is a sober-thinking, honest man, he will declare that whatever in his opinion the foundations of this work may be—we know the foundations—it is a marvelous work and a wonder, none like it in the long history of the world. The truths set loose by the Prophet Joseph Smith have touched every man of faith throughout the whole civilized world, and measurably changed their beliefs for good.

So they wandered on, these people from Nauvoo. Finally they reached this place. Their settlement here is not our story today.

PIONEERS CERTAIN OF THEIR BELIEFS

One cannot help wondering why amidst all manner of difficulties they undertook the perilous journey over deserts and plains. It would have been so easy to have said, as some few did: "This is paying too big a price. We will remain here. We will say to these enemies: 'Good-bye to Joseph Smith, good-bye to the Church. Why face this extraordinary request made upon us, that we move from civilization into the wilderness?'"

There must have been a good reason for the decision to go on. We know what the reason was. They dared to do what they did, to meet persecution, to meet difficulties, to face death if need be, because they were certain of their belief. There was no doubt about it in their minds. Certainty had removed all hesitation. They knew where they were going—not the identical place, to the Great Salt Lake Valley, where Salt Lake City was to be built—but they knew that God was at the head, that he was leading them to the right place. There was no doubt in their minds about that. They knew that God lives, a God who is anxious to help his children on this earth. They knew the reality of the mission, origin, and ancestry of Jesus Christ. There was no doubt in their minds about the divine mission of the Prophet Joseph Smith. Doubt and fear had fled. They who had doubts remained behind, but they who lived in the spirit of certainty came along.

WORLD NEEDS CERTAINTY TODAY

I wonder, if I may draw my conclusion in a few words, if certainty is not the world's great need today. Read the papers of today, conveying the news of the world to us. Read the articles on philosophy or religion or proposals to set things right in this world today. In them there is no certainty. Men say, "This will do," and other men say, "That will do." There is no unity of understanding, no certainty.

President Smith spoke today of the way to peace. He said: "We know the way to peace." They were the greatest words uttered at this session of the conference or that could be uttered—that we know the way to peace. Latter-day Saints who have sought the light, who have sought to find the truth, who have given themselves to the study and practice of the restored gospel of Jesus Christ, know the proper way of life. There is no doubt or hesitation about the issues of life. Those things have fled. Certainty is the world's great need. From congressional or parliamentary halls, from the halls of leadership everywhere in the world, the great cry issues: "Teach us how to be certain that what we do is right, and for the good of the cause we represent."

The voice of certainty, perhaps the greatest need of the world, is the great message of Mormonism to all people. In the gospel of Jesus Christ are a few simple fundamentals, eternal truths, which, if accepted, may serve as foundation stones of every structure that lead to man's permanent and eternal good.

FAITH OF PIONEERS

These people who crossed Iowa, moving towards Winter Quarters, had lost a prophet. They had been robbed of the man they loved, who had conversed with God, who had been instrumental in organizing the Church, through whom they had been guided. It was a terrible loss; but did they fear? They knew the truth of the gospel of the Lord Jesus. They were certain of its origin. They were certain of the priesthood, with its power and authority. Here was another man, just a plain ordinary man, a painter, glazier, and woodworker, a man highly endowed by nature, but there were others likewise endowed. On this man had been conferred the authority of leadership, even as Joseph the Prophet had it. The followers did not hesitate a moment. God's work is continuous, eternal, and they followed the new leader as they followed Joseph in the days before, and as we will, I hope, follow our leaders today. May I here interject this thought: There has been no diminution of power and leadership in this Church since the days of the Prophet Joseph. The same authority is possessed today as then; and the men who possess that authority in our day are as capable as those of the past in carrying forward the work of the Lord.

Such are the lessons from the past. History is a dead thing unless used as lessons for us of a later day. We think of the events of a hundred years ago. Contrasted with conditions in the Church today, we read lessons in courage and faith to help us in our daily walk before the Lord and before our fellow men.

In conclusion, our great need is to learn how to be sure and certain of the things that pertain to the gospel of the Lord Jesus Christ and be courageous in following them. Certainty is but another name for a part of faith. Without faith we can do nothing; with faith anything may be accomplished. In this the great latter-day kingdom of the Lord, we live and move and have our very being in faith. Our forebears, one hundred years ago, trudged across the plains of Iowa, and beyond, knowing that they were destined, if they obeyed truth, to help build the kingdom of God upon the earth. Let us go forward today with the same faith and certainty. May we feel just as certain as they did that we in this day of many problems, have the same great destiny—to help build the kingdom of God on earth. Make us strong in our labors to complete our destiny. I pray in the name of the Lord Jesus Christ. Amen.

ELDER ORLANDO C. WILLIAMS

Former President of the Spanish American Mission

My brethren and sisters: I was enjoying this Conference immensely and the wonderful spirit that is present here with us. I had no thought of being called to speak, and I can testify to you that this is not only a thrill but that it frightens me a little.

It has been several years since we left the mission, and we enjoyed our missionary experience, I think, more than any other experience that we had had up until that time. Since leaving the mission the Lord has blessed us very materially, very greatly in things spiritual and in things temporal, and we have been made to feel that his hand has been over us for good and our testimony has increased in the work of the Lord.

The reports we have from the Spanish-American mission now are most encouraging. Brother and Sister Jones are doing a very splendid work. The Saints are encouraged, and it is our hope that they may receive more missionaries now, that the work in that mission as well as all the rest of the missions of the Church can go forward with greater strength, and that the Gospel can be taken to many who have not yet received it.

I was greatly impressed by the reports that were given this morning, and when I heard the financial statement of the Church, I was made to remember the prophecy of old, that in the last days the silver and gold of the world would be brought to crown the fair head of Zion. The thought came to me that we have been tested in many things, as a Church, and now we have the added responsibility of the blessings of the Lord over his people in material things, and I wondered if we as a people, individually and collectively, would be able to stand that blessing and that responsibility and come through with flying colors as did our parents during the years of poverty. I pray that we may be able to do this, that we will use these material blessings to spread the Gospel and build up Zion in our stakes and missions, that we may be able to spread the Gospel to those who sit in darkness, and that the spirit of this Gospel may be in the hearts of many. I pray also that President Smith, with the leaders of this nation and of the world, may so live that they may have the blessings of the Lord upon them, because only through righteousness and the principles of righteousness will peace ever come to this earth. There is no other means that will bring security and peace and rid the world of turmoil and anxiety and worry.

I do not wish to take more of your time. I pray the blessings of the Lord upon our leadership in this Church and that we, as Latter-day Saints, may be quick to follow their counsel and their advice, and that we may be slow to take up the ways of the world; that the Gospel may spread and that we may be worthy of the blessings and of the heritage that are ours as Latter-day Saints. This is my prayer and I ask it humbly, in the name of the Lord Jesus Christ, Amen.

ELDER DAVID I. STODDARD

Former President of the Northern States Mission

Although it has been nearly two months since I left the Northern States Mission, I feel that it is sufficiently recent that I may bring you the greetings of the missionaries and the splendid people residing in that Great Lakes area. There are probably only a few of our people who live in that section of the country that are permitted to attend this Conference, but I am sure the desire of all of them would be to meet with you here in this wonderful gathering.

These few minutes will not permit me to give much of an account of the activities of the Northern States Mission. There will be time, however, to tell you of one experience that has made a deep impression upon me. It is not a single experience but a recurring one as we have traveled about that territory in the United States. Within the boundaries of the Northern States Mission are many historical places of the early days of the Church, many landmarks that remind us of the courage and the faith of those who gave so much to the establishment of this work, and many of the landscapes bear evidence even to this day of the hardships and sufferings of these noble people. In that area are located Kirtland, Carthage, Nauvoo, Mt. Pisgah and Winter Quarters, and a little beyond the mission's eastern boundary lies the Hill Cumorah at Palmyra, and between these places are some vaguely discernible trails and roads where these faithful Saints with weary feet have trod. Each time Sister Stoddard and I traveled about the mission and our journeys have taken us to or through these places, they have become more sacred to us. Many of our trips have been made in winter-time, and as that is the season of the year when these people, in most cases, were required to leave their homes and go into the open country, we could picture to a degree the suffering which they endured. We asked ourselves the question, how much faith did it require to give up home in the winter and move out into a storm that defied survival of human life. This they did because of their love of the Gospel of Jesus Christ and because they were unwilling to compromise in any degree with those who were enemies of the truth.

One day while visiting Nauvoo, a typical midwestern blizzard was sweeping that area. On the trip from Carthage to Nauvoo it was difficult to keep warm in a closed automobile, and as we crossed the Mississippi bridge into Iowa, outside the car the weather was almost unbearable. It required little imagination to picture the early Saints crossing that river when no bridge existed and taking with them what provisions and household goods that they could move with the very limited equipment they possessed, and making this crossing with only the prospects ahead of building a winter home on the open prairies of Iowa. It now seems more miraculous to us than ever that these people were able to survive. Surely that section of the country is the cradle of the Church, and it continues to bear mute testimony of the price that was paid for the restoration of the Gospel of Jesus Christ to the earth in this dispensation.

During the brief period spent by the Savior in his ministry, he descended below all things that he might rise above all things. He demonstrated complete self-mastery and the power of overcoming evil forces. A similar experience of lesser degree has been required of his servants of any generation who have established his truths among men. With a feeling of sacredness, most of us direct our thoughts to these courageous, God-fearing people and say "my parents, my grand-parents, or my great-grandparents were among them." We are indeed grateful for the heritage which is ours. When Christ first addressed the multitude, he spoke of the virtues of humility, meekness and lowliness of heart. In his life he saw meekness grow into strength, humility grow into power, and lowliness into wisdom and understanding and intelligence. The early Saints demonstrated these same virtues, and through their faithfulness the restoration of the Gospel has been accomplished. From these humble beginnings a great Church has been established. It is a good tonic for discouragement for us to look to their accomplishments.

I am thankful above all else for a knowledge of the Gospel of Jesus Christ, for a testimony of its restoration to the earth in our day. It is a cherished privilege to have been called into his service and to enjoy the blessings that come from working in his ministry. May God bless us always to prove loyal to the knowledge and responsibility which are ours, I pray humbly in the name of Jesus Christ, Amen.

The Relief Society Singing Mothers sang "The 23rd Psalm, The Lord Is My Shepherd," after which Elder John Child, President of the Lakeview Stake, offered the closing prayer.

Conference adjourned until 2 o'clock p.m.

FIRST DAY

AFTERNOON MEETING

Conference reconvened at 2 o'clock p.m., April 5, with President George Albert Smith presiding and conducting the services.

President George Albert Smith:

This is the second session of the 116th Annual Conference of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints, which convenes on Temple Square in Salt Lake City, Utah. There are on the stand this afternoon all the General Authorities of the Church except Elder Ezra Taft Benson, who is in Europe in charge of the European Mission, and Elder Matthew Cowley, who is at home by direction of his physician.

The proceedings of this session will be broadcast over KSL of Salt Lake City, KSUB of Cedar City, and KID of Idaho Falls.

We will begin the service this afternoon by the Relief Society Singing Mothers of the Salt Lake Region singing, "Eye Hath Not Seen," from "The Holy City." Sister Florence Jepperson Madsen is conducting, and Elder Frank W. Asper is the organist.

The opening prayer will be offered by President Luther L. Fife of the Weiser Stake, Nyssa, Oregon.

The Relief Society Singing Mothers sang "Eye Hath Not Seen," from "The Holy City."

Elder Luther L. Fife, President of the Weiser Stake, offered the opening prayer.

Singing by the Relief Society Singing Mothers, "Hear My Prayer."

ELDER JOSEPH F. MERRILL

Of the Council of the Twelve Apostles

The conditions in the world today are such that every Latter-day Saint faces a challenge—a challenge of loyalty to the leadership of the Church and to its teachings and standards. The forces of evil were perhaps never more rampant and their influence never more widespread than now. Let us take a brief glance at the gloomy situation.

The Prevalence of Evil

To the eyes of a Latter-day Saint, and judged by his professed standards, the sinful ways of the world were never more largely indulged in by its people generally than they are today. Were sex moral standards ever lower? Were selfishness, greed, and crime ever more rampant? Was religious faith ever colder? Was the desire to get something for nothing ever stronger? Was the struggle for place and power ever keener? Were family ties ever looser? Were marriage vows ever more frequently violated? As for America, is not a negative answer to these questions the correct one? Was not Alexander Pope stating facts when he wrote:

Vice is a monster of so frightful mien,
As to be hated needs but to be seen;
Yet seen too oft, familiar with her face,
We first endure, then pity, then embrace.

Judged by Latter-day Saint teachings and standards, the moral conditions of the country are most deplorable. And yet, sad to say, our people are by no means quite justified in assuming a "holier-than-thou" attitude. Worldly sins of every type exist among us. It is folly to close our eyes and deny the presence of these things. Then I suggest we look the situation squarely in the face and do something about it. What, does one ask? I answer, sincerely repent and help our fellow men to do likewise. Investigation will show that smoking, drinking, gambling, juvenile delinquency, fornication, violation of marriage vows, broken homes, divorces—to name a few things only—are growing evils among us. To the worldly-minded, most of them are minor matters, devoid of sinful aspects. But to Latter-day Saints the case is wholly different. We cannot indulge in any of these things with a guiltless conscience because we have been differently taught. We have divine revelations relative to them, the Word of Wisdom, for example. Hence we know that indulgence in smoking and drinking is displeasing to the Lord. Gambling is adjudged a wrong by every moral code. Marriage is a holy estate requiring sacred vows and imposing binding obligations. If these are all faithfully kept then within the precincts of the home, there may be heaven on earth—a place where live innocent and joyous children, happy parents, and a united Christian family.

First Day

Juvenile Delinquency

According to authentic reports, juvenile delinquency of both boys and girls has greatly increased during recent years until it has reached alarming proportions. Broken homes and absence of mothers from their homes are given as major causes. To Latter-day Saints, family life, home, and children are requisites for greatest happiness and glory, both in this life and in the life to come. Children are the brightest gems in any woman's diadem. This truth might well be indelibly impressed on the mind of every wife.

Respecting the duty of parents to the children, the Lord, through his Prophet Joseph Smith said:

And again, inasmuch as parents have children in Zion, or in any of her stakes which are organized, that teach them not to understand the doctrine of repentance, faith in Christ the Son of the living God, and of baptism and the gift of the Holy Ghost by the laying on of the hands, when eight years old, the sin be upon the heads of the parents. . . . And they shall also teach their children to pray, and to walk uprightly before the Lord. (D. & C. 68:25, 28.)

Further in the Doctrine and Covenants, we read:

All children have claim upon their parents for their maintenance until they are of age. (D. & C. 83:4.)

Thus divine law, as well as civil law, makes the parents responsible for their children. No Latter-day Saint lives a worthy life in the eyes of the Lord who neglects to do everything feasible to bring up his children according to gospel standards. Let every parent take heed of these requirements. Wise Solomon declared:

Train up a child in the way he should go: and when he is old, he will not depart from it. (Proverbs 22:6.)

Yet there are parents who erroneously and foolishly say that they must let their children grow up without religious teaching and training in order that they can be free to choose for themselves when they are grown. This is a doctrine of Satan. It cannot in the least degree release parents from the responsibility to their children which the Lord places upon them—a truth that they will some day certainly learn and, if neglected, to their sorrow.

Let all Latter-day Saints be faithful to their parental duties that their children may be a joy to them and a credit to the community where they live.

Increase in Divorces

A year ago from this pulpit President David O McKay discussed the divorce question and asserted that in the United States divorces had so increased that one marriage out of every six ended in the divorce court. Recently, it has been publicly said that about fifty percent of the war marriages of American boys in service are being terminated by divorce. The picture painted by these figures is a sad and deplorable one. It is indicative of unstable, sinful, and demoralizing conditions, ruinous to the ideals of marriage, family, and home, a distinctive blight upon the happy life that every wedded couple may achieve by being true to their marriage vows. Then is not a marriage failure necessarily an unfavorable reflection upon one or both of the parties to the marriage—the ones responsible for the failure? A grave delinquency is certainly indicated, for the conditions of a happy union have not been met.

What are these conditions, the novice may ask? Since I do not qualify as an expert in these matters I will not venture to answer the question except to say that if each party to the marriage contract will faithfully live the Golden Rule in all of his or her relations with the partner, then the marriage undoubtedly will be successful. A Latter-day Saint marriage is a union of two equal partners, obligated to build a home where mutual love, respect, trust, fidelity, tolerance, patience, and kindness are some of the essential operating factors. And in the home where these prevail the ugly specter of divorce will never enter.

. . . Men are, that they might have joy. (II Nephi 2:25.)

Wedlock is essential to a fulness of joy. Let every Latter-day Saint who enters the holy precincts of the marriage state do so with a firm determination to live so that all the joys and happiness obtainable therein may be his realization. Marriage was instituted by God himself. No one can violate its covenants with impunity.

Smoking and Drinking Decried

And now a few words about smoking and drinking. I am speaking to Latter-day Saints—to people who accept the Word of Wisdom as being a divine revelation. This being true, they cannot indulge in the consumption of liquor or tobacco without having to some extent at least, a feeling of guilt because the Lord has said liquor and tobacco are not good for man, and indulgence is therefore contrary to his will and to Church teachings. So when it comes to smoking and drinking, a Latter-day Saint and a nonbeliever are not on the same moral plane. The latter is not conscious of sinning; the former is. Why then do Latter-day Saints indulge? There is a variety of reasons, but perhaps the chief one is that other people do. We are more or less influenced by the actions of others. A woman wears short dresses because it is the fashion, not because it adds to the beauty of her appearance. But the Lord said:

... they that knew no law shall have part in the first resurrection; and it shall be tolerable for them. (D. & C. 45:54.)

Also:

For of him unto whom much is given much is required; and he who sins against the greater light shall receive the greater condemnation. (D. & C. 82:3.)

Is this not a merciful and just standard by which to be judged? I repeat, Church members cannot justify themselves in violating the laws and commandments of the Lord because nonmembers do. Indeed, in any case, each person will be held accountable for what he does, for he is given his free agency. But I call attention to the fact that every person is accountable for the example he sets and the influence he has with others. Be he ever so humble, his words and acts will affect one or more of his fellows. Hence, for these words and acts he must give an account. That his example may be good, particularly for young people, is one reason why we are so persistent in trying to convert to abstinence all of our older people who indulge in the use of narcotics.

But let me warn you that smoking and drinking are on the increase among the people, as are other evils such as juvenile delinquency, gambling, Sabbath breaking, profanity, fornication, and other types of wickedness.

Movement to Increase Liquor Sales

In view of the whole situation there is need for every Latter-day Saint to buckle on the armor of righteousness and go forward battling valiantly for the cause of right, Christian morality, justice, and truth according as the Lord has given us eyes to see and intellects to understand these things. Satan and his hosts are on the alert to extend his domain and increase his power. For instance, notwithstanding testimony and facts which prove that the consumption of alcoholic beverages results in physical, mental, moral, and spiritual evils of many types and kinds, and that the liquor business is always more or less lawless and corrupting, there is now a movement on foot in Utah to extend this business, to multiply the avenues of liquor sales, and to increase the ease with which liquor may be obtained.

The official advocates of repeal in 1933 loudly proclaimed that the saloon would never be allowed to return. That disreputable joint was a stench in the nostrils of clean-minded people. Decent women never darkened its doors. But now the proposition is to multiply in Utah by many fold the places where liquor may be legally dispensed and turn myriads of dining places and food counters into liquor taverns. Further, we are asked to legalize the sale of liquor at social and night clubs. All of this would in effect turn every social club and public eating place into a saloon. Is there anyone who believes these night clubs would be clean, respectable, law-abiding places? Experienced people know that many of them would be dens of drunkenness, gambling, fornications, and other vile things.

Better Laws and Enforcement Needed

Will the good people of Utah permit opening the gates of hell wider than they are now? On the other hand, should they not unite to secure better laws, better enforcement, more restrictions—all in the interest of a better and cleaner environment? Nineteen forty-seven is centennial year. Millions of tourists will come within the borders of this state. Shall they go away with the impression that Utah has copied Reno? Certainly not!

"Utah, We Love Thee" is the title of a song we joyously sing. Let us prove our love to the satisfaction of our centennial visitors by cleaning up, fixing up, and painting up, not only materially, but morally and spiritually as well. In preparation let us at once begin to live a more genuine Christian life by abstaining from doing evil, by more fully living the Golden Rule and by intensifying our efforts to be fair, honest, dependable, and just in all our dealings with our fellow men.

Facts on Use of Alcoholic Beverages

And now a few more facts relative to alcoholic beverages. These are taken from an article published in The Christian Advocate, February 21, and written by M. E. Lazenby:

Fifty million people in the United States drink alcoholic beverages—half of all people over fifteen years of age. Three million of these are excessive drinkers, 750,000 being chronic alcoholics. Has drinking become public enemy Number One? In pre-prohibition days this country had 177,000 licensed liquor places; there are now 360,000—more than twice as many. In 1944 the American people spent more than seven billion dollars for alcoholic drinks, a sum about equal to that spent for all educational, religious, and charitable work combined in a similar period of time, as the following shows:

Add all the money spent in the United States during the school year 1941-42, for educational purposes, including that spent on all public and private schools, colleges and universities, professional and special schools of all types, including public libraries and reading rooms of all kinds.

To this sum, add all the expenditures, gifts and bequests to organized religion for 1942, then add all expenditures from American Red Cross funds by the national and local chapters from January 1942 to March 1945. To this add the total income of the National Foundation for Infantile Paralysis for the eight months' period ending May 1944; add the expenditures of the United States health service; add the expenditures by the forty-eight state governments for benefits in 1941, such as public safety, health, hospitals, institutions for the handicapped, public welfare, corrections, and recreation; add all the expenditures of the federal government during the fiscal year 1944 under the Social Security Act, including old-age assistance, aid to dependent children, aid to the blind, unemployment compensation administration; add the Department of Labor expenditures for maternal and child health service and crippled children; add, finally, the expenditures of the United States Veterans' Administration during the fiscal year 1944. The sum total of all these is $7,039,914,950—about the same amount as that spent for alcoholic beverages during 1944. Can we believe it? The seven billion dollars spent in 1944 for alcoholic beverages drew that staggering amount from the cash registers of legitimate business. Further, in America four billion, one hundred forty-seven million pounds of grain and two hundred thirty-eight million, six hundred fifty-five thousand (238,655,000) pounds of sugar, syrup, and molasses were used in the manufacture of distilled and fermented liquors. Yet abroad millions of people are dying for food.

Statistics show that during 1942 there were 28,309 traffic accident deaths, in 25.1 percent of which the parties involved had been drinking. There are some significant facts relative to alcohol and crime that are illuminating. The F. B. I. reports for 1932 show that in 596 cities having a population of 21,660,000, there were 831 arrests for drunkenness per 100,000 population. In 1944 in these cities there were 1,726 arrests for drunkenness per 100,000,—more than double. The F. B. I. is quoted as saying that our crime bill is $16,000,000,000 a year and that "twenty-three percent of this is caused by drink."

Further, an officer of the Distillers Produce Corporation, speaking before a Rotary Club, October 1945, said the liquor traffic industry is spending almost $50,000,000 a year in advertising, the purpose of which, of course, is to get more men and women and young people to drink. Whither are we going?

Can Latter-day Saints, wherever they are, in Utah or elsewhere, favor any move that will make liquor more easy to get or more widely consumed? May the Lord forbid!

I pray that the Lord will give us all a greater desire and a stronger will to live righteously, and I do it in the name of Jesus Christ, Amen.

PRESIDENT LEVI EDGAR YOUNG

Of the First Council of the Seventy

Joseph Smith was a descendant of Robert Smith who emigrated to America from England in 1638. Robert Smith had lived in Boston, Lincolnshire, England, the ancestral home of Governor Bradford and the famous men of the Plymouth colony. It was also the ancestral home of President George Washington. That old stock was deeply religious, and there was wonderful strength in their forms of Christian belief. Robert Smith may have known John Winthrop, for when he landed in Boston, Massachusetts, Winthrop was there, and had written to his people:

It will be a service to the church of great consequence to carry the gospel into these parts of the world to help on the coming of the fulness of the Gentiles.

Joseph Smith came of such ancestry.

Joseph Smith Restored Knowledge of Living God

A new religious idea was launched that day when the Father and Son appeared to Joseph. The doctrine of "grace," the outgrowth of the Protestant Reformation from Luther's and John Calvin's day, was met by the divine truth again that man is in the image of God and is free to work out his salvation. The divinity of man was emphasized anew. A part of the greatness of any man, a sign of his worth, appears in the unbounded reverence wherewith he stands or kneels before his Maker. One great trouble today is the fact that man has not esteemed himself high enough. Man has forgotten the divine injunction of the Master when he said:

Be ye therefore perfect, even as your Father which is in heaven is perfect. (Matt. 5:48.)

Considering the gospel, the same energy and aspiration are needful today as in the days two thousand years ago. Whenever the followers of the Master have lived on the highest levels, they have struggled for one tremendous thing: The regeneration of the world in the light of the divine. When the knowledge of the Living God is lost, Christianity becomes merely a name. Joseph Smith was thrown back upon one thing and that was to ask. A spiritual world dawned within the content of his soul. From his youth up, he sought for an understanding of the will of God and the way to attain the kingdom of God. It meant to possess the priesthood, and to possess this light and power meant to live the life true to his God. Man never reaches after the divine unless the divine works and is acknowledged in his own life.

From his life, his writings, his revelations, the Prophet had but two main ideas at heart: first, to establish within the minds of men the spirit, the knowledge of God's holy word; second, the dream to preserve the government of the United States and its divine Constitution, that man might find life and peace in its laws. In other words, religion can come to birth in the soul of man only through a conquest of the ordinary, natural world which surrounds him.

The Divisions of Christendom

The terrible persecutions which he had been called to withstand had made of him a man of God. He with his people had been driven from place to place, their lands taken from them, and their families scattered and put to sorrow and want. There was no redress. An undying hope lay in his heart, and subsisted through all the adverse fortune and tragedy which he and his people endured. Their hope was founded on the new vision, and they were blessed with a forward outlook. His people clung to him. Not once did he utter a discouraging word, but kept his eye on the goal which would yet be attained. He had grown to manhood in a new age of the world's history. He had noted the divisions of Christendom. To him it was the most conspicuous reproach and its chief cause of inefficiency. How could the pure word of God be taught, for the different divisions were a denial of his spirit of love and fellowship. The whole Christian world was a dismembered condition of all groups and sects. Grotius, the Dutch historian, had said in the seventeenth century that the teachings of Christ were going from the world, and Leibnitz, the German scientist, declared that the teachings of Christ were lost in the varied teachings of such men as Luther, Calvin, and Erasmus. Today thinkers like Stanley Jones, Adolph Deissman, T. Z. Koo, Karl Barth, Ivan Lee Holt, and a host of other leaders in thought have been put to wonder just what the pure doctrines of Christ are. Herbert L. Willett, professor emeritus of Oriental languages at the University of Chicago, made this statement in 1939:

The church although weakened by divisions, has rendered important services to other generations, but today it is facing problems so serious that it is forced to realize the enormous liability which its divided condition involves.

Among these are the class hatreds which prevail, the exploitation of youth by commercialized amusements, the lure of vicious literature, and the yet unsolved drink problem. These are the present issues which the "dismembered church is unable to encounter with success." "Divide and conquer" were the words which Milton put into the mouth of Satan in the assembly of the rebel angels.

The Compensations of Hardship

They stood their sufferings with a feeling that the compensation would be a divine sweep of God's message. Cheerful, they accepted the heavenly call without murmur, and they "made their suppers of songs." What astonishes us still more was their resignation, their respect for government. With meekness, patience, and goodness, they left their homes to give the glad tidings of a new day.

This is why our history has been tragic. It is illustrated in the famous march of the seventies of the Church from Kirtland to Missouri in 1838, when six hundred men, women, and children started out amid the storms of persecution, plodding on day by day in cloud and sunshine and camping together at night with their prayers to God for protection and rest that they might continue their march on the morrow. As President Joseph Young said after the long weeks of weary travel were over.

The compensation of this journey into the West will be seen and realized by our children some day.

God was their sun and shield. As the Psalmist said, he was the health of their countenance, and his presence put gladness in their hearts.

Sublime Moral Teachings

As one reads the Doctrine and Covenants, the revelations of God to the Prophet, one is overawed with the sublime teachings pertaining to the moral life of man. "The spirit and body are the soul of man," and the soul shall be purified by living the highest ethical laws that have been given to man: the Ten Commandments, the Sermon on the Mount, the Parables of Jesus, and the many examples of the way Jesus dealt with men. The fourth section of the Doctrine and Covenants tells of the characteristics of a pure soul. The spirit must be made clean; the body must be made clean. Wrong and sin must be overcome. To bring the teachings of the Prophet within the confines of a mere essay is impossible. There is a majesty to his teachings that requires faith in God, prayer, and a realization of the power of the Holy Priesthood which you and I here today realize in our very lives. The gospel to him were beauty, truth, and goodness. The farms and cities and homes which the Saints built on the frontier give testimony of their knowledge of the institutions of civilization. Around their temples, they planted their lawns and flowers; the homes were purified by their lives. Moral perfection was based on spiritual and bodily perfection. As they reached a juster appreciation of their human needs, the regard for a pure body and spirit took its place as one of the three requisites of human character, along with the love of truth and the love of goodness.

Civic Idealism of the Prophet

The Prophet directed his people to build their temples, and in that grand old edifice—the Kirtland Temple, and later in that other majestic temple at Nauvoo—their hopes were realized. They were erected to God and required the human constants of the people who built; hunger, and labor, seedtime and harvest, love and death all operated to build those noble and sacred houses. Little wonder that they could say:

O God, in every temple, I see people who see Thee.
And in every language I hear, they praise Thee.

The civic idealism of the Prophet of God is shown in the lovely old cities of Kirtland and Nauvoo, rising from town governments to civic centers. They exemplified the words of Isaiah of old:

First Day

... We have a strong city; salvation will God appoint for walls and bulwarks.

Open ye the gates, that the righteous nation which keepeth the truth may enter in. (Isaiah 26:1,2.)

In the study of their fields and gardens, one is reminded of the story of the beautiful garden found in the Odyssey of Homer, which some say, is a reflection of the tradition of the Garden of Eden. Certainly they illustrate what Goethe said in the last scene of Faust:

I found God in trying to make the earth beautiful.

The Kingdom of God a Concrete Reality

And now to conclude. The Prophet established the Church of Christ as it was designed by the Master. As Jesus set forth the reality of the kingdom of God as spiritual and subjective—as “righteousness and peace and joy in the Holy Ghost,” it is also true that he set forth the establishment of this kingdom as a concrete, organic reality, small indeed at its beginning. So today is the Church separate from civic and political government and composed of the people who follow his teachings. This is a glorious part of my theme which time forbids my amplifying. We read in the gospel of Luke how Jesus chose twelve apostles who were willing to act as his heralds of the kingdom; and with the seventy, these were sent into the world to teach the gospel. So in this day, after the Church was organized, the Twelve and the seventy were sent forth to evangelize the world. The Church is a coherent organization, which can be coterminous with the nation or the whole world, but is not dependent upon, nor derived from existing forms of civilization. It is the organized concrete expression of the kingdom of God.

Paul the apostle made this point clear as recorded in the first chapter of Colossians:

And he is before all things, and by him all things consist.

And he is the head of the body, the church: who is the beginning, the firstborn from the dead; that in all things he might have the preeminence. (Colossians 1:17,18.)

ELDER MARION G. ROMNEY

Assistant to the Council of the Twelve Apostles

This morning we listened to the prophet of the Lord say that we are living in the time when the prophecy,

... the wisdom of their wise men shall perish, and the understanding of their prudent men shall be hid. (Isaiah 29:14.)

is being fulfilled. This afternoon we heard Elder Joseph F. Merrill of the Council of the Twelve paint a word picture of some of the evil things rampant in the world today. It is my firm conviction that if the Latter-day Saints are to go successfully through the crisis in which we now find the world, they must have in their hearts the certainty that the early pioneers had, to which Elder Widstoe referred this morning. We can have that certainty because we have the right to be taught by the same power which taught them.

"We Have the Holy Ghost"

On one occasion the Prophet Joseph Smith was in Washington talking to a President of the United States. I believe it was President Van Buren. The President of the United States said to the Prophet of the Living God, "What is the difference between you"—meaning the Church he had founded under the inspiration of God—"and the rest of the Christian world?" And the Prophet Joseph answered that question in one sentence, "We have the Holy Ghost."

The Saints who crossed the plains almost a hundred years ago obtained their certainty by the power that Joseph Smith referred to, the Holy Ghost. He teaches us direct from God.

Some people have said that Joseph Smith was an unlearned man. He was an unlearned man in the things of the world, but the day he came out of the grove, following the first vision, he was the most learned person in the world in the things that count. When he came out of that grove, he knew more than all the world put together about the great question of the resurrection, which had been argued from the time man began to think seriously, because he had seen standing before him, the resurrected Christ. When he came out of that grove, he knew more about the nature of God than all the world. There had been many books written; philosophers had spent their lives trying to find out the nature of God, but when God took Joseph in hand to teach him he cut through all material things and taught Joseph the truth about these and many other important things.

Now, every member of this Church has had hands laid upon his head and has listened to words about like this, "Receive the Holy Ghost." And every Latter-day Saint has the right to receive the Holy Ghost and be guided, through these perilous times in which we live, by that Spirit.

There are two sources, and as far as I know only two sources, from which we may expect to gain guidance that will safely bring us through. One source is through our righteous living, so that we can have the dictates of the Holy Spirit, and the other source is from the words spoken by the men whom we shall sustain as prophets, seers, and revelators here in this conference.

Importance of Attending Sacrament Meetings

There are two or three things that are very necessary for Latter-day Saints to do in order to have the Holy Spirit, and I want to talk this afternoon about one of them. It is partaking of the sacrament. In the fifty-ninth section of the Doctrine and Covenants, where the Lord specifies certain commandments especially applicable to the land of Zion, he says among other things:

And that thou mayest more fully keep thyself unspotted from the world, thou shalt go to the house of prayer and offer up thy sacraments upon my holy day. (D. & C. 59:9.)

The Melchizedek Priesthood quorum presidencies throughout the Church are requested to report to the general priesthood committee of the Council of the Twelve the performance of their quorum members with respect to various Church activities. One of the activities reported is attendance at sacrament meetings; another is keeping the Sabbath day holy.

In reviewing some of these reports, my interest has been challenged by the great number reported to be keeping the Sabbath day holy, who do not attend sacrament meetings. Now, of course, I realize that there are circumstances under which Church members may and do keep the Sabbath day holy without attending these meetings, but in the absence of compelling circumstances, I feel that proper observance of the Sabbath day requires attendance at sacrament meetings.

I wish that more of the members of the Church would regularly attend them. It would be to their own spiritual well-being, and I fervently seek the sustaining power of the Holy Spirit while I attempt to tell you why.

In the first place, we are under solemn obligation to attend sacrament meetings, for the Lord has required all who believe and are baptized in his name to do so. It is evident that he also instructed the original Twelve when he first instituted the sacrament, for we read that following Peter's great Pentecostal sermon,

... they that gladly received his word were baptized: ... And they continued steadfastly in the apostles' doctrine and fellowship, and in breaking of bread, and in prayers. (Acts 2:41-42.)

We learn from the Book of Mormon, where the record is more complete, that the resurrected Lord gave specific instructions to his disciples among the Nephites that they should administer the sacrament unto all those who should believe and be baptized in his name, and "... this shall ye always observe to do," (III Nephi 18:6.), he admonished them. "... Behold, ye shall meet together oft" (III Nephi 18:22), he said unto the multitude, and it is recorded that "... they did meet together oft to partake of bread and wine in remembrance of the Lord Jesus." (Moroni 6:6.)

In this dispensation, in the revelation in which the Lord pointed out the day on which the Church was to be organized, he also said:

It is expedient that the church meet together often to partake of bread and wine in the remembrance of the Lord Jesus. (D. & C. 20:75.)

A little later he fixed the time and frequency of such meetings with this instruction:

... thou shalt go to the house of prayer and offer up thy sacraments upon my holy day. (Ibid., 59:9.)

Obedience to Commandments Brings Growth

I believe that every time we act pursuant to a commandment of the Lord, we comply with some fundamental principles of growth, for he never requires us to do a useless thing. Rarely, however, are the purposes for which a commandment is given and the beneficial results which follow obedience thereto set forth with such clarity as they are with respect to this commandment.

In explanation of it, we are taught that the bread is to be eaten in remembrance of the body of the Savior, and that the water is to be drunk in remembrance of his blood which was shed for us. It follows, then, that this sacred ordinance is to direct our thoughts to the central and most important events of earth's history, the suffering, death and resurrection of the Lord Jesus.

It has always seemed significant to me that from the earliest times until today, there has been among all peoples who have believed and accepted the gospel, a frequently repeated ordinance pointing their minds to these great events. In the early morning of earth's temporal existence, at the Lord's command, Adam built an altar and offered sacrifice, although at the time he knew not why. As a consequence of his obedience and for his enlightenment, an angel appeared unto him and

... spake, saying: This thing is a similitude of the sacrifice of the Only Begotten of the Father, which is full of grace and truth. (Pearl of Great Price, Moses 5:7.)

The sacrificing of the firstlings of their flocks by true believers in Christ, in contemplation of his great sacrifice, then future, continued until his death. The thoughts of his people were thus repeatedly pointed forward to his great atonement. Since his death, the minds of his followers have been turned back to that event by the sacrament.

Partaking of Sacrament a Spiritualizing Experience

Now partaking of the sacrament is not to be a mere passive experience. We are not to remember the Lord's suffering and death only as we may remember some purely secular historical event. Participating in the sacrament service is meant to be a vital and a spiritualizing experience. Speaking of it, the Savior said:

... And it shall be a testimony unto the Father that ye do always remember me. (III Nephi 18:7.)

In order to testify, one's mind has to function, and it must be concentrated upon the thing to be testified. And we are not only to partake of the emblems of the sacrament in remembrance of the Redeemer, testifying that we do always remember him, but we are also thereby to witness unto the Father that we are willing to take upon us the name of his Son and that we will keep his commandments. This amounts to a virtual renewal of the covenant of baptism, for you will recall that candidates for baptism are, among other things, to

... witness before the church that they ... are willing to take upon them the name of Jesus Christ, having a determination to serve him to the end. (D. & C. 20:37.)

Now there is a doctrine abroad in the world today which teaches that the physical emblems of the sacrament are transformed into the flesh and blood of Jesus. We do not teach such a doctrine, for we know that any transformation which comes from the administration of the sacrament takes place in the souls of those who understandingly partake of it. It is the participating individuals who are affected, and they are affected in a most marvelous way, for they are given the Spirit of the Lord to be with them. This is promised in the sacrament prayers. The sacredness and importance of these prayers is evident from the fact that they have always been given to the Church verbatim. In this dispensation they were dictated to the Prophet Joseph Smith by direct revelation from heaven. In them, in addition to the promise, the whole purpose of the sacrament is set forth. Let me repeat to you the blessing on the bread:

O God, the Eternal Father, we ask thee in the name of thy Son, Jesus Christ, to bless and sanctify this bread to the souls of all those who partake of it, that they may eat in remembrance of the body of thy Son, and witness unto thee, O God, the Eternal Father, that they are willing to take upon them the name of thy Son, and always remember him and keep his commandments which he has given them; that they may always have his spirit to be with them. Amen. (D. & C. 20:77.)

Companionship of Holy Spirit Promised

While instructing his Nephite disciples with respect to the sacrament, Jesus twice repeated to them the promise:

... And if ye do always remember me ye shall have my Spirit to be with you. (III Nephi 18:7, 11.)

It is the overwhelming importance of realizing this great promise that makes regular attendance at sacrament meetings so imperative, for if we can but have the companionship of his holy spirit, we shall be able, as the Lord admonishes, to keep ourselves more fully unspotted from the world, and furthermore we shall be neither deceived nor disturbed in our faith by the evil about us.

Now, my brethren and sisters, may the Lord shock us into an appreciation of what it means to attend regularly sacrament meetings and acceptably participate in the sacrament service. If we will increase our attendance from about twenty percent to forty percent, we shall double our spiritual power for righteousness in the world, which, may the Lord help us to do, I humbly pray in the name of Jesus Christ. Amen.

The Singing Mothers and the congregation joined in singing the hymn, "O Say, what Is Truth?" Hymn Book page 2, L. D. S. Hymns No. 191.

ELDER ANTOINE R. IVINS

Of the First Council of the Seventy

My beloved bretheren and sisters, I crave an interest in your faith and prayers for the short time that I shall stand before you. I feel that without it and without the Spirit of God, it would be useless for me to attempt to say a word of comfort to any of us.

Thus far in this conference I have enjoyed very greatly what has been done and said. I likewise enjoy very much the privilege I have had of shaking hands with so many of the men and women whom I esteem to be my friends, and I wish it were possible to shake hands with all of you and know you well. We get a great deal of comfort in moving among you as we visit the stakes and attempt to deliver a message that will be helpful.

The Two Great Commandments

These are very trying times, trying to all of us, I presume, and it has already been said in this conference that no man seems to be smart enough to tell us just what to do to correct our troubles. I wish I knew the answer. I believe, however, the Savior told us about what we should do if we would live in peace and happiness and live successful lives. Last night we listened to a statement of the work that is being done by our welfare organization in the Church, an expression of unselfish devotion to an ideal. Christ said the great commandment is to love God, and the second is to love our fellows as we love ourselves. I see in that the simple statement that we should drive out of our hearts all selfishness, for until we get rid of selfishness we cannot well love our neighbors as we love ourselves.

Spirit of God Needed in Affairs of Men

As I study history, I believe I see that every great war of aggression the world has suffered has been prompted by avarice and greed and selfish desire, sometimes not on the part of all the people but at least on the part of the people who have the power to bring the others into aggressive action against their neighbors; and I believe the war that we have just had and the war that preceded it were precipitated on the world by nothing but greed and avarice and selfishness. I do not expect to live to see the time when people will not do those things, but some day may come when an arrangement can be reached such as will prevent the aggression of one nation upon another, of a strong nation upon a helpless one. If that time ever comes, it will come because the Spirit of God shall inspire men to draft policies to prevent it.

We not only have international troubles of that kind, but we also have interstate troubles that grow out of the same motives, and they trouble us sometimes very definitely and personally. I believe that they also would vanish if people could gain the Spirit of God and act under its inspiration. If our legislators could give themselves to the duties of their office, if they would never have a selfish motive in what they do, perhaps better laws could be drafted. If the men who control the big business of the nation should realize that their own welfare rests upon the welfare of the people that they employ, perhaps they could in that way be helpful. And then if the employee likewise could realize that his welfare depends upon that of his employer, perhaps they could get together in a more helpful spirit, and some of these evils could be eradicated.

Unselfishness Vital in Church Service

Then if we in the stakes and wards could drive out of our hearts and our souls the spirit of selfishness, we could do our duty only with the thought of helping the great organization of which we are a part. We likewise could help to bring about that day; but we are human; we are intensely human; and self-preservation, we are told, is the first law of nature. There is selfishness in it, and it is because of the tremendous struggle that it will take to drive it out of our souls that the love of neighbor gained such prominence in the teachings of Christ. It is likely the greatest struggle we would have to make with ourselves to become absolutely unselfish. But the things we do, we expect to redound to our own honor and our own glory, and frequently we measure our willingness to perform them on that standard. It is not right.

I once heard a young man as he addressed a seventies' convention in Barratt Hall say, "There is no measure to the good that a man may do if he does not worry as to who gets the credit for it." That is a great and glorious principle of action. I think if nations would work for the welfare of the group, and if the governing elements within nations could work for the welfare of the group; if those who work could work for the welfare of the whole, the Spirit of God would have an opportunity to work upon their souls and make better men and better women of them, bringing peace and prosperity and the alleviation of all suffering. It is a wonderful task; it is perhaps the greatest task of all, and it will never be realized without the Spirit of God to prompt it. We will never get that Spirit until we weed out of our habits those vices of which Brother Merrill has spoken this afternoon. Perhaps if we could come to live chaste and upright lives, we would then have a right to claim from God his Spirit; and getting his Spirit would help us to become unselfish; and becoming unselfish we could love our neighbors as we love ourselves. I have a picture of this body of men and women going away from this building with a definite resolution to drive out from their hearts every vestige of selfishness and to devote themselves with greater sacrifice to the well-being of their brothers and sisters, their fathers and mothers, their neighbors, and the nation at large. I wish that God would give us this Spirit. If all of us who are here and if all who are listening to the sound of the radio waves that go forth would devote themselves to that one purpose, then this conference would fill the measure for which it was called together. The world would be better, and God would reign in the hearts of men. That he may help us to do this, I pray in the name of Jesus Christ, Amen.

ELDER SPENCER W. KIMBALL

Of the Council of the Twelve Apostles

My brothers and sisters: This is an inspiring experience. I have listened with great interest to the testimonies and the remarks of my brethren. I am sure that today there are many hundreds of thousands of Latter-day Saints throughout the world represented by you and who, with you and us, are today bearing testimony of the divinity of this great work.

Some of the bretheren have mentioned our great heritage and our ancestors who have left us that heritage. Brother Widstoe mentioned members running into the many thousands who crossed the plains at great personal sacrifice. There were thousands of that number who died between Nauvoo and the Salt Lake valley and sealed their testimonies with their blood. They were martyrs to a great cause, as was their prophet, seer and revelator.

Martyrs for a Great Cause

I wish to say a few words about martyrs. Webster says a martyr is one who voluntarily suffers death for refusing to renounce his religion.

About one hundred fifty years before the birth of Christ, there came among the descendants of Lehi, a prophet named Abinadi. Fearlessly he preached repentance to King Noah and his faithless people who were guilty of all the crimes known to men. He boldly denounced their immoralities, and called them to repentance. "... Away with this fellow," the king had commanded, "and slay him; for what have we to do with him, for he is mad." (Book of Mormon Mosiah 13:1.) They attempted to lay hands on him, but he warned that God would not let them harm him until his message was delivered.

And he spake with power and authority from God. (Ibid. 13:6.)

Then Abinadi prophesied the coming of the Messiah, his life, ministry, and death. The king commanded that he be bound, cast into prison, and threatened:

... thou shalt be put to death unless thou wilt recall all the words which thou hast spoken evil concerning me and my people. (Ibid. 17:8.)

Abinadi answered that he would recall nothing and, having been sent of God to deliver a message, he would continue until his mission was finished. When his testimony had been fully borne, they beat him and burned him at the stake, a martyr for a great cause.

Then there was Stephen, one of the seven men called by the apostles to look after the welfare work of the church. And he was "... full of faith and power, did great wonders and miracles among the people." (Acts 6:8.) But he was arrested. "And (they) set up false witnesses" who testified against him with all kinds of accusations. He spoke at length a warning, quoting scripture, calling to repentance and testifying of his Redeemer and Lord, reminding them of their part in his betrayal and crucifixion. Men cannot stand to be denounced for their sins. They cast him out of the city and stoned him.

There was Paul, who had given consent to the martyrdom of Stephen, who was also to seal his testimony with his blood for, tradition has it, that he was mobbed at Iconium; stoned at Lystra; dragged through the streets and left for dead; imprisoned and whipped at Philippi; abused at Thessalonica, arrested at Jerusalem and sent to Rome where he was in prison for two years. In the Mamertine prison he languished for nine months with Peter, and finally was beheaded with the sword, at the command of Nero.

Peter, who witnessed much of the Lord's ministry, his transfiguration, his death and resurrection, and became the leader of the church, was also to seal his testimony with his blood. Imprisoned many times and subjected to much physical abuse, writers say that he was crucified in Rome after nine months' imprisonment there and that he chose to be crucified with his head down since he felt he was unworthy to meet death in the same posture as did his Lord.

The Martyrdom of Jesus the Christ

The martyrdom of Jesus the Christ is well established—it followed closely the pattern. His life was the perfect life. His enemies, failing to find any guilt in him, resorted to mobocracy to end his life. He answered their every question, performed miracles which astounded them, did good everywhere, but chastised and rebuked them for their adultery, insincerity, drunkenness. He threatened their vainglorious way of life; he called them hypocrites, vipers, and murderers of prophets. He had restored the gospel and established his kingdom. It was inevitable that he should die to witness eternally of its divinity. His every word was criticized; he was accused of being a deceiver, a glutton, a winebibber, a common person associating with publicans and sinners. They called him a Sabbath breaker, a usurper of authority, a tax evader. They charged him with heresy and sedition. He was said to be an ignoramus, a blasphemer, and accused of being born of fornication. He was arrested, spat upon, torn with thorns, mocked and beaten. He was seized by a vile mob led by one from his inner circle who had maliciously planned to betray him.

Chief priests and elders took "counsel against Jesus to put him to death." Magistrates found no fault. The governor examined the prisoner but washed his hands saying:

... I am innocent of the blood of this just person: see ye to it. (Matthew 27:24.)

And Judas had finally repented and cried:

... I have sinned in that I have betrayed the innocent blood. (Ibid., 4.)

The Savior had told his followers of his approaching death. He must die for the sins of the world and to seal his testimony. This he knew. His hour had come. They crucified him, the Son of God, on Calvary.

Joseph Smith's Testimony Sealed with His Blood

Another day dawns—a new dispensation; the heavens are opened. The Father and the Son bear witness again to earth. Other heavenly visitors restore priceless blessings to men, and another martyr gives his precious life to testify to a faithless, skeptical, and unbelieving world that a personal God lives; that Jesus his Son is the Redeemer; and that truth is again restored. The details of the life of Joseph Smith are familiar to us. He announced at once his glorious vision of the Father and the Son and was immediately oppressed and persecuted. Modern scribes and Pharisees have published libelous books and articles by the hundreds, imprisoned him some forty-odd times, tarred and feathered him, shot at him, and did everything in their power to destroy him. In spite of their every effort to take his life, he survived through more than a score of years of bitter and violent persecution to fill his mission, until his hour should come.

Twenty-four years of hell he suffered but also twenty-four years of ecstasy he enjoyed in converse with Gods and other immortals! His mission was finished—heaven and earth were linked again; the Church was organized; Brigham Young and other great leaders were trained to carry on; and he had conferred upon the heads of the Twelve every key and power belonging to the apostleship which he himself held, and he had said to them:

I have laid the foundations and you must build thereon, for upon your shoulders the kingdom rests.

And his hour had come to seal with his blood his testimony, so often borne to multitudes of friends and foes. His Judas came from his own circle—Governor Ford was his Pontius Pilate, Nauvoo was his Gethsemane, and Carthage his Calvary. There were also modern Pharisees to goad the mobs—and another martyr testified.

Martyrs Lived to Complete Their Work

Someone has said, "Anyone can found a religion," and Talley-

Friday, April 5

First Day

rand answered: "Yes. If he is willing to die for it." And the martyr is willing to do exactly that. But the powers of earth and hell cannot take him 'till "the hour is come."

Abinadi when threatened by Noah's soldiery, cried out:

Touch me not, for God shall smite you if ye lay your hands upon me, for I have not delivered the message which the Lord sent me to deliver; . . . therefore, God will not suffer that I shall be destroyed at this time. (Book of Mormon, Mosiah 13:3.)

Ye see that ye have not power to slay me, therefore I finish my message . . . and then it matters not whither I go, if it so be that I am saved. (Ibid., 13:7-9. Italics author's.)

Life had been pleasant, but even death was not bitter, for as God has said:

. . . those that die in me shall not taste of death, for it shall be sweet unto them. (D. & C. 42:46.)

It will be recalled that Peter was released from prison by an angel and protected in many ways 'till his work was finished. And Paul likewise. No violence could take his life until he had borne his testimony to Rome and Greece and other lands. But finally he made the prophetic statement to Timothy:

For I am now ready to be offered, and the time of my departure is at hand. I have fought a good fight, I have finished my course, I have kept the faith. (II Tim. 4:6,7.)

There was no fear in his approach to eternity—only assurance and calm resignation to the inevitable martyrdom which he faced. He did not want to die but was willing thus to seal his testimony of the Redeemer.

Though the Savior had numerous times been in most hazardous situations, it was clear that his life could not be taken until his work was finished. A large crowd of people had surrounded him, and there was much tumult in the temple.

. . . they sought to take him: but no man laid hands on him, because his hour was not come. (John 7:30.)

And again:

. . . Jesus walked into Galilee: for he would not walk in Jewry, because the Jews sought to kill him. (Ibid., 7:1.)

His brethren dissuaded him and said:

. . . Depart hence, and go into Judea, that thy disciples also may see the works that thou doest. . . If thou do these things, shew thyself to the world. For neither did his brethren believe in him. Then Jesus said unto them, My time is not yet come. (Ibid., 7:3-6.)

But when the work was established, the Church organized, the keys delivered, the apostles trained, he had said to his brethren:

. . . Go into the city to such a man, and say unto him, The Master saith my time is at hand. I will keep the passover at thy house with my disciples. (Matthew 26:18.)

Then the Lord had gone into Gethsemane to pour out his heart to God. Here he had said again to his beloved Peter, James, and John who sleepily sat by while he had prayed:

... Sleep on now, and take your rest: behold, the hour is at hand, and the Son of man is betrayed into the hands of sinners. (Ibid., 26:45.)

Joseph Smith had also recognized the inability of his enemies to end his ministry prematurely. He said:

All the enemies upon the face of the earth may roar and exert all their power to bring about my death, and they can accomplish nothing, unless some who are among us, who have enjoyed our society—called us brother, saluted us with a kiss—and by falsehood and deceit, stir up the wrath and indignation against us—we have a Judas in our midst.

His hour had come, his ministry finished. Now his enemies might prevail.

Lives of Martyrs Given Voluntarily

Into the pattern of martyrdom comes the voluntary phase. In every instance the martyr could have saved his life by renouncing his program. Abinadi had been told he would be put to death. But he answered:

... I will not recall the words which I have spoken ... for they are true; and that ye may know of their surety I have suffered myself that I have fallen into your hands. Yea, and I will suffer even until death, and I will not recall my words, and they shall stand as a testimony against you. And if ye slay me ye will shed innocent blood, and this shall also stand as a testimony against you at the last day. (Book of Mormon, Mosiah 17:9, 10.)

The Savior had said:

... I lay down my life for the sheep. ... No man taketh it from me, but I lay it down of myself. I have power to lay it down, and I have power to take it again. (John 10:15, 18.)

When Peter in the garden had smitten off the ear of one of the servants of the high priest, Jesus said to him:

... Put up again thy sword into his place. ... Thinkest thou that I cannot now pray to my Father, and he shall presently give me more than twelve legions of angels? (Matt. 26:52, 53.)

Closing Events in Life of Joseph Smith

Joseph Smith did not want to die. He had so much to live for, with his family, his friends, with his interest in the expanding kingdom, and he was still a young man, but though he hoped and prayed that the cup could pass, he knew it was inevitable. He said:

I am going like a lamb to the slaughter. But I am as calm as a summer's morning; I have a conscience void of offense toward God and all men. I shall die innocent and it shall yet be said of me—"he was murdered in cold blood."

How he wanted to live! He lingered as he passed his farm and said plaintively:

If some of you had such a farm and knew you would not see it any more, would you not want to take a good look at it for the last time?

And as he left Nauvoo, his longing eyes surveyed the city beautiful.

This is the loveliest place and the best people under the heavens—little do they know the trials that await them.

His farewell to Brother Wells was full of pathos: "I wish you to cherish my memory." And while waiting the foul blow in Carthage jail he had said:

Lay your head on my arm for a pillow, Brother Fullmer— I would like to see my family again—I would to God that I might preach to the Saints in Nauvoo once more.

This was his Golgotha; he seemed to know. He had said:

Boys, if I don't come back, take care of yourselves. I am going like a lamb to the slaughter.

And a slaughterer it was! The shots rang out! And freely flowed the blood of martyrs, for Hyrum, his older brother, had chosen to remain with him. This precious blood soaked into the earth, sealing an undying and unanswerable testimony which continued to ring in minds and hearts.

He bore record:

I had actually seen a light, and in the midst of that light I saw two personages and they did in reality speak to me. . . . I have actually seen a vision, and who am I that I can withstand God, or why does the world think to make me deny what I have actually seen? For I had seen a vision; I knew it, and I knew that God knew it and I could not deny it, neither dared I do it.

He approached and actually confronted his tragedy. His dying words were: "O Lord, my God!"

Testament Made Effective by Death of Testator

In the final hours of the life of the martyr comes a calm serenity that baffles all human explanations. It is an unanswerable challenge to those who would rationalize and explain away.

Abinadi faced his enemies triumphantly:

. . . [they] durst not lay their hands on him, for the spirit of the Lord was upon him; and his face shone with exceeding luster, even as Moses' did while on the mount of Sinai, while speaking with the Lord. (op. cit. 13:5.)

They bound him and "scourged his skin with faggots" and when the flames began to scorch him he prophesied concerning them and cried:

"O God receive my soul!" He died and sealed the truth of his words by his death. (Ibid., 17:13-20.)

And as the death sentence fell upon Stephen,

... all that sat in the council, looking steadfastly on him, saw his face as it had been the face of an angel. (Acts 6:15.)

As the bestial mob viciously hurled stones to take this guileless life, the young martyr looked up and saw the heavens opened and saw and as his bruised and bleeding body had reached the limit of physical endurance he fell to his knees and cried with a loud voice: "Lord, lay not this sin to their charge!" and another soul had sealed his testimony with blood.

... the glory of God, and Jesus standing on the right hand of God. (Ibid., 7:55.)

The Savior stood the humiliation, the mockery, the physical pain with patience and tolerance, but he did not want to die. He loved life in spite of his persecutions. He prayed,

... O my Father, if it be possible, let this cup pass from me: nevertheless not as I will, but as thou wilt. (Matt 26:39.)

And then had come his betrayal, his trials, mockery though they were, and his execution.

Though his precious life was being taken by the unscrupulous degenerates yet,

... said Jesus, Father, forgive them; for they know not what they do. (Luke 23:34.)

As his life ebbed out he cried aloud:

Father, into thy hands I commend my spirit. (Ibid., 23:46.)

Paul said later:

For where a testament is, there must also of necessity be the death of the testator. For a testament is of force after men are dead: otherwise it is of no strength at all while the testator liveth. Whereupon neither the first testament was dedicated without blood. (Heb. 9:16-18.)

But they had borne witness; truth was established; blood had been spilled; and the testimony would stand eternally against those who rejected the truth and were the villains in the tragedies.

Blood of Martyrs the Seed of the Church

But martyrs do not die. They live on and on. When the Savior said, "It is finished," he referred to his mortal experience; for his crucifixion marked but a milepost in his ever-expanding power. Hundreds of millions have been influenced for good by this perfect life and martyr's death. He had said himself:

And whoso layeth down his life in my cause, for my name's sake, shall find it again. (D. & C. 98:13.)

His work continues to spread to this day.

The blood of martyrs is the seed of the Church.

Stephen dead is greater than Stephen alive. His sermons continue to inspire his readers.

When Nero sends the other Christians to the lions, it is said, he sent Paul the Roman citizen to the headsman and the block. Perhaps, but it is unimportant. Paul walks and talks in every house in Christendom. (Book of Courage.)

And Joseph Smith, our Prophet:

He could have yielded and perished, but standing resolute, he lives forever.

His work was not lost. His testimony goes steadily forward, on to infinity. As Alma had carried the torch for Abinadi, the apostles for the Savior, now came Brigham Young and the Twelve to continue the work of restoration.

Men do not give their lives to perpetuate falsehoods. Martyrdom dissipates all question as to the sincerity of the martyr. Personalities do not survive the ages. They rise like a shooting star, shine brilliantly for a moment and disappear from view, but a martyr for a living cause, like the sun, shines on forever. Great characters, students, businessmen, scientists, followed the youthful prophet to his death. They were not deceived. They lost him in martyrdom but inspired with the divinity of the Cause went forward without hesitancy. Thousands gave lives they could have saved, in Missouri, Illinois, and crossing the plains, and today a great people hailed for their education, practicability, and virtue, stand to bear witness that the martyrdom of Joseph Smith, like that of the martyrs before him, is another of the infallible proofs of the divinity of the gospel of Jesus Christ, restored in its fulness through that humble prophet.

I bear testimony, my brethren and sisters, that this is the gospel of Jesus Christ, that Joseph Smith is a prophet of God, and that he will continue to live on eternally. This testimony I bear in the name of Jesus Christ. Amen.

President George Albert Smith:

We have just heard from Elder Spencer W. Kimball of the Quorum of the Twelve. Elder Elbert R. Curtis, former President of the Western States Mission, will be our next speaker. While he is coming to the stand I want to call attention to one or two things.

I have a telegram here. This telegram is sent to Brother Harold B. Lee, who has been identified with the program of the Government in looking after our servicemen. It comes from a long distance—from Korea, and says:

"Greetings to all the Saints at home on this 116th anniversary of the restoration of the Church of Jesus Christ. We always shall think of being there to attend General Conference to commemorate this great event. However, we are doing the next best thing here in Korea by holding a Korea-wide conference in Coon, April 7, to show our appreciation for the Lord's blessings. Sincerely your brethren in Korea.

Everywhere in the world is represented. I was just thinking as I sat here today: Where will you find a religious congregation such as this where are assembled prominent business men who have left their business and traveled hundreds, and some times thousands of miles, to be here, also mayors of cities, prominent men of affairs, the Governors of states and others? We have had with us the Governor of one of our largest states in Conference all day, sitting here like the humblest of our congregation. You will find here mothers, who have left their families and homes to come long distances to be in Conference. We have at this Conference representatives from nearly every state of the American Union, and the presidents of missions and their associates, who preside in various parts of the United States. Where will you find anything else like it? I would not be surprised if before the Conference is over, we will hear from other sections of the world. We have already heard from Hawaii this morning, and so we are connected very closely with the affairs of states and of nations and of the world.

We will now be pleased to hear from President Curtis, former president of the Western States Mission.

ELDER ELBERT R. CURTIS

Former President of Western States Mission

This great sea of faces is not only inspiring, it is awe-inspiring. I am very sure there is nothing in all the wide world quite like Temple Square at conference time. It always leaves me grateful for my membership in this church and my association with this people and for the priesthood with which I have been blessed.

I am reminded that the Prophet of the Lord who announced me just now, was my mission president twenty-five years ago in Europe. It was my privilege to live under the same roof, to kneel in family prayers, and to eat at the same table with this grand man and his family. President Smith was succeeded by Elder Orson F. Whitney and President David O. McKay, with whom I also had the privilege of being associated. I am grateful that through the years my appreciation for them as servants of the Lord and as prophets, which I know them to be, has not diminished.

I shall never live long enough to express my appreciation for the privilege which has now been mine for nearly four years to preside in one of the great missions of the Church, for the privilege of laboring with your sons and your daughters,—there were nearly one hundred eighty of them at one time prior to the war.

In and of itself, I believe the growth and the development, the unfolding that comes to a clean young man or woman is evidence and testimony of the divinity of this great work. It was a privilege to meet with them in their report meetings where they bared their souls and testified in humility of the goodness of the Lord to them and of the power of the priesthood. At one such meeting, one of our missionaries testified that there were angels present in the room.

I believe that no greater work exists in the world than missionary work. I love it. I never tire of the story of Joseph Smith and the restoration, and the testimonies that are borne like Brother Kimball's. I had bread for my meal today at noon; I had it for my meals yesterday. If the Lord blesses me I hope to have it tomorrow. I love these testimonies; as they are the bread of life to me—I never tire of them. This is God's work. It is a wonderful privilege to preach it in the world and to assist those who do preach it.

The Western States Mission covers a large part of six states, extending from the southern extremity of the United States on into the Black Hills of South Dakota and from the Utah line into Iowa. It is peopled by a splendid people, many of whom have come from the Wards and Stakes of Zion, where they have been trained in the quorums and the organizations of the Church. They are giving a wonderful service in teaching and preaching the Gospel by their lives as well as helping in our organizations.

It would be impossible, I think, to properly evaluate the services that have been rendered by your young sons in uniform, and many of them have been accompanied by young wives. It has been a new experience to our people in the mission field to meet young men and women, other than missionaries, who come from the body of the Church. As we lost our missionaries, these young men have stepped into the harness, and carried responsibility in a wonderful way: their wives served likewise. We have been able to hold together our branches and organizations and continued to grow.

The Western States Mission, and I am thankful to report it, is ready for twelve new chapels, and for some remodeling in other branches. Our work has been limited in its growth only by lack of help. Some of our growth has been in finding our own people who have gone out from the body of the Church here.

I mentioned your young men in uniform. (We have had more military posts in our Mission than we have had Branches of the Church.) You have worried about your young people; you have prayed for them. It has been an inspiration to see them respond, to take part and to love and appreciate the Gospel more, I believe, sometimes than they were able to do at home. It has been an inspiration to visit with Chaplains, with Commanding Officers, to check on our boys' records, to help them to find themselves and to find the Lord—I believe after all that this is the most important thing.

One of our missionaries in reporting, completed what he had to say and sat down without having borne his testimony. I recalled him and said, "Elder, do you think that it is true?" He said: "President, I know it is true; it gives me goose pimples all up and down my spine."

I know that feeling; I have felt those pimples. It has been wonderful to help young men and women, and older ones, find the Lord.

One young man, just about to be released, bore his testimony and said: "I have found that in extremity I can get on my knees and talk to the Lord, and that testimony will go with me wherever I go in the world." And he has since been to the far corners of the world both as a soldier of the cross and as a soldier of his country, and has remained firm and true.

Another of our missionaries told of a difficulty he had been in, how he went around the corner and up the lane and talked to the Lord. As I have continued to correspond with them I find they are still "talking to the Lord" and that the testimony that He lives and is near us and that we are His children, as mentioned by President Smith this morning, will live with them as long as they live.

One of your sons who was called upon extemporaneously at one of our meetings said: "To the men of my company I am the Mormon Church. They may never know another member of our Church." And he is realizing that he is an Elder of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints and they must be different from other men and live differently and set an example.

Missionaries as soldiers—and that includes men and women in all branches of the service—are preaching the Gospel and have preached it and have prepared the ground, in our mission at least, for a glorious harvest. God speed the day now that they may change their uniforms and their calling and return to these spots to teach this wonderful message of the restored gospel of Jesus Christ.

I am thankful, my brethren and my sisters, for my testimony and the opportunity that has been mine to serve and for the way this work has gone forward with the blessings of the Lord. I pray that I may always be found worthy and that each of us may so be, to serve wherever called and in whatever capacity. I know that joy comes in the finding of souls for Jesus. God bless us, Amen.

President George Albert Smith:

I remarked that this is an unusual group. It occurs to me now that within the past few years men have given up business to go out into the world to preach the Gospel of Jesus Christ without compensation. I know of no other place in the world, no other community that produces such men and women. Ninety-nine years ago today Brigham Young and the Pioneers left Winter Quarters on their way to this land. They came across the plains ninety-nine years ago today. There was nothing but desolation in this valley; not even the Indians would live here; it was too dry and forbidding; but they came in obedience to the inspiration of the Almighty, believing that the Lord would open the way. We who sit here in this house today by the thousands, and who inhabit this section of the country today by the hundreds of thousands are enjoying the fruits of their faith and their devotion and their efforts.

Now today, at 5:00, on the brow of the hill up here at Emigration Canyon, ground will be broken for the monument that is to bring near to us these forebears of ours and those who came with them and before them. The mayor of our city, Mayor Glade, the Governor of our State, and a number of others—I shall not take time to read their names—will be there at the breaking of the ground, and the monument will be on its way. Granite is being placed, and it is remarkable to us how the way has been opened to complete this great monument that will be a part of the celebration that will occur next year, when we will all be grateful to our Heavenly Father and manifest it by coming together in goodly numbers. And so tonight all who have their conveyances, who can go up onto the hill, will be made welcome. And let us not go up there just out of curiosity. Let us go there with thanksgiving in our hearts to our Heavenly Father that we have lived to see the fruits of the lives of those who will be honored when that monument has been completed.

It is wonderful to belong to an organization that produces men and women such as have come out of this great Church under the inspiration of our Heavenly Father.

Now our session will be concluded this afternoon, and when we adjourn it will be until 10:00 tomorrow morning in this building.

The building has been filled and people standing all day long, in order that they might be present, not just to be with the crowd, but to feel the inspiration of our Heavenly Father as they assemble in his name to honor him and to worship him.

The Relief Society Singing Mothers of the Salt Lake Region will now sing "Song of the Redeemed," and the closing prayer will be offered by Paul E. Wrathall, President of the Grantsville Stake.

The Singing Mothers sang "The Song of the Redeemed," after which President Paul E. Wrathall of the Grantsville Stake offered the closing prayer.

Conference adjourned until Saturday morning, April 6, at 10 o'clock.

SECOND DAY

MORNING MEETING

Conference reconvened Saturday morning, April 6, at 10 o'clock, with President George Albert Smith presiding and conducting the services.

The music for this session of the Conference was furnished by the Manti Choirs, Elder Ellis E. Johnson, Conductor.

President George Albert Smith:

This is the third session of the 116th Annual Conference of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints. We are convened in the Tabernacle on Temple Square, Salt Lake City.

There are present on the stand this morning all the General Authorities of the Church, except Elder Ezra Taft Benson, who is absent in Europe, presiding over the European Mission, and Elder Matthew Cowley, who is detained at home on account of his physical condition.

The proceedings of this session will be broadcast over KSL of Salt Lake City, KSUB of Cedar City, and KID at Idaho Falls.

We will commence the morning services by the Manti Choir singing, "Who's On the Lord Side." Elder Ellis E. Johnson is the conductor, and Elder Alexander Schreiner is at the organ.

After the singing, the opening prayer will be offered by President Ernest A. Strong of the Kolob Stake, Springville, Utah.

---

The Manti Choirs sang "Who's On the Lord's Side."

Elder Ernest A. Strong, President of the Kolob Stake, offered the opening prayer.

President George Albert Smith:

It is evident that we have more people in the building this morning than we had yesterday. We will appreciate it if those who are comfortably seated now will take a little less space, crowd toward the center of the benches, and I think we can probably make room for most of those who are now standing. There are probably 150 or 200 standing. We will ask the ushers to bring you to your places. I would like to suggest that there is room for twelve or fifteen people on the steps of the stand here, and for the information of those of you who are in the habit of sitting on the stand, I should like to suggest that that is where I sat a few years ago because there wasn't any place that I could see that somebody else did not have. I sat on the steps of the stand and before that Conference was finished, I was sustained as a member of the Quorum of the Twelve. (Laughter) We shall all be happier if everybody can be seated, and I am sure you are making good progress, and I thank you for it.

The music, as we have already been informed, for this session of the Conference, is by the Manti Choir, 120 voices strong. The hymns that are to be rendered by this choir have been sung by this organization for upwards of sixty years. Among them are the compositions and arrangements of Professor A. C. Smyth, the first leader of the choir. I remember Brother Smyth very well. He is one of the men who tried to teach me how to sing.

Their next number will be, "Lord, We Come Before Thee Now." after which President Oscar A. Kirkham of the First Council of the Seventy will speak to us.

Singing by the Choirs, "Lord, We Come Before Thee Now."

ELDER OSCAR A. KIRKHAM

Of the First Council of the Seventy

I trust that I may enjoy the blessings of the Spirit of the Lord. It is indeed a great inspiration to meet with the Saints at this General Conference. Only a few days ago I met with eleven hundred young people, and then it was a great delight to see them stand in a testimony meeting, not one at a time, but five at a time, seeking the opportunity to bear their testimonies. Their testimonies were thoughtful. They were the answers to prayer, that they might express themselves before their brothers and sisters in a way that might be acceptable and that might express their deepest emotion and thinking.

Conference of Service Men in Korea

I was delighted yesterday to know that from far-off Korea we received a cablegram that our young men were meeting there in conference. I feel personally that this spirit is abroad in the land; that people are hopeful. They want the truth. They want the word of God. The great challenge to us is that we might be humble servants, laboring under the influence of the Spirit of God, to bring to thousands—yea, to perhaps millions, the blessed testimony of the gospel of Jesus Christ.

Answers to Vital Questions

Recently, I was travelling with a group of eight men from Salt Lake City to San Francisco. They came from different parts of the United States. We had many things in common, and we agreed that each man might propound a question and talk for a half hour or so on each question. When my opportunity came, I asked the question of the group of men:

"Why is the church? Why the religious life?"

I want to read to you the answers these men gave which expressed what was really, seriously, their desire in relation to a religious life and in relation to a church. As I read these statements, which I copied down as best I could, exactly as they were given, you may in your meditation see how the gospel of Jesus Christ answers their desires. Said one man:

I want something beyond me, for strength—spiritual strength.

Said another:

I want a true moral code which I may live by.

Still another said:

I want an opportunity to give service on high levels.

Another said:

I want the company of people with like ideals.

I want something that will truly satisfy what I feel in my life as a definite basic urge.

I want an opportunity to study spiritual values. . . . I want to know God and put myself in harmony with his will. I want to give satisfying purpose to my life. I want it to give me a chance to develop my talents and to give expression to the best within me.

Another said:

I want a safe, continuous tie, an anchorage in the hour of need. I want help that I might have greater faith, to connect life with eternity; to practice a real brotherhood of man; an opportunity where I can truly repent, feel forgiveness, and make high resolve. To enjoy and feel the strength of prayer. To know God's will, and live in harmony with it.

If men and women, across our land and across the world, have these desires, then we may look for a glorious tomorrow.

I have faith that they have them. Some apparently, by reckless living, or by conditions which have been brought upon them, by the great things that have recently happened, may be disturbed. But I feel it is only disturbance—that the realities still abide. They are waiting for the word of God. They are waiting for you and for me to come in humility to give them the simple truths, the gospel of Jesus Christ as revealed by the Prophet Joseph Smith. They do not say it exactly that way, but in their heart of hearts they are seeking for it. Each one of these queries might be taken one by one to show how the gospel has answered them.

Complete Satisfaction in Gospel of Jesus Christ

Let me just refer to one or two: This first great fundamental question that was asked: "Something beyond me for strength—spiritual strength." Well, we know the answer to that longing. When the Lord revealed himself to the Prophet Joseph Smith, and made known and declared again through the testimony of that great event, the truth of a personal God, a Father in heaven, one that could speak and understand the voice of a boy, then came new testimony that this is "something beyond man." We know how real and how helpful that glorious truth is, and what a great comfort it brings to all of us.

One said, "company of people with like ideals." One of my friends said recently that he had an opportunity to go to the University of London after he had graduated from one of our universities in the United States. But said he, "Oscar, I want to go back home; I want to go back and live with my people. I want to be with them, and enjoy with my children life with them." Where we, in our community life, are living in accordance to the gospel's teachings, there we have a lovely social order; there is a lovely neighborhood: there is that lovely companionship of friends, true friends, where they come to us and we go to them, in the hour of need.

Another one wanted "opportunity to develop his talents." I thought just a moment ago, when the Manti Choir was singing, and

I would not in any way disparage the fine talents and abilities of this choir, but just think, we could multiply this choir a hundred times throughout this Church. There is opportunity for men and women in many, many different ways, to develop the talents within them. It takes two hundred and fourteen people in leadership capacity of one type or another to run even a ward, one ward. Think how the Lord has provided in his plan a chance for men and women, if they take the opportunity and do their best, how it develops them.

An Illustration—The Lamplighter

May I say just this word in closing. I stood one day in far-off France with a group of boys about me. The colorful old lamplighter came with his interesting cape and his stiff-brimmed hat. He started to light the lamps. He lit this one; then he crossed the way and lit another. Then again, and this one did not burn very easily; he had to go up the post and clean it out. He was patient, and finally, the light came on. We smiled, and he crossed the way again. By and by down the highway he went, and over into the city, and came again on the distant hilltop. We watched with great interest to see this great pathway of light—one man lighting the highway. And so it may be with us in our missionary service. It may be difficult here or there. The light may not come on very easily, but with patience, with constant striving and with prayer in our hearts the highway will be made light, a safe place to travel.

God help us with the great task before us in our missionary service, that we may go forward in humility and with devotion and with thanksgiving, with a prayerful heart. May we study the word of God, to be prepared, that joy and light may come again to a heartsick world, then into our own hearts will come more and more the strength to give and help.

I humbly pray for these blessings in the name of Jesus Christ, Amen.

President George Albert Smith:

President Richard L. Evans will be our next speaker. While he is coming to the stand I shall read a message to you from Stockholm, Sweden, dated April 6:

"Saints assembled at conference today, Stockholm, Sweden, sustain their beloved Prophet and leaders. Rejoice in having missionaries from Zion. Greetings to all."

Eben Blomquist, President of the Mission."

President Evans will now address us.

ELDER RICHARD L. EVANS

Of the First Council of the Seventy

First of all, I should like to express my gratitude to my Father in heaven for my membership in this Church, and for my fellowship with you who are here, and with those whom you represent, throughout the world.

There has been running through my mind a phrase from the Doctrine and Covenants, accentuated by some phases of the statistical report given here yesterday morning, which I shall refer to in a moment. This phrase appears in a number of places:

. . . trouble me no more concerning this matter.

And in one place it is followed by the further reminder:

But learn that he who doeth the works of righteousness shall receive his reward, even peace in this world, and eternal life in the world to come. (D. & C. 59:22-23.)

This phrase "trouble me no more concerning this matter" which, as stated, appears in a number of places, would seem to have been an indication from the Lord to the Prophet Joseph Smith and his associates that when principles had been given, when the mind and the will of the Lord had been made known to the Prophet, he and his people should proceed in accordance with those principles without unnecessarily seeking further instruction, or further troubling the Lord concerning things which they already knew.

This thought ties in with another oft-quoted series of verses from the Doctrine and Covenants:

For behold, it is not meet that I should command in all things; for he that is compelled in all things, the same is a slothful and not a wise servant; wherefore he receiveth no reward. Verily I say, men should be anxiously engaged in a good cause, and do many things of their own free will, and bring to pass much righteousness; For the power is in them, wherein they are agents unto themselves. And inasmuch as men do good they shall in nowise lose their reward. But he that doeth not anything until he is commanded, and receiveth a commandment with doubtful heart, and keepeth it with slothfulness, the same is damned. (D. & C. 58:26-29.)

"Be Anxiously Engaged in a Good Cause"

It is a great satisfaction to parents, it is a great satisfaction to men in places of leadership, when our children, or those who are working in some assignment for which we are responsible, do precisely what they are asked to do, in the manner in which they are asked to do it. But there is an even greater thrill than this that comes to parents and to those in positions of leadership, and that is, when our children or our associates do a good thing of their own free will—a thing which they haven't been asked to do, specifically, but which they undertake in accordance with the principles which have been taught them, which they know to be true. That is one of the great thrills of being a parent—when a child who has been taught correct principles proceeds to act in his own behalf in accordance with those principles, and to bring to pass good works and righteousness.

I believe if we should ask the leaders of industry and of business and those who are responsible for the economic well-being and other activities of our nation, what is one of the most difficult things to find, that among those which would be high on the list, if not in highest place, would be the difficulty of finding young people, and old ones too, for that matter, who are willing to take leadership and responsibility, to make decisions, and to see things to their final conclusion and disposal with integrity, with ability, and in accordance with principles which have been pre-determined and agreed upon. And I believe further than any young man who will take leadership and responsibility with integrity and intelligence can have about what he wants.

Obligation to Govern Ourselves Under Correct Principles

Now, as always, there are two forces at work in this world, as there were in the heavens before time began. There is that force which would condition men for servility and regimentation, which would discourage them from thinking and acting for themselves. And then there is that force which, having established sound principles of conduct, would make it possible and encourage men to be free agents, and to use their intelligence and their God-given energies in the accomplishment of good works and righteous purposes.

To bring this down to its application in the Church today, we heard in the statistical report yesterday that there are one hundred fifty-five stakes, thirty-eight missions, more than twelve hundred wards and independent branches, and nearly a million people, and we know that the time is already here (and has long been here) when men holding office in the wards and stakes must more than ever assume responsibility, make decisions, follow through with their assignments to a successful conclusion, proceeding with good works, and bringing to pass many things in righteousness of their own free will, in accordance with the plans which have been laid down, and without importuning too much concerning principles which have already been established and agreed upon.

As the Lord on a number of occasions instructed the Prophet to "trouble him no more" concerning certain matters, the Prophet likewise, even with the Church as small as it was in his day, did virtually that same thing to his associates. He advised that he taught his people correct principles and let them govern themselves. And frequently, as recorded in the Documentary History of the Church, when someone from another branch or from another part of the Church, distant somewhat from the place where the Prophet happened to be at that particular time, would write him and ask him how to proceed with a certain problem or situation (and they had many grievous problems and difficult situations), he would often reply by reminding them of the principles by which they should be guided, answering some of their questions directly where he thought they needed answer and then advising them to proceed in accordance with their own best judgment and to handle the situation themselves.

Use of Free Agency

This generation, in many places in the world, has been deliberately conditioned for regimentation, and I am sure that those forces which are committed to the principle of the free agency of man and his intelligent action and responsibility in his own behalf must be more vigorous than ever before in counteracting this contrary influence. I do not know anything, for example, that is more wasteful of time or more destructive of individuality, than making it necessary for people to wait long hours in long lines. I wouldn't say that it was always avoidable, but certainly it must not become our way of life. Certainly these things must not be permitted to be perpetuated beyond actual necessity, lest our lives become reduced to an inflexible pattern.

I would plead with you, my brethren and sisters, and pray our Father in heaven, that, as individuals and as people and as a nation, we may give our full energies to bringing to pass much righteousness; that we may not withhold our labor; that we may get in and do the job that needs to be done, and work and give our strength constructively for the creation and the production of those things which the world so badly needs; that we may proceed with full purpose of heart in accordance with the principles we know to be true; and that we may take responsibility and make decisions and bring to pass much righteousness of our own volition, not waiting to be commanded in all things, for the way is clear before us, and our duties and obligations and responsibilities are not hidden from us. May God help us so to proceed, I ask in the name of the Lord Jesus Christ. Amen.

ELDER JOSEPH F. SMITH

Patriarch to the Church

My brethren and sisters, will you give me your faith, and will you join me in my prayer that I may be equal to this assignment?

Night before last in the welfare meeting the President of the Church called attention to the fact that we as a people had suffered relatively little during the war, and he suggested that we think on this. I have been thinking about it since he called it to our attention. This country has suffered relatively little. Grievous as have been our bereavements, the people in this country have not wanted for food; they have not suffered deprivation. It is well that we think on these things, and think upon the reasons therefor.

The Key to True Education

In the great revelation which contains that famous "Mormon" axiom, "The glory of God is intelligence," we read this:

The Spirit of truth is of God. I am the Spirit of truth, and John bore record of me, saying: He received a fulness of truth, yea, even of all truth; And no man receiveth a fulness unless he keepeth his commandments. (D. & C. 93:26,27.)

That, it seems to me, is the key to true education. No man can receive a fulness of truth unless he keeps the commandments of our Father in heaven. Learning is not wisdom. We have been misled into thinking that learning is the ultimate in education. True education must result in wisdom. The learning in the world is great. We stand breathless before the myriad of marvels of science. The wisdom of the world is puny. Witness the devastation of war. May I take a moment to read a verse from II Nephi which I have often quoted regarding this matter of learning? We have had reference made in this conference to the foolishness of so-called wise men.

... O the vainness, and the frailties, and the foolishness of men! When they are learned they think they are wise, and they hearken not unto the counsel of God, for they set it aside, supposing they know of themselves, wherefore, their wisdom is foolishness and it profiteth them not. And they shall perish. (II Nephi 9:28.)

Amidst the greatest learning that the world has ever seen, we have seen the greatest perishing the world has ever seen, and our greatest learning has been utilized for the destruction of God's children. "But to be learned is good if they hearken unto the counsels of God." (Ibid., 29.) Again, no man receiveth the fulness of truth—no man may be truly educated—except he keep the commandments of our Father in heaven. This great revelation concludes with this statement:

And, verily I say unto you, that it is my will that you should hasten to translate my scriptures, and to obtain a knowledge of history, and of countries, and of kingdoms, of laws of God and man, and all this for the salvation of Zion. Amen. (D. & C. 93:53.)

Historical Events

I should like to take a few moments this morning to give consideration to some historical events. As I go about among young people I find, tragically, that among high school students, the two subjects most heartily disliked by the greatest number of persons, are, first, English, and second, history. Our educational system would do well to think upon that. If we would be wise, we should know how we got the way we are. Only a genuine study of real history can bring that about. This country, a land choice above all other lands, and the people thereon have enjoyed tremendous blessings. This country was long in preparing. I can't outline the whole story. I'd like to touch just one or two important events.

Way back in 1215 when the barons wrung from King John the Magna Charta, we had the modern beginning of true democracy. Sometime later, in 1517, Luther nailed his famous theses to the door of his church in Wittenberg, and not a great time after that, in 1555, the famous Peace of Augsburg gave freedom of worship to Protestants—breaking the tyranny of Rome. Still later, a band of Puritans, finding themselves persecuted in England because of their religious beliefs, went to Holland, and after twelve years in a foreign land, amongst a foreign tongue, they decided to set out for the new world—for real religious freedom—and in 1620 headed westward across the Atlantic Ocean. The great governor, William Bradford, said of them:

So they left that goodly and pleasant city which had been their resting place for twelve years, but they knew that they were pilgrims, and looked not much on those things, but lifted up their eyes to the heavens, their dearest country, and quieted their spirits.

Their reliance upon the Lord was their greatest safeguard.

The Mayflower Compact

After that memorable and tedious voyage across the ocean, as their little ship lay at anchor in Cape Cod Bay, they were faced with insurrection. They were faced with possible anarchy, because there were those among their number who were determined that there should be an anarchy. The wiser ones among them knew that anarchy must inevitably lead to chaos. But in the cabin aboard the ship they gathered together, and with reliance upon their Father in heaven, brought forth that famous document, the Mayflower Compact,—“the beginning of American democracy.” I would like to take just a minute to read it for you. Notice well the first words:

In ye name of God, Amen. We whose names are underwritten, the loyall subjects of our dread soveraigne Lord, King James, by ye grace of God, of Great Britaine, Franc & Ireland king, defender of ye faith, &c., haveing undertaken, for ye glorie of God, and advancement of ye Christian faith, and honour of our king & countrie, a voyage to plant ye first colonie in ye Northerne parts of Virginia, doe by these presents solemnly & mutually in ye presence of God, and one of another, covenant & combine our selves together into a civill body politick, for our better ordering & preservation and furtherance of ye ends aforesaid; and by vertue hearof to enacte, constitute, and frame such just & equall lawes, ordinances, acts, constitutions, & offices, from time to time, as shall be thought most meete & convenient for ye generall good of ye Colonie, unto which we promise all due submission and obedience. In witness whereof we have hereunder subscribed our names at Cap-Codd ye 11. of November, in ye year of ye raigne of our soveraigne lord, King James, of England, Franc, & Ireland ye eighteenth, and of Scotland ye fiftie fourth. Ano Dom. 1620

Declaration of Independence

There you have the beginnings of truly democratic government, people bound together to frame just laws for their own observance, under the guidance of the Lord. And later the Declaration of Independence was drafted. After setting forth the reasons for the separation, by setting forth their grievances, Jefferson, speaking for the colonies, concludes thus:

We, therefore, the representatives of the United States of America, in General Congress, Assembled, appealing to the Supreme Judge of the world for the rectitude of our intentions, do, in the Name and by authority of the good People of these Colonies, solemnly publish and declare, That these United Colonies are, and of Right ought to be free and independent states; that they are Absolved from all Allegiance to the British Crown, and that all political connection between them and the State of Great Britian, is and ought to be totally dissolved; and that as free and independent States, they have full Power to levy War, conclude Peace, contract Alliances, establish Commerce, and to do all other Acts and Things which independent States may of right do. And for the support of this Declaration, with a firm reliance on the Protection of Divine Providence, We mutually pledge to each other our Lives, our Fortunes, and our sacred Honor.

"God Governs in the Affairs of Men"

This country has enjoyed the blessings that it does, because of reliance upon the Lord. Only a year later—1787—our great Constitution was drafted. I wonder how many in this congregation have read the Constitution in the last ten years? I want to tell you, brethren and sisters, it is the charter that stands between us and slavery, and it would be well for us to think upon that. May I read what Benjamin Franklin said about it. He said this at the time when debate was acrimonious, and there was dissension in the Congress:

I have lived, sir, a long time, and the longer I live, the more convincing proofs I see of this truth: that God governs in the affairs of men. And if a sparrow cannot fall to the ground without His notice, is it probable that an empire can rise without his aid?

We have been assured, sir, in the sacred writings, that "except the Lord build the house they labor in vain that build it." I firmly believe this; and I also believe that without His concurring aid we shall succeed in this political building no better than the builders of Babel. We shall be divided by our little partial local interests; our projects will be confounded, and we ourselves shall become a reproach and a by-word down to future ages. And what is worse, mankind may hereafter from this unfortunate instance, despair of establishing governments by human wisdom, and leave it to chance, war, and conquest.

I, therefore, beg leave to move that henceforth prayers imploring the assistance of Heaven, and its blessings on our deliberations, be held in this Assembly every morning before we proceed to business, and that one or more of the clergy of this city be requested to officiate in that service.

The Lord's Appraisal of the Constitution

Now there are those in the country who are telling us and particularly our children, that the Constitution was very fine in its day but that it is old-fashioned. "We have passed 'the horse and buggy days; it is time we were becoming modern." I would like to take a moment to read what the Lord has to say about the Constitution of the United States:

... again I say unto you, those who have been scattered by their enemies, it is my will that they should continue to importune for redress, and redemption, by the hands of those who are placed as rulers and are in authority over you-

According to the laws and constitution of the people, which I have suffered to be established, and should be maintained for the rights and protection of all flesh, according to just and holy principles; That every man may act in doctrine and principle pertaining to futurity, according to the moral agency which I have given unto him, that every man may be accountable for his own sins in the day of judgment. (D. & C. 101:76-78.)

When the Prophet offered the dedicatory prayer in the temple at Kirtland, a prayer which was given to him by revelation, he said this:

Have mercy, O Lord, upon all the nations of the earth, have mercy upon the rulers of our land, may those principles which were so honorably and nobly defended, viz., the Constitution of our land, by our fathers, be established forever. (History of the Church, Vol. II, p. 424.)

And in the ninety-eighth section of the Doctrine and Covenants, the Lord has this to say about the Constitution:

And that law of the land which is constitutional, supporting that principle of freedom in maintaining rights and privileges, belongs to all mankind, and is justifiable before me.

Therefore, I, the Lord, justify you, and your brethren of my church, in befriending that law which is the constitutional law of the land;

And as pertaining to the law of man, whatsoever is more or less than this cometh of evil. (D. & C. 98:5-7.)

Support Men Who Will Protect the Constitution

Now, those are the Lord's words. There has been a tendency among some Latter-day Saints, even when the Constitution is mentioned, to say, "There he goes talking politics." I am not talking politics. I am quoting the words of the Lord. Certainly, it is not meet that we should bring politics into the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints, but just as certainly, it is meet that every member of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints take the doctrine of Christ into his politics, and that he evaluate every candidate and every platform under any and every political banner in the terms of the gospel of Jesus Christ. If there be any one who would destroy or weaken the Constitution of the United States, oppose him to the limit of your constitutional rights! Obversely, we should support candidates and foster platforms of whatever parties who will protect the sacred Constitution of the United States—that just document of government which was divinely inspired.

In our various councils today I am wondering how often the Lord is asked for aid? I would like to know if there has been one single instance in the whole history of American labor-management disputes when industrialists and labor union leaders, coming together to solve their problems, have asked the Lord for guidance. I would like to know if there has been one single instance. Goodness knows, prayers are rare in civic and national conferences. It is time we learned that the wisdom of men is foolishness, when they think they know of themselves and refuse to rely upon the Lord.

Saturday, April 6

Second Day

May I turn to the second inaugural address of Abraham Lincoln? I read towards the end:

... "Woe unto the world because of offenses; for it must needs be that offenses come, but woe to that man by whom the offense cometh." If we shall suppose that American slavery is one of those offenses which, in the providence of God, must needs come, but which, having continued through His appointed time, He now wills to remove, and that He gives to both North and South this terrible war as the woe due to those by whom the offense came, shall we discern therein any departure from those divine attributes which the believers in a living God always ascribe to Him? Fondly do we hope, fervently do we pray, that this mighty scourge of war may speedily pass away. Yet, if God wills that it continue until all the wealth piled by the bondman's two hundred and fifty years of unrequited toil shall be sunk, and until every drop of blood drawn with the lash shall be paid by another drawn with the sword, as was said three thousand years ago, so still it must be said "the judgments of the Lord are true and righteous altogether."

Rely Upon the Lord

The Civil War was fought for the preservation of the Constitution, for the abandoning of slavery, and yet slavery is creeping upon us in this day—anno Domini 1946. Through the wars we did not want but now there is beginning in this country real want. I have heard a number of recitals in the past two or three days of persons destitute, without clothing and without food, because they are suffering economic slavery. Now, brethren and sisters, certainly as Latter-day Saints it is time that everyone of us in all his work: in his vocation, in his exercise of his civic rights, in his presiding at the head of his family, in all he does, that he rely upon the Lord. It is time that civic bodies, economic bodies, national bodies, start relying upon the Lord, even as did our forebears. May I conclude with those famous words of Abraham Lincoln, peculiarly appropriate at this moment:

With malice toward none, with charity for all, with firmness in the right as God gives us to see the right, let us strive on to finish the work we are in, to bind up the nation's wounds, to care for him who shall have borne the battle and for his widow and his orphan, to do all which may achieve and cherish a just and lasting peace among ourselves and with all nations. (Second Inaugural Address.)

I pray that certainly the Latter-day Saints at least shall do all in their power to preserve that kind of government, that kind of reliance in government upon providence which to this moment has assured us our blessings and which if we abandon, will bring us into ever increasing slavery, in the name of Jesus Christ. Amen.

The congregation and Choirs sang the hymn, "Come, Come Ye Saints," Hymn Book page 47, L. D. S. Hymns No. 194.

ELDER HAROLD B. LEE

Of the Council of the Twelve Apostles

I could ask for no preface more fitting for what I desire to say this morning, than the singing of that grand hymn, "Come, Come, Ye Saints." As I sit through the conferences from year to year, I contemplate the great effort and sacrifice that have gone into the efforts you have made in coming to these conferences and the seriousness with which you attend, regularly and faithfully, and in listening to all that is said and the actions taken. I have asked myself the question as to the purpose, after all, of a general conference, and I am reminded of the words of the Lord when he gave us, in a revelation, the pattern by which important matters pertaining to his Church should be presented to the people. This is what he said

... let it be done as it shall be counseled by the elders of the church at the conferences, according to the knowledge which they receive from time to time. (D. & C. 58:56.)

Will of the Lord Again Revealed

As in olden times, so in our day, holy men of God speak as they are moved upon by the Holy Ghost, and whatsoever they speak when moved upon by the Holy Ghost shall be scripture, shall be the will of the Lord, shall be the mind of the Lord, shall be the voice of the Lord, and the word of the Lord, and the power of God unto salvation. It should be a great comfort to the Latter-day Saints in this day of which the Lord foretold, when peace should be taken from the earth, and the devil would have power over his own dominion, to hear the Lord say in revelation that in that day he would reign in the midst of his people and would have power over his Saints. But in this day when the arm of the Lord shall be revealed, they who will not listen to the voice of the Lord, neither to the voice of his servants, neither give heed to the apostles and prophets, shall be cut off from among the people. Some of the most profound thinkers in our generation, other than Church members, have realized the need for revelations from the Lord in order to give vitality to the teachings of a church. It was Ralph Waldo Emerson who said:

The Hebrew and Greek scriptures contain immortal sentences that have been the bread of life to millions, but they do not have epical integrity, are fragmentary and are not shown in their order to the intellect. . . . Nor can the Bible be closed until the last great man is born. . . . Men have come to speak of revelation as somewhat long ago given and done, as if God were dead. That injury to faith throttles the preachers and the goodliest of institutions become an uncertain and inarticulate voice. The need was never greater for revelation than it is today.

The Purpose of Revelation

In our day the Lord has given us the reason and the purpose for which revelations are given. He said to us in one of the earliest revelations in this day of the restored Church:

Wherefore, I the Lord, knowing the calamity which should come upon the inhabitants of the earth, called upon my servant Joseph Smith, Jun., . . . and gave him commandments; And also gave commandments to others, that . . . The weak things of the world shall . . . break down the mighty and strong ones, that man should not counsel his fellow man, neither trust in the arm of flesh—But that every man might speak in the name of God the Lord, . . . That faith also might increase in the earth; That mine everlasting covenant might be established; That the fulness of my gospel might be proclaimed. . . . Behold, I am God and have spoken it; these commandments are of me, and were given unto my servants in their weakness, after the manner of their language, that they might come to understanding. And inasmuch as they erred, it might be made known; And inasmuch as they sought wisdom, they might be instructed; . . . And inasmuch as they were humble they might be made strong, and blessed from on high, and receive knowledge from time to time. (D. & C. 1:17-28.)

And so, obedient to that purpose, there have been in this day, our day, men commissioned of the Lord with power and authority, and he has given them the inspiration to teach and proclaim these things to the world for the purpose the Lord has set forth, and he has done it here in this conference and will continue to do so until the end of the conference, that the important things might be counseled by the elders of the Church to this people according to the inspiration and revelation they receive from time to time. As the Latter-day Saints go home from this conference, it would be well if they consider seriously the importance of taking with them the report of this conference and let it be the guide to their walk and talk during the next six months. These are the important matters the Lord sees fit to reveal to this people in this day in the year 1946.

Foresight of Church Leaders

The divine nature of the activities of this Church was never more attested than in the developments of this last decade, when, under the inspiration of heaven, our leaders have been trying to prepare this people against the calamities which were shortly to come upon the inhabitants of the earth. At the time when the nations of the world were fomenting hate and racial prejudices, this, the Church of Jesus Christ, was sending missionaries to many of these nations, preaching the brotherhood of man and the fatherhood of God. We were exemplifying that brotherhood here at home by the teamwork of priesthood quorums and by ward and stake groups working on welfare projects and in missionary activities. When a false and inflated prosperity was abroad in the land, caused by the demands of the recent war, this people, largely by volunteer labor, were filling storehouses with surpluses that would otherwise have gone to waste. They were building a grain elevator and storing grain at the time when wheat was being destroyed because it was not needed. They were, in obedience to the counsel of the leaders of the Church, filling their own cellars and their own basements with the commodities necessary to meet the needs that were foreseen in a day to come, and in order to reduce the drain on the public supply that would otherwise be needed for the prosecution of the purposes of this government. The things, it seems to me, that we need most in the world today, are, first, a recognition of the "modern Josephs" represented in the leadership of the Church today, because of the prophetic vision they have exercised in seeing this day of want and destruction; and second, we need "modern Pharaohs" in this and other nations, who will recognize the statements of these leaders of the Church as the mind of the Lord and the word of the Lord to the world in this day.

An unintentional testimony was given to us recently in the nation's capital by a high-placed government official when he said after we had explained to him the welfare activities of the Church "You have done the very thing in your Church that the government is now trying to do in its present program to provide food for the starving nations of Europe."

As the carloads of foodstuffs and clothing and bedding move down to the seaports to be transported overseas to feed our needy people, and as the truckloads in our country go to meet similar needs in that distressed area, I have felt in my heart that surely this is sufficient evidence of the hand of the Lord being laid bare in behalf of his people.

Tenth Anniversary of Church Welfare Program

Today marks the tenth anniversary of the inauguration or the announcement of the churchwide activity known as the Church welfare program. I cannot come to this day without looking back over the days that have passed. I have remembered some of those who fathered this work, since its inception, who have been called to their eternal home: President Heber J. Grant, Melvin J. Ballard, Nicholas G. Smith, Campbell M. Brown, J. Frank Ward, Robert L. Judd, Elias S. Woodruff, Byron D. Anderson. As I think of their passing, I can't help contemplating what their interest is in the welfare program wherever they are today. I can't believe that it is less than it was here; and if the Lord gives them the opportunity to exercise that influence, I am certain they will be exercising it. What of us here? In paying due honor to what they attempted to build, I wonder if we have remembered their words. We have repeated often the statement that was given to us by President Grant when this program was launched. These were his words and you heard them repeated, time and again, when he said:

Our primary purpose is to set up, insofar as it might be possible, a system under which the curse of idleness would be done away with, the evils of a dole abolished, and independence, industry, and thrift and self-respect be once more established amongst our people. The aim of the Church is to help the people to help themselves. Work is to be re-enthroned as the ruling principle of the lives of our Church membership. (The Improvement Era, April 1946, p. 209.)

Foundation Stones of Welfare Work

I traveled over the Church by request of the First Presidency with Elder Melvin J. Ballard in the early days of the welfare program to discuss with local Church leaders the details essential to its beginning. There were three favorite passages of scripture that he frequently quoted to the people. One statement that he often repeated was this "We must take care of our own people, for the Lord has said that all this is to be done that:

. . . the church may stand independent above all other creatures beneath the celestial world." (D. & C. 78:14.)

And again he taught, after quoting from the one hundred fifteenth section of the Doctrine and Covenants:

Verily I say unto you all: Arise and shine forth, that thy light may be a standard for the nations, (verse 5.)

this is the day of demonstration of the power of the Lord in behalf of his people. And again quoting the one hundred fourth section:

Therefore, if any man shall take of the abundance which I have made, and impart not his portion, according to the law of my gospel, unto the poor and the needy, he shall, with the wicked, lift up his eyes in hell, being in torment. (v. 18.)

I read these quotations to you today to remind you of the foundation stones on which the welfare work of the Church has been laid.

Obligation to Care for Our Own

As I have recalled the experiences of the last ten years, I have thought of the welfare work as a kind of temporal turning of the hearts of the fathers to the children and the children to the fathers.

You who may think that a far-fetched statement, may I remind you of one or two scriptures? To Timothy, the Apostle Paul said:

But if any [man] provide not for his own, and especially for those of his own house, he hath denied the faith, and is worse than an infidel. (1 Tim. 5:8.)

And again the commandment from Mt. Sinai, and interpreted by the Master, you will remember, to mean the taking care of aging parents by children:

Honour thy father and thy mother: that thy days may be long upon the land which the Lord thy God giveth thee. (Ex. 20:12.)

From these two scriptures I make these two conclusions: In the first place those who refuse to care for their own are subject to a judgment more severe than that which would be meted out to one who lost his faith and had become as an infidel; and second, that those who refuse to honor father and mother in the way the Master explained, are jeopardizing their tenure upon this land which the Lord has given us. I have thought a great deal about that. I wonder whether that tenure shall be jeopardized because of the burdensome taxation that shall increase and grow until we are virtually displaced in our ownership, if we don't take care of our own, or I am wondering whether the Lord will withdraw his blessings, as Amulek declared in the thirty-fourth chapter of Alma, if we refuse to succor those who stand in need of help.

And on the other hand, so far as children are concerned, I have remembered what the Apostle Paul said about that: He predicted a time that would come in the last days, a perilous time when men should be lovers of their own selves, covetous, disobedient, unthankful, unholy, without natural affection. That sounds strangely familiar to the language of the Lord in this day, when he declared:

Now, I, the Lord, am not well pleased with the inhabitants of Zion, for there are idlers among them; and their children are also growing up in wickedness; they also seek not earnestly the riches of eternity, but their eyes are full of greediness. These things ought not to be, and must be done away from among them. (D. & C. 68:31,32.)

I have asked myself if the failure of children to take care of their aging parents, when they come to a day of want and are in need of sustenance, is due to the failure of parents, in the day gone by, to teach those same children to avoid the curse of idleness, and to be responsible in righteousness before our Heavenly Father. Unless we teach our children today correct principles, they, like some children today, will be thankless and without the natural affection necessary to cement this society upon a firm, determined foundation. Yes, it seems to me that in very deed, the welfare plan has been a kind of turning of the hearts of the children to the fathers and the fathers to the children, that we might be prolonged upon this land which the Lord our God has given us.

The Lord's Plan for Security

The Lord has given us in this day the greatest organization upon the face of the earth, with his power and his authority to direct it. He has given us sound principles; he has shown us the plan and the way by which want and distress may be done away among us. He has shown us the way to brotherly love. If the afflictions which have been predicted do come upon us, they will come upon us because we have not kept the faith and because we have been disobedient and have thrown away the opportunities that our Heavenly Father has given us to prepare for the day of calamity which he foretold, over one hundred years ago, would come in this generation.

I remember at the dedication of the grain elevator in 1940 hearing President McKay in an inspired and prophetic prayer utter these words:

May this be an edifice of service, a contribution of love, and as such we dedicate it unto thee and ask thy blessings to attend all who have contributed to its erection and all who may contribute to the keeping of these bins filled with the wheat which is considered necessary to be preserved preparatory to the judgments that await the nations of the earth.

My prayer is today that those who contribute, and those who receive as well, shall so live in the bonds of brotherhood and unity and oneness, that the Lord can reign in the midst of his Saints and be a power over them and a shield, as he promised in the ninety-seventh section of the Doctrine and Covenants he would be, if we his Saints would keep his commandments in the day when the judgments were about to descend upon the earth.

God help us so to live and to keep in harmony with his Spirit that these things may be with the Saints in our day, I pray humbly in the name of the Lord Jesus Christ. Amen.

PRESIDENT J. REUBEN CLARK, Jr.

First Counselor in the First Presidency

My brothers and sisters, I sincerely trust that I may have your sustaining faith and prayers that what I shall say today will be uplifting, upbuilding, and encouraging. If I cannot achieve that, as an instrument in the hands of the Lord, then my time spent will be wasted.

TESTIMONY OF JOB

These are troublous times, times that try the souls of all of us. We all need help, even the most happy of us. There is a pall of sorrow, apprehension, and anxiety that overshadows us, and there is only one way in which we can get relief therefrom. Job of old, replying to the cruel accusations of his three friends, said:

For I know that my redeemer liveth, and that he shall stand at the latter day upon the earth:

And though after my skin worms destroy this body, yet in my flesh shall I see God:

Whom I shall see for myself, and mine eyes shall behold, and not another; though my reins be consumed within me. (Job 19: 25-27.)

In that great declaration Job gave us a complete picture of Jesus the Christ, the Messiah, the Redeemer, of his death, of his atonement thereby, of his resurrection, all of which were made fully operative upon Job, and even as upon Job, so upon all the rest of mankind. All shall die, all shall lie in the tomb; all shall be resurrected, save only those who may be "caught up" at his coming. That is the message; that knowledge of Job is the knowledge which in these sorrowing days will give us peace and comfort. As the Savior said:

Peace I leave with you, my peace I give unto you: not as the world giveth, give I unto you. Let not your heart be troubled, neither let it be afraid. (John 14:27.)

We may all have the knowledge which Job had. Indeed it is the right not only but the duty of Latter-day Saints to gain that knowledge. As we fail to gain that knowledge, we fail to reap the fruits, enjoy the blessings which the gospel has for us, and they will come to us, that blessing, those fruits, if we live as we should.

TESTIMONIES OF FORMER-DAY SAINTS

I have often thought of a number of instance which indicate the possession of that testimony of Job, instances connected with the life of the Savior in the Old World; instances where men and women knew who Jesus was and his mission. One of the earliest, after his birth, following the vision and visit of the shepherds, was that which occurred in the temple when Jesus was taken there to fulfil the requirements of the Mosaic law. There came into the temple, at that time, one Simeon, to whom the Holy Ghost had revealed that he should not see death before he had seen the Lord, Christ. And when he came into the temple and saw the infant Jesus, he took ... him up in his arms, and blessed God, and said,

Lord, now lettest thou thy servant depart in peace, according to thy word:

For mine eyes have seen thy salvation,
Which thou hast prepared before the face of all people;
A light to lighten the Gentiles, and the glory of thy people Israel.
(Luke 2:28-32.)

Thus to him came a testimony like unto Job's.

Anna on the same occasion, that good woman who had dwelt in and about the temple for years, came in and declared that she saw the redemption that was to come to the world.

Shortly after Jesus began his mission, you remember, he chose certain of his apostles, and among them Simon, afterwards called Peter, and Andrew his brother. He had met them before he chose them. But on that day he came by them as they were casting their nets into the sea, for they were fishermen, and he said to them, as apparently they walked out into the water:

... Follow me, and I will make you fishers of men. (Matt. 4:19.)

And unquestioning, filled with the same testimony which Job had, they put aside their nets and followed Jesus, even until the day, after his death, when Peter and others, thinking the work was done, went fishing.

FAITH OF THE CENTURION

I think of the experience of the centurion whose servant was

Saturday, April 6

Second Day

ill. Apparently scarcely knowing the Savior, yet he sent to him, telling the Savior, through the Jews whom he sent to carry the message, that his servant was ill and he wanted him healed. Jesus started toward the home, but the centurion sent word to him:

... Lord, trouble not thyself: for I am not worthy that thou shouldest enter under my roof:

Wherefore neither thought I myself worthy to come unto thee: but say in a word, and my servant shall be healed.

For I also am a man set under authority, having under me soldiers, and I say unto one, Go, and he goeth, and to another come, and he cometh; and to my servant, Do this, and he doeth it.

and Jesus said to those about him:

I say unto you, I have not found so great faith, no, not in Israel. (Luke 7:6-9.)

The servant was healed. Another testimony having in it the elements of Job's!

I remember, too, the story of the Greek woman, the Syrophenician whose daughter was afflicted. The colloquy between the Savior and this woman constitutes, I think, the only instance where a question was put to the Savior to which he did not have some reply. She asked him to heal her daughter. At first he answered her not a word. Then she worshipped him, and he said:

... It is not meet to take the children's bread, and to cast it to dogs.

She replied:

... Truth, Lord: yet the dogs eat of the crumbs which fall from their master's table.

And Jesus said:

... O woman, great is thy faith: be it unto thee even as thou wilt. (Matt. 15:26-28.)

She, too, had a testimony like unto Job's.

PETER'S TESTIMONY AT CAESAREA PHILIPPI

And then later comes the incident with Peter, the great Peter, as I estimate him, to whom the Savior gave the name Cephas. After Jesus and the apostles had been out in Galilee, visiting, they came to the coast of Caesarea Philippi, and, apparently stopping to rest. Jesus said to them, seemingly addressing Peter:

... Whom do men say that I the Son of man am?

And they said:

Some say that thou art John the Baptist: some, Elias; and others, Jeremias, or one of the prophets.

He saith unto them, But whom say ye that I am?

Peter, apparently without hesitation or equivocation, answered, and said:

... Thou art the Christ, the Son of the living God.
 And Jesus answered and said unto him, Blessed art thou, Simon Bar-jona: for flesh and blood hath not revealed it unto thee, but my Father which is in heaven. (Matt. 16:13-17.)

THE BLESSINGS OF A TESTIMONY

From that time until this, that message has rung down through the centuries, pointing out to us how we may get that comfort and that consolation to which each and every child of God is entitled, and without which we may not be happy or gain our exaltation. That was the testimony that was behind those who founded this Church, from the Prophet Joseph down, and to all that believe, even the last ordained among us. It is the testimony that buoyed up the Saints as they traveled through the wilderness to come to this desert — all through their trials, their tribulations and persecutions in Ohio, Illinois, Missouri; it is the testimony that is buoying up our Saints today in Europe under all their hardships and desolations, and these are as grievous as any that have come to any of the children of men, so far as physical suffering and woe are concerned. Our reports indicate that many, and most in some sections, are without homes. Many, indeed all in some sections, are hungry, and without clothes. Yet they have held to their testimonies, out of which have come cheerfulness and resignation, and faithfulness. They have worshiped the Lord; they have kept his commandments, even under the most dire circumstances.

THINGS OF GOD KNOWN BY SPIRIT OF GOD

It is our right, as I have already said, it is indeed our duty to gain that testimony for ourselves. Some may scoff, some may doubt, some may declare that our principles are false, but truth is never made error because somebody denies it. I commend to you to read what I had intended myself to read, but there is not time, the eleventh and following verses in the second chapter of I Corinthians, in which Paul says:

For what man knoweth the things of a man, save the spirit of man which is in him? even so the things of God knoweth no man, but the Spirit of God. (I Cor. 2:11.)

We must be prepared, as Paul there indicates to the Corinthians, to be considered as foolish, for he tells us that the things of God are foolishness to men. But we who have the testimony of the spirit, we know that foolishness to men may be the greatest wisdom to God; and we know we may enjoy that spiritual blessing and knowledge if we shall but so live that the Holy Ghost may reveal to us the Father and the Son, and the testimony thereof, and bring to us that peace to which I have already referred, which Jesus promised:

KNOWLEDGE OF GOD BRINGS PEACE

Peace I leave with you, my peace I give unto you: not as the world giveth, give I unto you. Let not your heart be troubled, neither let it be afraid. (John 14:27.)

That the Lord will give us this testimony, which I declare to you is my testimony, so that we may live in peace and happiness, that our hearts may be encouraged in this time of stress and trouble, that we may look with confidence to the future, serene and secure in the knowledge that God knows us, that we are his children, and that he will bless us if we keep his commandments, I humbly pray in the name of Jesus. Amen.

President George Albert Smith:

You have just listened to President J. Reuben Clark, Jr. of the First Presidency of the Church. He was our last speaker this morning.

We have had a wonderful time. There are still two or three hundred people standing who have not been able to get seats, and I am sure that all of us, even those who have been standing, have been edified by the services this morning. It is beautiful to be in the house of the Lord, filled by his sons and daughters seeking to know His will.

I have had a number ask question with reference to something that was done last evening on the hill east of us. A great monument is being prepared to be dedicated on the 24th of July one year hence, 1947. Yesterday the Governor, the Mayor of our City, President David O. McKay— and I might go on telling of a number of other people who were present up there, to see from that particular point what the view would be when the monument is completed. It will be a very wonderful structure, and the view from that point is as fine, I think, as any place you could go anywhere to see a view. Since the publication in the paper of items pertaining to the monument, quite a number of people have been complaining that they have had no opportunity to participate in the fund that has been and is being accumulated for the monument. It is true we have done no advertising with reference to it, but everybody will be given an opportunity in the near future to make that investment if desired. Every soul, even our children with their five and ten cents, will have their names inscribed on the record, the name of every person who makes that investment, will be deposited in a box that will be a part of the monument. Some people were afraid they were being left out, and that is the reason I am making this announcement today. Anybody who may desire to participate may do so and the word will go out in the not far distant future how that may be done. I thought you might wish that information.

Now our choir, the Manti Choir, that has sung to us so beautifully this morning will now sing our concluding number, "O Divine Redeemer." The benediction will be pronounced by President C. Lloyd Walch of the Union Stake, LaGrande, Oregon, after which the Conference will stand adjourned until 2:00 this afternoon.

The proceedings this afternoon will be broadcast over KSL, KSUB, KID, and KFXD, the latter at Nampa, Idaho.

Brethren and sisters, be careful as you go from this building. Do not expose yourselves to unnecessary accident, and, after you have had a little relaxation and have refreshed yourselves, we will be glad to be with you here in the house of the Lord again to wait upon him.

---

The Manti Choirs sang the anthem, "O Divine Redeemer."

Elder C. Lloyd Walch, President of the Union Stake, offered the closing prayer.

Conference adjourned until 2 o'clock p.m.

SECOND DAY

AFTERNOON MEETING

The fourth session of the Conference was held Saturday afternoon, April 6, at 2 o'clock.

President George Albert Smith:

This is the fourth session of the 116th Annual Conference of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints. We are convened in the big Tabernacle on Temple Square, Salt Lake City. The house is packed and hundreds of people are standing.

There are present on the stand this afternoon, all the General Authorities of the Church, except Elder Ezra Taft Benson, who is absent in Europe, acting as President of the European Mission, and Elder Matthew Cowley, who is detained home by order of his doctor.

The proceedings of this session will be broadcast over KSL of Salt Lake City, KSUB of Cedar City, KID of Idaho Falls, and KFXD of Nampa, Idaho.

The first thirty minutes of this session will not be broadcast owing to the fact that all the networks of the nation are carrying an address by the President of the United States.

We will begin the afternoon service by the Manti Choir singing: "May We Know the Gospel Sound." Elder Ellis E. Johnson is the conductor, and Elder Alexander Schreiner is the organist.

The opening prayer will be offered by President J. Harold Mitchell of Mt. Graham Stake.

---

The Manti Choirs sang "May We Who Know the Gospel

Sound," after which the opening prayer was offered by President J. Harold Mitchell of the Mt. Graham Stake.

Following the invocation, the Choirs sang the number, "Holy Lord God."

President George Albert Smith:

For the comfort of those who are standing and who would like to be seated, there is still room in the Assembly Hall, and the loud speakers are operating there. If any of you desire to go over there, you may know that you will be able to get seats and also be able to hear the program. We hope, however, that those who have seats and are as comfortable as they know how to be, will make themselves just a little more comfortable by crowding up and making some other people comfortable who haven't seats. There are seats on the steps and other places, and we hope you will feel right at home. This is the Lord's house and we are His children.

President David O. McKay of the First Presidency will now present the General Authorities, General Officers, and General Auxiliary Officers for the sustaining vote of this General Conference.

President McKay then presented the General Authorities, General Officers, and General Auxiliary Officers of the Church, and they were unanimously sustained by those present, as follows:

BISHOP LEGRAND RICHARDS

Presiding Bishop of the Church

I am very happy, my brothers and sisters, to have the privilege of attending this conference. I think we have been wonderfully blessed of the Lord in the outpouring of his Spirit, and, above all other things in this world, I thank the Lord for my membership in this Church, and fellowship with the Latter-day Saints.

JOY IN MISSIONARY WORK

It has been forty-one years this month since I left Salt Lake to fill my first mission in Holland, and I have been thinking while sitting here that from that time to this the gospel has meant everything in the world to me. I remember when I gave my report at the close of my first mission in the ward to which I then belonged. I made the statement that I hoped the Lord would send me on a mission often enough so that I could retain the spirit that I had enjoyed in the mission field. The gospel with all its teachings and its promises and its blessings has become a real thing in my life, and with all my heart I know it is true, and I hope to do all I can as long as I live to help to promote faith in the hearts of my fellow-men.

Jesus said in that marvelous Sermon on the Mount:

Blessed are they which do hunger and thirst after righteousness for they shall be filled. (Matt. 5:6.)

And I want to bear testimony to you that I know that promise is within the reach of every man and every woman who does hunger and thirst after righteousness.

EXCERPT FROM A LETTER

About ten years ago, while I was president of the Southern States Mission, I received a letter from a woman in the South telling of the number of books and pamphlets she had read regarding Mormonism, since the elders called at her door. (By the way, she is here in Salt Lake, the first time she has had an opportunity of visiting the headquarters of the Church, and I imagine is present in this meeting.) In this letter she said:

Since I have come to the conclusion that "Mormonism" is the most wonderful thing I have ever heard of (and I have always thought I could never be anything but a Baptist), I would like to know what the members of your Church read. I have read books on philosophy, psychology, psychiatry, Christian Science, etc., in search of answers to my own life's problems, and needless to say, the problems remained unanswered, but now I have hope.

And I am grateful to the Lord that in the gospel we teach there is an answer to life's problems. I have wondered just what one could really want to know that he cannot find an answer to in this glorious gospel, and I wonder if those of us who are here today feel that "Mormonism" is the most wonderful thing we have ever heard of. I wonder if we have the faith that the early members of the Church had when they made such sacrifices in order that the missionary cause of this Church might be carried on in the world. Their hearts were touched; they were led out of darkness; and they realized the glorious truths the Lord had revealed to the Prophet Joseph Smith.

ADAM TAUGHT BAPTISM

There was another in the earliest days of the history of the inhabitants of this earth who hungered and thirsted after righteousness. That was our Father Adam, and he went to the Lord. He wanted to know from the Lord why it was that men should be baptized in water and receive a remission of their sins. And I would like to read to you the statement of the Lord to Adam in answer to his question. He said:

... Inasmuch as ye were born into the world by water, and blood, and of the Spirit, which I have made, and so became of dust a living soul, even so ye must be born again into the kingdom of heaven, of water and of the spirit, and be cleansed by blood, even the blood of mine Only Begotten; that ye might be sanctified from all sin, and enjoy the words of eternal life in this world, and eternal life in the world to come, even immortal glory; . . . Therefore it is given to abide in you; the record of heaven; the Comforter; the peaceable things of immortal glory; the truth of all things; that which quickeneth all things, which maketh alive all things; that which knoweth all things, and hath all power, according to wisdom, mercy, truth, justice, and judgment. (Pearl of Great Price, Moses 6:59, 61.)

Now the Lord gave Adam to understand that it was by being born again of the water and the Spirit that it was given to abide in him the record of heaven. I wonder just what the Lord meant by the "record of heaven," and I thought that it meant that it reveals unto us who we are, where we come from, why we are here, where we are going, and that great eternal truth that we are in very deed sons and daughters of God, the Eternal Father. Is there any truth that men could acquire through their faith and their obedience that would mean more than to know that every man born into this world has the possibility to grow and develop and become like unto our Heavenly Father?

In our relationship to each other we are in very deed brothers and sisters, and Christ was the Firstborn, the Elder Brother, who offered himself as a ransom for sin of all the inhabitants of the earth. Then it tells us the purpose of our creation, that we are here to gain knowledge and intelligence and experience and prepare ourselves that we might go on and become as he is.

THE 76 SECTION OF THE DOCTRINE AND COVENANTS A GUIDE

I like to read the seventy-sixth section of the Doctrine and Covenants which we have been wont to refer to as "The Vision." To me that is one of the most marvelous scriptures that has ever been revealed to men, and as far as we know it never was revealed until this last dispensation, and when it was given to the Prophet Joseph he was told that it was a transcript of the record of the eternal world. Paul was privileged to see it, for he was caught up into the third heaven and the paradise of God, but he was not permitted to write the things that he beheld. This revelation indicates who are worthy or will be worthy to obtain a place in each of the three degrees of glory as described in that revelation, one like unto the sun, one like unto the moon, and one like unto the stars. Is there any man or woman in all Israel who loves the Lord and loves the truth and hungers and thirsts after righteousness who would not desire this information to guide him in his life and to indicate what his life must be in order to be worthy of the glory which we know as the celestial glory, likened unto the sun?

And then we are told in the song written by Eliza R. Snow, "O, My Father":

For a wise and glorious purpose
Thou hast placed me here on earth
And withheld the recollection
Of my former friends and birth.

BLESSINGS FOR THOSE WHO DESIRE THEM

When I think of the information that comes to us individually as Latter-day Saints through the patriarchs of this Church, when I think of what my blessing has meant to me that I received at the hands of my father when I was eight years old, I realize that in the sight of the Almighty we are in very deed individuals, each one with a destiny and a purpose and a mission in life to fill, and I can think of no greater disappointment that could come to one of our Father's children than to finish his life and then be told that he had failed to accomplish the things for which he was sent into this world.

Then Adam was told that it should be given to abide in him, the Comforter; the Comforter that makes known all things, things which are present, things which are past, and things which are to come. Jesus explained that it would be necessary that he should go away or the Comforter could not come, that he should teach us all things, bear witness of the Father and of the Son. President Clark this morning related the testimony of Peter which he received because of that witness.

Adam was told that it should be given to abide in him, the peaceable things of immortal glory, and I wonder if anybody can understand the peaceable things of immortal glory without understanding the glorious promise of the eternal duration of the marriage covenant and the family unit and our association with each other beyond the veil. Senator Beveridge said in his book, The Young Man and the World, in a chapter devoted to "The Young Man and the Pulpit," that a prominent railroad man in America said that to know that he would live again, with a conscious identity, knowing who he was and who other people were, would be worth more to him than all the wealth of the United States. This knowledge we gain through hungering and thirsting after righteousness; and also we learn that we will be resurrected and that we will lose nothing through our death, but that it will be a gain to us. In the words of Paul:

... Eye hath not seen, nor ear heard, neither have entered into the heart of man, the things which God hath prepared for them that love him. (I Cor. 2:9.)

Then he was told that it would be given to abide in him, the truth of all things.

We are not only to know that Joseph Smith was a prophet of God; not only to know that Jesus is the Christ, the Redeemer of the world, but to understand the truths of heaven, the principles by which we might live that will guide us in our thinking, guide us in our living, give us power among men because it is given to abide in us, the truth of all things.

"That which quickeneth all things, which maketh alive all things, that which knoweth all things," the understanding of scripture, to know the truth of the Book of Mormon, the truth of the Bible, to know the truth of the revelations that God has revealed in these latter days. I tell you, brothers and sisters, it was well said when Jesus said:

Blessed are they which do hunger and thirst after righteousness: for they shall be filled. (Matt. 5:6.)

Adam received an answer to his inquiry from the Lord, and the woman from the South, through finding "Mormonism," was able to say that she now had hope of finding an answer to her own life's problems.

When you see these glorious temples, when you see this great assembly of the Saints of God, when you see the priesthood of God, when you see apostles and prophets such as the primitive church had, which God placed in the Church,

That we henceforth be no more children, tossed to and fro, and carried about with every wind of doctrine, by the sleight of men, and cunning craftiness, whereby they lie in wait to deceive. (Ephesians 4:14.)

I ask, is there anything more we could want to know? If we understood all these things, then we could understand why Isaiah, when he saw the temple of God builded in the tops of the mountains in the latter days, saw people all over the world, and heard them say:

... Come ye, and let us go up to the mountain of the Lord, to the house of the God of Jacob; and he will teach us of his ways, and we will walk in his paths. ... (Isaiah 2:3.)

And may God help us to do it, I pray, in the name of Jesus Christ. Amen.

ELDER CLIFFORD E. YOUNG

Assistant to the Council of the Twelve Apostles

I feel the need of your faith and prayers, my brethren and sisters, as I stand before you this afternoon. I desire to add my testimony to the many forceful testimonies of this conference.

History of Nauvoo Period

Recently I was reading a biography published during the year, covering the war years of Abraham Lincoln. This biography was written by J. G. Randall, professor of history at the University of Illinois, and in laying a background for the war period of Lincoln's life, he goes back into the Illinois period of the early forties, a period that was known to the Latter-day Saints of that time, and in it he makes one or two pointed observations:

In 1840 few towns of Illinois had more than two thousand people. It is a curious fact that the largest Illinois settlement by far in the middle forties was the Mormon city of Nauvoo, beautifully situated on the broad Mississippi about a hundred miles northwest of Springfield. Here in the 1840's, when Chicago was a stripling village of less than five thousand, and Springfield a muddy little town recently planted on the prairie, stood the largest City in Illinois, a community of more than twenty thousand. . . . Center of Mormonism. Nauvoo possessed thousands of dwellings, and a great temple into the construction of which had been poured a million dollars. (Lincoln the President, J. G. Randall.)

He further describes some of the conditions that existed at that period, and says, quoting one of the historians of Illinois, that this was a lawless period in the history of our nation, and that Illinois partook of that lawlessness. Governor Ford in his History of Illinois (written in the forties) deals at length with the "mobocratic spirit" in Illinois, and Lincoln speaks of it and warns of its dangers in these words: "Let every man remember that to violate the law is to trample on the blood of his fathers and to tear the charter of his own and his children's liberty." (Randall, page 22.) As I read this I thought, surely our people knew what that meant. They, too, suffered because of these conditions.

Beveridge in his biography of Lincoln describes some other things that are interesting, showing that at that time the standards were not as they are today. He writes:

Quantities of whiskey were consumed, everybody, women and preachers included, indulging. Men were quick to fight, and combats were brutal. Profanity was general and emphatic; yet an innate love of justice and truthfulness and fair-dealing permeated many of the communities, and generous and ready hospitality was of the highest order. Notwithstanding these things, religion, too, was a vital part of their lives. Churches were organized as soon as there were settlers enough to form small congregations. Preaching was crude, direct and vociferous, but it was an effective force for good. Schools, although crude, were started almost as soon as churches. In fact church and school were companion influences for decency, knowledge, and morality in pioneer life. Many times, social relations were loose and undisciplined.

And then he goes on and speaks of the dialects of the time which were extremely crude. Beveridge makes reference to a charge that was made against Lincoln, as Lincoln carried on his debates on states' rights with Stephen A. Douglas, in which Lincoln was charged that he was advocating the marriage of whites with negroes. Lincoln, of course, resented this and in his reply said that because he sought the freedom of these people and advocated that they might eat the bread that they earned was no reason why his motives should be questioned.

Motives of Joseph Smith Misunderstood

As I read this, my brethren and sisters, my mind went back to the Prophet Joseph. He, too, was the victim of motive questioning. It was a time when people questioned people's motives, when many times they were vicious in their imputations, and the Prophet and our people became the victims of that very thing; and as we look back today, it is no wonder that people misunderstood the Prophet Joseph. They failed to interpret truly his motives; they failed to feel the impulse of his righteous living, and when he advocated practices and doctrines that were in contravention to the then known times, men questioned that which he advocated and particularly the motive back of it. And thus the Prophet Joseph became the victim of this impugning of motives, and much of this was a contributing factor to his martyrdom. Men did not know him then, and men and women have failed, in our day, to try to know him. That is unfortunate.

True Appraisal by Early Converts

If I may be a bit personal, my grandfather with his four brothers and their father joined the Church in 1832. My great-grandfather was then nearly seventy. All of these five brothers, with the exception of Lorenzo Young, were older than Joseph Smith, and yet when they came into Kirtland they recognized in him a Prophet of the living God. They were men of intelligence; they were men capable of analyzing the Prophet Joseph Smith and appraising the things for which he stood. They believed implicitly in him, and when they accepted the truth as it had been taught to them by the early missionaries, to the day of their deaths they never wavered. All of them were true to the faith. That was typical of many. John Taylor stands out as a beacon light. He had come from England as a young man. It is true that he was younger than the Prophet for he was born in 1808. He had come from England in 1832 and settled in Canada. And in 1836, Parley P. Pratt found him and preached the gospel to him, and he subsequently embraced it. Later he came to Kirtland to visit the Prophet. It was a time of apostacy; it was a time of persecution, but he never wavered, because the Lord had borne witness to him that here was a Prophet of the Living God.

After this visit John Taylor returned to Canada and subsequently in company of others Joseph Smith visited him. Later in 1837, in the fall, John Taylor was asked and instructed to wind up his affairs and join with the body of the Saints. Coming to Kirtland he found the Prophet was in Far West and so continued his journey down into Missouri. You can well imagine what it would mean in that day, slow travel and no roads, under crude and primitive conditions, similar to the ones to which I referred in the beginning as described by Professor Randall. And yet, coming into Far West, where also there was apostacy, it made no difference with John Taylor. He knew, and that was all that was necessary, and from then on he consecrated his life to a life of devotion and service that is almost unequaled in this new dispensation. He was with the Prophet at his martyrdom and never wavered. His life reads like a romance, and yet it rings true because of his loyalty and his faith.

And so, my brethren and sisters, as I read of these primitive conditions, I thought how easy it was to question motives; how easy it is today when men do not know and feel the human soul to fail to respond to that soul as it breathes testimony of the divinity of this great work.

Oliver Cowdery's Return to the Church

Two more things I would like to mention before I close. I have always been impressed, as you have, in reading of Oliver Cowdery and David Whitmer. It was through the instrumentality of Phineas Young that Oliver Cowdery came back into the Church. They were brothers-in-law, Phineas having married Oliver's sister. Oliver Cowdery left the Church in 1838 and was cut off with David Whitmer. He drifted around and finally came back to Richmond, Missouri. Phineas Young wrote to Oliver pleading with him to come back to the Church. Oliver replied feelingly, that he had been wronged, that the brethren had misjudged his motives. Our people in Missouri had suffered persecution. They had lost their lands and in many instances their homes. One marvels as one reads about it that there was not more of a falling away, because that part of the Church was so far removed from the leaders of the Church, and it was easy for men to get off the track.

Well, Oliver Cowdery felt that his motives had been questioned, and so he wrote to Phineas Young that he felt that the Saints would not receive him. Phineas replied that Oliver should come back into the Church, that he knew it was true and that this was where he belonged. In 1848, while a conference was being held in Council Bluffs, Oliver came to the conference, and in the course of one of the meetings he asked to speak, and you know the story. He proclaimed again his witness of the Book of Mormon and his faith in the Prophet Joseph.

After the conference he appeared before the high council. "I do not ask to be restored to my former position," he said. He had been the second elder in the Church. "All I ask is that I may come back into the Church, because I know it is true." A vote was taken by the high council which had excommunicated him, and that was in the proper order, and it voted to receive him into the Church and he was subsequently baptized and ordained an elder. Preparations were made for him to come out to Utah, but before this could be accomplished he was taken seriously ill and passed away. But he passed away, as David Whitmer afterwards said, the happiest man he ever saw, because he was back in the Church where he belonged.

David Whitmer True to His Testimony

And so with David Whitmer. Among the announcements of deaths read here yesterday was that of the passing of James H. Moyle, the father of Henry Moyle, the chairman of the welfare committee. It was my good fortune as a boy to come under the influence of Brother Moyle, working in Mutual with him, and I have since that time had a love in my heart for him and an appreciation for his devotion to the Church. I recall his telling of his interview with David Whitmer, how he, just out of college, wanted to know—he was a young man and the challenge was before him—he wanted to know. His parents had joined the Church in England and emigrated to Zion, but he, himself, wanted to know whether or not there was anything in this thing called "Mormonism." Learning that David Whitmer was still alive, he went down to Richmond to interview him, and Brother Moyle writes that he never in his life cross-examined anyone so vigorously as he did David Whitmer.

As Brother Moyle related it, it strengthened my faith, and as I have contemplated it since, I have thought how easy it would have been for David Whitmer to say: "My boy, that was fifty-two years ago. We were mistaken; we were young. Joseph Smith had an influence over us, and we were mistaken." But he did not say that. He could have said it because he had previously been quoted by the Encyclopedia Britannica as having denied his testimony. He did not say that, but he did say: "I want to say to you once and for all that the testimony that I bore then is as true today as it was the day we uttered it." That was in the eighties, over fifty years since the testimony of the three witnesses had been inscribed on the flyleaf of the Book of Mormon.

Joseph Smith a True Prophet

My brethren and sisters, my time is up. The Prophet Joseph lives as real a living Prophet today as he ever did. His motives were misunderstood then; they are misunderstood now, but there is no question about his integrity or his divine calling. When men like John Taylor and the Youngs and the Kimballs and others came to him and associated with him, Oliver Cowdery and David Whitmer, who were cut off from the Church, who knew him and associated with him intimately—I repeat—when men such as these associated with him and recognized in him a Prophet of the Living God, then we may say that critics of the Prophet today need also to take cognizance of these testimonies as well as of men who questioned his motives and who vilified him and maligned him as did apostates of his time and as is done in our day by those who do not have the spirit of the gospel.

God bless us and help us to appreciate that he was a Prophet of the Living God, I pray in the name of Jesus Christ. Amen.

The congregation and the Choirs joined in singing the hymn, "Redeemer of Israel," Hymn Book page 194, L. D. S. Hymns No. 231.

ELDER MARVIN O. ASHTON

First Counselor in the Presiding Bishopric

Some of you will never know what volumes of humility encompass some of us about twice a year. I sincerely trust that whatever I say will be in keeping with this conference and the spirit that is here. Someone has said something about "goose flesh". I have been so thrilled in this conference, that I think the above expression is a good one. I wish to express my appreciation at this time to my Heavenly Father for the gospel and for the thrill that we get in its contemplation.

SUGGESTIONS MADE BY BISHOPS

The last few conferences that I attended in the stakes, I have taken the liberty, if you please, of calling on each bishop in the leadership meeting and of putting the question to him this way: "If you were in our position, that is, we who are conducting this conference, what would you like discussed in the meetings that are to follow?"

One made one suggestion and one the other. One bishop said this: "Once in a while I think it is a good thing to remind members how much the Church appreciates what they are doing." Now, I suppose there is nothing new about that; but it is very, very timely.

PRAISE FOR CHURCH MEMBERS

We have all come here to have our "batteries charged," as the common expression goes. I want you folks in the stakes and the wards to know that we who go out to see you get our batteries charged from you. Inspiration comes up the ladder, and it comes down the ladder. We get inspiration from you in your lives when we see the tithing you people pay, the meeting houses you build, the fast offerings you make, donations to the welfare, and whatnot and whatnot. It goes on and on. But may I say this: Don't ever worry about that. I was talking to a railroad man the other day. He said: "The most dangerous thing on the track is an engine and a coal car." What he meant by that was this—I suppose he was referring to the observation that has been made by Brother Callis—we sometimes run light and that is where our trouble is. An engine and a coal car trying to make the curve at fifty or sixty miles an hour can't do it, and they tip over.

Don't worry if you are loaded too heavily. It will do you good. That is what the world needs. You will always find those people that come up to you and sympathize with you, and a lot of people who do nothing themselves but go around with a chip on their shoulder. Someone has said:

You can bet your life when someone goes around with a chip on his shoulder, there is more wood farther up.

MESSAGES FROM LEADERS

The meeting yesterday morning impressed me emphatically in two ways: first, the message of our dear President—that message which he generally gives. He is the embodiment of it. I am not trying to compliment him too highly—I do not believe in that stuff. I mean his message of good will—that this is one great big world, a great big stage, and all the people on it are God's people. If we could just eternally burn that into ourselves, we would all be better off. That is the spiritual side of things.

Second, as you heard President Clark read the financial statement, he read it as if he knew what he was talking about. And he does. His message to us breathed stability. It emphatically indicated watchdog care in the spending of Church funds. In the message of our two leaders we were reminded of a balance of the spirit and the temporal. When this Church thinks of nothing but money, it is a "goner." When this Church thinks of only spiritual things, and we haven't our feet on the ground and we won't hold water financially, we are on dangerous ground. Thank the Lord for that balanced condition of this Church, and may it always be that way.

PRACTICAL BALANCE NECESSARY

What is true of the Church is true of an individual. Are you balanced? Am I balanced? The man that thinks of nothing but the hereafter and stumbles over the practical things of life is really a picture. It is sad. I am not talking about the man that has his troubles financially—I am talking about the man who eternally looks over the horizon and never watches his feet below. That fellow, in an exaggerated case, is a leech. He is like the cuckoo bird that lays its eggs in another bird's nest. Yes, others have to hatch the eggs and raise these additional children. What gumption this impractical fellow lacks has to be furnished by someone else.

You know there has been nothing so interesting to me the last two months as this thing they call mistletoe. Mistletoe you find largely in Texas, New Mexico, and Arizona. I guess you find it up this way sometimes, too. But you see some trees festooned with the mistletoe; that mistletoe is a leech. I don't know why they ever connected the mistletoe with affection, because every time that mistletoe gives that tree a kiss, if enough mistletoes do the same, the tree is a "goner." Yes, in using mistletoe language you can kiss the tree goodbye. And that is going to be the trouble with our nation if we are not very careful. I saw some trees down in Texas that were just a mass of mistletoe. A tree so burdened is going to get the ten count. Those things are leeches. A man that is not practically balanced is like the mistletoe; he is like the cuckoo bird. A man, on the other hand, who thinks nothing but money, money, money, is also a "goner".

ADVICE AGAINST GREED FOR RICHES

The observation I would like to make here to you is that many people holding positions in our Church are getting this money bug. I take my hat off to the man who has insurance and provides for a rainy day. A man is a coward if he doesn't do that. I am talking about the man who has accumulated plenty and gets the disease or bug so that he eternally chases after more, more, more, and in that chasing he neglects his duties. Some men take the cream of their energy for making money, and when they come to the Lord's work, they've got nothing but skim milk, and some of it is awfully blue.

He who longs to be rich is like a man who drinks sea water; the more he drinks the more thirsty he becomes and never leaves off drinking until he perishes.

I remember a story in the scriptures. It was an observation of the Christ. A certain man built huge barns and jammed the barns with grain and the necessities of life. He had enough to last for years. He shut himself off from the world and sat down and chuckled to himself that he had so much. I think that it was then that God said this unto him:

Thou fool, this night thy soul shall be required of thee. (Luke 12:20.)

You know, I like a cartoon—it says so much without talking unmercifully. Down in Arizona I saw this cartoon:

It was of an elderly gentleman on his deathbed. I guess he had placed for his comfort his stocks and bonds and his money all around his bed. You can scarcely see him for his accumulations. The whole picture told the story that the end was near. The doctor with watch in hand held the old fellow's pulse, and the nurse from the expression on her face was ready for the ultimate. In that tense moment so vividly pictured, the old man, with his hands on his gold, tenaciously blurted out: "Doc, I'm not going to go until I can take these with me."

Now, when you go, you will leave everything. Some men get their minds so much on cattle, so much on stocks and bonds, so much on sheep that they crowd everything else out. Some of our leaders in our organizations get that disease. I once heard of a fellow that got so in love with sheep that he just kept grabbing, grabbing, grabbing, and finally a bishop's court was held to settle to whom a certain herd of sheep belonged. And the court decided against him. When the trial ended, he shook his fist and said: "Well, you've got the sheep, but I'll have those sheep in the next world." Well, now, I don't know too much about those things, but I'll bet that if he has those sheep in the next world he'll have to put some asbestos blankets on them so they will stand the heat..

Some people get this grabbing habit so intensified in their systems that it becomes second nature for them to grab, grab, grab. It so permeates their being that it works with them like reflex action. May I be pardoned for a little repetition? Let me illustrate what I mean:

A fellow of this grabbing disposition was working on a rip saw in a lumber mill. In the course of his ripping a two-by-four; "bingo," off came a finger. Instead of letting his companions in the mill rush him to first aid, he persistently dug into the sawdust to find the lost finger. But in his efforts to repossess the one finger, "zip," away went another. Notwithstanding the efforts of his companions to pull him away so that he wouldn't bleed to death, he now persisted more feverishly than ever to find the two lost fingers in the sawdust.

At this point in the story a workman came to the scene that knew of his grabbing friend's potentiality. He asked them what was the matter. They told him. He said, "If that's all you are worried about, I can get that for you very easily." The newcomer to the scene put his hand in his pocket, pulled out a quarter, flipped it into the sawdust, and both lost fingers came up and grabbed the quarter. That's what I call reflex action.

Some organizations succeed in spite of the men at the head, in spite of what they do and what they don't do. I remember a cartoon of an old negro fishing. They sometimes say the operation of the gospel is like fishing. He was fishing, half asleep. The line jerked and the colored man was brought to his feet with a terrific pull. He felt the boat pulling in the direction of the large fish on the end of the line. The fish was so big that our colored fisherman was really being taken for a fast merry-go-round around that lake. In his bewilderment, he looked down at the splash the fish was making and cried out: "Am I fishin' or am you niggerin'?" Some of you people who hold high positions, you are not fishin', you are just niggerin'. Some of you want titles, the honor, but you go to sleep holding the line.

HELPFULNESS A DUTY

I want to come back to this thought again, the things that count in this world are written over the horizon. Let us be kind to one another and think of something besides money and ambition. That is the trouble with the world.

Ike Eisenhower, the beloved general, was giving a talk to the navy boys the other day, and he made this observation:

Cultivate mutual understanding of anyone you have to get along with.

Some good writer commenting on it—I wish I could recall his name so I could give him credit—told this little parable I leave with you. The parable is as follows:

A newspaper man interviewed a farmer who had won many blue ribbons in raising corn. The newspaper man said: "I understand you are the winner of some blue ribbons." "Yes." "But," he said, "what gets me is that when you win a blue ribbon you take your select corn and pass it on to your neighbors, and they are competing against you for the ribbons. What is the sense in it?" The old man replied: "These neighbors all around me have been raising corn, and if I don't give them select corn, their bad corn is going to pollinate my good corn."

I read a strange story of a man by the name of Pheister. While experimenting in the raising of a hybrid corn, when the corn was in the flower or tassel stage, he tied paper sacks around the tassels so he could govern the pollinating of it.

You can't do that in life. Your neighbors are there scattering their pollen, as it were, or influence, and so are you—you are living with them. As you help them they help you.

... give to the world the best you have, and the best will come back to you. (Life's Mirror.)

A month ago, going down towards the Mexican line, down where the lizards, as the boy puts it, lay on their backs and fan themselves, we stopped in a little food shop. We didn't get much bodily food, but we did come away with some food for the mind that was hanging on the walls. First:

What a wonderful world this would be if I loved others like I love me.

The one that went right with it read:

Some people think when they cast their bread upon the water it should return toasted and buttered.

Now wait a minute. You may think that is rather ridiculous. That man who sent his corn, his select corn to his neighbors, was casting bread upon the waters, but he got it back toasted and buttered.

May the Lord help us to be kind. Let us remember what is ahead of us. Let's not look gloomy these days. Let's face our problems. Our grandparents did it. Let's keep our chins to the sun and face whatever is ahead of us. We play our greatest tunes in time of trouble, and the challenge is there. You do your duty; let me do mine; and let's smile—smile if it kills you, and if some people smiled it would kill them.

May the Lord bless us. Amen.

PRESIDENT GEORGE F. RICHARDS

Of the Council of the Twelve Apostles

Last Sunday was fast day. I attended fast meeting in one of the wards in this city and heard some faithful testimonies borne. One young woman in her testimony intimated that she did not know so very much about the gospel but this one thing she did know, that the gospel brings peace to the soul. I thought that was a wonderful testimony, and I concluded that that woman is living her religion, for those Latter-day Saints who are living their religion do have peace to their souls, and those who are not living their religion I am afraid that their souls are frequently very much disturbed. This is one of the great blessings that the Lord has for the faithful of his children, peace to the soul.

As this congregation stood up to sing, I thought what an awe-inspiring sight this is. It is inspiring as we sit, but when we stood it seemed that there were more of us, and then I thought, "Why, we are only a sprinkling of the faithful members of the Church," and I thank the Lord for them, and I certainly do pray that he will bless them and reward them for their faithfulness. And there are some who are not faithful for which we are sorry. God bless them that they may see their mistakes; that they may take advantage of their opportunities of receiving the saving ordinances of the gospel they have not yet received; and that they may learn to know that the Lord needs them in his service; and that an opportunity is afforded them if they will live so that they can be used, to pay in part the debt of gratitude they owe to him, which they will never be able fully to do.

Then if I am informed correctly, there are some members of the Church who are not only indifferent to their religion but who have committed sin, and violated the rules of chastity. I pity them. God bless them that they may understand their true situation and repent of their sins and make peace with the Lord while they have opportunity. The Spirit of God will not always strive with man.

ANNIVERSARY OF ORGANIZATION OF CHURCH

* This is a wonderful work in which we are engaged. The annual general conference of the Church is of particular significance and deep interest to Latter-day Saints. The members of the Church, far and near, in great numbers are assembled in this general conference of the Church on the anniversary of its birth, a most suitable way in which to commemorate that exceedingly important event, affecting as it does the lives of many thousands of pure-minded, clean-living men and women for their good and their salvation. The organization of the Church and the restoration of the gospel spell "Mormonism," for which many faithful souls have suffered persecution and death, but the reward to all such, exceeds in glory any conception had by mortal man.

One hundred sixteen years ago today the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints was organized, by direct command of God, in Fayette, Seneca County, New York, under the laws of that state. Since its organization, the Church has been the object of bitter opposition and persecutions. This has come at different periods, from different sources, and in various forms, but always instigated by Lucifer, the devil, through willing emissaries, with the object and intent to destroy the Church, and defeat the purpose of God in his planning for the salvation of the children of men.

PERSECUTION, A HERITAGE OF THE SAINTS

For the comfort of the Saints, let me quote to you from the sayings of our Savior:

Blessed are they which are persecuted for righteousness' sake: for theirs is the kingdom of heaven.

Blessed are ye, when men shall revile you, and persecute you, and shall say all manner of evil against you falsely, for my sake.

Rejoice, and be exceedingly glad: for great is your reward in heaven: for so persecuted they the prophets which were before you. (Matt. 5:10-12)

Persecution is, and always has been, a heritage of the Saints of God. Men and women have gone about the country, in this and in other lands, lecturing against the Church and its leaders. Magazine articles and books by the score, of a venomous and libelous character, have been written, published, and circulated against us. Apostates from the Church have opposed it in various ways, while the work of the Lord against which their fiery darts have been directed, goes steadily forward.

Mormonism has for more than a century, been thus pelted with vituperation, deceit, and falsehood, but by every attack it has become more widely known. The work of the Lord thrives under opposition and persecution. "Truth is mighty and will prevail."

We do not court opposition and persecution, but when it comes, we are not so greatly disturbed, for we know our ground, that this is the work of the Lord, and that God is at the helm, guiding the good ship into a safe harbor.

TWO MAJOR POWERS IN OPERATION

There are two major powers operating upon the minds and hearts of the children of men—the one for good, and the other for evil.

Quoting from the Book of Mormon:

Wherefore, all things which are good cometh of God; and that which is evil cometh of the devil; for the devil is an enemy unto God, and fighteth against him continually, and inviteth and enticeth to sin, and to do that which is evil continually. (Moroni 7:12.)

Quoting from the Doctrine and Covenants:

... for we beheld Satan, that old serpent, even the devil, who rebelled against God, and sought to take the kingdom of our God and his Christ—Wherefore, he maketh war with the saints of God. (D. & C. 76:28-29.)

The Holy Ghost is a member of the trinity of the Godhead, a personage of spirit non-tabernacled. Lucifer also is a non-tabernacled spirit. The Holy Ghost is an inspirer of good. The devil is an instigator of evil. Each is striving for the souls of men; the one to save and the other to destroy.

... choose you this day whom ye will serve. (Joshua 24:15.)

Man has his free agency and is responsible to God who gave it for the way he exercises it. The whispering of the Holy Ghost removes all doubt and fear, and brings conviction to the soul, so that we can say, conscientiously, that we know the truth of that which we have received.

Said the Savior:

... My doctrine is not mine, but his that sent me. If any man will do his will, he shall know of the doctrine, whether it be of God, or whether I speak of myself. (John 7:16-17.)

BORN OF WATER AND OF THE SPIRIT

Let us see how this works: Jesus taught the will of him who sent him, and did his will in all things. He said to Nicodemus:

... Except a man be born of water and of the Spirit, he cannot enter into the kingdom of God. (John 3:5.)

What happens when one is born of water and of the Spirit? Jesus has set us a worthy example in all things. Let us see what happened to him:

And Jesus, when he was baptized, went up straightway out of the water: and, lo, the heavens were opened unto him, and he saw the Spirit of God descending like a dove, and lighting upon him: And lo a voice from heaven, saying, This is my beloved Son, in whom I am well pleased. (Matt. 3:16, 17.)

That is, he was immersed in the waters of Jordan by John the Baptist, and went up straightway out of the water, and thus he was born of the water. Then the heavens opened and the spirit of God, the Holy Ghost, lighted upon him as a dove, and thus he was born of the Spirit.

Now note what followed his having been born of water and of the Spirit:

And lo a voice from heaven, saying, This is my beloved Son, in whom I am well pleased. (Ibid., 3:17.)

That is the approval which the Father gave to his Son. Similar approval is received through the power of the Holy Ghost, by every worthy person who is baptized as was Jesus, by the same authority of priesthood, and who receives the Holy Ghost by the laying on of hands by the elders of the Church. In this way members of the Church have received a testimony of the truth.

... no man can say that Jesus is the Lord but by the Holy Ghost. (1 Cor. 12:3.)

After the individual has received the Holy Ghost by the laying on of hands, it is his right and privilege, through faithfulness, to have his constant companionship, the significance of which only the faithful know.

HOLY GHOST OPERATES FOR SALVATION OF MAN

The Holy Ghost operates in many ways for the blessing and salvation of man. For example: when Jesus asked his disciples—

... But whom say ye that I am? And Simon Peter answered and said, Thou art the Christ, the son of the living God. And Jesus answered and said unto him, Blessed art thou, Simon Bar-jona: for flesh and blood hath not revealed it unto thee, but my Father which is in heaven. (Matt. 16:15-17.)

How did the Father reveal it to Peter? By the power of the Holy Ghost, through whom the Lord has contact and communication with man on the earth.

Hear what Moroni, a prophet of God of Book of Mormon days, has to say about the operation of the Holy Ghost:

And when ye shall receive these things [the records], I would exhort you that ye would ask God, the Eternal Father, in the name of Christ, if these things are not true; and if ye shall ask with a sincere heart, with real intent, having faith in Christ, he will manifest the truth of it unto you, by the power of the Holy Ghost. And by the power of the Holy Ghost ye may know the truth of all things. (Book of Mormon, Moroni 10:4, 5.)

Many people have put this promise to the test and have received the witness of the spirit, that the things contained in the Book of Mormon are true.

This promise is true with respect to all the scriptures. As I read the account given by Joseph Smith of the visitation of the Father and the Son to him, while he was yet a boy fourteen years of age, the Holy Ghost bears record to my soul, that what he says is true, and I rejoice exceedingly in this testimony. I feel that I know by the revelations of God through the operations of the Holy Ghost, as well as did Peter, that Jesus is the Christ, the Son of the Living God, and by the same power, which is the power of God, I do know that Joseph Smith was and is a true prophet of God, as were all his successors in the presidency of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints, down to the present, including the present President of the Church, George Albert Smith. I also know that this work in which we are engaged is the work of God, and that it will endure forever

EFFECTIVENESS OF THE ATONEMENT

I here quote the words of the Savior:

Come unto me, all ye that labour and are heavy laden, and I will give you rest. Take my yoke upon you, and learn of me; for I am meek and lowly in heart: and ye shall find rest unto your souls. For my yoke is easy, and my burden is light. (Matt. 11:28-30.)

The burden of sin and remorse is something to be dreaded and to be avoided. The Savior has provided, however, a means by which the sins of deepest dye may be forgiven, and that, by repentance and obedience unto the laws and ordinances of the gospel, made effective through the atonement of our Lord and Savior, Jesus Christ.

The third article of our faith reads:

We believe that through the Atonement of Christ, all mankind may be saved, by obedience to the laws and ordinances of the Gospel.

In this way we rid ourselves of our sins and prepare ourselves for salvation.

Baptism is a natural sequence to faith and repentance. It is the door into the kingdom.

... Except a man be born of water and of the Spirit, he cannot enter into the kingdom of God. (John 3:5.)

... He that entereth not by the door into the sheepfold, but climbeth up some other way, the same is a thief and a robber. (Ibid., 10:1.)

Baptism is also for the fulfillment of the law.

Then cometh Jesus from Galilee to Jordan unto John, to be baptized of him. But John forbade him, saying, I have need to be baptized of thee, and comest thou to me?

And Jesus answering said unto him, Suffer it to be so now: for thus it becometh us to fulfill all righteousness. (Matt. 3:13-15.)

which could not be fulfilled without baptism.

Baptism is for the forgiveness of sins which have been repented of.

Then Peter said unto them, Repent, and be baptized every one of you in the name of Jesus Christ for the remission of sins, and ye shall receive the gift of the Holy Ghost. (Acts 2:38.)

"GO ON UNTO PERFECTION"

Therefore leaving the principles of the doctrine of Christ, let us go on unto perfection; not laying again the foundation of repentance from dead works, and of faith toward God.

Of the doctrine of baptisms, and of laying on of hands, and of resurrection of the dead, and of eternal judgement.

And this will we do, if God permit. (Heb. 6:1-3.)

And beside this, giving all diligence, add to your faith virtue; and to virtue knowledge; And to knowledge temperance; and to temperance patience; and to patience godliness; And to godliness brotherly kindness; and to brotherly kindness charity. For if these things be in you, and abound, they make you that ye shall neither be barren nor unfruitful in the knowledge of our Lord Jesus Christ. (II Peter 1:5-8.)

to know whom is life eternal.

We believe in being honest, true, chaste, benevolent, virtuous, and in doing good to all men; indeed, we may say that we follow the admonition of Paul—We believe all things, we hope all things, we have endured many things, and hope to be able to endure all things. If there is anything virtuous, lovely, or of good report or praiseworthy, we seek after these things. (Articles of Faith XIII.)

May the Lord help us to be orthodox in our thinking, in our teaching, and in our living, and be in the image and likeness of God in all things, in the name of Jesus Christ. Amen.

ELDER RICHARD W. MADSEN, JR.

Former President of the Western States Mission

When any commandment or call comes to a member of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints, it at once becomes all-important, vital, and a great opportunity and blessing to him who is called. There is no service or call that may come to us that is mean or trivial or of little importance, because we realize that we serve the Lord Jesus Christ, and all of our activities are intended for the blessing and uplift of our fellowmen.

I have recently returned from a mission amongst the hospitable, kind and God-loving people of the Rocky Mountain western states, those states that lie east of us from almost Canada on the north to Mexico on the south, and far east beyond the Missouri river. A great many of those splendid people are here in this audience today. I have labored with a handful of very faithful young men and women and older men and women who have had that same call as a missionary, and as I return I have had many people, as every active member of the Church has had, ask me this question: "Why is it that the Latter-day Saints will leave their homes, their businesses, their professions, their farms, and go out all over the world without remuneration, without hope of earthly reward, to preach the Gospel, and sustain themselves for one, two or three years as the case might be?"

Well, I would like to answer that question for you as it appears to me today. The Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints is not a creed, is not a sect, is not a branch of any earthly organization, but this is the Church of Jesus Christ, the established kingdom of our Lord in the earth; and there are two great significant blessings in it that are obvious to any of us, in or out of the Church, who investigate this great Gospel of the Lord Jesus.

One of those things that I refer to is the priesthood of Almighty God, and the other is the Holy Spirit. We have felt that Spirit in this Conference, and all of you wherever you have gone in Europe, all over this country, South America and in the Islands of the Sea, wherever the Latter-day Saints have gathered they have felt the Spirit of the Lord. If this organization, no matter how perfect it may be, did not have the Spirit of God within it, it might be like a great tree whose branches reach to heaven and whose branches spread out over the whole earth and whose roots found themselves deep and broad throughout the earth, yet if that tree did not have the sap of life within it, it would be dead. Just so with this Church or any other organization, if it did not have the Spirit of God within it. If the membership of the Church did not have the Gift of the Holy Ghost to direct them, to lead them, and the leadership did not have that Spirit to guide the people of the Church, this Church would be dead as that tree would be dead.

It has been said by our Savior, that the promise was to last forever, that when there was faith in the earth, when the priesthood was on the earth, these great things should follow those who believe. In His name they were to heal the sick. In His name they were to cast out devils. In His name were they to speak in divers tongues and have the interpretation of those tongues. In His name were they to prophesy, and in His holy name would come the testimony that Jesus was the Son of God, the Head of the Church.

I want to testify to you, my brethren and sisters here assembled, and especially to my friends out on the radio air, who are many more thousands than are here, I have witnessed with mine own eyes these very same promises following in this Church to those who believe. I have seen the sick raised by the power of the priesthood as a blessing from God. I have heard young men and women speak in tongues, and I have heard the interpretation. I have a testimony, as you have, and thousands of others, that I shall bear humbly this afternoon. God has made it known in answer to my humble, fervent prayer, that this truly is the kingdom of God on earth, that his holy priesthood has again been restored to the earth, and I know beyond any question of a doubt that these Brethren who sit before us today hold the holy priesthood, as do many of us, and that these blessings that are to follow the faithful, those who believe, are in the Church today. I testify to all of the people who know, our neighbors, and those who do not know, that this is the Truth, that is the kingdom of God. Investigate it. Read the Book of Mormon, and then after you have read it, humbly and sincerely, get down on your knees and ask God, as I have done and as thousands of others have done, whether this be his Church and kingdom. I testify that if you will do that, and really seek the Truth, God will make it known to you, and we will share with you the blessings that have come to us. A great and wonderful blessing will come to those who keep the commandments of God in this earth, while they live in this world. We do not have to wait for the other side to get our blessings. We will find here that peace that passeth all understanding. We will find here the love of the Lord. We will find here satisfaction in keeping the commandments, because we will be blessed of Him.

In closing I wish to bear my testimony to this fact again, that any man or woman who joins this Church, comes in at the gate after repentance, is born again of the water, will come into a newness of life that is far beyond all blessings that he has known before. And I humbly pray that we may all be clay in the Lord's hands, that He may make of us what He will, that we may truly be His servants and His children, and I ask it in the name of the Lord Jesus Christ, Amen.

President George Albert Smith:

We have just listened to Elder Richard W. Madsen, Jr., former President of the Western States Mission. We will now listen to the Manti Choir sing for us, "Now Thank We All Our God," after which, President Eldon G. Luke of the Emery Stake, with headquarters at Orangeville, will offer the closing prayer. The Conference will then stand adjourned until 7:00 this evening, when, in accordance with the custom of the Church, the general meeting of the priesthood of the Church will be held, the General Priesthood Meeting. Because of the general character of the service, we have arranged to broadcast it over Station KSL of Salt Lake City, KSUB of Cedar City, and KID of Idaho Falls. Because of the change of time in the Tabernacle Broadcast tomorrow morning, which now comes from 9:30 to 10:00, those desiring to attend the broadcast must be in their seats by 9:15 tomorrow morning. As the Choir will be rehearsing during the time the audience is gathering, it is necessary that the audience come in and take their seats quietly and refrain from making any disturbing noise of any kind during the broadcast. We hope the brethren and sisters who desire to listen to this broadcast will be here in their seats at 9:15 a.m. The regular session of the Conference tomorrow will begin at 10:00 a.m. in this building.

The Manti Choirs sang "Now Thank We All Our God."

President Eldon G. Luke of the Emery Stake offered the closing prayer.

Conference adjourned until 7 p.m.

GENERAL PRIESTHOOD MEETING

The General Priesthood meeting of the Church was held Saturday evening, April 6, with President George Albert Smith presiding and conducting the exercises.

President George Albert Smith:

This is a General Priesthood Meeting of the Church. Since this session is in its nature a general session of the Conference, we have arranged to broadcast it over Stations KSL, KSUB, and KID. There are present on the stand this evening all the General Authorities of the Church, except Elder Ezra Taft Benson and Elder Matthew Cowley, whose absence from the sessions of this Conference has already been explained.

The singing at this session will be by the men of the Tabernacle Choir, Elder J. Spencer Cornwall, director, and Alexander Schreiner, organist.

The opening song by the choir and congregation will be "Do What Is Right," hymn book 151, L. D. S. Hymns, 185.

The opening prayer will be offered by President Rodney S. Williams of the Humboldt Stake, Elko, Nevada.

The congregation and the men's chorus of the Tabernacle Choir sang the hymn, "Do What Is Right," Hymn Book page 151, L. D. S. Hymns No. 185.

Elder Rodney S. Williams, President of the Humboldt Stake, offered the invocation.

President George Albert Smith:

This is a wonderful sight again, and I see before me now hundreds of people standing, and every seat apparently taken.

You have done such fine teamwork during the day, brethren, you have collapsed sufficiently two or three times, by moving closer together so that many people who were standing could have seats. I am going to ask you if you will do that tonight, if you will all move to the center of the seats. And when I say move to the center, I do not mean just to go through the motion, I mean move. (Laughter) Now if those ushers who are seating our people tonight will point the way, I think we can seat another two or three hundred people in this building. I would like to suggest to you that you can sit on the steps leading to the stand here, and that will make a number of seats, and then if any of you become tired, those who have not obtained seats, you will find that the radio is working in the Assembly Hall. But we would like to have you all here if you can stay here. Vacant seats here in front are available now. I am not sure, but I think this may be as large as any priesthood meeting we have ever held in this building.

We will now have pleasure in listening to the Men's Chorus. They will sing: "Come, O Thou King of Kings," after which President S. Dilworth Young, of the First Council of Seventy, will address us.

The men's chorus of the Tabernacle Choir sang "Come, O Thou King of Kings."

ELDER S. DILWORTH YOUNG

Of the First Council of the Seventy

As I look over this vast number of Latter-day Saints, I begin to understand and to have some comprehension of why it is that I do not know people when I go up the street during a conference. I have met so many of you during the past year, and have been so kindly entertained that I have made some effort, some struggle, to know you when I see you. It is almost a hopeless task. May I say thanks for your many kindnesses and express a hope that you will understand when I meet you on the street if I do not remember your name. If I look a little blank, I wish you would be like Earl J. Glade, who said that he never goes up to a man he has met without greeting him thus: "I know you. I met you at this place." So with me. If you will say: "I know you. This is where I saw you," then I think I can remember better.

I should like this evening to be articulate for some of the inarticulate; I should like to speak for the boys of twenty, twenty-one, twenty-two, and twenty-three. I should like to speak to them also, if I may, and if the Lord will give me wisdom, because they need speaking to as well as speaking for.

AN INSPIRING SERMON

A good many years ago I read some things with a great uplift of spirit. I read in a book where a man by the name of Wilford Woodruff said that he was in a meeting once in which Parley P. Pratt was present. Brother Pratt said that he had ridden for a long distance to reach the meeting place. His subject was: "Will you join us in Zion's Camp and go and rescue the Saints in Missouri?" When he asked for the privilege of speaking, he stated that he would speak for only a few minutes, as he was very tired. He started at early candlelight, as they called it in those days, and he spoke until after midnight. Brother Woodruff sat through the long sermon, thrilled and inspired. He said, in about these words:

I was so thrilled that all the gold in the world could not have kept me from going with that company.

I thought to myself I would like to have been thrilled that way too.

CONVERSION OF WILFORD WOODRUFF AND LORENZO SNOW

And I read again where a man by the name of Lorenzo Snow was going to Oberlin College in Ohio. He wrote to his sister and said:

If there is nothing better than is to be found here in Oberlin College, good-bye to all religions.

He told her that there was nothing at all for him there, but later, when he heard the elders speak, and recognized in their testimony the words of salvation, he was thrilled, and he could not join the Church rapidly enough.

As a boy I looked at the pictures of Wilford Woodruff and Lorenzo Snow, gray-bearded men in their last years, and I thought to myself: "That would be easy for them. They knew the gospel is true. It would be really easy for them to accept it." When I learned later that Wilford Woodruff was only twenty-six years of age when the experience with Parley P. Pratt happened to him, and that Lorenzo Snow was only twenty-two, then I could begin to see some hope for the young men.

Those men made their decisions when they were as young as you boys are. They did not wait and have a testimony come to them gradually. They had been investigating the words of Christ in the Bible for some years, as very young men, and when the time came for them to hear it, they were willing to accept it. They prayed earnestly for a testimony, for the Holy Ghost, and it came to them. To Lorenzo Snow it came with such a rush and power that for several nights he said he could hear the whisperings and the rustlings, and he seemed bathed in fire. His mind was uplifted, and he understood the scriptures as he never had before.

SEEKING FOR A TESTIMONY

I like that, and I say to you young men you can have the same experience if you want it. All you have to do is to want it badly enough because you can't "see-saw" around with it; either it is so or it is not so. If you make up your minds it is so and ask the Lord to give you a testimony, if you ask in sincerity and truth, you will receive that testimony. Those men obeyed the prophet of God. You may obey the present-day prophet of God, and you may get the same thrill and happiness out of doing it. He needs courage to go on, the same as you do, and the men who have been sustained by this conference as prophets, seers, and revelators—sixteen in number—need it also. They have their discouraging moments, but the thing that gives them courage to go on is your faithfulness.

A TRIBUTE TO MARK AUSTIN

We have all respect for the aged. We young men know that they have been tried and not found wanting. They will stand and support the tabernacle as long as it shall need supporting.

I have learned one lesson in the past year, and I am going to pass it on to you: It has seemed to me, as President Smith moves about this Church, that there stand staunch men with their arms outstretched, holding the ropes of the tabernacle tight, so the winds cannot blow it away. All their lives they have shown by their works that they support the President and the Church. I have seen such a man, and I should like to point him out. I am going to be personal, and I hope the person about whom I am going to speak will forgive me if I embarrass him.

I have watched Brother Mark Austin go about in the welfare work. He is past eighty. For years and years he has been a bulwark to the brethren who preside over this Church. No matter what they told him to do, he did it. As I, a young man, have watched him, I have taken fresh courage that somehow I might measure up as faithfully as he has done and is doing. He does not let age interfere when Brother Romney assigns him to go on a mission over a week end to a conference. He is right there, no matter how far away it is, no matter how much discomfort he suffers. He is a true gentleman. He never interferes; he never gets in anybody's way; but he goes about quietly doing what he is assigned to do, for the glory of God and for the honor of the priesthood of the Church, in the name of the prophet of God.

We young men, and those of you who are twenty, twenty-one, and twenty-two, can learn to copy that kind of example. It does not come easy; it takes about sixty years to get there, but once arrived, you have a serenity of conscience and a happiness which cannot be equaled on earth.

These sixteen men that we sustain are honored. They are sustained as the prophets of the Living God. You men may also be honored just as much if you obey the words of the prophets of God. You see, a prophet cannot do very much prophesying without someone to whom he can direct his words, and he cannot ask for any help unless he has someone of whom to ask it. You are they. It is you who must hear the word and then go forth and obey it.

EARLY DAY MISSIONARIES SET AN EXAMPLE

We mention Brigham Young a good deal of the time, and we mention Heber C. Kimball, two men who were as close to each other as brothers. We often speak of Parley P. Pratt, Orson Pratt, David W. Patten, the first great martyr, and others as examples of great men. But there are those among you who are also great.

Have you ever heard of Zera Pulsipher? Many of you have not; some of you may have. As I read in the History of the Church, I learn about many of the great ones who have risen and whose biographies have been written, but if one reads in the books carefully, he will see that a large proportion first heard the gospel through Zera Pulsipher, and, as likely as not, he was the one who baptized them. His name is mentioned repeatedly in the histories as a man who was out preaching the gospel. Do you know anything about him? Nobody does. It was not his job to become the president of the Church; it was not his prerogative to preside over any of the great councils of the Church, but as a young man, about twenty-two years of age, hearing the Prophet's voice, he obeyed and went out spreading the glad tidings to the children of men. Because he believed it, because he was sincere in it, the Lord blessed him, and he was the instrument by which many great ones came into the Church.

You have heard it said in this conference, and you will hear it, I suppose, a number of times that blessed is he, and how happy will be he who makes one convert in the kingdom of our Father. If I remember correctly, Heber C. Kimball and his companions converted about three thousand, the very first months they were in Preston, England. But do you know the names of the five young men who took the gospel to Brigham Young, and to Heber C. Kimball? One was named Eliot Strong. Another one was named Eleazer Miller. The other three were Alpheus Gifford, Enos Curtis, and Daniel Bowen. How much joy they will have in the kingdom of their Father with the great prophets of the Lord and the three thousand converts from Preston, and the many thousands more from England that these converts made in their turn. Such is the lot of every young man who faces me this evening, and every young man in the Church if he chooses to obey the call. He may have like pleasure in going forth, and if he never does become great in the Church as an organizer, he can become great in the Church by the people he converts to the gospel.

CALLING YOUNG MEN ON MISSIONS

Blessed is the boy, who, believing, goes out into the world at the call of the prophet and seeks out the honest of the earth. There is hardly a man in this room but whose parents or grandparents are the result of such work. I should like to make a plea to the young men, backing up what I heard at the last conference. President Smith made a blanket plea that the young men of the Church respond to missionary calls. A large number of those young men have been taught in the past by their parents and by their ward authorities that calls do not usually come by blanket request. I mean by that, that they believe that they ought to remain quietly at home and wait for the inspiration of the Lord to inspire the bishops to come over and call upon them. If I understand it correctly, I think that President Smith wants every young man to feel that he can go to his bishop, and volunteer, saying: "I am willing to go." I believe that is the way to interpret it. In any case any young man does not feel that way and thinks he ought to wait until the bishop comes, I think the bishop ought to go to every clean living, righteous young man in the ward who is home from war, no matter how long he has been home, and talk to him about it, counseling with him and his folks.

Every worthy young man in this Church has a right to be called upon a mission, every one. I think it is not the right of any man who has a presiding place in any ward or stake to neglect any boy for the reasons that we usually give and have given during this year. I have heard many say, in many places where I have been, "Well, our boys have been away for a long time; they ought to be home for a little while. Give them a rest. Let them have a few months at home before they are called out again." I say to you there won't be many boys left at home, no matter whether you call them or not. They are not going to stay home. They have left home forever. They will come back and visit at home, it is true, but they are going to school, or they are going to marry, or they are going to do any number of things. But they are not going to stay home. So that is no reason. If a boy is able to go on a mission, he ought to be given a chance. Let him turn it down if he wants to, but don't make his decision for him. Make certain that he does not want to go before you cease to call upon him.

Do you think there is no need? Do you think we can't use them? In the mission of which I was a member twenty-five years ago, a year after World War I, there were two hundred missionaries. That many had gone out to the mission field. In that same mission today, there are fewer than forty, one year after the end of this war. Many boys are responding, it is true, and some of our facilities are taxed right now to take care of them, but they are not responding fast enough, and they are not being asked fast enough. A great many of the boys are getting away without being invited to go on missions. They have it in their minds and hearts to go to school, and they should go to school. They can go to school, but I do believe there is not any school on earth but can wait two years while the Lord's word is sent over the earth. I don't know of any finer school for any boy than to go into the world seeking out the humble, defending his Church, learning how to get along with people, teaching the things of the kingdom of God to his heart and in other people's hearts. He will come back a stronger and a finer man. He can go on to his school then and get a great deal more out of it, knowing that he has done the will of the Lord and has acted as his servant on the earth at the request of the prophet of God.

THE DESIRE FOR MISSIONARY SERVICE

That is the lot of any young man who wants to do it. I don't care who he is. But I will give to you young men over this Church one sentence: You've got to want to do it. I repeat: You've got to want to do it. The Lord can put it into the hearts of the Presidency of the Church and of the Quorum of the Twelve to call you on missions if you will accept it, but you've got to want to accept it.

I have talked to any number of young men lately who want to accept the call. Wilford Woodruff wanted to accept. He wanted to join Zion's Camp; he was warned that he might die, that he would probably lose his life. He said: "I don't care. I want to go anyhow." Lorenzo Snow wanted to go on a mission. The moment he was baptized and confirmed and had the Aaronic Priesthood conferred upon him, he packed his grip and went on foot to the missionaries, you've got to want to go.

My young friends, if we get enough missionaries you've got to want to go, too. Not half-heartedly, no, not with the feeling that: "I'll go if I'm called; perhaps I'll enjoy it, perhaps I won't," but rather, "In the name of the Living God I'll take his word and with his power on my shoulders I'll go to the whole earth, wherever I am sent, and bear witness to the world that the gospel has been restored and that Joseph Smith was a prophet, and that President George Albert Smith is a prophet, and that this Church is the true kingdom of God." If you do that, you will never regret it as long as you live, and the Church will grow by leaps and bounds. Before you know it, it will fill the whole earth. God grant that may happen soon. I ask it in Christ's name. Amen.

ELDER ALMA SONNE

Assistant to the Council of the Twelve Apostles

My brethren, no one can rise on an occasion like this without feeling a thrill of emotion. I was impressed yesterday when President Clark read the financial and statistical report of the Church. It was a calm recital of figures, but those figures told a story of growth and progress. I was deeply stirred a few minutes later when Elder Widstoe reminded us that just one hundred years ago the Latter-day Saints were leaving the beautiful city of Nauvoo. They were then scattered along the fringe of the great desert that extended westward to the slopes of California. By what combination of circumstances could these men and women hope to survive? It required a great faith and certainly a great courage to undertake the great task that lay ahead.

Accomplishments of Church During Last Century

During that century of time, the Church has asserted itself and carried forward the truth brought to earth by Joseph Smith the Prophet. Since that day the foundation of a great intermountain empire has been laid. Cities, towns, churches, temples, public buildings have been built. Deserts have been subdued; schools colleges, seminaries have been established. Missions have been opened in foreign lands and on the islands of the sea. Branches, wards, stakes have been organized, and missionary work at home and abroad has gone forward. The gospel has been explained, and the name of Joseph Smith the Prophet as a restorer of divine truth has been heralded to all the world. Surely a good beginning has been made in the "marvelous work and wonder" spoken of by ancient prophets, and surely the leaders of the past have made their names secure on the pages of history. These leaders, all of them, referred to by President S. Dilworth Young, were great in character and in good works. They were great in their foresight and in their achievement. They were great in their perseverance and mighty in their faith. "Mormonism," so-called, was not the outgrowth of fraud and deception. The Latter-day Saints have not been led astray by a wicked pretender or an unscrupulous imposter. We think of these things whenever the name and character of Joseph Smith are being assailed. It was Charles Francis Potter who said:

If we are to accept the dictum of Jesus, "By their fruits ye shall know them," we must rate Mormonism high.

Faith in God Sustained Pioneers

Reference has been made to the pioneers. How can we account for the constructive faith of the sturdy, dauntless, courageous pioneers of Utah and neighboring states and for the unconquerable spirit which possessed them? What motives, what urges actuated them as they left their homes in the East and moved westward over the trackless waste? These men and women in the solitudes of the desert had time to think and pray and to ponder and weigh carefully their responsibilities. What power sustained them in their hardships and in their difficulties? What prompted each one of them to cast his lot with a persecuted and driven people? Was it not his faith in God and his conviction that a new dispensation of the gospel had been committed to man through the divine calling of Joseph Smith? History will one day deal fairly and intelligently with these questions. The unprejudiced student, the searcher after truth will see in Mormonism the counterpart of primitive Christianity. His investigations will discover in it the same spirit, the same energies and fortitudes, the same type of leadership and the same far-reaching objectives. He will see in Joseph Smith the characteristics of a true prophet of God like the prophets whose names and deeds glorify the pages of Biblical history. He will find that Joseph Smith is not easily dislodged from his position as a prophet of God. The Prophet's claims will never be nullified by the declarations of traitors and blasphemers.

I read from the Doctrine and Covenants:

The ends of the earth shall inquire after thy name, and fools shall have thee in derision, and hell shall rage against thee;

While the pure in heart, and the wise, and the noble, and the virtuous, shall seek counsel, and authority, and blessings constantly from under thy hand.

And thy people shall never be turned against thee by the testimony of traitors. (D. & C. 122:1-3.)

A Good Tree Bears Good Fruit

Those words were reassuring to the Prophet when they were given. They are reassuring to us today. There is no way to account for Joseph Smith outside of his own explanation. Someone has said: "Truth is harmonious." It is consistent with itself today and always. Jesus said:

... Do men gather grapes of thorns, or figs of thistles? Even so every good tree bringeth forth good fruit; but a corrupt tree bringeth forth evil fruit. A good tree cannot bring forth evil fruit, neither can a corrupt tree bring forth good fruit. Every tree that bringeth not forth good fruit is hewn down, and cast into the fire. (Matt. 7:16-19.)

Wicked and degraded men do not bring light and hope and joy to their fellow men. A mind darkened by evil could not attract God-fearing men and women of faith, integrity, and intelligence whose lives have reflected good work and worthy achievements. Would a church founded on fraud and falsehood go forth with eagerness and determination to uplift humanity? Would such a church array itself against evil in all of its manifestations? Would it teach faith in God and repentance of sin as preliminaries to church membership? Would it adopt doctrines and ordinances and standards established by Jesus Christ and his apostles? If so, for what purpose? We are told that evil begets evil, and good begets good.

Joseph Smith's Work to Stand Forever

Finally, let it be remembered that Joseph Smith and Hyrum Smith, brothers and companions in the cause of truth, gave their lives as a testimony of their sincerity. Not only they, but others left a similar testimony, sealed and certified, and therefore binding upon the world. While he lived, Joseph Smith baffled his fellow men by his teachings, which were so profoundly creative. The keenest minds were perplexed and puzzled before his demonstration of power and leadership. But the fury of so many against him is proof even today that he is not dead in the hearts of men; that he is well-fortified and will continue to stand out boldly and clearly in the religious world. He will loom bigger and bigger on the human horizon as the years come and go. The correctness of his views and the soundness of his principles and doctrines will be vindicated fully and completely. He cannot be removed or explained away by slander or vilification. He presented a plan which provides for the exaltation of the individual, the perpetuity and the coherence of the family, and the safety and security of the nation. He put divine approval upon the establishment of our republic and proclaimed freedom and equal rights as essential factors in man's progress and advancement. He declared that America was a land of promise, held in reserve by the Almighty for the fulfilment and the accomplishments of God's purposes. No one has sounded a higher note of patriotism than did Joseph Smith. In his veins flowed the blood of the Revolutionary Fathers, and to him the Constitution was an inspired instrument of government.

Joseph Smith gave to the world a foundation for intelligent faith, and he has also given to honest, sincere doubters a kindly light to lead them forward and upward to a higher goal and a more satisfying life. His testimony to the world still stands. God bless his memory. May his words and teachings be preserved to bless the human family forever, I pray in the name of Jesus Christ. Amen.

PRESIDENT DAVID O. Mc KAY

Second Counselor in the First Presidency

When, on one occasion, the Prophet Joseph Smith was asked the meaning of the strength of Zion, he replied:

The strength of Zion is to put on the power of the priesthood.

You, brethren, radiate that strength tonight. No one can be in your presence as the priesthood of the Church filling this building, and representing thousands of others, without feeling heartfelt gratitude for the privilege of being numbered with you. God bless you!

THE SACRAMENT

I desire, tonight, to say a few words regarding the administering of the sacrament. In so doing it is not my purpose to repeat the excellent sermon delivered yesterday by Elder Marion G. Romney on that same subject, but if I may be blessed with the spirit of this gathering and the inspiration of the Lord, I desire to supplement that timely address.

The greatest comfort in this life is the assurance of having close relationship with God. I am speaking to men who know what that experience is. The sacrament period should be a factor in awakening this sense of relationship.

... the Lord Jesus the same night in which he was betrayed took bread:
And when he had given thanks, he brake it, and said, Take eat:
this is my body, which is broken for you: this do in remembrance of me.
After the same manner also he took the cup, when he had supped, saying, This cup is the new testament in my blood: this do ye, as oft as ye drink it, in remembrance of me.

For as often as ye eat this bread, and drink this cup, ye do shew the Lord's death till he come.

Wherefore whosoever shall eat this bread, and drink this cup of the Lord, unworthily, shall be guilty of the body and blood of the Lord.

But let a man examine himself, and so let him eat of that bread and drink of that cup. (I Cor. 11:23-28.)

No more sacred ordinance is administered in the Church of Christ than the administration of the sacrament. It was initiated just after Jesus and the Twelve had partaken of the last supper; and the Saints in the early days followed that custom. That is, they ate before they administered the sacrament, but that custom was later discontinued by instructions from Paul to the Saints to eat their meal at home so that when they met for worship they might meet as a body of brethren and sisters on the same level to partake of the sacrament in remembrance of the life and the death, particularly the death of their Lord.

THE PURPOSE OF THE SACRAMENT

There are three things fundamentally important associated with the administration of the sacrament. The first is self-discernment. It is introspection. "This do in remembrance of me," but we should partake worthily, each one examining himself with respect to his worthiness.

Secondly, there is a covenant made; a covenant even more than a promise. You have held up your hand, some of you, or if in England when signing a document, put your hand on the Bible, signifying the value of your promise or of the oath that you took. All this indicates the sacredness of a covenant. There is nothing more important in life than that. Until the nations realize the value of a covenant and promises and conduct themselves accordingly, there will be little trust among them. Instead there will be suspicion, doubt, and signed agreements, "scraps of paper," because they do not value their word. A covenant, a promise, should be as sacred as life. That principle is involved every Sunday when we partake of the sacrament.

Thirdly, there is another blessing, and that is a sense of close relationship with the Lord. There is an opportunity to commune with oneself and to commune with the Lord. We meet in the house that is dedicated to him; we have turned it over to him; we call it his house. Well, you may rest assured that he will be there to inspire us if we come in proper attune to meet him. We are not prepared to meet him if we bring into that room our thoughts regarding our business affairs, and especially if we bring into the house of worship feelings of hatred toward our neighbor, or enmity and jealousy towards the Authorities of the Church. Most certainly no individual can hope to come into communion with the Father if that individual entertain any such feelings. They are so foreign to worship, and so foreign, particularly, to the partaking of the sacrament.

THE VALUE OF MEDITATION

I think we pay too little attention to the value of meditation, a principle of devotion. In our worship there are two elements: One is spiritual communion arising from our own meditation; the other, instruction from others, particularly from those who have authority to guide and instruct us. Of the two, the more profitable introspectively is the meditation. Meditation is the language of the soul. It is defined as "a form of private devotion, or spiritual exercise, consisting in deep, continued reflection on some religious theme." Meditation is a form of prayer. We can say prayers without having any spiritual response. We can say prayers as the unrighteous king in Hamlet who said: "My words fly up, my thoughts remain below: Words without thoughts never to heaven go."

The poet, contrasting the outward form of worship, and the prayer of the soul, said:

The Power incensed, the pageant will desert,
The pompous strain, the sacerdotal stole;
But haply, in some cottage far apart,
May hear, well-pleased, the language of the soul,
And in His Book of Life the inmates poor enroll.
(Burns, "The Cotter's Saturday Night.")

Meditation is one of the most secret, most sacred doors through which we pass into the presence of the Lord. Jesus set the example for us. As soon as he was baptized and received the Father's approval, "This is my Beloved Son, in whom I am well pleased," Jesus repaired to what is now known as the mount of temptation. I like to think of it as the mount of meditation where, during the forty days of fasting, he communed with himself and his Father, and contemplated upon the responsibility of his great mission. One result of this spiritual communion was such strength as enabled him to say to the tempter:

. . . Get thee hence, Satan: for it is written, Thou shalt worship the Lord thy God, and him only shalt thou serve. (Matt. 4:10.)

Before he gave to the Twelve the beautiful sermon on the mount, he was in solitude, in communion. He did the same thing after that busy Sabbath day, when he arose early in the morning, after having been the guest of Peter. Peter undoubtedly found the guest chamber empty, and when they sought him they found him alone. It was on that morning that Peter said:

. . . All men seek for thee. (Mark 1:37.)

Again, after Jesus had fed the five thousand he told the Twelve to dismiss the multitude, but Jesus went to the mountain for solitude. The historian says, "when the evening was come, he was there alone." (Matt. 14:23.) Meditation! Prayer!

I once read a book written by a very wise man, whose name I cannot now recall, which contained a significant chapter on prayer. The author was not a member of the Church, but evidently had a desire to keep in close communion with God, and he wanted to find the truth. Among other things he said in substance:

In secret prayer go into the room, close the door, pull down the shades, and kneel in the center of the room. For a period of five minutes or so, say nothing. Just think of what God has done for you, of what are your greatest spiritual and temporal needs. When you sense that, and sense his presence, then pour out your soul to him in thanksgiving.

SACRAMENT PERIOD FOR COMMUNION WITH GOD

I believe the short period of administering the sacrament is one of the best opportunities we have for such meditation, and there should be nothing during that sacred period to distract our attention from the purpose of that ordinance.

One of the most impressive services I have ever attended was in a group of over eight hundred people to whom the sacrament was administered, and during that administration not a sound could be heard excepting the ticking of the clock—eight hundred souls, each of whom at least had the opportunity of communion with the Lord. There was no distraction, no orchestra, no singing, no speaking. Each one had an opportunity to search himself introspectively and to consider his worthiness or unworthiness to partake of the sacrament. His was the privilege of getting closer to his Father in heaven. That is ideal!

Brethren, we recommend that we surround this sacred ordinance with more reverence, with perfect order, that each one who comes to the house of God may meditate upon his goodness and silently and prayerfully express appreciation for God's goodness. Let the sacrament hour be one experience of the day in which the worshiper tries at least to realize within himself that it is possible for him to commune with his God.

Great events have happened in this Church because of such communion, because of the responsiveness of the soul to the inspiration of the Almighty. I know it is real. President Wilford Woodruff had that gift to a great extent. He could respond; he knew the "still small voice" to which some are still strangers. You will find that when these most inspirational moments come to you that you are alone with yourself and your God. They come to you probably when you are facing a great trial, when the wall is across your pathway, and it seems that you are facing an insurmountable obstacle, or when your heart is heavy because of some tragedy in your life. I repeat, the greatest comfort that can come to us in this life is to sense the realization of communion with God.

FATHER'S TESTIMONY

Great testimonies have come in those moments. It is just such an experience as that which came to my father in the north of Scotland when, as I have told some of you before, he prayed to God to remove from him a spirit of gloom and despondency that overwhelmed him. After a night of worry and restlessness, he arose at daylight and repaired to a cave on the shore of the North Sea. He had been there before in prayer. There, just as the rays of the morning light began to come over the sea, he poured out his soul to God as a son would appeal to his father. The answer came: "Testify that Joseph Smith is a prophet of God!" The cause of his discouragement flashing upon his mind, he said aloud: "Lord, it is enough!"

There are those in this audience who knew my father and can testify to his integrity and his honesty. A testimony of that kind has one hundred percent value.

These secret prayers, these conscientious moments in meditation, these yearnings of the soul to reach out to feel the presence of God—such is the privilege of those who hold the Melchizedek Priesthood.

ELIMINATION OF DISTRACTING THOUGHTS

Now I know that some of you are saying to yourselves, "music helps to intensify that feeling of communion." When you stop to consider the matter, you realize that there is nothing during the administration of the sacrament of an extraneous nature so important as remembering our Lord and Savior, nothing so worthy of attention as considering the value of the promise we are making. Why should anything distract us? Is there anything more sublime? We are witnessing there, in the presence of one another, and before him, our Father, that we are willing to take upon ourselves the name of Christ, that we will always remember him, always, that we will keep his commandments that he has given us. Can you, can anybody living, who thinks for a moment, place before us anything which is more sacred or more far-reaching in our lives? If we partake of it mechanically, we are not honest, or let us say, we are permitting our thoughts to be distracted from a very sacred ordinance.

I was speaking recently to one man about this. He said: "Oh, but the beautiful music of the choir helps us to concentrate." Concentrate on what? The more beautiful the music, the more your attention is attracted to it, to the player, or to the composer. If it is beautiful music poorly played, then the discord detracts your attention. Have that music in preparation up to the moment, yes, but when the prayer is said, and that young priest speaks for us, as he does, then remember that we are placing ourselves under covenant. It will be ideal if, during the fifteen minutes, every man, woman, and child will think as best as he or she can of the significance of that sacred ordinance.

There is one other point which might be associated with the passing of the sacrament. It is a beautiful, impressive thing to have our boys administer it. They are the servants; they are waiting upon us and waiting upon the Lord; and have come there because they are worthy to officiate if the bishop has spoken to them properly.

... be ye clean, that bear the vessels of the Lord. (Isaiah 52:11.)

If every boy could sense this, quietly and with dignity he would pass the sacrament to us. Sometimes they pass it first to the organist, as if no moment should be lost before she starts to distract our attention. The music starts at once. No matter how good it may be, the tones of the organ, if we are respectful to the organist, divert our attention from the prayer that has just been offered.

PRESIDING OFFICERS TO RECEIVE SACRAMENT FIRST

Rather should that young man carry the sacrament to the presiding officer, not to honor him, but the office, as you honored our President tonight. That presiding officer may be the bishop of the ward; if so, let the young man carry the sacrament first to the bishop. After that pass it to one after the other who sit either on the left or the right of the presiding officer; not going back to the first and second counselors and then to the superintendent. The lesson is taught when the sacrament is passed to the presiding officer. The next Sunday, the president of the stake may be there, who is then the highest ecclesiastical authority. Do you see what the responsibility of the deacons and the priests is? There is a lesson in government taught every day. It is their duty to know who is the presiding officer in that meeting that day. Next Sunday there may be one of the General Authorities. Those young men will have in mind the question, "Who is he today, and who is the presiding authority?"

COMPANIONSHIP OF HOLY SPIRIT

But the lesson I wish to leave tonight is: Let us make that sacrament hour one of the most impressive means of coming in contact with God's spirit. Let the Holy Ghost, to which we are entitled, lead us into his presence, and may we sense that nearness, and have a prayer offered in our hearts which he will hear.

My thought is partially expressed by Edwin Markham in the following lines:

The builder who first bridged Niagara's gorge,
Before he swung his cable, shore to shore,
Sent out across the gulf his venturing kite
Bearing a slender cord for unseen hands
To grasp upon the further cliff and draw
A greater cord, and then a greater yet;
Till at last across the chasm swung
The cable—then the mighty bridge in air!

So may we send our little timid thought
Across the void, out to God's reaching hands—
Send our love and faith to thread the deep—
Thought after thought until the little cord
Has greatened to a chain no chance can break.
And we are anchored to the infinite!

God help us, brethren, so to live that we may sense the reality, as I bear you my testimony tonight it is real, that we can commune with our Father in heaven, and if we so live to be worthy of the companionship of the Holy Spirit, he will guide us into all truth; he will show us things to come; he will bring all things to our remembrance; he will testify of the divinity of the Lord Jesus Christ, as I do tonight, and of the restoration of the gospel, in the name of the Lord Jesus Christ. Amen.

The Men's Chorus sang "Unfold Ye Portals Everlasting."

PRESIDENT J. REUBEN CLARK, Jr.

First Counselor in the First Presidency

Brethren, I renew to you a sentiment that I think I have expressed every time I have met this great group of priesthood, since I have had the opportunity to address you. It is a great joy to be with you, to feel your spirit and to enjoy the inspiration which comes from your presence. I renew again the thought that I have so often expressed that if we could bring real unity, the unity of one man, into the priesthood of this Church, we would wield an influence that would affect the course of world affairs. We cannot do it and will not do it until we are so united. It is my belief that it is our opportunity, not only, but also our duty and responsibility to come, as the old expression went, "to a unity of the faith." I cannot believe that the Lord will hold us guiltless if we do not do this. It is the obligation of those who bear the Holy Priesthood of God.

NEGLECTIBLE PERCENTAGE OF FINANCIAL MISHAPS

Yesterday, in an aside comment I made, as I was reading the financial report, I did you brethren an injustice. I think that I said that our financial mishaps in carrying on all this tremendous expenditure and collection of funds would not exceed one tenth of one percent. In the last ten years there has been just a little over in mishap, eight ten-thousandths of one percent, and out of all those who handle these great funds there is not one man who is under bond. I dislike to boast about ourselves, but I think we may challenge the world on that record. I am grateful to you brethren for your integrity, your honesty, and your truthfulness which represents a long step toward the unit to which I have already referred.

SCRIPTURES REFERRING TO ONE TRUE GOSPEL

I thought tonight that I might read a little scripture to you and then refer to a matter to which I have referred before and which is very near to my heart. I am reading from Second Nephi, 26th chapter and 20th verse:

And the Gentiles are lifted up in the pride of their eyes, and have stumbled, because of the greatness of their stumbling block, that they have built up many churches; nevertheless, they put down the power and miracles of God, and preach up unto themselves their own wisdom and their own learning, that they may get gain and grind upon the face of the poor.

Paul, writing to the Galatians, said in verses oft quoted by us:

But though we, or an angel from heaven, preach any other gospel unto you than that which we have preached unto you, let him be accursed.

As we said before, so say I now again, If any man preach any other gospel unto you than that ye have received, let him be accursed.

For do I now persuade men, or God? or do I seek to please men? for if I yet pleased men, I should not be the servant of Christ. (Galatians 1:8-10.)

I will now read from Second John:

For many deceivers are entered into the world, who confess not that Jesus Christ is come in the flesh. This is a deceiver and an antichrist.

Look to yourselves, that we lose not those things which we have wrought, but that we receive a full reward.

Whosoever transgresseth, and abideth not in the doctrine of Christ, hath not God. He that abideth in the doctrine of Christ, he hath both the Father and the Son.

If there come any unto you, and bring not this doctrine, receive him not into your house, neither bid him God speed.

For he that biddeth him God speed is partaker of his evil deeds. (II John 7-11.)

When Paul wrote to the Corinthians in his First Epistle, he used these words:

For I determined not to know any thing among you, save Jesus Christ, and him crucified. . . .

And my speech and my preaching was not with enticing words of man's wisdom, but in demonstration of the Spirit and of power:

That your faith should not stand in the wisdom of men, but in the power of God. (I Corinthians 2:2, 4-5.)

Then going on to the eleventh verse, to which I briefly referred this morning:

For what man knoweth the things of a man, save the spirit of man which is in him? Even so the things of God knoweth no man, but the spirit of God.

Now we have received, not the Spirit of the world, but the spirit which is of God; that we might know the things that are freely given to us of God.

Which things also we speak, not in the words which man's wisdom teacheth, but which the Holy Ghost teacheth; comparing spiritual things with spiritual.

But the natural man receiveth not the things of the Spirit of God: for they are foolishness unto him; neither can he know them, because they are spiritually discerned.

But he that is spiritual judgeth all things, yet he himself is judged of no man.

For who hath known the mind of the Lord, that he may instruct him? But we have the mind of Christ. (I Corinthians 2: 11-16.)

Those scriptures are clear; they need, from me, no explanation.

DESTRUCTIVE DOCTRINES BEING TAUGHT

I have said on other occasions, and I repeat now that there are being taught amongst us, unfortunately, doctrines which are utterly destructive, not only of Jesus the Christ, but even of God himself, and we must be on our watch that neither we nor our children be influenced, debauched, or polluted by such doctrines.

Recently a man of education (he holds a high scholastic degree), a worthy member of the Church, sent to me a statement of some of the teachings that now are somewhat mooted amongst some of our Latter-day Saints—a few only, I trust. I am going to read this statement to you and make some comment upon the points as I proceed. There are some ten points.

I wish to say to you as earnestly as I may, that, as you will see when I have read them, if they shall attain credence amongst us, particularly amongst our young people, they will destroy our faith.

The first of these statements reads:

"1. God is not an anthropomorphic being."— that is, he does not have hands, or eyes, or feet, or ears, or a voice—

"and not a personal God, nor a Living God."

I remember when Dr. Talmage used to say something not dissimilar from what I shall say, but he made an actual quote, as I recollect which I can only summarize after these many years. It went about this way:

"Thrust God out of the back door, and he comes in at the front door as the First Great Cause. Thrust the First Great Cause out of the back door, and God enters the front door as a Great Force. Push him out as a Great Force, and he comes back in as a Great Intelligence."

No sane man who can think at all can deny in his heart the existence of God, the God of the Bible, and of the New Testament, and of modern revelation.

The next point:

"2. Man is a creature of the Universe and draws intelligence and ideas (inventions) from the Universe by being in harmony with it."

This statement is not only indefinite, but meaningless. It does, however, seem to postulate a Universe Intelligence, and thus we are back to our great concept of God.

"3. There is no such thing as supernatural experience among men—at any time in history. No revelation directly from God."

This denies all scripture. It denies all divine manifestations to man. It denies his goodness and his mercy and his love. It gives the lie to the commonest experience of man, recognized from the savage to the most highly civilized man; indeed, it gives the lie practically to our very existence.

"4. Jesus Christ was a revolutionary leader—but not divine."

This, of course, denies the divinity of Jesus. It falls squarely within the observation of John who declared, as I have already read:

For many deceivers are entered into the world, who confess not that Jesus Christ is come in the flesh. This is a deceiver and an anti-christ. (II John 7.)

"5. Joseph Smith did not see God nor really experience any supernatural phenomena. He wrote the Book of Mormon without divine assistance. He also gave revelations to suit his purpose and the situation without divine assistance."

No man can honestly read the Book of Mormon and then say that this boy Prophet wrote it himself, and the most persistent search has failed to reveal that he stole the book. There is too much in the book to have been written by a boy whom his hostile critics brand as an ignoramus. And it should be said here, he had no opportunity for consulting either the little-known sources, which hostile critics have disinterred in trying to destroy him, or the more widely-known sources of which he probably had no knowledge whatever because they were inaccessible to him. No man of his age could have had in his mind, no matter how much he had studied, merely the allusions contained in the Book of Mormon to the holy scriptures, and all that we have of his that came from him when speaking or writing normally, gives not even a suggestion of his power to compose or to utter those great gems of majestic literature which are so plentifully found in the Book of Mormon and the Doctrine and Covenants.

"6. The value of Mormonism is in its practice and in its system. Its origin need not be basic to one's belief in or acceptance of Mormonism for its value."

Many of us have heard this heresy before. No shallower view of Mormonism can be taken than is thus expressed. The achievements of our people, the growth of the Church, the people's endurance of hardship, misery, penury, persecution, and even martyrdom itself, would have been wholly impossible without the spirituality which lay behind and vitalized their whole lives. This people of ours had the Spirit of God to direct them. Take away from us that Spirit, take away the divinity which lies behind the gospel, and there is nothing left. Had our work not been divinely fathered, we would not have outlived our first ten years of life.

"7. The three-degrees-of-glory story is a myth."

That is, Paul was mistaken, the Prophet Joseph was mistaken.

all who have thought and taught that glory might come to those who live righteously and die with a testimony, some of them as martyrs, were all mistaken and all they believed in was a myth. Such a concept destroys the teachings of the restored gospel. The words of Paul and the words of the Prophet Joseph were divinely inspired and are the eternal truth.

Here is another mean thrust:

"8. Temple work may occupy old people in pleasant pastime but it is absurd and foolish in its objectives."

Thus these antichrists would not only abandon the living but discard the dead, their ancestors and loved ones; nothing would be saved, indeed salvation would for no one be a reality. Every instinct of justice and mercy, every really rational concept of man and his being cries out against any concept such as this. Temple work is part of the restored gospel.

"9. The belief that man might become as God is equally foolish."

This doctrine would, of course, wipe out the great truth of eternal progression. It would thus cut off from man even the hope of advancement hereafter; it violates every concept of the future brought to us by the restored gospel.

"10. Practically every theological idea advanced by Joseph Smith can be found in some ancient religion or in some current beliefs contemporary with his time."

There is truth in the conception that the restored gospel does contain among its truths beliefs held by ancient religions and by modern ones. However, the Prophet Joseph never had the opportunity, never had the books, never had the time to search out from these sources all these various truths from the paganism and the Christianity of the past. It was not humanly possible for him to do so at his age and with the meager facilities at his command. But we know how it came to be that these partial truths were found in pagan teachings of pre-Christian eras: the gospel was on the earth from the time of Adam, and from then on down, there appeared here and there in the world, among this people and that, recollections of the doctrines and principles of the gospel as they were taught to Adam. Some of the truths of the gospel have always been on the earth.

ADMONITION TO TEACH THE TRUTH

Brethren, this whole brood of false propaganda is an insidious approach and attempt to destroy the gospel plan and to overturn the Church. We must be on the lookout for it. We must fight against it wherever we find it. Hunt out those who preach it, seek to win them to a knowledge of the truth, seek to bring them really into the Church, because as they now stand and as they teach and believe they have no place among our membership; pretending membership they are worse than wolves in sheep's clothing; they are as it were, Satan trying to appear as an angel of light.

Let us care for our youth. Let us not be parties in any way to the paganism, the atheism that is abroad in the world and that is expressed in these statements that I have read, for they will destroy our civilization if they shall come to be the belief of the people and to direct their lives.

God give us the power and the strength to combat these evils. I humbly pray, in the name of Jesus. Amen.

President George Albert Smith:

Is William L. Warner, former President of the Texas Mission, in the audience? We would like to hear from as many of our former mission presidents as possible, and will ask Brother Warner to come forward now and tell us how he feels, whether he likes it as well at home as he did in the mission field. He has not been home very long, and he performed a fine work in the Texas Mission. President William L. Warner will now speak to us.

ELDER WILLIAM L. WARNER

Former President of Texas-Louisiana Mission

This has completely taken the breath out of me. I rejoice, my brethren, in having the privilege of attending this great conference.

Since the opening session of this conference, and listening to the wonderful report read by President Clark, and by Brother Anderson, and the report attested to by the Chairman or a member of the Auditing Committee, many thoughts have passed through my mind. There is one particular item, however, that I would like to make reference to, and that is, as I remember the figure, it was a little less than twenty-one percent of the membership of the Church who paid fast offerings. When I listened to that great report of the amount of money being expended and the provisions that the Church is sending to the war torn countries of Europe, I marveled at the integrity of the people, the response of the Saints in gathering this vast amount of food and clothing. I thought if we could and would accept the instructions given us at this conference, and could double that, how much more this food and the clothing would help those who are destitute in Europe.

To me that was fast offerings in action. All my life I have been taught to pay fast offerings. Today we see it in action.

I had the privilege of presiding over the Texas-Louisiana Mission for the past four and a half years. It is a great country. It was stated by someone, yesterday, in reporting his mission, that he covers the greater portion of six states. The Texas-Louisiana Mission does likewise. If you don't believe that, I can only say that you have not been in Texas.

The Lord has blessed us wonderfully. We were able during this war period to dedicate nine houses of worship. We have the funds sufficient, waiting for the building ban to be raised, to start building fifteen more chapels. We have a membership of about eight thousand members in that fine mission.

Since coming home I have visited a number of our meeting houses, and I have enjoyed being in this historic building.

I call to mind and am going to tell you of one incident in that mission, because I have thought of it many, many times. A few years ago our missionaries, two of them, wrote me and wanted permission to set apart a young girl seventeen years of age as the Superintendent of a Sunday School. There were six children that she would like to teach. They would go out into the woods in Louisiana. I granted them permission. They still meet out in the open spaces in the woods, the canopy being the high heavens. This good girl, through her efforts, converted her friend, a member of the Catholic Church. Since that time they have both married and both of their husbands have been converted to the Church. The husbands were given the Aaronic Priesthood and before I left they were given the Melchizedek Priesthood. They have a membership in that little place now of some 68 members. They still hold their meetings and their Sunday School out in the open. They don't have the lovely meeting houses that we have here in the Rocky Mountains, but they do have the same spirit that we have here.

I rejoice, my brethren, that I have had this privilege of going into the mission field, and for the confidence that has been placed in me by the General Authorities of the Church. I can think of no finer work for any of us to be engaged in than that of missionary work. I am happy to be back. I stand ready to accept, if another call should be made of me.

May the Lord be with you and may we accept that call that President Smith gave us six months ago, that was referred to by President Young here this night, and encourage our young men to go on missions. From a high peak of 140 missionaries in that mission we went down to an all-time low of 10, but through the goodness and the testimonies of the Saints and the fine work of our service men, the work was carried on.

May the Lord bless us I pray, through Jesus Christ, Amen.

PRESIDENT GEORGE ALBERT SMITH

I am sure, my brethren, this has been a joyous experience to all of us, to be here in the house of the Lord and rejoice in his blessings. I want to emphasize what President Clark has said to the effect that this is the gospel of Jesus Christ, that it is the power of God unto salvation, that Jesus Christ was our Elder Brother and lived upon the earth and died that we might live again, that he brought about the resurrection and has appeared to the children of men since that time. I marvel how some of our people can lose their faith and go off on a sidetrack when the evidences are as great as they are as to the truth of the gospel.

DIVINITY OF THE CHURCH

Among the strongest evidences of the divinity of the work in which we are engaged, and of the mission of the Prophet Joseph Smith are the facts that the Church exists today, more powerful than it ever was, and that the predictions that were made by Joseph Smith as a prophet have been fulfilled and are still in course of fulfilment. There are no people in the world anywhere, who enjoy the blessings that we enjoy, physically and spiritually. The majority of people do not know God; they do not understand the purpose of life. They have been sidetracked by some of the men whose philosophies have taken the place of the truth. That is the reason that the world is in the condition that it is.

THE VALUE OF A TESTIMONY

I am grateful to be here. To look into your faces is a testimony to me of the divinity of this work. Go where you will, you will find no other group assembled, each of whom has faith in God; and if we were to ask all of you how many have a testimony, not a belief because somebody else has said so, but how many of you have an assurance that this is God's work, that Jesus is the Christ, that we are living eternal lives, that Joseph Smith as a prophet of the Living God, you would answer that you have this testimony that buoys you up and strengthens you and gives you satisfaction as you go forward in the world. And just to test my belief in regard to that, all of you who have this testimony, raise your right hands. Thank you. It is evident by this show of hands that most of you who are here tonight, have received a testimony and know that the truth is upon the earth. Of course the adversary will try to blind the human family. He will try to lead them into by-and forbidden paths; that is his business. However, if we will live the teachings of Jesus of Nazareth, if we will observe the advice and counsel of the prophets of God, if we will carry out the program that the Lord has given to the Church with which we are identified, we will lead all the world in knowledge and intelligence and in power, because we may have all that the world has, plus the inspiration of the Almighty.

I know that it will not be very long before my work will be finished, in the natural course of events. I have had many experiences and have traveled in the world and mingled with many wonderful men and women, and I would like to say that I learned when I was a boy that this is the work of the Lord. I learned that there were prophets living upon the earth. I learned that the inspiration of the Almighty would influence those who lived to enjoy it, so we are not dependent upon one or two or a half dozen individuals. There are thousands of members of this Church who know—it is not a question of imagination at all—they know that God lives and that Jesus is the Christ and that we are the children of God. He is the Father of our spirits. We have not come from some lower form of life, but God is the Father of our spirits, and we belong to the royal family, because he is our Father.

ARISTOCRACY OF RIGHTEOUSNESS

We talk about the philosophies of men and hold them up sometimes as a pretty picture, but when they conflict with the teachings of our Heavenly Father as contained in Holy Writ, they are valueless. They will never lead anybody into eternal happiness, nor help him to find a place in the kingdom of our Heavenly Father. We cannot retain that testimony unless we keep the commandments of God. A knowledge of truth will not remain with us unless we live as our Heavenly Father desires and advises us to live.

We sometimes hear people speak of the aristocracies of the world, the royal families of the world. I want to say, the only true aristocracy in the world is the aristocracy of righteousness, and the only families that will persist are those who keep the commandments of our Heavenly Father.

OUR MISSIONARY OBLIGATIONS

So tonight, let me say, brethren, our missionary field is before us. Our Father's sons and daughters need us. We are grateful for the responses being made to the call that has gone out for missionaries. Some are anxious to go, but because they are not physically able or other conditions are unfavorable we cannot accept their offer. There are in this Church thousands of men and women who are capable of teaching the gospel and who can become more capable by doing their duty in the mission field. They will be blessed with means, sufficient to take them to perform the work that the Lord wants us to perform. I would like to say to the men who would retain their means in preference to laying up treasures in heaven, their wealth will decay in their hands, and their opportunity to gain eternal life in the celestial kingdom will pass them by.

PREPARATION FOR THE CELESTIAL KINGDOM

This is the Lord's work. It is his Church. It is his way of preparing us for eternal happiness in the celestial kingdom, and surely not any of those who have seen the result of the gospel of Jesus Christ in the world will question its divinity. Judge the tree by its fruits, and you will find no other tree in the whole world that compares with the gospel of Jesus Christ. There is no other plan in all the world that leads to the celestial kingdom of our Heavenly Father; knowing that, surely we will not be misled by the philosophies and the sophistries of men who pretend to know that which they do not know.

In conclusion, let me say, I am grateful to be here. I want to thank you for your kindness to me, one of the weakest of all our Father's sons. I know my limitations. I don't stand here with the idea that I am more than an ordinary individual, but I thank you for your faith and your prayers for me and for my associates and the brethren who lead this Church. I thank you for the manner in which you stand for that which is righteous and put aside that which is not righteous. I hope that in the near future when another opportunity will be given to the people of this state to manifest their desire to observe the Word of Wisdom and keep the commandments of God, that this group of men here will not be afraid to stand for what our Heavenly Father has advised us to do, regardless of what the habits of the world may be.

DISOBEDIENCE DESTROYS FAITH

I would like to say that the loss of faith in this Church, in many cases, is traceable directly to a violation of the Sabbath day, failure to observe the Word of Wisdom, the advice of our Heavenly Father, failure to attend to our prayers and to thank him for the blessings we enjoy, refusal to give of our substance to those who are less fortunate than ourselves. All these things that are intended to uplift us, if we observe the teachings of our Heavenly Father, become a pitfall for us if we fail to keep his commandments.

God does live; Jesus is the Christ; Joseph Smith is a prophet of the Living God; and the authority of the priesthood is with this Church today and will continue to administer to those who are willing to be ministered unto under the inspiration of our Heavenly Father. I bear you this testimony tonight, knowing the seriousness, if it were not true, of saying it, and I bear it in love and kindness and gratitude to God, and say that I know these things are true, and I bear you that witness in the name of Jesus Christ our Lord. Amen.

President George Albert Smith:

Now brethren, the Men's Chorus will sing for us: "Sound An Alarm." The closing prayer will be offered by President Ephraim Stanley Miller of the Raft River Stake, after which the Conference will be adjourned until 10 o'clock tomorrow morning.

Because of the change of time in the Tabernacle Choir and Organ broadcast, which will be from 9:30 to 10:00 o'clock tomorrow morning, those desiring to attend the broadcast must be here in their seats by 9:15 a.m. As the Choir will be rehearsing during the time the audience is gathering, it is necessary to suggest that the audience come in and take their seats quietly and refrain from making any noise of any kind, talking, whispering, or scraping of feet, during the broadcast. The regular session of the Conference will begin at 10:00 a.m.

Selection by the Men's Chorus, "Sound An Alarm."

Elder Ephaim Stanley Miller, President of the Raft River Stake, offered the closing prayer.

THIRD DAY CHURCH OF THE AIR

The Church of the Air program was presented Sunday morning, April 7, at 8:00, over Radio Station KSL and the Columbia Broadcasting System.

Announcer (Richard L. Evans): The Church of the Air was established by the Columbia network so that representatives of the major faiths might bring their messages to a nationwide congregation of worshippers. This series, which is broadcast on time reserved by Columbia and its affiliated stations, has presented two devotional programs each Sunday since its inauguration. Today, the network service of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints comes to you through the facilities of Station KSL in Salt Lake City. The speaker will be Dr. John A. Widtsoe of the Council of the Twelve Apostles of the Church. Dr. Widtsoe will speak today on: FAITH UNDER-THE ATOMIC BOMB. The Salt Lake Tabernacle Choir, under the direction of J. Spencer Cornwall, provides the music for the service. Alexander Schreiner is at the organ.

Selection by the Tabernacle Choir, "Prayer of Thanksgiving."

The Choir then sang the hymn, "I know that My Redeemer Lives."

ELDER JOHN A. WIDTSOE

of the Council of the Twelve Apostles

A new age began when the atomic bomb was dropped upon the deserts of New Mexico. Thenceforth, man could set free the forces which, under the creative power of God, become our material world. For the first time the solid earth could be made "to fail beneath our feet." An apparently impossible dream had come true.

A POWER THAT BEWILDERS

This occurred in the midst of the madness of murder we call World War II. The hearts of men were already bleeding from the wounds of long years of warfare. Now, the new power seemed as an added unspeakable horror that promised a new type of destruction so awful that the hearts of men failed them. The rising ashes of Hiroshima and Nagasaki appeared as burnt offerings to the incarnation of the world's evil.

Before the possible consequences of this power, we stand bewildered. We imagine our cities, homes, and loved ones, laid low by an irresistible, merciless force. A helpless, hopeless gloom clouds the future. A fear never known before stalks the footsteps of thinking people. True, there is no danger of the whole world exploding into nothingness. So far only uranium 235 can be dissolved into imponderable forces, but the energy that may be released from the limited quantities available, is sufficient, if so directed, to destroy all mankind. In future wars, it is reasoned, since the secret of the atomic bomb will soon be common knowledge, the importance of armies and armaments will fade away. In all disputes, he will be victorious who reaches the enemy first. In view of the history of mankind, filled with contention and bloodshed, can such power be safely entrusted to the world of men? That is the lingering question that disturbs us today.

FEARS ROOT IN DISTRUST OF MAN

Such a question and such fears root in a distrust of man. We are really afraid of ourselves. We have lost faith in humanity and look with suspicion upon every human act. We forget that man was made in the image of God—not merely in bodily form, but in his very nature. The sparks of divinity lie within every human soul, waiting to be kindled into flame. Remember the words of the Lord God, "... Behold, the man is become as one of us, to know good and evil." (Gen. 3:22.) And, in the depths of all of us, we prefer to live under the will and loving kindness of God. Could we recover faith in ourselves, the terror of the atomic bomb would vanish.

We have also been inclined to forget God or to give him lip service. Too many of us accept him as a mysterious force or figure, distant from us, who demands appeasement one day a week, in competition with our golf and baseball. We do not believe him to be concerned with our daily needs or the constant issues of our lives. If that be faith, it is spindly, bloodless, useless.

Yet there is nothing more certain than that God in heaven watches over his children on earth; and is concerned with our every act. He permits events to happen, but there are limits beyond which mankind in all its folly may not go. God remains the governor of the universe. His work on earth is not yet finished, and he will not allow his children, here, to perish, despite any discovery or invention of man. Full faith in God banishes all fear.

THE NEED FOR RE-ESTABLISHING FAITH

Our problem then, mine and yours, is how, under the atomic bomb to re-establish faith in God and man; and how to re-educate, regenerate, if you prefer, the will of man, so that the fierce power of the shattered atomic nucleus may be used only in the constructive service of mankind.

We should really be glad that the atomic bomb has come; that we know how to loosen the energies of the universe, to compete with the lightnings of the sky. It should be as a challenge to us. If a new danger has come, then we must gird ourselves with the corresponding strength to meet it, and to compel it to serve us. Really, the coming of the atomic bomb merely calls with increased emphasis for a revision of human ideals, action, and faith.

Re-education or regeneration for faith, may not be easy. To turn a race of men from evil to good, from error to truth, from hate to love, means a battle with many an opposing force. The battle will often be against false but well-established, moss-covered traditions, hiding or obscuring eternal truth; and as often against unsound appetites of body or mind, catering to momentary pleasures, or temporary satisfactions, but leading away from spiritual realities.

THE IMPORTANCE OF THE HOME

The work of world regeneration for faith must begin in the home. Every man lives out in spirit and in deed the teachings of his childhood. In the home, faith is born and made alive, or unbelief is sown. As the homes of a nation are, so the generations of men therein will be. For good or for evil, there is no efficient substitute for the home. Life and the safety of life in the age of atomic energy will depend upon the full acceptance by the home of its responsibilities and obligations. That homes may do so is the clamoring demand of a world starving for peace and the enjoyment of the earth's bounties.

Sadly, it must be admitted that in these restless times, the home has fallen upon evil days. Its purpose is too often forgotten. Parents look more and more to other instrumentalities to perform their natural duties. The family circle has shrunk, by limitation of children and the multiplicity of assumed activities, until it seems incapable of its natural functions. Especially under the threat of the atomic bomb, the careless assumption of home obligations becomes perilous.

Here we must face about. In the home must be taught the most important things of life; faith in God, faith in self, and our proper conduct toward others. There must be a daily outreaching to God. That will engender a trust in him and a desire to love him. By daily family prayer, every member upon his knees, there will be established the habit of communing with the powers of the unseen world, to which atomic energy and all other powers are subservient. To be in touch with the author of all things will do more than all the governments of earth to change the hearts of men from evil to good, and to protect weak humanity. He who thinks of God, and appeals to him daily, has no room for thoughts of destruction.

But one cannot love God without loving the children of God, and trusting them. Let a home make it a practice to speak well of others, and to seek out their virtues. Soon, such a family will discover the virtues, and speak well, of other nations. Inevitably, were this done everywhere, the sun of goodwill would warm the hearts of men; and peace would cover the earth. By such people, and perhaps only by such methods, will the atomic bomb be tamed to useful ends.

SCHOOLS TO TRAIN YOUTH FOR LARGER LIFE

The school, likewise, a close ally of the home, must turn its face toward the greater light. It must courageously train our children for the larger life. During the long years of childhood and youth, our children have been taught every kind of knowledge, from atoms to star clusters, from amoebas to monkeys. But their proper conduct among their fellows and before God is mentioned, if at all, casually, in occasional assemblies. Geography and arithmetic have been raised to the warmth and dignity of required disciplines of the mind, but ethics, not to speak of religion, which determine human behavior, and which always act as restraints upon evil, stand, unwelcomed, shivering before the closed schoolroom door. Such a dangerous taboo was not intended when it was agreed that, in our land, sectarian religion should not be taught in public schools. By the present method, our schools are sending out generations of men of little faith, who are unmindful of their eternal obligations.

The home and the school together could soon eliminate fear from the hearts of men, and in the face of any new power man could discover, establish the day of peace on earth.

THE CHURCH SHARES RESPONSIBILITY

The church also carries blame. It could have given us more courage to meet times like these by teaching the true dignity of the human being as a very son of God, with a divine destiny. Pride of ancestry has saved many a soul from wandering away into forbidden paths.

What is our true relationship to God? We are told, somewhat glibly, that we are the children of God, of his image and of his nature. Divinity lies within every one of us. Then, says modern man, looking into his own soul for eternal answers, we must be more than figures moulded from clay; we must be of God's very substance. Our history must go back into times not understandable to the human mind, into the region of pre-existence. Our bodies may be of the dust, but the essence of us is of God. That conception explains man's divine nature. That changes the whole outlook upon life. As very sons and daughters of God, we feel new nearness to God, a new responsibility for our actions. Our works must be of godlike character, else we are untrue to our divine origin. Then, looking upon the atomic bomb, with clear eyes, we know what to do—it must be used as God would use it, for we are his very children.

We may also have failed to give to striving man, wrestling with the deep questions of the soul, a clear comprehension of his destiny. We shall live after death. What then? In that other world we shall possess in a greater degree all the powers we have enjoyed on earth. They will be used actively in an endless, progressive existence. If used properly on earth and in the eternities of the hereafter, we shall by small steps, grace for grace, approach more and more the likeness of God, our very Father. To rise towards such heights, from the dim beginning, has ever been our destiny. Every righteous act has promoted that progress; every unrighteous act has retarded it. The knowledge of our divine destiny, and the conditions of it, would tend to regulate our course on earth. We are to be leaders against all evil, the final conquerors of earth. We dare not hinder our progressive, ascending destiny. Therefore, sober answers are found to the questions of life. Will this act help me in my eternal progressive existence? Then I will perform it. Does it hinder me? Then I will have none of it. I cannot use atomic energy to destroy or murder men, for that would set me back in my eternal advancement towards the likeness of God.

ACCEPTANCE OF THE WORD OF GOD VITAL

Perhaps it is all said in one sentence. The acceptance of the word of God as laid down in the Christian gospel will turn fear into joy, will make the atomic bomb our humble servant.

To that end, home, school, and church must cooperate.

But, it is protested, it cannot be done; it is an idle dream. That is the answer of those who will not accept and prove the truth. The earnest desire for good in every human heart may be covered with uncertainty and the indifference that follows uncertainty; but it is there. No matter how far we have strayed, in every one of us is a feeling of revulsion against evil. The very children of God cannot feel otherwise. If but a few will live the law, they will leaven the lump.

We have the right to believe that man, who learned to release atomic energy, and who made the atomic bomb, will use it for our benefit. It is our task to teach faith in God, ourselves, and our fellow men, in home and school and church. Then we shall remake the world for peace. Remember the subtle power of words. Ignore war in our speech. Raise our voices everywhere in faith for peace. Then the hearts that now fear the future will be at ease. In time the atomic bomb will become our servant to beautify the life of man on earth.

May it be so, I pray in the name of Jesus, the Christ. Amen.

The Tabernacle Choir sang "Hallelujah Amen"—Handel.

THIRD DAY

MORNING MEETING

TABERNACLE CHOIR AND ORGAN BROADCAST

From 9:30 to 10:00 a.m. the regular Sunday morning nationwide broadcast of choral and organ music and brief spoken comment was presented by the Tabernacle choir and Organ, and broadcast through the courtesy and facilities of the Columbia Broadcasting System's coast-to-coast network, throughout the United States. The broadcast, written and announced by Elder Richard L. Evans, originated with radio station KSL, Salt Lake City.

The great Tabernacle was crowded to capacity long before the hour had arrived when the broadcast was to commence, people from all over the Church having assembled to listen to the broadcast and the sessions of the General Conference.

The following program was presented:

(Organ began playing "As the Dew," and then on signal the organ and choir broke into "Gently Raise," singing words to end of second line of that hymn, from which point choir hummed the announcer's background to end of verse.)

Announcer: Again, with music and the spoken word, we welcome you to the Crossroads of the West, as another week of life begins for all men.

At this hour the Columbia Broadcasting System and its affiliated stations bring you the 873rd presentation of this traditional broadcast from Temple Square in Salt Lake City.

J. Spencer Cornwall conducts the singing of the Tabernacle choir. Alexander Schreiner is at the organ. The spoken word by Richard Evans.

(Choir sang "America"—arranged by J. Spencer Cornwall)

Announcer: In the Welsh tradition of stirring sacred music we hear the hymn "Cwm Rhondda" by John Hughes, with the words of Robert Robinson: "When the earth begins to tremble, bid our fearful thoughts be still; when Thy judgments spread destruction, keep us safe on Zion's hill." "Guide Us, O Thou Great Jehovah."

(Choir sang "Guide Us, O Thou Great Jehovah."—Hughes)

Announcer: With Alexander Schreiner at the Tabernacle Organ we recall now from Temple Square the devotional phrases of the "Adagio—from the C Major Fantasie" by Ceasar Franck.

(Organ presented "Adagio from C Major Fantasie"—Franck)

Announcer: One of many sacred songs of Hosanna comes from the pen of E. W. Leinbach, with antiphonal voices giving echoing answer to other voices: "Hosanna, blessed is He who cometh in the Name of the Lord."

(Choir sang "Hosanna"—Leinbach)

Announcer: The words of Eliza R. Snow are voiced with the music of James McGranahan in a hymn which is known and sung on Temple Square as "O My Father." It is a searching hymn, flashing back to man's premortal past—and looking beyond to those scenes which we shall one day behold. It is a hymn of man's eternal journey.

(Men sang "O My Father"—McGranahan)

Announcer: It is not uncommon to hear an impatient parent deliver an ultimatum to a wilful child, perhaps with the familiar threat: "That's the last time I'm going to tell you." What is to follow may be specified or left to the imagination, but the note of finality is there. Weariness and impatience often drive us to do or to say things we don't fully mean, and it is highly probable that it isn't the last time the parent in question is going to tell the child in question. Children have a way of needing to be told often, and parents have a way of telling them often, far beyond that so-called "last time." From this common experience, it would not be difficult to imagine a justifiable impatience on the part of our Father in Heaven who has so long labored with His children and who has so often caused to be repeated the great truths of life, by His own voice and by the prophets He has raised up, and by the written record. And yet generation after generation His children are as heedless as some of ours sometimes seem to be. But the office of parenthood is not so much one of issuing ultimatums as it is one of long-suffering, striving and teaching, to the end not that children will be warned and disowned, but rather should be. It is relatively easy to say "Do this, or else"—but suppose they choose "or else?" Warning a man and letting him take the consequences is a grim though sometimes necessary way of doing one's duty, but persuading him to conduct himself so that he won't have to take such consequences is the real measure of success and satisfaction—with parents as to their children, and with men as to all other men. Conversion is a longer labor than mere warning—but the sweetness of its fruit is worth it. Indeed, the avowed purpose of God is to "bring to pass the immortality and eternal life of man." (Pearl of Great Price, Moses 1:39) And surely man himself can have no greater purpose with respect to himself, his children, and to all mankind. To warn is a solemn obligation, but to save is a God-like achievement.

(Organ selection: "High On the Mountain Top"—Beesley)

Announcer: We have heard from the Tabernacle organ a fantasia on the hymn by Ebenezer Beesley: "High On the Mountain Top a Banner is Unfurled."

And now we close this day from Temple Square with a chorus from the "Creation" by Haydn, which envisions the Lord God looking upon the world, His handiwork, and the angels of heaven singing: "Achieved is the glorious work; our song let be the praise of God; Glory to His name forever."

(Choir sang "Achieved Is the Glorious Work"—Haydn)

Announcer: Until we beckon your thoughts again unto the hills, may peace be with you, this day and always.

This concludes another presentation in the 17th year of this traditional broadcast from the Mormon Tabernacle on Temple Square, brought to you by the Columbia Network and its affiliated stations, originating with Radio Station KSL in Salt Lake City, at the Crossroads of the West.

J. Spencer Cornwall conducted the singing of the Tabernacle choir. Alexander Schreiner was at the organ. The spoken word by Richard Evans.

The Sunday morning session of the Conference convened at 10 o'clock. President George Albert Smith was present and presided; President J. Reuben Clark, Jr., First Counselor in the First Presidency, conducted the services at the request of President Smith.

The Tabernacle was crowded to capacity, the Assembly Hall immediately south of the Tabernacle was filled with people, and scores of others assembled on the Tabernacle grounds, loud-speaking equipment having been installed in the Assembly Hall and on the grounds, so that those who were unable to find accomodation in the Tabernacle could listen to the services as they were broadcast from the Tabernacle.

President J. Reuben Clark, Jr.

President Smith has asked me to conduct these services. This is the sixth session of the 116th Annual Conference of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints. We are convened in the Tabernacle on Temple Square in Salt Lake City.

There are present on the stand this morning, all the General Authorities of the Church as sustained yesterday, except Elder Ezra Taft Benson and Elder Matthew Cowley, whose absence has been already explained.

The proceedings of this session will be broadcast over KSL of Salt Lake City, KSUB of Cedar City, and KID of Idaho Falls.

We will begin the morning session by the Tabernacle Choir and congregation singing: "Praise to the Man Who Communed with Jehovah," Hymn Book p. L.D.S. Hymns No. 167. Elder J. Spencer Cornwall is the conductor, and Elder Alexander Schreiner is the organist.

The opening prayer will be offered by President Claude B. Peterson of the San Francisco Stake.

The congregation and the Tabernacle Choir sang the hymn. "Praise to the Man Who Communed with Jehovah," Hymn Book page 282, L. D. S. Hymns No. 167.

The opening prayer was offered by Elder Claude B. Petersen, President of the San Francisco Stake.

President J. Reuben Clark, Jr.

By special request the Tabernacle Choir will now sing, "The King of Glory," Elder Spencer Cornwall conducting. Sister Jessie Smith will sing the solo part. After the Choir has sung, President David O. McKay of the First Presidency will address us.

The Choir sang an anthem, "The King of Glory," Jessie Evans Smith, soloist.

PRESIDENT DAVID O. McKAYSecond Counselor in the First Presidency*

My brethren and sisters, as there is now scarcely remaining a year in which to complete preparations for the Utah Centennial Celebration, it has been suggested that I take this occasion to make a few comments on that important event. In the month of August 1842, the Prophet Joseph Smith recorded the following:

I prophesied that the saints would continue to suffer much affliction and would be driven to the Rocky Mountains; many would apostatize; others would be put to death by our persecutors, or lose their lives in consequence of exposure or disease; and some of you will live to go on and assist in making settlements and build cities and see the saints become a mighty people in the midst of the Rocky Mountains.

THE MORMON EXODUS

One hundred years ago February 4, in partial fulfilment of that prophecy, the Mormon exodus commenced from Nauvoo.

One hundred years ago today, the vanguard of the Camp of Israel camped at Garden Grove, one hundred and fifty miles from Nauvoo. Referring to conditions which brought about that exodus, President Brigham Young said:

Our homes, gardens, orchards, farms, streets, bridges, mills, public halls, magnificent temple, and other public improvements, we leave as a monument of our patriotism, industry, economy, uprightness of purpose and integrity of heart; and as a living testimony of the falsehood and the wickedness of those who charge us with disloyalty to the Constitution of our country, idleness, and dishonesty.

One hundred years ago July 20, the Mormon Battalion at Fort Leavenworth began their preparations for their historic two-thousand-mile march.

On July 24, 1947, it will have been one hundred years since President Brigham Young and his one hundred and forty-two fellow travelers entered Great Salt Lake valley.

Of the exodus from Nauvoo to Winter Quarters, the historian Bancroft says: "There is no parallel in the world's history to this migration from Nauvoo."

Of the two-thousand-mile trek of the Mormon Battalion, Lt.

Col. P. St. George Cooke says:

History may be searched in vain for an equal march of infantry. Half of it has been through a wilderness, where nothing but savages and wild beasts are found, or deserts where, for want of water, there is no living creature. There, with almost hopeless labor, we have dug deep wells, which the future traveler will enjoy. Without a guide who had traversed them, we have ventured into trackless tablelands where water was not found for several marches. With crowbar and pick and axe in hand, we have worked our way over mountains which seemed to defy aught save the wild goat, and hewed a pass through a chasm of living rock more narrow than our wagons. To bring these first wagons to the Pacific, we have preserved the strength of our mules by herding them over large tracts, which you have laboriously guarded without loss. The garrison of four presidios of Sonora concentrated within the walls of Tucson gave us no pause. We drove them out, with their artillery, but our intercourse with the citizens was unmarked by a single act of injustice. Thus marching, half-naked and half-fed, and living upon wild animals, we have discovered and made a road of great value to our country.

WORTHINESS OF THE PIONEERS

I mention these few events in early Church history as illustrative of the spirit and achievements of the Utah pioneers.

No state in the union can look with greater pride upon the achievements of its pioneers than can the state of Utah. It is commendable and highly fitting, therefore, that the governor and state legislature have set apart the year 1947 as the Centennial year, in which to pay tribute to these great empire builders. In so doing we confer honor upon ourselves. In the light of what Thomas Carlyle says, "In this world there is one godlike virtue, the essence of all that ever was or ever will be of godlike in this world—the veneration done to human worth by the hearts of men."

NATURE OF PREPARATIONS ALREADY UNDER WAY

Preparations are already under way for the presentation of historical pageants, musical, dramatic, educational programs, and athletic and sports attractions.

In a way this will be an unusual celebration. Under normal conditions a centennial exposition would be promoted with the view of inviting people of the world to behold the wonders of the state, to see the achievements of the people, and to participate in the various festivities and entertainments of the celebration.

Now, however, due to the housing shortage, and the inability of the commission to assure comfortable accommodations for the hundreds of thousands of tourists who could be induced to visit us next year, it has been thought advisable to approach our celebration from a different angle.

This will be a celebration by and for the people of Utah, and Utahns in nearby western states. Besides the best that home talent can produce, it is proposed to fetch to the state outstanding educational and entertainment features which normally could not be presented in communities of our state—symphony orchestras, stars of stage and screen, Metropolitan opera singers, sport events of the type that our community normally could not finance. It is hoped that we might have a national eisteddfod—these and other cultural entertainments will be offered not only in Salt Lake City, but in other cities where large crowds may be accommodated.

All towns and counties in the state are urged to unite in promoting this commemorative celebration.

ORIGINAL PLANS

When the legislature in 1939 passed, and the governor signed the bill, setting a part of the year 1947 for the Centennial, the commission thereby appointed conceived elaborate plans. An interstate committee was appointed to promote the cooperation of neighboring states. An intrastate committee was assigned the duty to organize groups and committees in counties, cities and towns, societies and organizations throughout our state. As a promotional event, for example, but part of the featured observance centering around July 24, it was contemplated that a wagon train of pioneers would start at the site of Winter Quarters on a suitable date and follow the original pioneers' trail into Salt Lake Valley, entering at the spot "This Is the Place" on July 24, 1947. It was planned also that there would be a reproduction of the march of the Mormon Battalion covering the southwestern states, including southern California and ending at Sutter's Mill, where, as you know, members of the battalion were present when gold was discovered. The commission conceived an eight-year program of preparation for the presentation of the natural resources, the dramatic history, and the state's incomparable facilities for delightful vacationing.

Then came the war!

All activities pointing toward the preparation of a celebration were suspended, and thoughts and activities centered upon the winning of that great conflict.

RESUMPTION OF ACTIVITIES

On November 10, 1944, Governor Herbert B. Maw recommended the resumption of activity, writing to the commission as follows: "Inasmuch as it appears that the war will probably be ended before 1947, rather definite plans should be worked out for the Centennial celebration to be presented to the next legislature, which must be relied on to provide whatever funds are needed. The Centennial Commission will, of course, have full charge of the celebration and the making plans for it."

Accordingly, a committee consisting of Honorable John M. Wallace, chairman of the finance committee, Mr. Ward C. Holbrook, Mr. John F. Fitzpatrick, Mr. Frederick P. Champ, Judge James A.

Howell and Mr. Gus P. Backman was appointed to prepare a new budget that work might be resumed as soon as hostilities ceased.

With the approval of the state departments directly concerned, Mr. Gus P. Backman was chosen and appointed director of the Centennial celebration. Without any remunerative compensation thus far, he has served with enthusiasm and marked ability.

ORIGINAL PLANS CIRCUMSCRIBED

Of necessity the original scope of the celebration has had to be circumscribed. The building of roads to scenic attractions, improvement of parks, etc., must be left for other state departments whose permanence will continue after 1947. You who were privileged to stand last Friday afternoon on the site chosen for the "This Is the Place" monument, heard Governor Maw refer to one of these forward-looking, permanent improvements—the new highway parked from Henefer to Salt Lake valley.

Instead of building and carrying out an independent exposition to continue throughout the tourist season, it now seems advisable to cooperate with the State Fair Board for an outstanding exposition during such period as may be determined upon.

Though it may not be feasible for every town to have an assignment for its presentation of special features, groups of towns may unite, and, as districts, contribute attractions that will draw the interest of all the state on the dates specially assigned to each district. For example (and these are but illustrative), it will be the duty of the commission to allocate dates to communities and groups, such as a Black and White celebration in Cache County, including the Fourth of July, at the request of the active members in that town a Peach Day celebration in Box Elder County; a Strawberry Day at Pleasant Grove; Veterans of the Black Hawk War celebration at Nephi; State High School athletic tournament; program at Zion's Canyon; Dinosaur Monument at Uintah, etc., etc.

The governor of the state and his associates in the executive department, in the state finance, state educational institutions and boards, civic clubs, county commissioners, mayors of cities; in fact, groups and individual citizens throughout the state seem to be animated with but one desire: to make the 1947 celebration an appropriate tribute to the noble lives and outstanding achievements of the Utah pioneers.

PERIOD OF CENTENNIAL

Officially, the celebration will begin May 15 and continue until October 15, 1947. Tribute will be paid to the first white men who entered this state—Fathers Escalante and Dominguez, also to explorers and trappers who followed the Catholic Fathers. However, there will be slated special events preceding the opening date. For example, national skiing events in the Salt Lake and Ogden areas will of necessity be held possibly in February. Also, prior to May 15, it is anticipated that dramatic companies and musical organizations will be presented in practically all communities of the state. Already projects are under way to produce these features in the late winter of 1946 and early spring of 1947. There is one important feature of the celebration which was not discontinued during the war; that is, the duty of making the state more attractive. This may concern every man, woman and child in the state. On June 5, 1942, when, with the approval of Governor Maw, the work of the commission was suspended, Mr. John M. Wallace suggested that, though the activities of the commission may be in suspension, the efforts of all beautification groups should be continued and carefully guarded. He expressed the opinion that much of the work of beautification then being promoted by the Church, the Agricultural College, civic organizations, and women's clubs should be fostered to awaken a sense of the importance of the beautification of the state, and could go forward without any interference with the war efforts.

Accordingly, this activity has continued with most commendable results.

Now, under the direction of a large and able committee, of which Donald P. Lloyd is chairman, the beautification program has assumed statewide proportions, and every man, woman, and child should sense the responsibility to do something to make the state clean and attractive for the Centennial and for the years following.

It is surprising how some of us have accustomed ourselves to look upon our old barns and sheds for what they used to be without realizing that they are now dilapidated structures marring the landscape, and in some instances are a reflection on the community.

Let us all join in the campaign to stimulate home owners to paint houses, fences, barns and other buildings and to maintain a general atmosphere of tidiness and neatness about the homes, barns, and corrals.

Perhaps a few practical suggestions might not be out of place. Improve the appearance of churches, seminaries and other church buildings by suitable landscape plantings, by painting and by needed repairs. Let all public edifices reflect the pride of the people to which they belong by making them respectable in appearance. Make Utah a rose garden by planting this spring, where possible, extra bushes in every yard. Remove all dead trees from the landscape that stand as disgraceful monuments to our negligence. Clear vacant lots, particularly here in Salt Lake City, of weeds which are unsightly and which become later in the summer a fire hazard. Utilize these vacant lots this year for the growing of needed foodstuffs.

These are physical features. What about our uniting for a moral cleanup?

There is evidence of the presence of "bunco" men in the city who are preying upon unsuspecting travelers. Three of these, as you know, are already in prison. Another has jumped a $3500 bond.

However, others have taken their places, lying in wait to fleece the gullible stranger. Is it possible that Salt Lake is looked upon by these crooks as a "fixed" city? Some of you know what that "fixed" signifies.

What about gambling, the slot machine racket, and race horse betting?

What about beer and whiskey joints, and the flaunting of immorality on the public streets? I am sure that the mayor and other municipal officers of Salt Lake City and of other cities will appreciate our uniting with them in efforts to reduce lawlessness and immorality to a minimum.

It will be a credit to the present citizenry, and contribute to the future happiness of the state, if our cities can be so morally clean that visitors who come to share in the historic, artistic, and devotional exercises of the celebration, may pay some such tribute to Salt Lake City and other important towns as was paid by Samuel A. Prior, a Methodist minister, who visited Nauvoo in the spring of 1843. He writes:

At length the city burst upon my sight. Instead of seeing a few miserable log cabins and mud hovels, which I had expected to find, I was surprised to see one of the most romantic places that I had visited in the West. The buildings, though many of them were small and of wood, yet bore the marks of neatness which I have not seen equaled in the country. The fair-spread plain at the bottom of the hill was dotted over with habitations of men with such majestic profusion that I was almost willing to believe myself mistaken and, instead of being in Nauvoo of Illinois, among Mormons, that I was in Italy at the city of Leghorn, which the location of Nauvoo resembles very much. I gazed for some time with fond admiration upon the plain below. Here and there arose a tall, majestic brick house, speaking loudly of the genius and untiring labor of the inhabitants, who have snatched the place from the clutches of obscurity and wrested it from the bonds of disease; and in two or three short years, rescued it from dreary waste to transform it into one of the first cities in the West. The hill upon which I stood was covered over with the dwellings of men, and amid them was seen to rise the hewn stone and already accomplished work of the temple, which was now raised fifteen or twenty feet above the ground. . . . I passed on into the more active parts of the city, looking into every street and lane to observe all that was passing. I found all the people engaged in some useful and healthy employment. The place was alive with business, much more so than any place I have visited since the hard times commenced. I sought in vain for anything that bore the marks of immorality, but was both astonished and highly pleased at my ill success. I could see no loungers about the streets nor any drunkards about the taverns. I did not meet with those distorted features of ruffians, or with the ill-bred and impudent. I heard not an oath in the place; I saw not a gloomy countenance; all were cheerful, polite, and industrious. (Comprehensive History of the Church, II p. 190.)

CONCLUSION

That's the town from which our Mormon pioneers crossed the Mississippi in February and faced the desert west.

For the Centennial year, and for future years ahead, let us think of Utah and our western states adjoining as Thomas Curtis Clark said of America:

In thoughts as wise as is her prairie sea;
In deeds as splendid as her mountain piles,
As noble as her mighty river tides,
Let her be true, a land where right abides;
Let her be clean, as sweet as summer isles;
And let her sound the note of liberty
For all the earth, till every man and child be free.

God guide us in accomplishing these hopes and aspirations, I pray in the name of Jesus Christ. Amen.

President J. Reuben Clark, Jr.

We have just listened to President David O. McKay of the First Presidency, who is also Chairman of the Utah Commission for the 1947 Centennial Celebration. He has given us a very comprehensive view of the plans for this celebration, and he has exhorted us in matters both as to our physical and our spiritual condition as we face the 100th year of our residence in this area.

President Milton R. Hunter of the First Council of Seventy will now address us. He will be followed by Elder Charles A. Callis of the Council of the Twelve.

ELDER MILTON R. HUNTER

Of the First Council of the Seventy

My dear brethren and sisters, it is indeed an inspiration to look into the faces of this vast audience of Latter-day Saints who have assembled here to worship God. I do humbly pray that the Spirit of our Heavenly Father will be with me in what I say this morning. I ask also for an interest in your faith and prayers.

Expressions of Gratitude

I wish to express, on this occasion, my gratitude to our Heavenly Father for the privilege I have of being a member of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints. I know that all the blessings I have received and do receive, and all that is good that comes to you and me, comes from our Heavenly Father. I do appreciate these things. I am especially grateful for the philosophy of life given to us by the gospel with its assurance of immortality, of the perpetuation of our family ties, and all the things which are near and dear to us as Latter-day Saints which we have received through the inspiration and revelation from God, through Joseph Smith and other prophets. I am grateful for the privilege I have of serving in this Church and do pray to God in humility that I will have strength to do my share in this great and mighty cause with which you and I have affiliated ourselves.

Sunday, April 7

Third Day

Last night in our priesthood meeting, President S. Dilworth Young gave an excellent talk on missionary work, and President George Albert Smith confirmed the fine things that were said. Since it is the duty of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints to preach the gospel to all the world, I desire this morning to say a few words on the great and important theme of missionary work.

Importance of Missionary Work

God has informed us through his holy prophets that one of the most important assignments given to members of the Church of Jesus Christ is that of preaching the gospel. In fact, Joseph Smith declared that—

... the greatest and most important duty is to preach the gospel. (Teachings of the Prophet Joseph Smith, p. 113.)

Throughout history the most outstanding men who have lived, such as Adam, Enoch, Nephi, Alma, Paul and—greatest of all—Jesus Christ were missionaries. It was in that work that each of them contributed so greatly in altering the history of the world. We are told that the work and the glory of God the Eternal Father and his Only Begotten Son is—

... to bring to pass the immortality and eternal life of man. (Pearl of Great Price, Moses 1:39.)

Certainly that is missionary work. It is not surprising, therefore, to have the prophets inform us that to preach the gospel is our most important duty.

The final injunction that the Son of God gave to his apostles before his ascension was:

... Go ye into all the world, and preach the gospel to every creature. He that believeth and is baptized shall be saved; but he that believeth not shall be damned. (Mark 16:15-16.)

Yet the Savior fully understood that that would not be the last time before his second coming that it would become necessary for his missionaries to receive a divine commission from on high and be sent forth to teach the plan of salvation to the world. He definitely pointed out to his apostles that after they had preached the gospel a great apostacy from the divine plan would take place which would necessitate a restoration of the Holy Priesthood and of the gospel of Jesus Christ. (Read the twenty-fourth chapter of Matthew for an understanding of Jesus' description of the events which should take place before his second coming.) In the course of these instructions, the Son of Man pointed out to his apostles that as one of the final events preceding his advent—

... this gospel of the kingdom shall be preached in all the world for a witness unto all nations; and then shall the end come. (Matt. 24:14.)

Apostacy from the Truth

Students of history know that during the Middle Ages Christianity was adulterated with many false pagan beliefs and practices, fulfilling the words of Isaiah wherein he had said:

The earth also is defiled under the inhabitants thereof; because they have transgressed the laws, changed the ordinance, broken the everlasting covenant. (Isaiah 24:5.)

It became necessary, therefore, for God to withdraw the Holy Priesthood from the Christian Church.

The Protestant Reformation, which resulted in the establishment of numerous Christian denominations—approximately two hundred and fifty of them existing in America today—bears unimpeachable evidence to the fact that a great apostacy did occur as the Master and the prophets of old had predicted it would. Martin Luther, John Calvin, the Wesley brothers, and the other protestors against the erroneous doctrines which had corrupted Catholicism did not claim divine restoration of the Holy Priesthood nor of the principles and ordinances of the gospel.

The Restoration of the Gospel

John the Revelator, however, had looked down through the stream of time and had beheld that a divine restoration from the heavens would take place. He declared what he had seen in vision as follows:

And I saw another angel fly in the midst of heaven, having the everlasting gospel to preach unto them that dwell on the earth, and to every nation, and kindred, and tongue, and people, Saying with a loud voice, Fear God, and give glory to him; for the hour of his judgment is come: and worship him that made heaven, and earth, and the sea, and the fountains of waters. (Rev. 14:6-7.)

This prediction was fulfilled on September 21 and 22, 1823, when the Angel Moroni appeared to the Prophet Joseph Smith and told him of a sacred record buried in a hill not far from the boy's home. This record, the angel said, contained the everlasting gospel as understood and practiced by the ancient inhabitants of America, the Nephites. In due time Joseph received from the angel this holy scripture, and acting under the power and inspiration of God, he translated and published its contents in a volume known as the Book of Mormon. No event in history fulfills John's prophecy as did the coming forth of that sacred book.

Yet, in addition to this heavenly manifestation, other angels came from the presence of God to restore to earth the particular gospel keys and blessings which they had held in their dispensations. For example, John the Baptist, and Peter, James, and John, bestowed upon the heads of Joseph Smith and Oliver Cowdery the Holy Priesthood without which neither missionary work nor the ordinances of the gospel could be officially performed. And finally on April 3, 1836, Moses appeared to Joseph and Oliver in the Kirtland Temple and gave to them—

... the keys of the gathering of Israel from the four parts of the earth, and the leading of the ten tribes from the land of the north. (D. & C. 110:11.)

Missionaries Divinely Appointed

Thus every missionary that is called by the First Presidency of the Church of Jesus Christ and set apart by one duly authorized goes into the mission field to speak and act in the name of the God of Israel, and the actions performed are as valid as if Jesus Christ did the missionary work personally. Furthermore, these missionaries are the only servants of God in the entire world who have been divinely appointed, called, chosen, and set apart by the powers of heaven to preach the gospel to the world.

In due course of time after the Church was organized, the Lord placed upon the Twelve Apostles the responsibility of opening the doors of the gospel to all the nations of the earth, and the seventy were commissioned to build up the Church under the direction of the apostles. (Ibid., 107:33-34; 112:14, 28-30, 21-22.) In speaking to the Twelve, the Lord said:

... purify your hearts before me; and then go ye into all the world, and preach my gospel unto every creature who has not received it; And he that believeth and is baptized shall be saved, and he that believeth not, and is not baptized, shall be damned. (Ibid., 112:28, 29.)

Missionary Work Under Hardships

History records no human experiences filled with greater love and acts of unselfish sacrifice than those connected with the story of the missionary work of the Latter-day Saint elders. During the past one hundred years, thousands and thousands of them have left their homes when called and have traveled over land and sea, paying their own expenses, to preach the restored gospel of Jesus Christ. Hunger and fatigue, and on certain occasions, even imprisonment and martyrdom have been experienced; yet each Latter-day Saint missionary declares that his services while preaching the gospel gave him the happiest experiences of his entire life.

Every time a crisis has arisen in the Church it has been met with a renewed and increased missionary campaign. For example, in 1837, the panic struck Church members just as it did the rest of the inhabitants of America. Many members apostatized. Conditions were critical. The Lord through the Prophet Joseph, however, met the situation by sending Heber C. Kimball and other elders to England to open a field where hundreds of souls were anxiously waiting to receive the gospel. Again, after the Saints had been driven from their homes in Illinois and had established themselves over a thousand miles west in the heart of the Utah desert, Brigham Young inaugurated a worldwide missionary campaign. During this period, thousands of people were headed westward toward the gold fields of California, but the elders of Israel turned their backs upon gold and their hearts toward winning souls for the kingdom of God.

Today we have reached another vital point in the Savior's missionary program. The guns have ceased firing, and thousands of human hearts are yearning for peace, for rest, for truth, and for righteousness. Surely the field is white ready for harvest; and God is going to give us another chance to fulfill his commandment of taking the gospel to every nation, kindred, tongue, and people preparatory to the coming of the Son of Man to reign on the earth for one thousand years.

Proclaiming the Gospel a Responsibility for All Latter-day Saints

Brethren and sisters, it is our responsibility to preach the gospel to the world. God has given us the priesthood and the true gospel of Jesus Christ, and he will hold us responsible to teach the plan of salvation to all other peoples. Parents, send your children on missions. Instil in their hearts in their youth the desire to proclaim to the world the eternal principles of truth. If you love your children and desire to do good things for them, you could make no greater investment than to send them on missions. While they are bringing souls unto God, they will as a natural result of their missionary services increase their love, understanding, and testimony of the gospel. Therefore, by sending them on missions you are saving the souls of your children while they are working to save the souls of other people, demonstrating the Savior's statement that "it is more blessed to give than to receive."

Young men and young women, live clean lives, study the principles of the gospel, and carefully prepare yourselves to go on missions so that God can use you in performing his great work. In no other way can you gain more happiness and store up greater rewards of eternal joy in the mansions of your Heavenly Parents. The Son of God has declared:

Remember the worth of souls is great in the sight of God; For, behold, the Lord your Redeemer suffered death in the flesh: wherefore he suffered the pain of all men, that all men might repent and come unto him. And he hath risen again from the dead, that he might bring all men unto him, on conditions of repentance. And how great is his joy in the soul that repenteth!

Wherefore, you are called to cry repentance unto this people. And if it so be that you should labor all your days in crying repentance unto this people, and bring, save it be one soul unto me, how great shall be your joy with him in the kingdom of my Father! And now, if your joy will be great with one soul that you have brought unto me into the kingdom of my Father, how great will be your joy if you should bring many souls unto me! (Ibid., 18:10-16.)

Remember, missionary work is not the work of any man. It is God's work, and we have been given the opportunity to help him accomplish his holy purposes. He is directing the missionary work of the Church of Jesus Christ today through his prophet, President

George Albert Smith, even as he has done whenever his Church has been on the earth. Thus missionaries are being sent into the world in increasing numbers. Last month one hundred and fifty of them were sent to various parts of the earth to carry good tidings to the honest in heart.

I humbly pray that God will touch the hearts of all Latter-day Saints that we may unite our efforts and means for the purpose of preaching the gospel to the entire world. The gospel must be preached, and it is our responsibility.

I bear testimony that God lives and that Joseph Smith was the instrumentality in his hands in establishing the true Church on earth again. May God bless us in our efforts to proclaim the gospel of Jesus Christ to every nation, kindred, tongue, and people, that we might be found blameless at the great judgment day, I humbly pray. In the name of Jesus Christ. Amen.

ELDER CHARLES A. CALLIS

Of the Council of the Twelve Apostles

I am deeply conscious that without God's help I can do nothing. A frequent recurrence to fundamental principles will increase the strength of the Church.

When I speak about a recurrence to fundamental principles increasing the strength of the Church, I think this is applicable also to the national government and the state governments. If we would return to the fundamental principles of the Constitution of the United States and observe them more closely, "it would from many a blunder free us, and foolish notion."

Strength of Church in Personal Testimonies

The secret of the strength of this great Church is the personal testimony that the members enjoy—the testimony of the Holy Ghost.

Our spiritual safety is secured by staying on the main stream, that stream of living truth that flows by the throne of God. It is sad to see men spiritually wrecked by being washed ashore by immaterial crosscurrents and spend "all the voyage of their life bound in shallows and in miseries." If we keep on the main stream, we are going to finish our mission on earth in a manner pleasing to the Lord.

Shakespeare said:

But 'tis strange:
And oftentimes, to win us to our harm,
The instruments of darkness tell us truths,
Win us with honest trifles, to betray's
In deepest consequence.

Why should men be so unstable that they will run after every wil-o-the-wisp, tempted by plausible, deceptive theories? The devil himself is plausible; he can assume a pleasing shape. He can fashion himself into resembling an angel of light, and he can cite scripture to suit his purpose.

Support of First Presidency

Every truth essential for the salvation of the people of God is deeply imbedded and enshrined in the glorious plan of salvation. The instruments of darkness approach us by the way of flattery. They will say: "You are all right; you are a pretty good man, and the gospel is true." Then they will say: "But the First Presidency of the Church are wrong." Against such appeals let us guard ourselves lest we be "betrayed in deepest consequence." I testify to you in humility and in the inner sureness given by the Holy Ghost, that from the days of Adam there has never been a First Presidency with more power and authority to act in the name of God, for the salvation of man than the present First Presidency, whom we love and sustain.

I love President George Albert Smith, a friend of man. You cannot associate with him without being impressed with a Christlike feeling. I love President J. Rueben Clark, Jr., a wise counselor, a statesman, and a man devoted to the work of God. I love President David O. McKay, a Christian gentleman, made by his religion, filled with the spirit of godliness and desirous of helping the children of God.

I repeat, from the days of Adam no First Presidency of the Church has ever exercised more authority, and the right to bless the children of men, than the Presidency that are seated on this stand.

Preparations for Second Coming of the Son of God

Brethren and sisters, why do we want missionaries? They are sent out for a purpose. It is for the purpose of preparing the way for the second coming of the Son of God. I recall the history of that great apostolic delegation that went to Great Britain: Brigham Young, Heber C. Kimball, Willard Richards, George A. Smith, and others. They went to that foreign country without purse and without script. A man giving them a lift in his wagon was accosted by a passer-by who said, as he looked at the ghostly appearance of these missionaries, who were sick, who were leaving their families in sickness and in poverty: "Mister, what graveyard have you been robbing?"

Let us pause here a moment for reflection.

Brigham Young, Heber C. Kimball, Willard Richards, George A. Smith were no weaklings. They were men among men. Do you for a moment think that these stalwart men, these men of God, would have undertaken that long and perilous journey unless they knew, deep down in their hearts, by the power of the Holy Ghost that this Church was founded by the Lord?

We are filled with hope and faith. We are looking and praying for the glorious second coming of the Son of God. When the apostles looked steadfastly toward heaven as Jesus ascended to heaven, two men in white apparel said:

... Ye men of Gallilee, why stand ye gazing up into heaven? this same Jesus, which is taken up from you into heaven, shall so come in like manner as ye have seen him go into heaven. (Acts 1:11.)

He will rule the world with truth and grace
And make the nations prove,
The glories of His righteousness
And wonders of His love.

This promise of a visible, certain return of the Messiah made the apostles happy, and they rejoiced in the knowledge of the second coming, just as we rejoice today.

Tennyson caught a flash of the vision of Christ's reign as King of kings and Lord of lords, from the rivers unto the ends of the earth, when he said:

For I dipt into the future, far as human eye could see, Saw the vision of the world, and all the wonders that would be: ...
"Till the war drum throbbed no longer and the battle flags were furled
In the Parliament of Man, the Federation of the world.
There the common sense of most shall hold a fretful world in awe,
And the kindly earth shall slumber, lapped in universal law.

Jesus Christ to Inaugurate Millennium

When the Lord Jesus Christ comes, he is going to inaugurate the millennium. War will cease; enmity shall disappear; and the King of kings shall reign as only Christ can reign, in the midst of and over a world of peace. Barbaric war shall end forever. What heavenly joy in the contemplation and in the future enjoyment of this blessed condition! Oh, what hope there is in this majestic event. You mothers who mourn the loss of your brave boys who went to save the world for freedom will be compensated in the resurrection. Even now, though you know your sons have made the supreme sacrifice, you still are listening for the sound of returning feet.

It will be a pity if this United Nations organization shall fail to harvest the fruits of this victory which was won by the shedding of rivers of blood. May the Lord grant them wisdom; may they listen to peace, and the call of peace. May they have the Golden Rule always before their eyes; and in their hearts the fear of the Lord, who shall come to the earth as the Prince of peace.

The Apostle Paul said:

... the Lord himself shall descend from heaven with a shout, with the voice of the archangel, and with the trump of God: and the dead in Christ shall rise first: Then we which are alive, and remain shall be caught up together with them in the clouds, to meet the Lord in the air: and so shall we ever be with the Lord. Wherefore comfort one another with these words. (I Thess. 4:16-18.)

The last prayer in the Bible reads as follows:

Behold, I come quickly. (Rev. 3:11.)

And John prays, as we today pray:

Even so [blessed Lord,] come quickly. (Rev.22:20.)

Come and stop this carnage and misery. God grant that this gospel may be preached to the great Russian people and to "every nation, and kindred, and tongue, and people."

O, Father, send Jesus Christ quickly that the millennial reign, the golden rays of which are already brightening the hills of coming time, shall begin that we may rest and reign with Christ on earth a thousand years, I humbly pray, in the name of Jesus Christ. Amen.

ELDER THOMAS E. MCKAY

Assistant to the Council of the Twelve Apostles

President Smith and counselors and my brethren and sisters: I love music. I should like to take this opportunity to congratulate the music committee or whoever it is that has been responsible in arranging for the inspiring music that we have had during this conference. The very beautiful, appropriate music furnished by the Singing Mothers on Friday brought us all closer to our Heavenly Father, and then we were thrilled yesterday by those more than a hundred young voices from the Manti district of the South Sanpete Stake. I attended a conference a few weeks ago in that stake, and was so impressed with the singing of that young lady soloist that I asked the stake president about her. I was informed that she is one of a family of thirteen, in fact she is the thirteenth, a very lucky number in her case, I should say. And then the inspiration that we receive from this great Tabernacle choir and the organ and our one and only Brother Evans whom we love so well. No one can estimate the good that this great organization is doing. I join with Brother Kirkham in suggesting that we make more in our organizations and our wards and stakes of our music. There should be a choir in every ward, choruses, Aaronic Priesthood choruses, girls' choruses, and others. I know in the mission field what a great value our choirs are. Scores of families are in the Church today because of our choirs. Our friends who love music and can sing are invited to join the choir, and after singing the songs of Zion for a while, and associating with the missionaries and members, they begin studying the gospel, and then, quite often, apply for baptism. These contacts change their lives. As one young man expressed in a testimony meeting, where he was confirmed a member of the Church, his getting acquainted with the missionaries and the members, and especially the singing of the songs of Zion, had entirely changed his outlook on life. He said, "It is really like coming from the darkness into the light."

The Savior declared:

I am the light of the world: he that followeth me shall not walk in darkness, but shall have the light of life. (John 8:12.)

RELEASED AS ACTING PRESIDENT OF THE EUROPEAN MISSION

With the appointment of Elder Ezra Taft Benson as president of the European Mission, I was given a very kind complimentary letter, signed by the First Presidency, releasing me from my very interesting service in looking after the European Mission. Because of the war my work has had to be carried on largely by correspondence.

I wish to take this opportunity to express publicly my sincere thanks and appreciation for the wonderful opportunity that this appointment, and also, and especially, my other missions in Europe, have afforded me. These missions, spaced as they have been, have given me an exceptionally fine opportunity to observe the practical working of the gospel—to see what a blessing it really is to all those who accept and obey its teachings, to see them come into the light after walking in darkness.

LABORS IN EUROPEAN MISSIONS

My first mission was from 1900 to 1903. I was home six years and then was again honored by another call, this time as president of the Swiss-German Mission, which comprised at that time—1909 to 1912—Switzerland, Germany, Austria-Hungary, and France. I found that an absence of six years had made quite a difference; many of the children who were, for example, Sunday School pupils, were now Sunday School officers and teachers. I saw the development of these young people as well as all other members who had accepted and were living the gospel. The acceptance of the gospel had given these people also an entirely different outlook on life.

Twenty-five years after this second mission I again had the privilege of returning to Europe, with my headquarters again in beautiful Switzerland. The children who were pupils in the Sunday School in 1900, and Sunday School officers and teachers in 1909 were now, many of them at least, married and had children of their own; some were or had been missionaries; some had emigrated. As I say, these three missions, spaced as they were, gave me a most wonderful opportunity to see what obedience to the gospel of Jesus Christ will really do for people. It had touched every phase of their lives. Their supervised recreation had influenced them socially; the courses of study and outlines for the priesthood quorums and the auxiliary organizations, especially the Sunday School of the Church, had afforded them splendid educational opportunities. They had been affected financially through the great tithing system and fast offerings. Some who had previously spent their money for tobacco, beer and wine and liquor were now using that money to purchase better clothes, more conveniences for the home, better entertainment, and there was as a result more love in the home. The gospel affected them also and especially morally and spiritually. Oh, of course, some were not strong enough to change their way of life and overcome their life-long habits; these, as stated, for reasons best known to themselves, had found the requirements too much. We find that true here at home, even more so I think than in the mission field. It is so easy, for example, to find other things to do on Sunday than attend meetings. This seems to have always been true; at least I find the following admonition in one of President Brigham Young's sermons on the subject of the Sabbath day:

Now, remember, my brethren, those who go skating, riding, or on excursions on the Sabbath day—and there is a great deal of this practiced—are weak in the faith. Gradually, little by little, little by little, the spirit of their religion leaks out of their hearts and their affections, and by and by they begin to see faults in their brethren, faults in the doctrines of the Church, faults in the organization, and at last they leave the Kingdom of God and go to destruction. (Discourses, p. 225, first edition; p. 165, 1943 edition.)

When I read this sentence: "Gradually, little by little, little by little, the spirit of their religion leaks out of their hearts and their affections," I thought of a statement which I recently read which says:

We never lose our religion by a blowout, usually it is just a slow leak.

And also this:

Many treat their religion as a spare tire, they never use it except in times of emergency.

COMMANDMENTS GIVEN FOR OUR DEVELOPMENT

What President Young states with reference to keeping the Sabbath day holy is equally true with reference to the breaking of the Word of Wisdom, remaining away from sacrament and priesthood meetings, taking the name of the Lord in vain, the nonpayment of tithes and offerings. Tithing for many is one of the most difficult of spiritual exercises we are asked to take. And do you know why? Because it strikes at one of the most effective weapons used by Satan for the destruction of mankind, namely, the love of money. A person or a nation that will pay an honest tithing will never worship gold instead of God. The love of money, we are told, is the root of all evil. At any rate we all know that it is the love of money, of power, of dominion of the sea as well as of the land and the people themselves that has caused many of our wars—yes, the principle of tithing properly understood and lived would go a long way to doing away with wars. This commandment and all others given by our Father in heaven are for our spiritual development, for our happiness and joy in this life. They are to keep us alive and growing spiritually, our guideposts. They are reflectors along life's highway to keep us from becoming lost, or, to quote a famous radio voice:

We are much like travelers driving along a highway by night. There faithfully placed are reflector signs to warn of hazardous curves and dangerous crossroads. The light of our cars picks up the signs, and they reflect to us their warning or direction—if we have the light! But if our light is dark the signs are dark. They have no meaning for the unlighted lamps.

These commandments I have referred to, and others, are given us as means of keeping the light burning, keeping alive spiritually. One of Dr. Karl G. Maeser's sentence sermons says:

One who has lost the spirit of the Lord is spiritually dead.

THE GOSPEL APPRECIATED IN WAR-TORN COUNTRIES

The gospel has certainly been a light shining in the darkness for our members in the war-torn countries, and also and especially for our servicemen and women during the terrible war years just ended—at least we hope they are ended. Scores of letters have been received testifying of the comfort and blessings of the gospel. I will take time to refer to only one or two. Here is a paragraph written by one of our Mormon chaplains, addressed to the servicemen's committee:

Not many days ago I had a deeply spiritual experience that gave me added proof of the power of the gospel to make men brothers spiritually. By chance I read in one of the theater news sheets the reports of a Christmas program conducted by Protestant and Catholic German P.O.W. chaplains stationed at the 99th Field Hospital near Pisa. The news item stated that the special music was presented by the P.O.W. orchestra and a "Mormon" vocal soloist. The following day I went in search of this "Mormon" P.O.W., and with the help of an American chaplain I found him, a former Dresden District missionary, who served for a year and a half under President Rees in the East German Mission—Elder Hans Karl Schade, 25 Sebnitz Street, Dresden, Germany. A few days previous to our meeting, the theater chaplain, Colonel Frank Brown, had met Elder Schade at a worship service and when he found Elder Schade was a Latter-day Saint, he gave him my name. And so when I first saw Elder Schade in the eye clinic where he now works, he extended his right hand and said, as he walked towards me, "Brother Braithwaite, thank God for this meeting." I shall never forget that expression—nor Elder Schade. In the presence of another chaplain and my interpreter, we spoke with complete freedom and with an understanding that destroys distrust, vengeance, or hate. We met on common ground, and thanked God for our fellowship in the Gospel. It was the time when I asked him to sing for me and our men, and to attend our L.D.S. services in Leghorn, that he reminded me he was a prisoner of war. However, even the restrictions involved caused no seeming barriers in our relationship. An understanding commanding officer gave permission for him to sing for us, and for us to go to his office to visit him.

The work of the army occupation tests the moral fiber of our men as perhaps it was not tested in war. Temptations are great and many. It demands a clear understanding of why we are here, patience, self-discipline, and self-control. Our job is important, and by and large, the L.D.S. men are meeting the demands it makes on them.

LETTER ATTESTS FAITH OF EUROPEAN SAINTS

The following is quoted from a letter dated March 14, 1946, at Basel, Switzerland, from Elder Ezra Taft Benson, president of the European Mission: I hope you will pardon me for reading this first paragraph; it is quite personal but I do appreciate it so much:

Dear President McKay:

As you will note, I am here at the spot which you loved so much, with the people who love you so dearly. Everywhere we have been we have found many people who know you and love you and have asked about you and shown disappointment in your not being here.

As you probably know, we have already made a trip into France, Belgium, Holland, Norway, Sweden, and Denmark, and now we are here in Switzerland preparatory to making a complete tour of the Occupied Areas. We have already attended district conference at Karlsruhe last Sunday. During the next two and a half weeks we will be in the military zones and in Czechoslovakia. From there we will return to Basel, and then continue on to Paris, Belgium, and Holland again before returning to London.

I will not comment on conditions which we found except to say that the deep faith of the Saints in these missions has been a source of joy and satisfaction. The willing service and clean, exemplary lives of the many Latter-day Saint servicemen who have been among the people of Europe have left a splendid impression over here.

Yes, the gospel is a light shining in this war-torn world, and it will also show the way to a permanent peace if our "Father's children," as President Smith so kindly and tolerantly refers to his fellow men, would but do the will of the Father. He loves us; he is our Father—we are all his children; and he has given us the gospel for our happiness and joy in this life. We could have a heaven on earth if we would but keep the commandments of God.

... men are, that they might have joy. (II Nephi 2:25.)

The Savior says:

If any man will do his will, he shall know of the doctrine, whether it be of God, or whether I speak of myself. (John 7:17.)

TESTIMONY COMES THROUGH SPIRIT OF GOD

I cannot give you a testimony of the divinity of the work—you cannot give me one—it must come through the Spirit of God. There are laws governing these spiritual matters as well as the physical and mental. President Grant used to quote so often:

There is a law, irrevocably decreed in heaven before the foundations of this world, upon which all blessings are predicated—And when we obtain any blessing from God, it is by obedience to that law upon which it is predicated. (D. & C. 130:20, 21.)

And a testimony of the divinity of the Church is received only by obedience to the spiritual law—"If any man will do his will, he shall know"—that means study, work, pray, keep the commandments, and our Heavenly Father will reveal to each of us, as he did to Peter, the divinity of his Son. When Jesus asked Peter, "But whom say ye that I am?" Peter answered, "Thou art the Christ, the son of the Living God." Notice what Jesus answered: "For flesh and blood"—the Christ was flesh and blood—"for flesh and blood hath not revealed it unto thee, but my Father which is in heaven." (Matt. 16:15-17.)

I feel very humble and extremely grateful that I am able to bear you a similar testimony. I too know that God lives, that Jesus is the Christ, that this is his Church, the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints, not the church of Joseph Smith. He was the servant however, the prophet called of God to establish the Church in this dispensation, with the same organization that existed at the time of the Savior, and it is here for the last time, never again to be taken away or given to another people, until the Savior shall come to rule and reign in person. May we keep oil in our lamps—keep the light burning, that others seeing our good works, our example, may glorify our Father in heaven, I pray, in Jesus' name. Amen.

ELDER JOSEPH FIELDING SMITH

Of the Council of the Twelve Apostles

My beloved brethren and sisters, I feel very dependent upon the Spirit of the Lord and your faith while I stand here before you. We have heard a great deal about the preaching of the gospel and the burden which is upon us to carry this message to the world. I would like to add a few words in regard to this responsibility and something in regard to the condition of the world into which we are sent.

GOSPEL TAUGHT BY ADAM

Adam was commanded by our Father in heaven to teach his children the everlasting truth. We read in the scriptures the following:

And Adam and Eve blessed the name of God, and they made all things known unto their sons and their daughters. And Satan came among them saying: I am also a son of God; and he commanded them, saying: Believe it not; and they believed it not, and they loved Satan more than God. And men began from that time forth to be carnal, sensual, and devilish. (Pearl of Great Price, Moses 5:12-13.)

PROPHETS REJECTED BY MEN

So they turned away from the truth unto the worship of all manner of false doctrines and gods, refusing to hearken to the prophets that were sent among them, and it became necessary for the Lord to bring in the flood upon them and cleanse the earth of its iniquity. Once again the world started out with just one family, and as men began to spread upon the face of the earth, they were taught by the prophets and were given revelation from the Almighty; but they, too, in course of time rebelled and set up their own churches and worshiped their own gods and graven images. Under these conditions the Lord called a man out of the land of the Chaldees and sent him into the land of Canaan, promising him great blessings and his posterity after him, through obedience to the Lord's commandments. Today we call that people Israel. But in course of time Israel also rebelled. They would not listen to their prophets, so they were scattered over all the face of the earth for their rebellion. This has been the history all through the ages, because men became carnal, sensual, and devilish.

One of the ancient prophets on this continent, speaking of our day, said:

But behold, in the last days, or in the days of the Gentiles—yea, behold all the nations of the Gentiles and also the Jews, both those who shall come upon this land and those who shall be upon other lands, yea, even upon all the lands of the earth, behold, they will be drunken with iniquity and all manner of abominations—

And when that day shall come they shall be visited of the Lord of Hosts, with thunder and with earthquake, and with a great noise, and with storm, and with tempest, and with the flame of devouring fire. (II Nephi 27:1-2.)

GOSPEL RESTORED THROUGH JOSEPH SMITH

The Lord saw fit to restore, after a great apostasy, the truth of the gospel through the Prophet Joseph Smith. He sent angels from his presence. In fact, this great prophet was visited by both the Father and the Son and was given authority to commence this great dispensation of the fulness of times and to teach the truth of the everlasting gospel, because again men had turned away from the truth to the worship of their idols and the practice of false doctrines. They have set up churches of their own where the Spirit of the Lord is not found. The Lord sent out his missionaries in the beginning of this dispensation to preach the restored gospel, and he said to them that he was sending them with this message of truth among the "congregations of the wicked"; and this he repeated many times. In a revelation given in October 1830, when the Church had been restored but six months, the Lord said this:

For verily, verily, I say unto you that ye are called to lift up your voices as with the sound of a trumpet, to declare my gospel unto a crooked and perverse generation.

For behold, the field is white already to harvest; and it is the eleventh hour, and the last time that I shall call laborers into my vineyard. (D. & C. 33:2-3.)

WARNING OF CALAMITIES TO COME

By the "last time" the Lord meant the Dispensation of the Fullness of Times.

The Prophet Joseph Smith instructed his brethren and informed them of the calamities that were to come. He warned the world of its wickedness, and he told these good men of the Council of the Twelve, who were associated with him, that because of the wickedness of the world and its corruption, destruction would come upon it. Some of these brethren say that as he told them of these things he wept as our Savior wept when he looked upon Jerusalem. President Wilford Woodruff, speaking of this testimony and this warning to the world which the Prophet had seen in vision of things which were coming upon the earth, said: "I heard the Prophet Joseph Smith bear his testimony to these events that would transpire in the earth," and after predicting that they were now at our doors, he said also; "We cannot draw a veil over the events that await this generation. No man that is inspired by the Spirit and power of God can close his ears, his eyes, or his lips, to these things." I think we have no right to close our ears, and we have no right to be silent and shut our eyes against the warnings that the Lord has given and placed before us which we are commanded to declare to the nations of the earth.

Again the Lord says:

For all flesh is corrupted before me; and the powers of darkness prevail upon the earth, among the children of men, in the presence of all the hosts of heaven—

Which causeth silence to reign, and all eternity is pained, and the angels are waiting the great command to reap down the earth, to gather the tares that they may be burned; and, behold, the enemy is combined. (D. & C. 38:11-12.)

PROPHECIES OF WILFORD WOODRUFF AND NEPHI

I heard President Wilford Woodruff, in this stand, this same place where I stand, bear witness as he had done in other places, in 1893, and up to the time of his death, that the angels who had been waiting to go forth to reap down the earth had now been sent upon that mission and they were in the earth. Therefore, he said we may look for calamities, for destruction, for plague and bloodshed. Now let me read a little to you by way of warning, something given by prophecy to Nephi concerning our own day. Speaking to the people who are living now, he said:

O the wise, and the learned, and the rich, that are puffed up in the pride of their hearts, and all those who preach false doctrines, and all those who commit whoredoms, and pervert the right way of the Lord, wo, wo, wo be unto them, saith the Lord God Almighty, for they shall be thrust down to hell!

Wo unto them that turn aside the just for a thing of naught and revile against that which is good, and say that it is of no worth! For the day shall come that the Lord God will speedily visit the inhabitants of the earth; and in that day that they are fully ripe in iniquity they shall perish.

But behold, if the inhabitants of the earth shall repent of their wickedness and abominations they shall not be destroyed, saith the Lord of Hosts.

But behold, that great and abominable church, the whore of all the earth, must tumble to the earth, and great must be the fall thereof.

For the kingdom of the devil must shake, and they which belong to it must needs be stirred up unto repentance, or the devil will grasp them with his everlasting chains, and they be stirred up to anger, and perish;

For behold, at that day shall he rage in the hearts of the children of men, and stir them up to anger against that which is good.

And others will he pacify, and lull them away into carnal security, that they will say: All is well in Zion; yea, Zion prospereth, all is well—and thus the devil cheateth their souls, and leadeth them away carefully down to hell.

(This has reference, if you please, largely to those who are in Zion.)

And behold, others he flattereth away, and telleth them there is no hell; and he saith unto them: I am no devil, for there is none—and thus he whispereth in their ears, until he grasps them with his awful chains, from whence there is no deliverance.

Yea, they are grasped with death, and hell; and death, and hell, and the devil, and all that have been seized therewith must stand before the throne of God, and be judged according to their works, from whence they must go into the place prepared for them, even a lake of fire and brimstone, which is endless torment. (II Nephi 28:15-23.)

WICKEDNESS INCREASING IN THE WORLD

There is much more that I would like to present if time would permit. Let me call your attention to the fact that this world is not growing better. If I may be pardoned for the expression: We need not "kid" ourselves into thinking that this world is growing better. If so, then the prophecies have failed. This world today is full of wickedness. That wickedness is increasing. True, there are many righteous people scattered throughout the earth, and it is our duty to search them out and give unto them the gospel of Jesus Christ and bring them out of Babylon. The Lord has said to them: "Go ye out of Babylon," which is the world.

Now the Lord has said this is the last time the gospel should be given to men and his servants should cry nothing but repentance, and he has further said:

For behold, the field is white already to harvest; and it is the eleventh hour, and the last time that I shall call laborers into my vineyard.

And my vineyard has become corrupted every whit; and there is none which doeth good save it be a few; and they err in many instances because of priestcrafts, all having corrupt minds.

And verily, verily, I say unto you, that this church have I established and called forth out of the wilderness. (D. & C. 33:3-5.)

GOSPEL PREACHED AS A WITNESS

And for what purpose is the gospel preached? To bring the people to a knowledge of the truth and as a witness before the end of the world shall come or the end of wickedness. Even before the organization of the Church, back in 1829, the Lord drew attention by revelation to the preaching of his servants, and he said:

And their testimony shall also go forth unto the condemnation of this generation if they harden their hearts against them. (D. & C. 5:18.)

This was said more particularly in reference to the testimonies of these men who are witnesses of the Book of Mormon, and their testimony has gone forth through all the world. But this is also true of the testimonies of all others who have gone forth to preach the gospel. Then the Lord adds:

For a desolating scourge shall go forth among the inhabitants of the earth, and shall continue to be poured out from time to time, if they repent not, until the earth is empty, and the inhabitants thereof are consumed away and utterly destroyed by the brightness of my coming.

Behold, I tell you these things, even as I also told the people of the destruction of Jerusalem; and my word shall be verified at this time as it hath hitherto been verified. (D. & C. 5:19, 20.)

MISSIONARIES TO WARN THE PEOPLE

The Lord has placed upon us the responsibility to preach the gospel, but there is another great responsibility. I think some of our missionaries have had an idea that all we had to do was to make friends, and if they wanted to come in the Church, well and good, and the missionaries have not realized that they were under the obligation to leave a warning, and it is just as necessary that we warn the world as it is to declare the way of eternal life. The Lord said to the missionaries who went out in the early days:

That ye may be prepared in all things when I shall send you again to magnify the calling whereunto I have called you, and the mission with which I have commissioned you. Behold, I send you out to testify and warn the people, and it becometh every man who hath been warned to warn his neighbor. Therefore, they are left without excuse, and their sins are upon their own heads. (D. & C. 88:80-82.)

Every missionary who goes out should see to it that he leaves his testimony, so that he will be free as the Lord has declared he should be in section four of the Doctrine and Covenants; and so that every man with whom he comes in contact should be warned and left without excuse, and thus the blood of every man may be upon his own head.

OPPOSED TO MILITARY CONSCRIPTION

If you think the world is getting better, just observe and witness the vulgarity and the near-approach to indecency that we find published in some pictorial magazines, and so frequently on the screen. Think of the corruption and the debasing conditions due to the indulgence in liquor and tobacco and other narcotics and drugs. Think of the immorality which is so prevalent throughout the country. We are made aware of the evils which existed in our army camps by the reports in the paper, the magazines, and from the lips of our own boys who have returned. Now pressure is brought upon us to bring to pass the compulsion of our youth at the tender years when they are most impressionable, and force them into military camps where they will have no protection, or very little, from the vices which are so prevalent in army camps. I want to say to you, my brethren and sisters, for one, I am opposed to it!

Now let us go forth and preach this gospel with the understanding that we have the dual responsibility of bearing witness and leading the righteous, the honest, to a knowledge of the truth, and then leaving all others without excuse by the witness which we bear to them.

I ask it in the name of Jesus Christ. Amen.

President J. Reuben Clark, Jr.

The Tabernacle Choir will now sing: "Let the Mountains Shout for Joy." The closing prayer will be offered by President W. J. O'Bryant of the Palmyra Stake, Spanish Fork, Utah, after which this Conference will stand adjourned until 2 o'clock this afternoon. The proceedings of that session will be broadcast over KSL at Salt Lake City, KSUB at Cedar City, and KID at Idaho Falls.

The Tabernacle Choir sang "Let the Mountains Shout for Joy," after which the closing prayer was offered by President W. J. O'Bryant of the Palmyra Stake.

Conference adjourned until 2 o'clock p.m.

THIRD DAY AFTERNOON MEETING

The concluding session of the conference convened at 2 o'clock p.m., Sunday, April 7.

Again the great Tabernacle was crowded to capacity. The Assembly Hall to the south of the Tabernacle was also filled with listeners, and many others assembled on the grounds.

President George Albert Smith:

This is the seventh and closing session of the 116th Annual Conference of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints. We are convened in the Tabernacle on Temple Square in Salt Lake City. Many are standing in the building and cannot get seats, and the overflow is in the Assembly Hall.

There are present on the stand this afternoon, all the General Authorities of the Church as sustained yesterday, except Elders Ezra Taft Benson and Matthew Cowley, the absence of whom we have already explained.

The proceedings of this session will be broadcast over KSL, KSUB and KID.

We will begin this afternoon's service by the Tabernacle Choir singing: "Behold, God the Lord Passed By," from "The Elijah." Elder J. Spencer Cornwall is the conductor, and Elder Frank W. Asper is the organist.

The opening prayer will be offered by President George Christensen of the Rigby Stake.

The Tabernacle Choir sang "Behold, God the Lord Passed By," from "The Elijah."

Elder George Christensen, President of the Rigby Stake, offered the invocation.

Singing by the Choir, "Now Let Us Rejoice."

ELDER JOSEPH L. WIRTHLIN

Second Counselor in the Presiding Bishopric

Whenever called upon, my brethren and sisters, to perform this great task, I always ask the Lord to quicken my mind and loosen my tongue, and I hope that that prayer has a response in your hearts in my behalf today.

MANY EVIDENCES OF CHRIST'S DIVINITY

We frequently hear the question asked: "What is there in a name?" And thinking of names, we always think first of family names. We think of the great names in the fields of education, industry, statesmanship, but what about the names in the great realm of religion? In retrospect there are many that come before us—the names of Confucius, of Buddha, of Mohammed, and of Jesus Christ. As we think of the first three, their names identify them as men who endeavored to teach their followers certain philosophies, philosophies of men, with some elements of truth in them. But what about Jesus Christ and his teachings, and furthermore, what do we find in his name? In the use of his name, there is also an immediate mental connection with the Godhead. His followers proclaimed that he was the Son of God, for we read:

In the beginning was the Word, and the Word was with God, and the Word was God. The same was in the beginning with God. All things were made by him; and without him was not any thing made that was made. In him was life; and the life was the light of men. And the light shineth in darkness; and the darkness comprehended it not. . . . And the Word was made flesh, and dwelt among us, (and we beheld his glory, the glory as of the only begotten of the Father,) full of grace and truth. (John 1:1-5; 14.)

To the early followers of Jesus Christ, he was with God in the beginning. He was God, and to him was given the great commission of creating the earth and all the things that are now upon it. And furthermore, because his plan of salvation was accepted in the pre-existent councils in heaven, he revealed himself to mankind in the flesh, the only Begotten of the Father. In analyzing this declaration and comparing it with the theories and teachings of Confucius, Buddha, and Mohammed, we find a great difference in the claims of these great religious teachers.

The above declaration of John must of necessity be supported with tangible evidence that Jesus Christ was the Son of God, a member of the Godhead who revealed himself to mankind in the flesh for the purpose of redeeming mankind from the sin of Adam. The great evidence to sustain the above claims is found in a promise made by the Savior wherein he declared:

But when the Comforter is come, whom I will send unto you from the Father, even the Spirit of truth, which proceedeth from the Father, he shall testify of me. (John 15:26.)

The great difference between Jesus Christ, the Son of God, and the other great religious teachers of the world was that after he left the earth, the third member of the Godhead, even the Holy Ghost, would testify to the races of men on earth of the divine mission of the Lord, Jesus Christ.

Nearly two thousand years have elapsed since Christ was upon the earth, but untold thousands have enjoyed the revelation of the Holy Ghost that his mission was divine. A modern-day prophet, Brigham Young, states most emphatically that any honest searcher of truth can know that Jesus was the Christ in the same way that Peter knew it. As you recall, the Savior was traveling in the country with his disciples and turning upon them asked this question: "... Whom do men say that I the Son of man am?" As I visualize that scene, his followers were dumfounded and rather hesitantly answered: "Some say that thou art John the Baptist; some, Elias; and others, Jeremias, or one of the prophets." The second time the Savior asked the question: "But whom say ye that I am?" Peter, the humble fisherman, without any reservation declared: "Thou art the Christ, the Son of the living God," and the reply immediately came from the Savior: "Blessed art thou, Simon Bar-jona: for flesh and blood hath not revealed it unto thee, but my Father which is in heaven." (Matt. 16:13-17.) How was it possible for Peter to answer this question without any hesitation or reservation? It was possible because the Holy Ghost revealed this great truth to him, and in this event we see that the Holy Ghost does reveal the fact that Jesus Christ is the Only Begotten of the Father in the flesh, the Son of God, the Redeemer of the world.

Again we ask the question: "What is there in a name?" In the name of Jesus Christ there is salvation and exaltation to the children of our Heavenly Father, for we read in the Acts of the Apostles:

Neither is there salvation in any other: for there is none other name under heaven given among men, whereby we must be saved. (Acts 4:12.)

In his ministry Christ taught the people to accept his name, to take his name upon them. In the matter of prayer he said:

And whatsoever ye shall ask in my name, that will I do, that the Father may be glorified in the Son. (John 14:13.)

PRINCIPLES TAUGHT BY THE SAVIOR

With reference to belief and faith he said:

But as many as received him, to them gave he power to become the sons of God, even to them that believed on his name. (John 1:12.)

He taught the principle of repentance; forcibly declaring in Luke:

And that repentance and remission of sins should be preached in his name among all nations, beginning at Jerusalem. (Luke 24:47.)

John the Baptist, forerunner of Christ, taught the gospel of repentance and baptism by immersion for the remission of sins, and in the course of events, the Savior appeared applying for baptism. Ecclesiastical history declares that when he came up out of the water, the heavens were opened and the Holy Ghost appeared in the form of a dove, and the assembled multitude heard the voice of the Father saying: "... This is my beloved Son, in whom I am well pleased." (Matt. 3:17) again proclaiming the great truth that Jesus Christ was the Son of God, the Redeemer of the world.

... Go ye therefore, and teach all nations, baptizing them in the name of the Father, and of the Son, and of the Holy Ghost. (Matt. 28:19.)

Admission into the kingdom by baptism, as the Savior so declared to Nicodemus, was in the name of the Godhead including the name of the Savior. Other promises he made in his name:

He that believeth and is baptized shall be saved; but he that believeth not shall be damned. And these signs shall follow them that believe; In my name shall they cast out devils; they shall speak with new tongues; They shall take up serpents; and if they drink any deadly thing, it shall not hurt them; they shall lay hands on the sick, and they shall recover. (Mark 16:16-18.)

THE TRUE CHURCH OF CHRIST CARRIES HIS NAME

In contemplation of the great ministry of our Lord, his name stands out preeminently as the only name under heaven whereby the children of men can enjoy the blessings of salvation and exaltation. In fact, his name is the pass-word into the kingdom of our Heavenly Father.

Paul in preaching to the Ephesians declared that Jesus gave some apostles, some prophets, some evangelists, some pastors and some teachers, and may I also point out to you that in the New Testament, there is an abundance of scriptures to prove without question wherein high priests, sevens, elders, priests, teachers, deacons and bishops were selected, these offices being made an integral part of the great Church organization. After the selection of Church officers and its organization did the Church carry a name, and if it did, what was its name two thousand years ago? Did it carry the name of Peter; was it the church of John or Matthew? It was not; it carried the name of its great organizer, the Lord, Jesus Christ. Read, if you will:

And he is the head of the body, the church: who is the beginning, the firstborn from the dead; that in all things he might have the preeminence. (Colossians 1:18.)

It logically follows that if the Savior was to have pre-eminence in all things, the most pre-eminent of all these would be this great organization called the Church which should carry his name. We read:

For the husband is the head of the wife, even as Christ is the head of the church: and he is the saviour of the body. Therefore as the church is subject unto Christ, so let the wives be to their own husbands in every thing. (Ephesians 5:23-24.)

We see in this comparison that the Church was to take the name of Jesus Christ, its head, and become subject, just as the wife takes the name of her husband and becomes subject to him. So the Church in the days of Jesus Christ carried his name.

At the trial of the Savior, when he stood before Pontius Pilate, the Roman ruler declared that he could find no guile in the man, but to appease the Jews, his subjects, he ordered the crucifixion. He did something more to please his subjects, for John declared:

And Pilate wrote a title, and put it on the cross. And the writing was, JESUS OF NAZARETH THE KING OF THE JEWS. (John 19:19.)

Little did Pontius Pilate realize when that name was nailed to the cross at his command, whereon the Son of God hung, that name would become the best known among the children of men, the only name under the heavens whereby we might enjoy a place in his kingdom.

While the Savior's body lay in the tomb, we are told by Peter that his Spirit visited the spirits who, in the time of Noah, were a disobedient people upon the earth and were swept away by the flood, teaching them the importance of his name and that by obedience to the gospel that he had proclaimed upon the earth, they too should enjoy salvation.

APOSTASY FROM THE CHURCH OF CHRIST

According to the records found in III Nephi in the Book of Mormon, Jesus Christ as a resurrected being appeared to the inhabitants on the American continent, teaching them to take upon them his name, and furthermore that the application of the ordinances of the gospel was to be done in his name. Shortly after the departure of the resurrected Savior from the earth. Paul declared to the Galatian Saints:

I marvel that ye are so soon removed from him that called you into the grace of Christ unto another gospel: Which is not another; but there be some that trouble you, and would pervert the gospel of Christ. But though we, or an angel from heaven, preach any other gospel unto you than that which we have preached unto you, let him be accursed. (Gal. 1:6-8)

This statement is an evidence that other principles and doctrines were being taught and that the great apostasy from the Church of Christ was already in process, and furthermore that as a result of the apostasy, the name of Jesus Christ had lost its significance among men. Men were taught to pray in the names of men and women who out of the changed doctrines of the Savior became so-called saints, standing between the people on this earth and God rather than Jesus Christ. During this period we hear no more about apostles, prophets, pastors, teachers, high priests, seventies, elders, bishops, priests, teachers, and deacons, but new officers with new titles took their places. The efficacy of faith was lost in that men were taught to believe that they might be saved by faith and grace rather than by faith and works. The principle of repentance became one wherein the forgiveness of sins could be purchased. The ordinance of baptism was changed and the organization lost its identity as its first title "Jesus Christ" had another substitute. As the dark clouds of apostasy settled over the earth, there were some great men who declared that there would be a change, a reformation. Among these were Martin Luther, John Calvin, Roger Williams, who declared that the Church of God was no longer upon the earth. Sincere in their declarations and in their efforts, they were unable to restore the Church organization with its name, ordinances, and principles as the Lord, Jesus Christ first gave them to the world.

THE TRUE CHURCH RESTORED

Out of the turmoil and the adverse opinion in the world, a young man, sincerely wishing to know which of all the churches was the Church of Christ fell upon his knees among the giants of the forest, calling upon God for divine direction to the end that the true Church might be revealed to him. In answer to the prayer of the fourteen-year-old boy, God, the Eternal Father, and Jesus Christ, his Son, appeared, the Father saying to Joseph Smith: "This is my Beloved Son, hear him!" reaffirming to the world that Jesus Christ was the Son of God, a resurrected being, that the Father and the Son were two distinct personages with bodies, parts, and passions. Joseph Smith received instructions from the Father and the Son and thereafter was visited by heavenly beings who indicated that their visits were in the name of the Savior, again establishing upon the earth that all things were to be done in his name as the apostles of old taught the people.

The eighteenth section of the Doctrine and Covenants parallels the verses found in the book of Acts, wherein the significance and the power of the name of the Lord Jesus Christ was restored to the earth. It reads:

Behold, Jesus Christ is the name which is given of the Father, and there is none other name given whereby man can be saved; Wherefore, all men must take upon them the name which is given of the Father, for in that name shall they be called at the last day. (D. & C. 18:23, 24.)

It is a grand and glorious truth to contemplate that in this day, your day and my day, Jesus Christ has again spoken to the world, restoring the gospel and all its saving ordinances to the end that the children of our Heavenly Father might enjoy salvation and exaltation in his kingdom.

Here are familiar words spoken two thousand years ago and again reiterated in the words of the Savior to the Prophet with reference to prayer, indicating again that his name was to become the watchword of salvation:

And thou shalt continue in calling upon God in my name, and writing the things which shall be given thee by the Comforter, and expounding all scriptures unto the church. (Ibid., 24:5.)

And if ye are purified and cleansed from all sin, ye shall ask whatsoever you will in the name of Jesus and it shall be done. (Ibid., 50:29.)

PRIESTHOOD GIVEN TO MAN

John the Baptist appeared to Joseph Smith and Oliver Cowdery, bestowing upon them the Aaronic Priesthood, with these words:

Upon you my fellow servants, in the name of Messiah I confer the priesthood of Aaron. (D. & C. 13:1.)

May I ask the question, was there ever a time in the history of the great reformers or any other religious leaders when they claimed that divine messengers came from the heavens above in the name of Jesus Christ or in the name of the Messiah, bestowing upon them any or part of the priesthood? The answer is no. The restoration of the ordinance of baptism brought with it the mandate that men and women were to be baptized in the name of the Father, of the Son, and of the Holy Ghost. The confirmation of members of the Church and the promise of the gift of the Holy Ghost were to be done in the name of Jesus Christ. Administrations to the sick were to be performed in his name. The revealed blessings on the sacrament were to begin with these words: "O God, the Eternal Father, we ask thee in the name of thy son, Jesus Christ," (D. & C. 20:77,79) and so on.

Follow through the restoration of the gospel, if you will. The significance of the name of Jesus Christ is most impressive, restoring to it the same place that it held when he taught men upon the earth two thousand years ago. With the restoration of the ordinances and principles of the gospel, the Lord again, as Paul once declared, gave some apostles, prophets, evangelists teachers, pastors high priests, seventies, elders bishops, priests, teachers, and deacons, and with the restoration of these offices in the priesthood of the Church the Church was again organized just as perfectly as it was in the days of Peter and John. Something more than the restoration of the gospel, ordinances, principles, and organization was necessary, and what was that? The name by which it might be identified in the world, which name had been taken from the earth when the great apostasy took place, and is it not singular then that all the great religionists failed to call the churches organized by them the Church of Jesus Christ but through the providence of God, it was not to be.

Hence, the name was reserved for the day when through the Lord's instrument, Joseph Smith, the Church was again restored to the earth. We read in a revelation known as the one hundred fifteenth section of the Doctrine and Covenants the words of the Savior to the Prophet relative to this matter:

Verily thus saith the Lord unto you, my servant Joseph Smith, Jun., and also my servant Sidney Rigdon, and also my servant Hyrum Smith, and your counselors who are and shall be appointed hereafter; And also unto you, my servant Edward Partridge, and his counselors; And also unto my faithful servants who are of the high council of my church in Zion, for thus it shall be called, and unto all the elders and people of my Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints, scattered abroad in all the world; For thus shall my church be called in the last days, even The Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints. Verily I say unto you all: Arise and shine forth, that thy light may be a standard for the nations. (Ibid., 115:1-5.)

MEANING OF NAME LATTER-DAY SAINT

With the restoration of the name, the organization was now complete with the priesthood, all its officers, ordinances, and principles that existed in the ancient Church as Christ taught them. The restoration of the name is one of the greatest evidences of the divine calling of the Prophet Joseph, the Church in the latter-days being known as the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints.

The members of this Church carry a great and grave responsibility in using the title Latter-day Saints. As I think of my own life, I wonder if I merit the name Latter-day Saint. Do you ponder over this divine title, determining whether or not your lives are compatible with the title of Latter-day Saint? We only become Latter-day Saints insofar as we live the gospel of the Lord, Jesus Christ, and a real Latter-day Saint is willing to take upon him the full name of the Lord, Jesus Christ, keep his commandments, his covenants. It demands wholehearted, devoted loyalty to the anointed of the Lord who preside over his Church, and beyond that cleanliness of life is a prime requisite, for I am convinced that anyone who claims to be a Latter-day Saint and drinks a glass of beer or smokes a cigaret is not entitled to the divine title of Latter-day Saint.

The Lord's people are a covenant people under solemn obligation to him so to live as he has declared to the Prophet Joseph to become a standard to all the nations, and if there was ever a time in the history of the world when it needed a people that would manifest in its lives all the principles of the gospel, that time is today.

Joseph Smith declared prophetically on the banks of the Mississippi River on the sixth day of August 1842, almost two years before he was murdered, that this people would move to the Rocky Mountains, becoming a great and a mighty people. I wonder what he meant by the word "mighty." Were we to become mighty in politics, in the industrial world, or were we to become mighty in righteousness? My interpretation of this prophecy is that we were to become mighty in righteousness, and out of our might in righteousness we would set the world an example. We would become a light, a standard to a misdirected, misled, and faithless world. So in the final analysis of the Lord's plans, he bestowed his name upon the restored Church to identify us from the rest of the world by being called Latter-day Saints.

THE IMPORTANCE OF A NAME

It is a far cry from the days of Pontius Pilate when he ordered the name of the Savior nailed to the cross: "Jesus of Nazareth, king of the Jews," to the day when John the Revelator saw in a vision and declared:

And he hath on his vesture and on his thigh, a name written, KING OF KINGS, AND LORD OF LORDS. (Rev. 19:16.)

In his name the Lord promised that he would appear as the Lord of lords and King of kings to all those who live the gospel of Jesus Christ, meriting the title of Latter-day Saints, and they should have this blessing:

They are they who are the church of the Firstborn. They are they into whose hands the Father has given all things—They are they who are priests and kings, who have received of his fulness, and of his glory; . . . These are they whose names are written in heaven, where God and Christ are the judge of all; These are they who are just men made perfect through Jesus the mediator of the new covenant, who wrought out this perfect atonement through the shedding of his own blood. These are they whose bodies are celestial, whose glory is that of the sun, even the glory of God, the highest of all, whose glory the sun of the firmament is written of as being typical. (D. & C. 76:54-56; 68-70.)

Again the question is submitted: "What is there in a name?" What is there in the name of Jesus Christ?

Behold, Jesus Christ is the name which is given of the Father, and there is none other name given whereby man can be saved; Wherefore, all men must take upon them the name which is given of the Father, for in that name shall they be called at the last day. (Ibid., 18:23, 24.)

May God bless you and may he bless me, that we will so reverence the name of the Lord Jesus Christ, that we will keep his commandments and enjoy all the blessings involved therein, I ask in his name. Amen.

ELDER MARK E. PETERSEN

Of the Council of the Twelve Apostles

I rejoice with you in the return of our Latter-day Saint Servicemen from their many assignments overseas. I am grateful for the strength they will bring to us in our various organizations, in the wards and stakes. I sincerely hope that every returning Latter-day Saint serviceman will resume his activity in the Church without delay.

CONTRIBUTIONS OF OUR SERVICEMEN

These servicemen have accomplished some great things during the last few years. They have rendered great service to the Church and likewise to their country. In the main, they have been true to the standards they have been taught. I am sure they have been loyal and patriotic, fighting in defense of freedom. It has been a great sacrifice for our one hundred thousand servicemen under the Stars and Stripes, to leave their homes and schools, their work, and their families. But it has been a greater sacrifice for those who have borne the brunt of battle, for many of our boys have been wounded, some of them severely. Some of our boys are blind; some have suffered severe nervous and mental injuries; and there are those among them who will never walk again.

Many have died. We at The Deseret News have endeavored to determine about how many Latter-day Saint servicemen were killed in the war. Our study is as yet incomplete, but if we were to estimate the total for the whole Church, based upon the figures that have thus far been compiled, the number of Latter-day Saint servicemen who have given their lives in this war would exceed five thousand. Our hearts go out in deepest sympathy to the families thus bereft.

Those boys fought and died that their families at home might enjoy peace and safety. They died, also, in the cause of freedom, in the cause of free agency, freedom of action, free enterprise if you please. In spite of the sacrifices these boys have made, together with the thousands of other Americans who have died in defense of liberty, there are still those in our land to whom freedom means nothing. There are influences and movements and groups and organizations within the borders of the United States which today, if they could, would rob us all of our free agency.

Latter-day Saints, of all people, should stand firm in defense of freedom. Free agency has a special meaning to us. We know that without free agency there would be no progress. We all know that the gospel itself is based upon the principle of free agency. Yet there are some among us who have allowed themselves to slip to one side or the other, and they need to reorient themselves in line with the divine revelations we have received concerning the principle of freedom.

AMERICA, A LAND OF DESTINY

Let us look for a moment at one or two of the phases of freedom that are so important to us. Most of us believe that America is a promised land, a land of destiny, and so it is. But what is that destiny?

Anciently, the Lord made it known that the gospel would be restored in these last days; that it should come forth after a period of apostasy and that it should come forth upon this land of America. It was necessary that the gospel should come forth under a free form of government in order that the modern people of God could carry on their work without regimentation or restriction, and, therefore, God dedicated America to freedom.

When the Savior was among the Nephites, he predicted the coming forth of the Gentiles upon this land; he told about the coming forth of the gospel itself and said: "For it is wisdom in the Father that they [the Gentiles] should be established in this land, and be set up as a free people by the power of the Father, that these things"—meaning the gospel principles—"might come forth from them," that is, from the believing of the Gentiles, "unto a remnant of your seed, that the covenant of the Father may be fulfilled which he hath covenanted with his people, O house of Israel." (Book of Mormon, III Nephi 21:4.)

FREEDOM ESSENTIAL FOR RESTORATION OF GOSPEL

Note that language if you will. The Gentiles were to come forth upon this land of America. They were to be set up as a free people. They were to be thus established by the power of the Father, and the purpose of it all was that the gospel might come forth and be preached to the children of men in order that God could fulfill the covenant that he had made "with his people, O house of Israel." And why was freedom so necessary in connection with the restoration of the gospel and its promulgation among the children of men? In order that those to whom the gospel would be restored might have the freedom of speech to preach the gospel; the freedom of the press to publish the gospel; freedom of assembly so they could gather together in congregations and worship the Lord; and religious freedom so that they could worship God according to the dictates of their own conscience.

President Joseph F. Smith discussed this subject in this way:

This great American nation the Almighty raised up by the power of his omnipotent hand, that it might be possible in the latter day for the kingdom of God to be established in the earth. If the Lord had not prepared the way by laying the foundations of this glorious nation, it would have been impossible (under the stringent laws and bigotry of the monarchical governments of the world) to have laid the foundations for the coming of his great kingdom. (Gospel Doctrine, p. 409.)

And along the same line, President Brigham Young said:

We believe that the Lord has been preparing that when he should bring forth his work, that, when the set time should fully come, there might be a place upon his footstool where sufficient liberty of conscience should exist, that his Saints might dwell in peace under the broad canopy of constitutional law and equal rights. In this view we consider that the men in the Revolution were inspired by the Almighty to throw off the shackles of the mother government, with her established religion. For this cause were Adams, Jefferson, Franklin, Washington, and a host of others inspired to deeds of resistance to the acts of the King of Great Britain. (Discourses, p. 359.)

So Spoke Brigham Young.

Did our American colonist feel that they were assisted by the Almighty in winning independence from their mother country? They certainly did and so expressed themselves. Among them was George Washington who, in the inaugural address he delivered on April 30, 1789, said this:

No people can be bound to acknowledge and adore the Invisible Hand which conducts the affairs of men more than those of the United States. Every step by which they have advanced to the character of an independent nation seems to have been distinguished by some token of Providential agency.

CONSTITUTION WRITTEN UNDER INSPIRATION

But merely to be given their independence did not mean that they were set up as a new nation. A government must be established. Did God follow through and fulfill the prophecy in the Book of Mormon as uttered by his Beloved Son to the Nephites? He did by raising up and inspiring the men who drafted the form of government for this land. He inspired those men to write the Constitution of the United States and that Constitution is the means by which God wrote into the law of this land the principles of free agency. So the Lord said:

... it is not right that any man should be in bondage one to another. And for this purpose have I established the Constitution of this land, by the hands of wise men whom I raised up unto this very purpose. (D. & C. 101:79, 80.)

And, furthermore, not only did the Lord raise up these men and inspire them to write free agency into the government of this land, but he declared his intention that the elders of this Church should defend that Constitution and the freedoms and the rights allowed us in that great document. And so he said, "that law of the land, which is constitutional," and I call your attention to the phraseology:

... that law of the land which is constitutional, supporting that principle of freedom in maintaining the rights and privileges, belongs to all mankind, and is justifiable before me. Therefore, I, the Lord, justify you, and your brethren of my church, in befriending that law which is the constitutional law of the land; And as pertaining to law of man, whatsoever is more or less than this, cometh of evil. (D. & C. 98:5-7.)

In regard to that last sentence, it is my interpretation that laws which are not in harmony with the principle of free agency and therefore not in harmony with the spirit of the Constitution, "cometh of evil."

Then the Lord continues:

I, the Lord God, make you free, therefore ye are free indeed; and the law—that is the constitutional law—also maketh you free. Nevertheless, when the wicked rule the people mourn. (D. & C. 98:8,9.)

OUR OBLIGATION TO DEFEND THE CONSTITUTION

And so the Lord seems to teach us that it is a part of our religion to preserve and fight for and defend the Constitution of the United States with all its rights and freedoms as provided therein. It was with this thought in mind that President Heber J. Grant said:

From my childhood days I have understood that we believe absolutely that the Constitution of our country is an inspired instrument, and that God directed those who created it and those who defended the independence of this nation. Concerning this matter it is my frequent pleasure to quote the statement by Joseph Smith, regarding the Constitution: "The Constitution of the United States is a glorious standard; it is founded in the wisdom of God. It is a heavenly banner; it is, to all those who are privileged with the sweets of liberty, like the cooling shades and refreshing waters of a great rock in a weary and thirsty land. It is like a great tree under whose branches men from every clime can be shielded from the burning rays of the sun."

Then, President Grant continues, after quoting the Prophet:

And such the Constitution of the United States must be to every faithful Latter-day Saint who lives under its protection. (Gospel Standards, p. 128, 129.)

Brigham Young also believed that it was part of our religion to defend the Constitution of the United States. Said he:

We mean to sustain the Constitution of the United States and all righteous laws. We will cling to the Constitution of our country, and to the government that reveres that sacred charter of freemen's rights; and if necessary, pour out our best blood for the defense of every good and righteous principle.

He continues:

To accuse us of being unfriendly to the Government, is to accuse us of hostility to our religion, for no item of inspiration is held more sacred with us than the Constitution under which she acts. (Discourses, pp. 358-359.)

At another time, with this same thought in mind, Brigham Young again spoke and said:

How long will it be before the words of the prophet Joseph will be fulfilled? He said if the Constitution of the United States were saved at all it must be done by this people. It will not be many years before these words come to pass. When the Constitution of the United States hangs, as it were, upon a single thread, they will have to call for the "Mormon" Elders to save it from utter destruction; and they will step forth and do it. . . . if it is sustained on this land of Joseph, it will be done by us and our posterity. (Ibid., pp. 360,361.)

DIVINE PRINCIPLE OF FREE AGENCY

I appeal to every Latter-day Saint to accept the divine principle of free agency and to adopt it in his life. I appeal to you to remember this principle when you are confronted by organizations and groups and movements in this country, which are now arising and assuming great power. Before you become engulfed in them, measure their practices and their purposes by the measuring rod of free agency, and you remember that God said it is not right that any man should be in bondage one to another. Remember, also, what Richard Evans told you yesterday, that it is not right that we should be commanded in all things, and don't you allow yourself to be commanded in all things by any group or agency. You preserve the free agency that God has given to you, because if you don't you will suffer all the days of your life.

You remember that you are to be true to the Constitution of the United States. I appeal to you to accept as the word of God, the declaration that appears in the revelation in section one hundred one of the Doctrine and Covenants, wherein the Lord says he did raise up men and inspired them to write the Constitution. I appeal to you, every one, to be true to the trust that God has placed in you, to preach the gospel throughout the world, as has been declared here today. But remember that you cannot preach that gospel without freedom of speech, and you cannot publish that gospel without freedom of the press, and you cannot gather together in congregations without freedom of assembly, and you cannot worship the Lord your God according to the dictates of your own conscience without freedom of religion. And remember that every time you give up any of your freedoms, whether it be to some economic or political group, or to any other group, you jeopardize these four freedoms of which I have spoken.

I appeal to you to accept as the word of God that which I have quoted to you which says that you, the elders of Israel, are justified by God in defending your constitutional privileges. I appeal to you to be true to your one hundred thousand sons who have fought for liberty, to the eight thousand of your sons who have been wounded and bled in battle. Do not betray the five thousand Latter-day Saint boys who died that freedom might live. Remember that you have a responsibility to preserve freedom in America. Remember always the glorious prayer that is written into the last stanza of "America" which was sung so beautifully this morning by the Tabernacle choir.

Our father's God! to thee,
Author of liberty,
To thee we sing;
Long may our land be bright
With freedom's holy light!
Protect us by thy might Great God, our King.

I pray that we may have the courage and the wisdom to accept the truth, that the truth may keep us free, and I ask it in Jesus' name. Amen.

ELDER STEPHEN L RICHARDS

Of the Council of the Twelve Apostles

My brethren and sisters, I find that I have come into some little difficulty trying to help a friend. My friend doesn't know that I was trying to help him, and I have discovered that he did not need my help at all.

LOFTY CONCEPT OF CENTENNIAL CELEBRATION

As I contemplated my responsibility on this occasion, remembering that President David O. McKay was the chairman of the commission arranging the celebration of our centennial next year, I concluded that I would offer whatever aid I could to that great event. I tried to offer similar aid six years ago at the April conference, but after hearing the lofty concept of the centennial celebration, which was set before us so impressively this morning by President McKay, I feel it would be unwise to indulge in anything approaching a repetition of the thoughts he therein conveyed to us. However, I am grateful that my mind ran in the same channel with his; I hope it always will.

Maybe you will pardon me if I say to you that it is just forty years ago this year since I had the privilege of coming into close association with President McKay. We had attended the University of Utah when it was located on the west side of this city, some years before, but it was in 1906 that I was called into the Sunday School general board where I began a friendship that is one of the most prized things in my life. Ever since that day I have had the esteemed privilege of working closely with my dear friend and associate, President McKay. I trust that the companionship and friendship so established may endure throughout the eternities. I can think of no richer blessing than the perpetuation of these friendships we establish in the priesthood of God to go forward forever.

There is, perhaps, one thought I may add—and I rather think it is fortunate that the circumstances have transpired as they have because I can at least make one contribution to the conference, and that will be in brevity so that in the very short time that remains President Smith and others may be heard from. But this one thought I would like to give about our celebration of next year.

PIONEERS CAME TO ESTABLISH ZION

It has been remarked many times that the pilgrimage of the pioneers to this section was very unusual in character, differing greatly from like enterprises by many other pioneers and peoples. It is true that the pioneers came here to found homes, and they came here for peace and freedom, but these were really only incidentals. They came here to establish the utopia of their dreams. They came here to establish the Zion of our Lord. All of their energies were bent to that effort. They knew what their commission was, and they executed it.

Do you believe that the kingdom of God is established in this earth—not just a visionary, ethereal kingdom as in the concepts of some men but the tangible, definite authoritative kingdom of our Father?

I remember some years ago, during the days of the silent films, there was a moving picture play called The King of Kings. This I thought was a very excellent portrayal of many of the episodes in the life of the Savior. It was reverentially done, and it gave me a great satisfaction to see it. I experienced, I believe, only one disappointment, and that was at the end of the picture when there was flashed upon the screen these words: "The kingdom of God is in your heart." Now, I do not want to do any injustice to the people who projected that scenario, but we know that the kingdom of God, while it must be accepted in one's heart is, not merely a concept of our thinking or our feeling. The kingdom of God is truly established in this earth. It is established in the land of Zion; and right here, at least for the time being, is the headquarters of the land of Zion.

OUR DEBT TO THE PIONEERS

It is a sacred land to me. I love it, and I know that there will yet go forth many more great things for humanity, from this land of Zion. I want to preserve it in beauty inviolate from desecration.

We owe it to those noble pioneers, who established it here, to make it beautiful. When many come, as they will come, in spite of the restriction of invitation, to see us next year, I hope that all the Latter-day Saints, feeling that this land has been consecrated and that it is sacred, will do their utmost to make it reflect the glory of those noble men and women who left it as a heritage to us.

I know that the kingdom of God is established in this world. I know that it rests upon the foundation of the Holy Priesthood which has been given to man to maintain and, through it, to bless all humanity. May we arise to the opportunities and the challenge that have been presented to us in this great conference, I pray in the name of Jesus. Amen.

The congregation and Choir sang the hymn, "We Thank Thee, O God, For A Prophet." Hymn Book page 152, L. D. S. Hymns No. 298.

PRESIDENT GEORGE ALBERT SMITH

We are very much blessed today by information that has come from one source or another. Lest we overlook it I would like to say that Brother John H. Taylor of the First Council of the Seventy has been seriously ill, and while he is not considered well enough to participate in the activities of this conference, he has been present with us, and we are very glad that that has been the case.

This morning at three o'clock Captain Howard Badger, one of our Latter-day Saint chaplains, arrived here by air. He has been helpful to Brother Benson in that field of activity in Europe, and I am sure if there were time we would be delighted to have Brother Badger give us some information about his experiences over there. He has performed a splendid service. By the way, there are quite a number of our men in uniform here today who were here yesterday, some of whom have been willing and have desired to bear their testimonies and tell of their experiences, but unfortunately our conference seems to be just one day short of the time we need. We are grateful to have them home with us, and I am sure the Lord will bless them and magnify them.

We have a telegram from Tokyo, informing us that an inspirational conference is being held there today. It says there were 470 people in attendance. Think of it, way off in Japan, having a conference with 470 Latter-day Saints in attendance. I am assuming they are Latter-day Saints. Many of them are members of the armed forces and some other members of the Church.

By the way, at this point I would like to say we have received word from different parts of the world, and now here comes a message from Japan. In my judgment, there are in Japan, a multitude of wonderful people, children of our Heavenly Father, and he loves them and he desires that they may have the benefits of the Gospel of Jesus Christ, and that is why President Grant and others spent several years seeking to divide the Gospel with them. They were not so successful as we had hoped. Things were not what we should have liked, but in Hawaii, where a good many of our Japanese brothers and sisters have come to live, we have a fine Church organization, with many faithful members working there, and others are coming in all the time.

In addition to the message from Japan, we have one from Elder Ezra Taft Benson. It bears no date but was sent for the purpose of being published, that it might reach the people, and coming today we thought we would read it here.

BENSON TELEGRAM

As Church leaders and Saints generally assemble on Temple Square for the annual conference of the Church, thousands of faithful Saints in all parts of the European Mission extend their heartfelt love and greeting. We feel very near to you all in Zion although separated by great distances, military restrictions, and material limitations. Our hearts are one with yours. We feel the great bond of unity and fellowship which is one of the sweet fruits of the gospel. We are ever grateful for its rich blessings.

The war has brought hardships and untold suffering and distress.

Destruction, hunger, and anxiety are on every hand. Many of our Saints are without home or country—refugees fleeing the terrible aftermath of war and the ravages of fiends in human form. In the midst of all this there is but one soul-satisfying refuge, the restored gospel of Jesus Christ. Never has there been more heartfelt gratitude for membership in the Church than now. The sweetness of the gospel is appreciated more fully. The faith of the Saints is stronger than ever before.

Everywhere in war-torn Europe, the faithful members of the Church, bereft of earthly material positions, face the future with courage undaunted. This is in great contrast to the melancholy, suicides, and discouragement all around them. Members are volunteering to do missionary work. They are sustaining each other and are anxiously willing to give their all toward the establishment of the kingdom of God in the earth. In this and in all other activities in the interest of the Saints and the Church as a whole, our Latter-day Saint servicemen have and are rendering immeasurable service.

Nowhere in all the world do members love and sustain their Church leaders more wholeheartedly than here. Never have the songs of Zion and especially "We Thank Thee, O God, for a Prophet," been sung with more soul-stirring fervor. Yes, the sweet assurances which come from burning personal testimonies of the truth are enjoyed by the thousands of Saints in Europe today. Never were there more sincere expressions of gratitude and such spirit in meetings as that witnessed in the services just completed in all the war-torn countries of Europe.

We all join in sending our deep love, assurance of our faith in the work and gratitude for its blessings. May God bless you all at home and prosper the cause of truth in all the earth.

(Signed) Ezra Taft Benson

ELDER ALBERT E. BOWEN

Of the Council of the Twelve Apostles

In the last three days we have heard reference many times to the disturbed condition of the world. Brother Widtsoe put his finger on the nerve center of it all. He told us that it is due to a feeling of uncertainty that afflicts the minds of men. I believe that uncertainty is due to a breakdown of faith in the principles by which men have heretofore lived. They are not sure any more that those principles are valid, and having nothing in lieu thereof, they are adrift with no settled convictions. In such circumstances life cannot be stable, and instability means weakness and unrest. To be strong men we must have faith in the integrity of something. Collectively they must have such faith if they are to make strong communities or enduring nations. Because of the absence of deep conviction we have unrest and shifting and uncertainty, and that condition reflects itself in all the concerns of men, their political concerns, their moral concerns, and their religious concerns.

UNSTABLE CONDITIONS OF THE WORLD

It needs no proof that all the nations today are politically a seething mass of unrest and instability. Morally the situation is about the same, and for the same cause.

With beliefs gone, and nothing to take their place, many have indulged the presumption that all moral values are gone and that each is left to set his own standards and to live according to his own heart's desires. That means moral anarchy. That is a notion all too prevalent over the earth today.

Others subscribe to the fallacy that men can live by ethical codes and that the so-called Christian ethics can be separated from the Christian religion in which those ethics are founded. We see the result of following either of these fallacious notions. Evil and corruption are self-destroying. They contain in themselves the seeds of their own ruin. They debase, they destroy everything they touch. Ethical codes on their part must draw their strength from the religion in which they have been founded. To try to separate them from it is like separating the twig from the root whence it has drawn its nourishment. That is true of so-called Christian ethics which were spread and accepted and took root and bore fruit as a part of the religion which Christ established.

From the breakdown of faith with resultant uncertainty and shattering of conviction it is only a short step to a scoffing cynicism about all ideals. The way is made ready for the iconoclasts, and they have not been slow to seize their advantage.

GREAT MEN DESCREDITED BY CYNICS

Once in awhile only, a great man appears upon the stage of this world or of a nation. He renders a service so signal that after the curtain has rung down upon his life and he has receded far enough into the past for time to have softened some of the harshness and imperfections which revealed themselves while he performed his part, his grateful countrymen, or perhaps the world, set him up as a symbol of the ideals he portrayed, and do him homage. Perhaps they weave some legends about his name, but what does that matter, since he has become more of a symbol than a person anyway? As an ideal he becomes an inspiration to succeeding generations throughout time. We have had in this country two such men on the political scene. One of them is George Washington. He was human, therefore, he must have had faults, but they were dwarfed into nothingness by the overtowering majesty of his virtues, and his bequest to humanity. By soul-stirring steps, he passed progressively through various commanding positions to the high pinnacle, where he sits in stainless honor, the proper object of reverence by all men who prize pure patriotism, love justice, and cherish liberty. But the cynics have been at work on him.

Sunday, April 7

Third Day

Four or five years ago an unknown man wrote what he calls a history. It is reported that he is a teacher in a college and so can prescribe his book as a text and insure its being read. He has discovered that Washington was a vain, glory-seeking mediocrity, affecting a modesty which was merely a pose for effect, without military capacity or the least trace of statesmanship. He says that Washington "never had any clear conception of the dynamic force of ideas," and "he never formulated coherent theories of government."

This newcomer in the firmament has also turned his cold and luminous eye on Abraham Lincoln. He has pierced him through, with his gimlet gaze, and has found no substance there. With one dexterous twist of his wrist, he has torn off the mantle from "honest Abe" and has left him standing bare, exposed to the cruel public gaze. His big, understanding, humanitarian heart shrivels, and he is left with only intellect enough to supply the needs of a yokel. For our new genius finds that the Lincoln-Douglas debates were "dull," and "Lincoln himself disingenuous, shifting, self-contradictory, evasive, opportunistic, deceptive; with a peasant brand of intellect, unable to grasp a complicated economic or constitutional problem; without capacity ever to understand the forces behind the party he represented; whose prose was lucid and beautiful, but charmed by its style rather than its content, whose conclusions were indefensible non sequiturs." Thus summarily is disposed of the man of whom a colleague, looking on his still form in its casket said: "Now he belongs to the ages."

I know of nothing quite so fit to apply here as the observation of President Coolidge. Angry men demanded that he do something to stop the defamers of Washington. Looking through his window to where the graceful shaft pierced the blue, President Coolidge said simply: "I see the monument still stands."

IRRELIGION BEING TAUGHT

So will it ever be with reputations founded on the rock.

But bold as this historian is, he shrinks to small size by comparison with the ambition of another who does not hesitate to reach up and pull God himself down from off his throne. This one tells us that "a new world must be born out of the dead world of the past." He wants just one all-encompassing world state, set up by social contract, which is to take complete charge of human lives, and in which parents, teachers, and church are to be mere agents to carry out the supreme will of the state, where the "myth of God, of the Bible and of Jesus Christ is to be replaced by the fact of brotherhood by social contract." Did anybody ever hear anybody complain about authoritarianism in religion?

Yet another one of them tells us that:

The things of highest value for individual experience and for the ethical standards in America will not be found out so long as intellectual leaders maintain a sensitivity over the supernatural significance of Christian mythology, or a sentimental personal attachment to the character of Jesus. It may as well be frankly recognized by American educators that the days of Christian cultural solidarity in America are over.

Now we know the worst. America is no longer to be a Christian nation.

This is all of a piece with the action of a teacher who, evidently determined to do his part about getting rid of the "myth of God," under the guise of giving what he called a "maturity test," submitted two questions: first, "Do you believe in a supreme being?" second, "Do you rely upon him for aid?" The student answered "yes," to both, and the teacher promptly marked him down as woefully immature. This same teacher, no doubt, would be very explosive if anyone taught religion in the school, but he does not have enough respect for the law, whether written or resting in a code of honor, to refrain from violating the spirit of it himself, by teaching irreligion even to the extent of disbelief in Deity.

He cannot prove that the student was wrong, yet unhesitatingly he marks him so, and so declares. Then some people complain about authoritarianism in religion. That teacher is not very smart either, for, dependent upon his caprice for graduation, the student soon learns what kind of answer the teacher wants, and gives it to him, even though he does not believe a word of it.

Now, lest anybody think that this is intended as a wholesale charge against teachers, I at once file my disclaimer. I know that in the schools are many of the most highly honorable and punctilious, who revere God and practice true religion, but the occasional ones, such as I have instanced, show what forces the church and the home and society have to meet, if they desire to preserve the stabilizing power of religious faith. Parents, at least, should know the task that is cut out for them.

CHURCH FOUNDED IN THE TRANSCENDENTAL

For two thousand years now, men have regulated their lives by the teachings of Jesus. They hold sway among five hundred millions of civilized people. Do you suppose that five hundred millions of civilized people have been held together and their lives ordered by a myth? Imposters do not make history. The transcendental may be beyond our full grasp, but no man who has lived his life in this world can shut his eyes to the fact that daily we have to accept many, many things that we cannot explain. The fact that a proposition does not admit of analysis, and taking apart and examination and setting up in its parts, does not prove that it is not a reality.

This church is founded in the transcendental; so was the early Christian Church. Jesus was the Messiah proclaimed. He was resurrected from the dead. No man can explain that. Paul had a vision on the way to Damascus. I have read where it is said that it was a spiritual vision, but he heard a voice, too. What was that?

Whether it was spiritual or some other form of vision makes not the slightest difference to me. He had a vision! And this Church rests in the declaration that Joseph Smith had a vision from heaven, that celestial beings attended him and taught him, and on the basis of their teaching, he established this Church. It has approximately a million members. Hundreds of thousands of others have died. Perhaps in the course of time, nearly two million members have adhered to a belief in the verity of his statements. That kind of thing does not come out of imposture. Men can be wrong, may be deceived, but out of insincerity this Church could not grow.

- UNFOUNDED ATTACKS ON PROPHET JOSEPH SMITH

Over the last half century, perhaps half a dozen writers have cited a court record, supposed to show that Joseph Smith made admissions which show his insincerity and his imposture. And the whole case for that is built upon that alleged court record. When you come to examine it, there is no court record at all produced. What is produced is an article in an encyclopedia, written by nobody knows whom, and obviously full of poison, or by an author full of poison, and including what purports to be a court record. Why doesn't anybody who hangs a case on a record of the court produce the record? Even that encyclopedia deleted that part of the article consisting of the alleged court record in a later publication, presumably because there was not good enough foundation for it.

There is another peculiar thing about that alleged record. It purports to be a record of a justice of the peace court. Everybody who knows anything about courts knows that justices' courts are not courts of record. They do not usually take, nor preserve as part of the record, the testimony of witnesses. There are certain essential things. It should show the charge. It should show that witnesses were sworn. It should show the findings and the sentence. This alleged record contains everything but what it ought to contain. It contains a statement of charge that is subject to objection because it states two offences, or attempts to do so. It is well-known that no man in a case has to testify against himself. No man charged criminally has to testify until a case has been made against him, but this alleged record starts out with Joseph Smith, the first witness, testifying for himself, before anybody has testified against him.

There is no record that any witness was sworn. There is the announcement that he was found guilty, but of which of the charges it is not said, and there is no sentence. That record could not have been made of the alleged trial as it proceeded. The order of occurrences prohibits it. It rests on no better foundation than the worthless affidavits which it is dragged out to support, and so we could go down the line and bit by bit tear to shreds the threads of evidence by which the alleged imposture is said to have been perpetrated.

Let's get over the idea of thinking that everything must be true because it is written in a book. It derives no sanctity from being reduced to print. It has no higher validity than the honesty of thought behind it.

I apologize for this imposition upon your time, and pray the blessings of God upon you, in the name of Jesus. Amen.

PRESIDENT GEORGE ALBERT SMITH

It is just five minutes to three—in San Francisco. (Laughter.)

This has been a very delightful experience for me to be at this conference, notwithstanding the fact that some of the dearest friends I have ever had, who were here a year ago, are not here today. We have listened to the members of the Quorum of the Twelve, and I realize that for every one now in that quorum, a very dear friend of mine and member of that group has passed away. Their places have been well filled. These brethren are really servants of the Lord, but I miss the men who are gone. Aunt Augusta Grant has sat through this conference attending most of the meetings. That blessed woman sat by the side of President Grant, helped him rear his family, and blessed this community. I am grateful to see her here today. I am sure that quite a number of elderly people are here that some of us do not know about. I mention Aunt Augusta Grant because President Grant stood here not long ago. Aunt Mary, wife of President Joseph F. Smith, is here also and is always at our meetings, and many others whom we love. I am sure they are blessed by being here, and we are blessed by their presence. It will not be long before many of us will pass on. We will not all leave as fine a record as some of those I have referred to, probably, but it is a wonderful thing to have that kind of companionship throughout life.

Just to look into your faces and see the earnestness of your lives is a joy, because that earnestness is written in your faces. I want to say to many of you that I know personally, I can never repay your kindness and helpfulness to me in many ways. I say never—I'll say I can't do it in this life, but I believe that we are living eternal lives, and perhaps some of these failures here may be remedied hereafter.

LASTING GREATNESS OF THE PROPHET JOSEPH SMITH

Much has been said in this conference about the Prophet Joseph Smith. There isn't much that I could say, except that which is good. Many of the benefits and blessings that have come to me have come through that man who gave his life for the gospel of Jesus Christ. There have been some who have belittled him, but I would like to say that those who have done so will be forgotten and their remains will go back to mother earth, if they have not already gone, and the odor of their infamy will never die, while the glory and honor and majesty and courage and fidelity manifested by the Prophet Joseph Smith will attach to his name forever. So we have no apologies to make.

It is a wonderful thing to live in an age like this when so many problems are being solved. It is also a disquieting age to live in when people find pleasure in harshness and unkindness toward those who are seeking to bless mankind.

CHOICE ASSOCIATIONS IN THE CHURCH

I am glad that I belong to a Church that has produced such men and women as this Church has produced. I have traveled approximately a million miles in the world in the interest of the gospel of Jesus Christ. I have been in many climes and in many lands and in many nations, and I have never seen any place that I thought was as rich in the sweet companionships of life as I have found in the valleys of these grand mountains and in the organizations of the Church established in other parts of the world. It is a wonderful thing to have such friendships of good, true, honorable, sweet, faithful men and women. I have often said no man in the world has been more blessed than I. From my childhood, ever since I can remember, I have never been compelled to associate with evil individuals. I have been fortunate in having my life so adjusted that I could choose the very finest men and women that could be found in the world to be my companions. This has enriched my life, and I am grateful.

THE PRIMARY ASSOCIATION

I think of my early experiences in the Primary Association. Mentioning the Primary calls to my attention the fact that it is a marvelous institution. It was the Savior of the world who said: ". . . Suffer the little children to come unto me; and forbid them not: for of such is the kingdom of God." (Mark 10: 14.) In this organization there is a program to develop little children and to give them the advantage of education, refinement, and culture equal, if not superior, to any other in the world. Personally I feel today to thank the general officers and the stake and ward officers of this organization who give their time to developing these little children. I am reminded of it because yesterday and today I see quite a number of these children sitting in the aisles, on the steps, and elsewhere, paying attention and listening to what has been going on. It is lovely to have so many little children here, and it makes me feel comfortable to have them in the audience. The Lord loves them, and I am sure we love them.

THE SUNDAY SCHOOL

And we have our great Sunday School organization. There is no such Sabbath School group in all the world as we have in the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints. It is marvelous what has been accomplished, and its teaching has been so adjusted that anybody, old or young, may find development and uplift in it. So I would like to thank those who have made it possible for me, in the Primary and in the Sunday School, to associate with men and women whose ideals are real Christian ideals, not make-believe, and who train those under their watchcare to walk uprightly before the Lord, to honor father and mother, to love one another, to be honest and true and chaste and benevolent. These are great organizations.

MUTUAL IMPROVEMENT ASSOCIATIONS

I think of what the Mutual Improvement Association has done for me. It is one of the most remarkable organizations in all the world, prepared and adjusted for those above twelve years of age. It has given me the companionship, as the other organizations did, of a little older group, but a group of the same fine quality, having faith in God, love for their fathers and their mothers, and honor and respect for those who preside over them in the Church and state and nation. What a wonderful help the Mutual Improvement Association has been to me. I feel to thank and bless those who made it possible for me to have those companionships. There are in this audience today men and women with whom I have associated in that great group for many, many years, and I would like them to know that I appreciate their love and their kindness.

THE RELIEF SOCIETY

There is another fine organization in the Church, the Relief Society, organized under the direction of a prophet of God, for the development of women. This organization is unsurpassed by any woman's organization in all the world. What a wonderful thing it is to have in each of our wards and branches, these mothers of men and women, who give their lives to uplift and bless the communities in which they live. What a blessing they are and have been to this Church and will continue to be!

THE GENEALOGICAL SOCIETY

The Genealogical Society is another marvelous organization. It has the task of gathering the names of those who have passed on, generations ago, bringing them into a great depository where they may be sorted over and classified, so that we may trace our ancestry. I said to a man one day, "You can find out all about your ancestors if you will go with me to the Genealogical Library." He said, "I don't want to know anything about them." I wouldn't either if I thought my ancestors could be traced back to an orangutan or a baboon. But like William Jennings Bryan, those who have any pride in that kind of ancestry will not connect me with their family tree. I want to say that we don't appreciate what this great organization has done in gathering our genealogy and in tying together all the family lines that have been broken and lost.

CHURCH WELFARE PROGRAM

We have our welfare program. It has been organized only a short time, and yet today is in a position to ship carloads of food, clothing, bedding, and other materials, to men and women and children on the other side of the sea, who are starving and freezing to death for the various things that we have in abundance, gathered by that great organization.

This Church and its organization prepare us for the kingdom of heaven if anything does that is in this world. So today, as I stand here and look into your faces, I realize what the gospel of Jesus Christ has done for me. I have no words to express my gratitude to God for the ministry of this Church and the blessings of its members to me as an individual; then multiply that by what it has done for all the rest of you.

It is a wonderful thing to go through life, hand in hand with the Master of heaven and earth, and this Church comes as near giving me this privilege as anything can do in mortality. I am grateful as I look around this group and see what God hath wrought for us, and I thank these elderly men and women who have borne the burden in the heat of the day and carried on, that we who have come on might have the blessing of a knowledge of the purpose of life to prepare us for eternal happiness.

CHURCH SCHOOL SYSTEM

We have our great educational institutions, our schools and seminaries, where our sons and daughters may not only be taught the rudiments of education but may be taught the fundamentals of eternal happiness. I am thankful that Karl G. Maeser, when I was only a child, put into my life a part of that which goes to make up the organization of the great Church school system of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints. There are many things that I might mention, but these are just some that come to my mind as I stand here.

OUR MISSIONARY OPPORTUNITIES

As we approach the conclusion of this great conference I have only good will in my heart for mankind. I haven't any animosity in my heart toward any living human being. I know some that I wish would behave themselves a little better than they do, but that is their loss, not mine. If I can get my arm around them and help them back on the highway of happiness by teaching them the gospel of Jesus Christ, my happiness will be increased thereby. That is the purpose of the missionary work of this great Church. I would like to say to the brethren who are mission presidents, you have a real responsibility in your various fields. You do not have very many missionaries from Zion as yet, but they are coming. I want to say that you will have all you can do to take care of them and train and develop them, as well as to assist the local people who have been so faithful and helpful during these long trying times. The letter we read from Brother Benson today indicates that many of the people over there are nearly starving and freezing to death, but the thing they are thinking about apparently, as indicated by his letter, is not how they may have a palace on earth, but how they may help other people to enjoy a mansion on high. That is what the gospel does for us. It is not what we have that makes us happy; it is not the material things of life that enrich our lives; but it is what we are. The nearer we are like our Heavenly Father and his beloved Son Jesus Christ, the happier we are. Surely, therefore, not any man or woman under the sound of my voice, or in the world who understands, will hesitate to go out and teach these people who do not understand, and radiate sunshine. You cannot drive people to do things which are right, but you can love them into doing them, if your example is of such a character that they can see you mean what you say.

GRATITUDE FOR HELPFULNESS OF ASSOCIATES

I thank my brethren and my associates for their help and their kindness. When I think of what a weak, frail individual I am to be called to stand in the midst of this great Church, I realize how much I need the help of every soul that is in it, if I am to succeed; so I thank my brethren, my faithful counselors, who have helped me in the unusual experience of becoming accustomed to a great responsibility. I am grateful to my brethren of the Quorum of the Twelve, the Patriarch, the Assistants to the Twelve, the First Council of the Seventy, the Presiding Bishopric—all these men who are servants of the Lord and who are seeking to keep his commandments and teach us the way of eternal life. I am grateful to them, and I invoke upon them, and upon all of you, my Father's children, here or wherever you may be, the blessings of peace and love and joy, and the companionship of the Spirit of God, and in the end eternal life in the celestial kingdom. I pray that that may be our privilege. When the Lamb's book of life is opened and the names of those are recorded who are to inherit the celestial kingdom, I hope and pray that you and all those you love, all these sons and daughters of our Heavenly Father who are associated with you here, may have their names recorded there—not one missing. If that is the case, how happy we will be throughout the ages of eternity. Thanks to the prophets of old, to our Heavenly Father who sent them, thanks to his beloved Son Jesus Christ who died that we might live again, thanks to Joseph Smith whose name has been belittled by some ignoramuses in the world, that is, they have sought to belittle him, but they cannot. Thanks to him who was willing to lay down his life and seal his testimony with his blood as evidence of the fact that he knew whereof he had spoken. God bless you, my brethren and sisters; may peace abide with you in your hearts and in your homes. Love one another;

Sunday, April 7

Third Day

love mankind; reach out to those who need you. If we do that happiness such as can be found in no other way will be our portion.

God grant that it may be, I humbly ask in the name of Jesus Christ our Lord. Amen.

President George Albert Smith:

The Choir will now sing: "Great and Marvelous Are Thy Works, O God." The closing prayer will be offered by President George H. Holt of the North Davis Stake, after which this Conference will be adjourned for six months.

In the meantime, brethren and sisters, let us see how much good we can do in six months.

I would just like one more word. I am sure that there are quite a number of elderly people who are here that some of us do not know about. I mentioned Aunt Augusta Grant because President Grant sat here not long ago, but Aunt Mary, the wife of Joseph F. Smith is also here, and is always at our meetings, and many others we love, and I am sure they are blessed by being here and we are blessed by their presence.

The Tabernacle Choir sang "Great and Marvelous Are Thy Works, O God."

President George H. Holt of the North Davis Stake offered the benediction. Conference adjourned sine die.

The Salt Lake Tabernacle Choir was in attendance at the Sunday morning and afternoon sessions and presented musical numbers at those meetings. The Tabernacle Choir male chorus was present at the General Priesthood meeting Saturday evening and rendered musical numbers on that occasion. J. Spencer Cornwall, Conductor, directed the singing of the Choir and the men's chorus.

The Relief Society Singing Mothers of the Salt Lake Region, Florence Jepperson Madsen, conductor, rendered musical numbers at the Friday morning and afternoon sessions.

At the Saturday morning and afternoon meetings the Manti Choirs, under the direction of Ellis E. Johnson, furnished the musical numbers.

The music of the Tabernacle Choir and Organ broadcast, Sunday morning, 9:30 to 10:00, was directed by J. Spencer Cornwall, Alexander Schreiner was at the organ, and the spoken word was by Richard L. Evans.

Accompaniments and interludes on the great organ were played by Alexander Schreiner and Frank W. Asper.

Stenographic notes of the Conference were taken by Frank W. Otterstrom and Joseph Anderson.

Joseph Anderson
Clerk of the Conference.

AND EVENTS OF HIS TIME

By Bryant S. Hinckley

As the polished facets of a diamond flash back brilliantly the rainbow of colors from the light which plays upon them, so do certain historic characters reflect the light and color of their times.

Daniel Hanmer Wells was one of these.

Bryant S. Hinckley, always illuminating and inspirational, turns the spot light of appraisal and appreciation upon a distinctive character in the great drama of Mormon history.

This book is in fact a new approach to the study of Church History. It offers the events of the history of Mormonism as one of the principal actors saw them happen and as he acted in, and was acted upon by them.

The book is a biography and more, a tribute of appreciation and more—it is a history throbbing with the pulse beats of great personalities as they struggle through one crisis after another.

His life ran the long span which included actively within it labors of love for and loyalty to every man who has been president of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints.

Daniel H. Wells saw it all happen: The rise of the Church in the Middle West; the glory of Nauvoo; the catastrophe of the martyrdom; the pain, travail, and power of pioneering; the building of the West; the crises of pre-statehood days; and the long, hard pull which finally established the Mormon people on the heights where they are now building.

Published privately by President Heber J. Grant, as a tribute to the loyal friend of his youth, it will stand as a welcome addition to the faith-promoting literature of the Church.

FIRST DAY MORNING MEETING

The first meeting of the Conference was held Friday morning, October 4, at 10 o'clock. President George Albert Smith presided and conducted the services.

Every available seat in the great auditorium and galleries was occupied, and in addition many were standing in the aisles and doorways.

President George Albert Smith:

This is a beautiful sight, the Tabernacle filled to capacity.

This is the opening session of the 117th Semi-Annual Conference of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints. We are convened in the great Tabernacle on Temple Square in Salt Lake City.

There are on the stand this morning all of the General Authorities of the Church, except Elder Stephen L. Richards of the Council of the Twelve, who is detained at home by his doctor's orders; Elder Ezra Taft Benson, also of the Council of the Twelve, who is in Europe in charge of the European Mission; and the Patriarch to the Church, also absent on account of illness.

Elder Joseph Anderson is the Clerk of the Conference.

This full service will be broadcast over Station KSL, Salt Lake City, as will also the service this afternoon beginning at 2:00 p.m. The services tomorrow, Saturday, at 10:00 a.m. and at 2:00 p.m., will likewise be broadcast over KSL, and also the two services on Sunday at 10:00 a.m. and 2:00 p.m. These same sessions will be broadcast over KSUB at Cedar City, and KID at Idaho Falls will broadcast the 10:00 a.m. sessions each day. The Priesthood meeting on Saturday evening will not be broadcast.

The singing today will be by a combined chorus of the Relief Society Singing Mothers of the Jordan Valley Region. Sister Florence Jepperson Madsen is the conductor, and Elder Alexander Schreiner is the organist. The first song will be; "I Will Exalt Thee, O Lord," by Harrison.

The opening prayer will be offered by President Alando B. Ballantyne of the Southern Arizona Stake.

The Relief Society Singing Mothers of the Jordan Valley Region sang: "I Will Exalt Thee, O Lord."

Elder Alando B. Ballantyne, President of the Southern Arizona Stake, offered the invocation.

The Relief Society Singing Mothers sang: "O Lord Most Holy," Franck.

PRESIDENT GEORGE ALBERT SMITH

I have sometimes said to my friends in different parts of the world, when referring to these great gatherings, the annual and semi-annual conferences of the Church, that they will see no other spectacle like them in all the world, and I believe this to be true.

UPLIFT OF GENERAL CONFERENCES

These conferences offer the opportunity for the officers of the Church from all parts of the world to meet and to become acquainted with one another, and to be edified under the influence of the Spirit of the Lord. Fortunate are we that those who came to this valley in an early day erected this splendid structure. There is not anything like it to be found elsewhere, a building that will make comfortable approximately ten thousand people in which all can hear the speaker. Of course with our modern devices, we can hear very well.

We come together, not just to visit, not just to be seen; but as sons and daughters of the Living God, we assemble in his name, and he has never failed to fulfil his promise made of old, that when two or three shall meet together in his name, he will be there and that to bless them. And so we look forward to these gatherings every six months and have joy in being able to go back to our homes with the statement that the Lord was with us, and blessed us, and we enjoyed the power of his Spirit.

EARLY CONFERENCES

Of course this is only a little handful of the membership of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints compared to the great number that belong to it. The first conference of the Church was held on June 9, 1830, and there were eighteen present. The second conference was held a few months later with about the same number present; then the first annual conference of the Church was held June 3, 1831, just one year later, and there were present in that conference forty-three elders, ten priests, and ten teachers, making a total of sixty-three present.

In those days the meetings were held for the officers of the Church, and the public was not generally invited to attend, but later in Nauvoo, it became customary to invite the public, and from that time on, each six months, the membership of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints have been invited to meet with the Lord in a general conference of such a character as the one we assemble in this morning.

As I look out into this congregation and see the men and women who are here, I recognize those that I have known, many of them from my childhood. I have been in many of your homes and have been entertained most graciously, when I have been visiting the stakes of Zion and the mission field. Every once in a while we are able to get together here and enjoy the companionship of one another, and more than that, to feel the power that comes from our Heavenly Father in fulfilment of his promise that he will be with us.

UNSATISFACTORY CONDITION OF WORLD

The conditions in the world today are anything but desirable. After nearly six thousand years of teaching by the Lord through his prophets, the world is still in a pitiable condition, with about two-thirds of the population not accepting the God of Abraham, Isaac and Jacob. They have their own deities whom they worship, their own false gods who have kept them far from the truth during the centuries that have elapsed. Of the other one-third of the population of this world, so-called Christians, about fifty percent do not have membership in a church or if enrolled, they are inactive, so that it leaves a small portion of the people of the world who have, after all these years of advice and counsel, taken advantage of their opportunities. Unless the people of this world hasten their repentance and turn to the Lord, the conditions that we have recently passed through in this great world war will be intensified in wickedness and sorrow. So this morning, my dear brothers and sisters—and I speak that word “dear” with all my heart—I am grateful for your fellowship and your companionship. As we meet together, how thankful we ought to be, how grateful our souls should be when we contemplate our surroundings and our wonderful opportunities!

... Come out of her, my people, that ye be not partakers of her sins, and that ye receive not of her plagues. (Rev. 18:4.)

was written about two thousand years ago.

SPIRIT OF MISSIONARY SERVICE

The gospel of Jesus Christ was restored in the year 1830, after centuries of darkness had passed. When the call was given, the missionaries of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints went out into the world—not to criticize others, not to find fault, but to say to our Father's other children:

Keep all the good that you have received, keep all the truth that you have learned, all that has come to you in your homes, in your institutions of learning, under your many facilities for education, keep it all; and then let us divide with you additional truths that have been revealed by our Heavenly Father in our day.

Under that ministry, beginning, as I have said, in that conference when there were only sixty-three members of the priesthood present, there have been thousands upon thousands of missionaries; more than seventy thousand have gone out into the world, and in love and kindness they have gone from door to door saying to our Father's other children:

Let us reason with you; let us explain to you something that we are sure will make you happy as it has made us happy!

That is the history of the missionary work of the Church with which we are identified. Today we have missionaries scattered in many parts of the earth; some of them are in the armed services and rejoicing in their testimonies, they have been glad to divide the truth with those with whom they came in contact.

SHORT WAVE BROADCAST TO JAPAN

Just a few weeks ago I was invited to have a little visit with some of our servicemen who are in Kyoto, Japan. One of our brethren here in the valley telephoned me he had a licensed shortwave station and said, "If you will come down, Brother Smith, I will let you talk to the men and women in the armed services who are absent from their homes and are now over there serving the Government of the United States." I did not know just what it was going to be like. I went to his little station, and after a moment or two he called a station and talked back and forth with the man at the other end. That was the Philippine Islands, so he said: "We are not visiting with you today. We are going to visit Japan." Then he switched from there to one of the other islands in the Pacific and told them the same thing. And then when he was ready, after a little conversation with the station in Japan, he said: "Now, Brother Smith, there are two hundred and three members of the Church that will hear your voice as soon as you speak."

So I stood there for fifteen or twenty minutes and talked to them of the blessings of God bestowed upon them, of their lives being preserved during a terrible war, and of the love of those who are here waiting for their return. I urged them to keep the commandments of God and assured them that there was no other road to happiness but by keeping the commandments of God. I encouraged them to retain the fine records that they had already made and to come home clean and sweet to their loved ones with the favor of the Lord upon them. When I had finished, they took their turn, and several of these men said: "Thank you, Brother Smith. It has been a great encouragement to us to hear a voice from the tops of the Rocky Mountains, one that some of us are familiar with, and to know that you are thinking of us and are anxious for us. We will not let you down."

I thought that was a beautiful experience, and that is just one of many that we have. Personally, I have traveled more than a million miles in the world to divide the gospel of Jesus Christ with my fellowmen, but that was the first time I ever delivered a religious address to a congregation seven thousand miles away. Short-wave broadcasting will continue to improve, and it will not be long until, from this pulpit and other places that will be provided, the servants of the Lord will be able to deliver messages to isolated groups who are so far away they cannot be reached. In that way and other ways, the gospel of Jesus Christ our Lord, the only power of God unto salvation in preparation for the celestial kingdom, will be heard in all parts of the world, and many of you who are here will live to see that day.

We are here today as a great family waiting upon the Lord. I see people in this house who are farmers, mechanics, who are active in the various pursuits of life. I see those who represent us in Washington and at home. I am glad to see here those who represent us as officers in our city. We are all sitting under the same roof, without differences, all having the same opportunity, and if we have come with the Spirit of the Lord resting upon us, each of us will be fed the bread of life, not by the individual who speaks, but by the Lord who gives voice.

CONTRIBUTIONS OF RELIEF SOCIETY SISTERS

I want to congratulate this fine group of singers who have sung for us thus far. It is lovely to know that our sisters are so interested in the work of the Lord. I did not have the pleasure of being in this hall yesterday, but I am informed that there were as many women here in this building as there are today, or nearly so. The sisters are active. I would like to say to you husbands, fathers, and brothers, these women in the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints are a great strength to the Church.

Yesterday the great national Relief Society of the Church, the first great women's organization and the oldest now in existence, met in conference. Their representatives were here from all parts of this country and other countries, just as anxious to be what our Heavenly Father would have them be as we who are here today.

REWARDS OF MISSIONARY WORK

I am lifted up in my heart today as I look into the faces of my brethren. Some of them have been in the mission field for many, many years. They have remained away from home and reared their families. They are back to visit with us in conference, and ready to go again if they may be needed. That is the spirit of the gospel of Jesus Christ. A mission president who had been away from us about ten years was released and came home recently. He and his wife reared their three children down in the South Pacific among the descendants of Father Lehi. When he came home, he was glad to come back to this marvelous country that we live in and to associate with his family; and then when the matter of going into the mission field was talked about briefly, he was ready to turn around and go right back.

That is the spirit of the gospel of Jesus Christ, to labor without a salary, to labor without the comforts that we sometimes have at home, but to labor for the salvation of the human family, to bring our Father's other children to a knowledge of the truth. The great reward that missionaries expect as the result of these years of service is to have the companionship of these men and women that they have brought into the Church in the world, the companionship of their own families that they love, right here upon this earth throughout the ages of eternity.

I would like to say to you mission presidents that you are doing a wonderful work. The Lord has blessed you and magnified you, and the work of the Church has only just begun. All of us may have to go again and again into the mission field, but it is the one way that we can lay up treasures in heaven and be sure that they will await us when we go to the other side.

PRAYER FOR SAINTS

May the Lord add his blessing. May we so live that every day of our lives the world will be better for our having lived in it. May we so live that our neighbors and friends will be constrained to seek after the wisdom of our Heavenly Father and his righteous purposes and thereby gain happiness, not only here but hereafter.

I pray that in our hearts and in our homes there may abide that spirit of love, of patience, of kindness, of charity, of helpfulness that enriches our lives and that makes the world brighter and better because of it.

I pray that we may continue to rejoice together under the influence of the Lord here until the end of the conference, and when that time comes that we may go to our homes renewed in our determination to keep the commandments of the Lord, that our happiness may be perfected as a result of our righteousness. If we will do that, then our visit here will not have been in vain. On the contrary, it will be a tremendous blessing to us.

I pray that the Lord will bless you in your hearts and in your homes. I pray for those of our people who are isolated in distant lands, far from the organized wards and branches of the Church, many of them almost alone in great communities. I pray that the Lord will bless them and that they may feel today the influences that we enjoy here, and in the due time of our Heavenly Father that they may be permitted to "come out of her," as the Lord indicated his people should do, prior to the winding-up scene when this earth will be cleansed and purified by fire, when all mortality will be taken away and only those who are prepared to dwell in the celestial kingdom under the guidance of our Heavenly Father, under the leadership of our Lord and Master, Jesus Christ, will be here. I pray that they and we and all the men and women of the world who have the desire to live righteously and are keeping the commandments of God may be among that number.

I pray that our homes may be sanctified by the righteousness of our lives, that the adversary may have no power to come there and destroy the children of our homes or those who dwell under our roofs. If we will honor God and keep his commandments, our homes will be sacred, the adversary will have no influence, and we will live in happiness and peace until the winding-up scene in mortality and we go to receive our reward in immortality.

God bless you; peace be with you; joy and satisfaction abide with you all, henceforth and forever, I humbly pray in the name of Jesus Christ, our Lord. Amen.

ELDER JOHN A. WIDTSOE

Of the Council of the Twelve Apostles

My dear brethren and sisters: With you I have listened with great interest and profit to the address of the man who stands at the head of the Church at this time. I am always glad, with you, to be under the leadership of inspired men. The world is hungering, I believe, for that kind of leadership.

DISTURBED CONDITION OF WORLD

The world is in a disturbed condition. There is discouragement everywhere. No man seems to see the end from the beginning. I have pondered in my heart for some time what my obligation is in this state of worldly confusion. What is the obligation of my Church, the restored Church of Christ in these latter days? Perhaps all of us have entertained such thoughts in these unhappy days.

There is a world cry for peace; everybody wants peace. In newspapers, magazines, books, from the public platform come cries for peace. As far back as I can remember, there has never been such a worldwide appeal for peace among the children of men. Yet it begins to look as if we are farther away from peace today than we were during the heavy and difficult war years.

It is a curious commentary on human nature that men who cry for peace look upon peace as something that may be picked as an apple from a tree, something that lies about within easy reach of humanity. If I pick an apple from a tree, I have first planted the tree, cared for it, watered it, brought it to maturity. Then in due time I may have the fruit.

So with peace. It is not a thing by itself to be picked up casually; but it is the fruit of something precedent. Like the tree, something must be planted and nourished and cared for, if we are to obtain peace.

PEACE RESULT OF OBEDIENCE TO GOSPEL

It is a marvel to thinking men that those who write on peace fail to understand that it can be obtained only by the use of a body of principles which, if obeyed, in time would give us peace. We cannot begin with peace; we must begin with the philosophy or the system which, if accepted and honored, will lead to peace. Failure to understand that seems to be the error of the nations at this time, of the organizations and conventions of nations, assembled in great meetings on this side and the other side of the Atlantic. They have so far failed to touch upon the foundations of peace, upon the issues which are the aids to peace. They clamor for the peace they want, without yielding obedience to the methods by which that peace may be obtained.

The Latter-day Saints, from the beginning of our history, have taught that the good things of life, above all, peace, can come only through acceptance of the gospel of the Lord Jesus Christ. He was the Prince of Peace. He is the Prince of Peace. It is only as the men and women of the world, all children of God, accept the gospel of the Son of God that peace shall come to rule and reign and be established upon earth. That has been our message from the beginning of the restoration of the gospel in this day. We still proclaim without hesitation, that there is only one way to peace, one way to the perfect human happiness, the way of the gospel, paved with the principles that constitute the gospel.

We make a further claim, brethren and sisters. It is a claim that often makes us hesitant in stating it, because it is so vast in its meaning, in its implications. We claim that this people, this Church, organized by God's own voice in this generation, possesses the only system of truth containing all of the gospel of the Lord Jesus Christ. Then, by that token, there can be no full peace, no complete happiness upon earth, until the men and women of the world accept the great latter-day message. We stand humbly before this claim, I know, but it is our claim. The Lord has said so.

He has said further, that the time shall come in these latter days when every ear shall hear and every eye shall see, and every heart be penetrated by the eternal message of the gospel, and that this great message shall be delivered by "the mouths of my disciples, whom I have chosen in these last days," (D. & C. 1:4) those spoken of by President Smith in his opening address to this conference.

OUR OBLIGATION TO TEACH THE TRUTH

Now, then, if all this be true, in my thinking about these things, there lies my obligation. It is my divine obligation somehow, through my feeble efforts, and through yours, and through all the members of the Church, to teach all the world the truth of the restored gospel of the Lord Jesus Christ. I must try to plant this truth in the hearts of men and women. I must contribute every day in my way, as best I can, toward the teaching of the truth which alone can bring peace to our unhappy world. It is a tremendous obligation when we view it as a whole; but with the help of the Lord easy to meet, if we take the tasks one by one, always keeping our obligation in mind, as we travel through life.

Missionary work must grow in foreign fields, as never before; missionary work at home must increase as never before. We shall employ every modern device—the telephone, telegraph, radio, printing press, the short wave systems as mentioned by President Smith, and the other devices that are coming. We shall use them all in our attempt to win men and women from wickedness to righteousness, from untruth or near truth to full and complete truth which is the gospel of the Lord Jesus Christ.

This Church is not merely for me and for you who are in the Church. I must begin with myself, undoubtedly. My own salvation comes first; but unless I give of my strength to the winning of other souls for God, my own salvation will be incomplete. That applies to all of us. It cannot be otherwise if we follow the message given us this morning by our prophet and leader. We have a calling, not merely to build the Church of Christ, and to save ourselves therein, but also a commission to save the whole world. We are, as it were, set apart, consecrated for that great purpose. All of Israel must remember, every man or woman who enters the waters of baptism must keep in mind, and every child that comes into the Church must be taught that by the ordinance of baptism we accept the great and divine commission to serve the Lord in building his Church. It will then be easy to keep the commandments of God, to lay aside or meet courageously the temptations that face us. To stand alone, saying selfishly, "I have received the gospel; it is good to be a Latter-day Saint" will not be doing our duty; but, when we say, "Now, I have received this great blessing. I shall pass it on to others"; there comes the flowering in the hearts of men of the gospel of the Lord Jesus Christ.

COMMISSION TO SUPPLANT EVIL WITH GOOD

We are not as other people; we are different. We are humble accepters of the truth, yielders to God's will and word, under a commission to change the whole world, from evil to good. It is a great commission. It has been our commission from the beginning.

The great men who led this Church from the beginning have voiced this commission or calling to which we are consecrated. When we talk about this commission, about our duty or obligation, let us not forget the lesson of these mighty men. In the midst of confusion let us look back to the labors of those who have gone before us, our fathers who founded the Church under God's direction, who toiled from city to city, across the plains and the desert to build a commonwealth. They left behind them, not necessarily the heritage of their methods, for the world has changed, but the heritage of their undaunted, unchanging spirit. We must be as eager to fulfil God's word as they were in their day. We must do that, my brethren and sisters, if we are to fulfil and meet our full obligation in this difficult age. To those who catch the spirit of this obligation, of this commission, of this calling to a great people will come strength to resist, as I have said, the temptations of the world. It will be easy to reject the cocktail; the cigar can be laid aside easily; to divide with the Lord in tithing will not seem difficult; to converse with the Lord in prayer will be a joyful experience. Men are changed and transformed who enter into partnership with God in helping to establish his great cause upon the face of the earth.

GOD'S WORK IS ETERNAL

This work is not an ordinary cause. It is God's cause. It is not a cause for a day. It is a cause for the eternities, both gone and coming. We are working out an eternal project, you and I, all of us. We of today must do as well as those who went before us, a bit better perhaps, for new opportunities have come to us in our day. We should do better in this Church in the cause of righteousness than grandfather or great-grandfather. More light has come, more opportunity is given, more means are at our command. We should do better. And we all, especially the youth of the Church, should dream about the future of the Church, and give our own earnest endeavors to the fulfilment of our commissions.

These are the thoughts that have been running through my mind, and crystalized during President Smith's address this morning.

I want to bear this testimony to you that as I have traveled through the world, and while I have not traveled as much as President Smith, I have traveled far and wide, I have found thousands of people not acquainted with the gospel; good, clean, wholesome people, walking in darkness, who are looking for light, who, misled by untruths, are looking for truth, and unhappy because of the untruths handed to them by tradition. There are a vast congregation of men and women throughout the world, in every country, of every creed and color, waiting for us and our great message. The field is ripe unto harvest.

Now I pray, my brethren and sisters, that we may rise in our strength, the strength of Zion, and fill and fulfil our commission. Let us forget at least a part of the time the daily duties that hold us down, and give ourselves to thoughts and actions, in building actively under our great obligation, the great latter-day kingdom of God, the Almighty Father. May it be so, I pray in the name of the Lord Jesus Christ. Amen.

ELDER THOMAS E. MCKAYAssistant to the Council of the Twelve Apostles*

President Smith, counselors, and my brethren and sisters: It has been my privilege since our return from Europe in the spring of 1940, to visit three of the missions and nearly all the one hundred and fifty-eight stakes in the Church, and participate in their quarterly conferences. This is an opportunity that I have appreciated very much.

COMMENDATION FOR GOOD WORK

It is a fine thing for one to keep busy, at least, it is a fine thing for me. Work is a great blessing. Someone has said that even a mule can't kick while he's pulling. It has been very interesting as well as instructive to get better acquainted with you fine stake and ward leaders, to see you in action, to observe how you do things, and I was going to say, how some of you don't do things, but that wouldn't be fair, because all of you, as far as I have been able to observe, are doing a splendid job. Of course, some of you are doing better than others. For example, in some of the stakes we find but very few young people in the meetings, not only in our conferences, but also in the sacrament meetings, and in other stakes nearly half of the congregations are made up of young people of twenty-one or under; most of them are there because they have been asked and trained to furnish the music; others have been given definite assignments. In some of the quarterly conferences we have had as high as three hundred young people, furnishing very excellent music. An Aaronic Priesthood chorus of two hundred thirty-eight clear-toned young voices gave some very choice selections in the general priesthood session of the conference; one of the numbers was so outstanding they were requested to repeat it in the evening session. A number of the stakes have choruses of from fifty to two hundred fifty voices made up entirely of Aaronic Priesthood members. In one stake, an adult Aaronic Priesthood chorus furnished at least part of the musical program. May I take this opportunity to compliment the Presiding Bishopric of our Church upon the splendid efforts they are putting forth in behalf of both the boys and men in the Aaronic Priesthood. After they had made a survey of the Aaronic Priesthood members, and it was shown that there were nearly as many men (that is, men over twenty-one), as boys under twenty-one, they set about to discover the cause—the source that brought about such a condition, and are now trying to remove the cause. They are fencing the cliff. Many of you know the poem on "The Fence or the Ambulance," that illustrates what I mean by discovering and removing the source of evil.

"THE FENCE OR THE AMBULANCE"

The community was divided into two factions: one favoring the fence around the cliff; the other, the ambulance down in the valley. And the ambulance, it seemed, had the majority; and so they put the ambulance down in the valley. Then an old sage remarked, "It's a marvel to me that people give more attention to repairing results than to stopping the cause, when they had much better aim at prevention."

"Let us stop at the source, all this mischief," cried he,
 "Come, neighbors and friends, let us rally,
 "If the cliff we will fence, we might almost dispense
 "With the ambulance down in the valley."

"Oh, he's a fanatic," the others rejoined,
 "Dispense with the ambulance, never!
 "He'd dispense with all charities, too, if he could,
 "No, we'll support them forever."

But the sensible few who are practical, too,
 Will not bear with such nonsense much longer;
 They believe that prevention is better than cure,
 And their party will soon be the stronger.

Better guide well the young than reclaim them when old,
 For the voice of true wisdom is calling,
 To rescue the fallen is good,
 But it is best to prevent other people from falling.

Better close up the source of temptation and crime,
 Than deliver from dungeon and galley;
 Better put a strong fence around the top of the cliff,
 Than an ambulance down in the valley.

PRESIDING BISHOPRIC FENCING THE CLIFF

It is shown by a survey made by the Presiding Bishopric that as a rule the twelve boys in the deacon's quorum remained and were worthy to be ordained teachers, but some of them were lost as teachers, and more of them as priests; thus, the adult Aaronic Priesthood group kept getting larger, and the Church and the State were put to more expense and trouble in furnishing more ambulances. The Presiding Bishopric is doing a splendid job in removing the source—in fencing the cliff. The bishops in the wards are also carrying out a program of definite assignments. The bishop, who is president of the priest's quorum, receives the priests from the teacher's quorum as a body, and this group of boys are made to feel that they belong to the bishop—are his special bodyguard, and they are prepared to be recommended to be ordained elders in a body—not one of them left behind to add to the number of adult Aaronic Priesthood members, and the number of ambulances can be reduced.

PRIVILEGE OF THE BALLOT

It is a fine thing to study causes. Ambulances, so-called, are increasing in so many ways, and they will continue to do so until the sources are discovered and removed. The ballot is a most convenient method that we have in this great free country of ours to remove causes or sources that make it necessary to pay thousands of dollars for ambulances (you can name the nuisances that ambulances stand for), and may I urge with all the emphasis possible that every person show his appreciation for his citizenship in this land of freedom by voting every time the opportunity presents itself, and thereby help to keep this country free. I feel so keenly about this matter of voting that I wish at times when I see the indifference manifest by so many of our people that some penalty could be imposed upon those who neglect this God-given right. I feel that every person who is entitled to vote and doesn't do so is not a good loyal citizen. And especially is that true of members of the Church. They are not only not good citizens, but I think that they are not good Latter-day Saints, and should be very much ashamed.

It may be wise for me, right here, to get back to the discussion of "The Fence or the Ambulance," as exemplified by the Presiding Bishopric. These brethren are not only getting at the source, taking care of these boys, but they are also trying to offer a remedy for those who have already fallen over the cliff. They have prepared a definite outline—a course of study—a book of songs—have assigned these adult members to see that everyone is made comfortable as far as seating and ventilation are concerned. Many of them are also assigned to welfare projects. In one ward in a southern stake that I visited, every member of the adult Aaronic Priesthood was reported active. In another stake, a ward sent down quite a large group, eight men who had qualified themselves as worthy of having received the Melchizedek Priesthood, and they came to the temple in a body and were sealed to their wives and their children for eternity, and not just "until death do ye part."

RETURNED SERVICEMEN

I am very happy that the Presidency of the Church appointed a servicemen's committee to look after our one hundred thousand servicemen. Prevention again is better than cure. You can't estimate the good that this committee and the coordinators have accomplished, putting their arms around our servicemen, guiding them over dangerous places, talking to them at the crossroads. I am delighted also that President Hugh B. Brown has been appointed to work at Brigham Young University to continue his splendid work with the servicemen and women. It might be well if such a committee were appointed also to look after the hundreds of young people who are scattered throughout the land, some of them away from organized wards, stakes, or branches, many of them occupying very responsible positions in business, politics, education, and various other professions. These are fine young men, intelligent, and I am sure that the mission presidents would welcome men especially qualified to help them in contacting these very intelligent young men who in the words of the Ancient in Three Wise Fools, have reached the age of reason.

PRESIDENT SMITH—AMBASSADOR OF GOOD WILL

These young people are surely worth saving, and I am very delighted that President Smith—our ambassador of good will—is leading the way in this respect; in his kind, tolerant, sweet spirit he has put himself out to speak to many such persons. I know personally of two or three who, because of President Smith's interest in them, are now using the talents with which they are abundantly blessed, for the Church instead of against it. President Smith, like those presidents who have preceded him, is the right man in the right place at the right time. He is the prophet for us in this day.

The Savior also set a very splendid example for all of us to follow. Saul, another brilliant young fellow who had arrived at the age of reason, was so sure of himself that he was persecuting the Christians, even assisting in the stoning of one of the prophets, but that did not deter the Savior from extending his hand, speaking to Saul, and eventually Saul became Paul, one of the greatest of the apostles, the great apostle to the Gentiles. Our Lord also left the ninety and nine and found supreme joy in rescuing the lost one.

May God bless us all, brethren and sisters, with wisdom, especially you stake and ward leaders, in our efforts to discover and remove causes, sources of evil and at the same time keep working diligently to cure and remove the evils that do now exist, I pray in the name of the Lord, Jesus Christ. Amen.

ELDER MARK E. PETERSEN

Of the Council of the Twelve Apostles

JUVENILE DELINQUENCY

A man we shall call Bishop Brown, for the sake of anonymity, sat reading his evening newspaper and came across one item that especially interested him. After reading it he said to his wife who sat near by, "I see that Jones boy has finally gone to jail. It's a wonder he didn't go sooner, considering the record he had." And then he recalled that this Jones boy, when he used to go to Church, was rather rowdy and hard to handle. Later he became a truant at high school, sluffed his classes to go out joy riding with the boys, and then later with a group began to steal automobiles. Then, one night when the boys were short of money, a few of them decided to rob a store. It was for this crime that they were being sent to jail. The bishop, turning to his wife said, "It's certainly terrible, isn't it, how the young people carry on these days?"

This was a favorite theme with the bishop. He would talk about it quite frequently in his Sunday evening meetings and would quote statistics to prove his point. Among the statistics he would use were some like these:

The F.B.I. reports that the first six months of 1946 show the highest rate of increase in crime in the United States of any period since crime figures have been compiled on a national basis. The increase was fifty percent higher in rural areas than in cities, contrary to the prevailing opinion. More arrests were made among seventeen-year-olds than in any other age group. In 1945, arrests of boys, seventeen years of age or under, increased twenty-nine percent over the three-year average for the period 1939 to 1941. Arrests of girls, seventeen or under, for this same period showed an increase of one hundred and fifteen percent.

What is the picture in Utah? Figures provided by the state child welfare department reveal that from 1936 to 1944, the number of cases referred to the juvenile courts in Utah increased more than three hundred percent. Stealing by juveniles in Utah nearly doubled during this period. Truancy more than doubled. Children listed as ungovernable increased more than four times, and juvenile traffic violations went up twelve times.

Whose children are these? Are they yours or someone else's? In the first six months of 1946, the little town of Layton, Utah, had fifty-one cases of juvenile delinquency, serious enough to be referred to the juvenile courts. Clearfield had thirty-three; Price had fifty-one; Cedar City, thirty-five; Fillmore, twenty-two; Brigham City, thirty-seven; Murray, twenty-seven; Vernal, forty; Provo, one hundred seventy-eight; Ogden, four hundred eighty-one; Salt Lake City, one thousand forty-eight; and many other cases distributed over the remaining parts of the state in proportion.

RESPONSIBILITY OF PARENTS AND BISHOPS

When Bishop Brown would quote these figures to his people, he emphasized the fact that national authorities in child welfare declared that a large part of the responsibility for this condition rested upon the parents, and the bishop made a grand appeal to the parents to improve their home life in order to hold on to their children and avoid as much of this delinquency as possible.

I do not in any way wish to minimize the responsibility of the parents with regard to their children, but if Bishop Brown had read further into the reports of these national experts, he would have discovered that these same authorities declare that a large part of the responsibility for the juvenile delinquency in America must also be borne by the local leaders of various churches; that the religious leaders of our communities must shoulder a good part of the responsibility. Some of the young people who had gone astray came from that bishop's own ward. Did he ever connect their delinquency with his own work as a bishop? Did he connect it at all with the work being done by his Sunday School, Primary, Mutual Improvement Associations, or Aaronic Priesthood leaders? Did he trace the difficulty in which these young people found themselves to any failure on the part of the leadership of the various organizations in his ward to carry out successfully the youth program of the Church?

The good bishop forgot that his Aaronic Priesthood work was at a low ebb and failed to reach a great number of the boys in his ward. Yet the Aaronic Priesthood program is designed to build character and strength and spirituality in the boys of the ward. When boys are not reached by it, they lose the strength which the program provides and thus weakened, some of them fall into sin when temptation comes along.

The good bishop also forgot that his M.I.A. work was very weak, and like the Aaronic Priesthood activity in the ward, failed to build strength of character among the young people. And he forgot that there was very little enlistment work done in his Sunday School.

He forgot, too, that he had failed to adopt the Latter-day Saint girls' program, because he didn't agree with all of the minor details in it. And he forgot that his ward provided little or no recreation for the young people, and that all last year it had given only two dances for the young people who like to come there. During the remaining fifty weeks of the year, the doors of the recreation hall of that ward were closed against the young people who would have liked to go there for their dances. And yet that same good bishop would stand up on Sunday night and denounce some of these young people because they went to public dance halls.

Did the bishop ever think to ask how often young people like to go out? Did he content himself with two dances a year when he was young and when he went courting?

YOUTH NEEDS RECREATION

Do you know, my brothers and sisters, that all last year the average ward in this Church gave fewer than five dances for the young people and that the average stake gave only a little more than three? If we put them both together, then last year there was an average of only eight dances given under Church sponsorship, to which the young people of any given ward or stake could go, and during the remaining forty-four weeks of the year, our young people had to shift for themselves? And do you know that every summer when the weather gets warm, except for a few canyon or park outings, the wards and stakes of this Church very generally go out of business and close their doors so far as recreation is concerned?

I know that you do not approve your young people going to public dance halls where so often liquor is available and where frequently undesirable elements are present. Yet, like Bishop Brown, we do so little about it. Our young people would far rather dance in good places with good people to good music, but they want to do it more than eight times a year. Likewise, our young people enjoy their Fireside groups, their M Men and Gleaner work, their Boy Scout and Aaronic Priesthood, their Junior girl and Bee Hive activity when there is an interested leadership present. But put yourselves in their places. Which of you would stay with an organization that was only half alive?

SOULS PRECIOUS IN THE SIGHT OF GOD

The worth of souls is great in the sight of God.

When our young people fall, can you count the cost of it? Remember there is a price tag attached to every evil deed, and that price tag is a big one. The cost of sin is so great that it can hardly be measured by mortal men, but it must be counted in remorse, broken hearts, lost opportunities, and lost souls. Compare that price with the price of well-supervised, Church-sponsored recreation. Compare that price with the expenditure of time and effort required to conduct good M Men and Gleaner activity, or a good Boy Scout, Aaronic Priesthood, Junior girl, or Bee Hive program. Which price would you rather pay?

A wise man said:

Train up a child in the way he should go: and when he is old, he will not depart from it. (Proverbs 22:6.)

He did not say, neglect the child and let him run the streets. Neither did he say, forget the youth program of the Church, and let the children shift for themselves. The Lord loves the children; it was he who said:

Suffer the little children to come unto me, and forbid them not: for of such is the kingdom of God. (Mark 10:14.)

Do we ever forbid the children? When we close the doors of our recreation halls most of the year, do we forbid the children? When we fail to adopt the youth program of the Church, which is specially designed to bring the children unto the Lord, do we forbid the children? The Good Shepherd not only said, "Feed my sheep," but he also said with great emphasis, "Feed my lambs." May we do so, I pray in Jesus' name. Amen.

ELDER ANDRE K. ANASTASIOU

Former President of British Mission

I feel it a great honor to stand before the Presidency and general authorities of the Church assembled in this great building, together with the multitude of Saints.

For twenty-eight years I hoped and prayed to be in Zion and to be inside the Tabernacle. This is a great opportunity and I feel very humble, indeed, standing before you, brothers and sisters.

It was my task to be called to preside in an acting position over the British Mission from January 10, 1940 until May, 1944—for four years and five months.

May I take you back to the year 1937 when the British Mission of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints was celebrating its centennial. It is the oldest mission of the Church, the mission which contributed eighty-four per cent of Church membership, originally. It was our centennial. Our late President, Heber J. Grant, and President J. Reuben Clark, Jr., and Sister Ruth May Fox, and many others, came from Zion to Great Britain to celebrate our centennial. We learned the day and the hour when the train would arrive in London, at the Liverpool Street Station, so a group of about twenty young people of the MIA gathered to meet President Grant. After waiting some time, the train finally pulled into the station, and we eagerly looked into the windows of the carriages to see whether we could find President Grant. We were fortunate enough to be about the middle of the platform and his carriage pulled up just about where we stood waiting for him. As we stood there, irresolute as to what to do, one of the sisters touched my elbow and said, "Go on Brother Anastasiou, start," and we started singing "We Thank Thee O God for a Prophet." We didn't care about the porters and the people pushing by; we were so anxious to meet President Grant. We had never seen him before. We had heard of him, we had read his speeches, we had seen his pictures, but to see him in person was a great moment in our lives. And so as we sang that hymn, he came out of the carriage alone, as I remember it. He came to our group, took his hat off, and began singing with us. Before we finished singing he was crying. We looked upon him: a noble man, so humble in appearance, so simply dressed and we felt he was a servant of the Lord. I shall never forget that occasion.

The great moment of the Mission centennial was culminated in Rochdale, Lancashire, where we hired a town hall and many other places for our various conferences and meetings. And during the three days of jubilee and rejoicing, the President of the Church sounded the voice of warning. He said, "A day will come when every missionary will be removed from the British Isles." That was 1937. In 1939 Great Britain was again at war and every missionary had to be removed from the British Isles, literally every one. In World War No 1 there was a skeleton representation of missionaries from Zion but on this occasion every one had to be removed. President Hugh B. Brown said to me: "My passport has been cancelled and I have to go." He left London on January 10, at 10:00 o'clock in the morning, and we came to London at 2:00 o'clock in the afternoon. My coming to the Mission headquarters, brothers and sisters, and being called to do that work was not unexpected. Almost two years before that we lived in the little village of Bookham in Surrey. It is a picturesque little place. We had two other little villages nearby, Fetcham and Cookham, but we lived in Bookham.

Often we used to bring missionaries from London from our nearest Branch, eighteen miles away. We would say to them: "Well, this is Fetcham and the next is Bookham but we'll never take you to Cookham."

One night while I was working on the translation of the Book of Mormon, into the Russian language, my mind was taken away from my work. I looked up into space, and saw in my mind's eye that we were leaving Bookham and going to London and that we were entering the mission home; it seemed a large home, and particularly I noticed a wide stairway, or staircase as we call it. At that time there was no large mission headquarters and no wide stairway. But by the time I was called with my family to take over the responsibility of presiding with two counselors, the war was upon us and the mission office was removed from 5 Gordon Square to the southwest part of London and there we found a large building, known as Ravenslea, and there, as we entered the building, was the wide stairway. We went up that stairway and stayed there for four years and about five months. I am just reminded that President J. Reuben Clark was the one to okeh the purchase of that building. I remember taking him in my car to Lavendar Hill; it was night, and he went and bought a torch, by that I mean a flashlight. I took him in my little car to Ravenslea and we flashed around with the flashlight, and he said finally, "Buy it, Brother Anastasiou." That was the mission headquarters, and it is still there now.

When the war began, Great Britain of course, was unprepared. The "gentleman with the umbrella" strove very valiantly to keep Britain out of the war, but the clouds of war hung very low. His Christian endeavor to keep peace in Europe unfortunately failed, because other forces were too strong for this kind Christian gentleman, Neville Chamberlain. But Great Britain, true to her principles of fair play and justice, kept her word to another small country. In this case it was Poland; in the last war it was little Belgium. In a dramatic moment over the BBC, Neville Chamberlain spoke these words, "Great Britain is again at war with Germany." We were unprepared, there was nothing we could fight with, no planes, no guns, no tanks, nothing at all. The British Navy, of course couldn't be taken ashore. The sense of duty for the protection of small nations, for taking care of the underdog, as we say over there, was the decision of the British people and the British nation. So everybody was called to war. All our Church members, male members, were liable to be called up. The first two or three months while we were in London, we anticipated bombing, but the first great task to face us was that most of our men were being called up for the armed services. However, we felt that we were entitled to some privileges as ministers of religion, or ministers of the Gospel. I went to the Ministry of Labor and National Service and appealed for exemptions. I said that we would like to be considered as other demoninations, who were entitled to their ministers being exempt from military service; not because we do not wish to share in the responsibilities of our country, but we need a few men to administer the affairs of the Church. Very tactfully a representative of the Ministry with his secretary said to me: "Will you please call again, and we will consider your case."

Within about seven days I was back at the Ministry and was received by the same gentleman. And as we sat he gravely looked at me, and said: "Mr. Anastasiou, it is needless for me to say that the King needs every man." And as he said that I looked up at him and said: "Every man of our Church who has been called to service has responded and has gone, but may I state, very respectfully, that the King of Kings needs a few men to carry out His work."

As I said that he looked up at me and said: "You are right. How many men do you need?"

Within ten minutes the interview was over. Within a week we had a letter, an official document of the Minister of Labor and National Service, granting us exemption for all our men in major Holy Orders, which we knew to be the Melchizedek Priesthood. Those in lesser Holy Orders, the Aaronic Priesthood members, were not exempted. So we were able to keep some of our Elders in charge of the branches.

I am reminded of the fact that Elder Joseph F. Merrill remained in Great Britain during the year 1935, and I believe '36. It was his task to remove all the missionaries from Zion from administering the affairs of the branches. These brethren could see what was coming. When the war was declared the Saints said: "Why, President Grant's prophecy has been fulfilled. Every missionary, for the first time in the history of the British Mission, has been removed from this land."

And so we were not unprepared. Every branch was self-administered, and we began to take care of the 68 branches under our responsibility. While men clung to weapons of war in defending their country, in trying to help Poland and other overrun nations, some of us gave up our work and came and gave our full time to missionary work.

London, particularly, and many other large cities were in danger of destruction. Bombing began and it was very severe. Many people perished by day and by night. Latter-day Saints, I imagine, with the rest of the people prayed harder than ever before to be delivered from destruction. We spent nearly two years in cellars and shelters, hiding from destructive bombs, but I am grateful to say that not one Latter-day Saint perished in the destruction of the cities of Great Britain, not one.

I lay certain stress on "Saints." May I be permitted to say that we have defined some of our Church members as Saints, Aints and Complaints. Among the Saints, we have not lost a single one.

Some people said to me: "Brother Anastasiou, do you mean to tell us that not one member of the Church perished in that terrible bombing of London?"

I said: "Yes, it is true, not one Latter-day Saint." We lost one family whose mother was a member of the church but in name only.

We never knew her. We learned of the destruction of herself, her children, her husband and their home by a bomb, and that was the first time we knew that she was a member of the Church. She never came anywhere near the Church. Her old father, living in Manchester, sent us the word that his daughter and her whole family had perished in one of the bombing raids upon London. But among faithful Latter-day Saints it was a joy to see protection.

In some cases we lost our furniture, our windows, our doors, our ceilings but not a life. In the city of Liverpool, one of our Branch Presidents, Brother Patey told me a story which I shall never forget: One of those five hundred pound bombs fell outside of his little home, but it did not go off. The children immediately said: "Daddy, it is a D.A." A delay action bomb, and he said to me: "We began to pray," five children and the father, no mother. He is a widower. He said they all prayed so earnestly and when they had finished praying, the children said: "Daddy, we will be all right. We will be all right in our home tonight."

And so they went to bed, imagine, with that terrific bomb lying just outside the door half submerged in the ground. If it had gone off it would have destroyed probably forty or fifty houses and killed two or three hundred people, but the faith of that little humble family was so wonderful that I shall never forget it.

The next morning the A.R.P. Squad was on the scene. The whole neighborhood was removed for forty-eight hours and the bomb was finally taken away. When it was successfully removed the people were called back to their homes.

On the way back Brother Patey asked the foreman of the A.R.P. Squad: "Well, what did you find?"

"Mr. Patey, we got at the bomb outside of your door and found it ready to explode at any moment. There was nothing wrong with it. We are puzzled why it did not go off."

Brother Patey knew in his heart that it was not a puzzle, that it was not luck as the man said to him, "Lucky people you still have your homes to go back to." Brother Patey knew deep in his heart that it was the answer to a humble prayer of a good Latter-day Saint and his children.

He said to me: "I was so anxious that our Branch records in my home would not be destroyed." That was his anxiety.

Well, we had regulations by the hundred; we Latter-day Saints, condensed the principles of the Gospel into a kind of pill form. We said to the Saints: "Brothers and Sisters, if you need the protection of the Lord you must be true to the principles of the Gospel." We said: 1. Pray night and morning. 2. Keep the Sabbath Day holy. 3. Go to the house of the Lord and take the sacrament worthily. Don't bear false witness to it. 4. Sustain loyally the Church Authorities. 5. Pay your tithing and fast offerings. 6. Keep the Word of Wisdom, and 7. Do your temple work.

And members adhered to this. We called 101 full time missionaries and most of them went into the field without a penny, and yet everyone had the means. We called 425 part-time missionaries and every one gave us five hours a week for nearly two years, apart from their regular work. Our missionaries were asked to preach the Gospel and not to give talks. At testimony meetings we had marvelous inspirational occasions.

The police sometimes would come and say: "Don't you think it unwise that you should hold your services while the air raid is on? Think of the casualties you would sustain if a bomb were to fall upon your church." We said: "Thank you, officer, we recognize the danger but we feel safe in a dedicated building," and we never cancelled a single service. Many of our buildings, of course, had no windows and no ceilings. The government saw that we had roofs over our heads. We had hardly any heat and hardly any light.

I remember one testimony meeting when every Saint took one minute to bear a testimony, and one little old lady got up. She said: "Brothers and sisters, the testimony of the Gospel is burning in my bosom." And as she sat down, she said to her neighbor: "My dear, my feet are freezing."

We went throughout the mission, in accordance with the wishes of the First Presidency, once a year. We called young people to go on missions, saying to them: "Brothers and sisters, if you will answer the call of your brethren it makes no difference whether you have any means or not, the Lord will provide."

I must give way in a moment, but may I bear a testimony that I have seen the hand of the Lord move among those faithful Latter-day Saints in the British Isles. In Glasgow, Scotland, in 1940, was my first conference, and my first visit to Scotland. On the front bench there sat a young lady with her mother who was deaf and dumb and this young daughter used the sign language. She said to her mother: "The President is calling us to go on missions," and her mother said to her: "You go on a mission."

And so she came to me after the conference and said: "President, I am willing to go but—," she dropped her eyes, "but I have no money."

I said: "Sister McDonald, the Lord will open the way."

She was set apart the last thing on Sunday night—and I said: "I will write to you on Tuesday, when I get back." It took a day to get back to London, to my desk, and among the pile of letters there was the answer to the promise given to that sister. One faithful brother from the army wrote to me saying: "President, I would like to take care of a missionary for six months. Here is the check for the first month, and the others will follow." All of that money went to that sister.

Time will not permit me to say much more, but by the time my successor arrived back in Great Britain, President Hugh B. Brown, we had 75 branches in operation, everyone self-sustaining and self-administered, and it has been a testimony to me that "the rights of the priesthood are inseparably connected with the powers of Heaven, but that the powers of Heaven cannot be controlled nor handled except upon the principles of righteousness," (Doc. & Cov. 121:36.) and such is my testimony to bear to you, brothers and sisters, that we have witnessed the hand of the Lord in our midst, by day and by night, and I rejoice in being with you today in Zion.

There are at least twenty or thirty young people in Great Britain today who were denied the opportunity to go on missions because of the war work. Now they are willing to go on missions anywhere in the world and the means will be found when they are called.

God grant that we may appreciate the blessings of this Gospel, I humbly pray, in the name of the Lord Jesus Christ. Amen.

President George Albert Smith:

Elder Andre K. Anastasiou of the British Mission has just finished speaking.

The Singing Mothers of the Jordan Valley Region will now sing "The Twenty-Third Psalm," by Shubert.

The closing prayer will be offered by President Merrill N. Warnick of the Timpanogos Stake, after which this Conference will stand adjourned until 2:00 this afternoon. The afternoon session will be broadcast over Station KSL, Salt Lake City, and KSUB at Cedar City.

The Singing Mothers sang: "The Twenty-Third Psalm."

President Merrill N. Warnick of the Timpanogos Stake offered the closing prayer.

Conference adjourned until 2 p.m.

FIRST DAY

AFTERNOON MEETING

Conference reconvened at 2 o'clock P.M., Friday, October 4.

President George Albert Smith:

This is the second session of the 117th Semi-Annual Conference of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints. We are convened in the Tabernacle on Temple Square, Salt Lake City.

The house is filled to overflowing and people standing.

There are present on the stand this afternoon all of the General Authorities of the Church, except Elder Stephen L Richards of the Council of the Twelve, who is detained at home under instruction of his physician; Elder Ezra Taft Benson, also of the Council of the Twelve, who is in Europe in charge of the European Mission; and the Patriarch to the Church, also absent on account of illness.

The proceedings of this session will be broadcast over KSL at Salt Lake City and KSUB at Cedar City.

We will begin the services this afternoon by the combined chorus of the Singing Mothers of the Jordan Valley Region Relief Societies singing "In Thy Form." Sister Florence Jepperson Madsen is the director, and Elder Alexander Schreiner is the organist.

The opening prayer will be offered by President John K. Edmunds of the Chicago Stake.

The Relief Society Singing Mothers of the Jordan Valley Region sang: "In Thy Form."

President John K. Edmunds of the Chicago Stake offered the opening prayer.

Singing by the Singing Mothers: "My Redeemer Lives."

ELDER JOSEPH L. WIRTHLIN

Second Counselor in the Presiding Bishopric

I sincerely trust, my brethren and sisters, that I may enjoy the Spirit of the Lord during the moment or two that I might stand before you.

I am profoundly grateful to the Lord because in this day and in this dispensation he has raised up a Prophet and prophets who have followed him. Through these prophets he has given his word to us that pertains to all of the phases and activities of life. I am thinking particularly now of that phase of our life that has to do with the law of the land. He made it known unto us through the Prophet Joseph:

According to the laws and constitution of the people, which I have suffered to be established, and should be maintained for the rights and protection of all flesh, according to just and holy principles; . . . And for this purpose have I established the Constitution of this land, by the hands of wise men whom I raised up unto this very purpose, and redeemed the land by the shedding of blood. (D. & C. 101: 77, 80.)

FREE AGENCY VS. FORCE

I have thought many times of the men who were selected by God in Revolutionary days to set up a government, a government predicated upon the great principle of free agency, that principle which was fought for in the councils of heaven when two of the Lord's sons stood before him, one of them advocating a plan whereby he would redeem all of the Lord's children that were to come to the new earth, whether they desired redemption or not; and the other one advocating a plan that he would extend to each man his agency to decide whether or not he would follow the commandments of God or whether he would follow the commandments of the opposite power. As a result of advocating these two plans, a great war took place in the heavens, and Lucifer, the Son of the Morning, was cast out; and from that day until now, these two great forces have been in a gigantic struggle. Jesus Christ came to earth and gave each and every one of us the right and the privilege to follow God's commandments as we saw fit, while, on the other hand, Satan has done all within his power to ensnare the souls of the Lord's children and have them follow after him.

These two philosophies have been found in government. We find that in the days of George Washington, in the day of these wise men that the Lord raised up to found a republic, founded upon the principle of free agency, that there were those who opposed the idea; there were those who fought against the principles as advocated by Washington, Thomas Jefferson, and the Revolutionary fathers. And from that day until this, the world over, these two philosophies have been struggling with each other. The Lord gave Joseph Smith another revelation, one that should be a warning to all of us, with reference to the principle of force as advocated by Lucifer, for the Lord said:

And again, I say unto you that the enemy in the secret chambers seeketh your lives. Ye hear of wars in far countries, and you say that there will soon be great wars in far countries, but ye know not the hearts of men in your own land. (D. & C. 38:28, 29.)

DAINGEROUS TENDENCIES IN GOVERNMENT

I am sure that this revelation, brothers and sisters, pertains to this day and to this time. While our attention is attracted to foreign countries where there have been wars and where there are still wars, there are within the very borders of this great republic those who would change our form of government and who would force upon us the same type of government that Lucifer advocated in the councils of heaven.

Now these wise men that the Lord raised up during the days of Washington, Jefferson, Franklin, Robert Morris, and Hamilton, provided a pattern of government for us to follow, a pattern of government which has brought to us numerous blessings, a form of government that has made us the strongest, and, may I say, the richest nation in all the world, because it has been founded upon the principle of free agency. Every individual has had the right to do the thing that he has wanted to do in the fields of industry, agriculture, or whatnot. He has had the right to worship God according to the dictates of his own conscience. He has had the right to own property. He has had the right to speak as he sees fit, and he has enjoyed the privilege of a great and free press. But, on the other hand, we find that the philosophy of the evil one would teach us that, after all, our government should be centralized in the hands of one or two men. Some advocate changing the form of our government. They advocate regimentation of industry and labor. They advocate that deficit spending is the sure way to prosperity. They would pervert the Constitution. They have endeavored through the various educational systems of this great country to teach us doctrines that are contrary to the doctrines and the principles upon which this great republic is founded. They would restrict us in our religious worship. They would disrupt family relationships. And so as we compare these two great systems, we can readily see that they are but a carry-over from that great battle which took place in the spirit world.

When I think of these wise men, George Washington and Jefferson and Franklin, I think of men who were servants of God, raised up for the purpose of establishing the Constitution and establishing this great government. Thomas Jefferson was endowed from on high with prophetic power. If you will study the Doctrines of Democracy as advocated by Thomas Jefferson one hundred thirty years ago, you will find that in many respects we have departed from the principles that made us a great and powerful nation.

JEFFERSON'S STATEMENT ON CENTRALIZED GOVERNMENT

Those who would change our form of government would centralize all its powers and functions into the hands of a few. Let us refer to this man of God, Thomas Jefferson, who was raised up by the Lord to help establish this great republic. What did Jefferson say with reference to centralized government?

Our country is too large to have all of its affairs directed by a single government, and I do verily believe that if the principle were to prevail of a common law being in force in the United States, it would become the most corrupt government upon the earth. What an augmentation of the field for jobbing, speculating, plundering, office-building and office-hunting would be produced by an assumption of all of the state powers into the hands of the general government. The true theory of our Constitution is surely the wisest and best, that the states are independent as to everything within themselves, and united as to everything respecting foreign nations.

Over the years that have passed, the states have given up many of their rights to the federal government. As a result, we are becoming a closely supervised nation in many respects. This man of God understood this and warned us and forewarned us to protect our rights as states and as individuals.

Jefferson foresaw the time when, should we be regulated in our businesses, in all our endeavors, there would come a day of famine. I shall read to you one of his statements: "Were we directed from Washington when to sow and when to reap, we should soon want bread."

We are living in that very day. We have seen the need for bread; we have seen the need for meat; we have seen the need for sugar; we have seen the need for many of the necessities of life. I am sure this wise man of God enjoyed the inspiration of the spirit of prophecy when he made the above declaration.

There are those who would change our form of government, would regiment us in all of our endeavors. It would be only a short time when men would be called to perform work whether they were qualified to do it or not. They would be forced into the harness of labor without any opportunity to express their own desires. Serfdom would soon dominate the lives of the people.

And again, this wise man of God saw that if there ever came a time when we were regimented that we would lose our independence, that we would lose all the blessings that have come to us through the Constitution of the United States. He said this, in speaking of regimentation, which is nothing more nor less than nazism, communism, or fascism, which are the forms of government that have shackled the peoples of Germany, Russia, Italy, and other nations.

Should we adopt foreign "isms,"

... it will be as in Europe, where every man must be pike or gudgeon, hammer or anvil. Our functionaries and theirs are wares from the same workshop, made of the same materials, and by the same hand. If the states look with apathy on this silent descent of their government into the gulf which is to swallow all, we have only to weep over the human character formed uncontrollable but by a rod of iron, and the blasphemers of man, as incapable of self-government.

DEBT BRINGS SERVITUDE

Then there are those who would change our form of government, these wicked men that the Lord spoke of in a revelation to the Prophet Joseph as scheming and planning to do away with what the Lord had given us; one of their lines of attack is that of perpetual debt. It may be of some interest for you to know, and no doubt you already know it, that one of the greatest advocates of one of these "isms," Lenin, the great Russian revolutionist, said: "As far as America is concerned, we will let America spend and spend herself into bankruptcy, then we will take over."

What did Thomas Jefferson, this wise man of the Lord, say with reference to perpetual debt? He said:

I am not among those who fear the people. They are our dependents for continued freedom. And to preserve their independence, we must not let our rulers load us with perpetual debt. We must make our election between economy and liberty or profusion and servitude.

I hope we have not gone so far in this nation of ours that because of the profusion which we have had we have brought upon ourselves servitude.

Now is the time. Now is the time if we are to preserve our independence and liberty to let those know in whose hands we have given the affairs of government, that we are not going to stand for continued extravagant spending, for as surely as that policy continues we will face bankruptcy and with bankruptcy there will come that inevitable, dreadful thing that we call revolution. And with revolution comes the opportunity for those within the borders of our land who would destroy our government, to step in and take over. They would also change our form of government, and what did this wise man of the Lord, Thomas Jefferson, say with reference to this change?

I said to President Washington that if the equilibrium of the three great bodies, legislative, executive, and judiciary, could be preserved, if the legislature could be kept independent, I should never fear the result of such a government; but that I could not but be uneasy when I saw that the executive had swallowed up the legislative branch. When all government, domestic and foreign, in little as in great things, shall be drawn to Washington as the center of all power, it will render powerless the checks provided of one government on another, and will become as venal and oppressive as the government from which we are separated.

Brethren and sisters, these are the words of one of God's inspired servants, one of those whom he told us through revelation he had raised up to help establish the government of the United States.

BENEFITS OF FREEDOM

I ask you to compare the fruits of this great republic with the fruits of those nations where they have accepted or had forced upon them these "isms" of the evil one. For example, in the United States, with roughly six percent of the world's population in six percent of its area, America enjoys forty-four percent of the productive wealth of the world. Thirty million families live in American homes valued at a hundred and two billion dollars. They cultivate six and a half million farms with an estimated value of fifty-eight billion dollars. American families enjoy the use of twenty-five million automobiles, nineteen million telephones, and forty-five million radios.

And so I could go on and point out to you the fruits, the temporal fruits, that have come to us because we have had the privilege of living under a government founded upon the divine principle of free agency. These figures, after all, brethren and sisters, are a tribute to the wisdom of our system of government with its freedom and its individual initiative which have always been the urge to these accomplishments.

Now I ask you to compare these accomplishments and fruits with those nations that have adopted a system where men and women are regimented, where they dare not express their thoughts nor have the right to worship God as their conscience dictates to them. Have they achieved any such results as these? You and I know that they have not, and they never can, because so long as the individual is shackled, there will be no opportunity for individual progress. And one of the grand and glorious things about our republic is the fact that it is the individual that counts, and the state is but to serve him. He does not become a mere pawn of the state and a cog in a great machine; he is the objective of the government. And as long as the individual is the objective of this great government, you can rest well assured that we will continue to make progress and enjoy all of the blessings in the future that we have in the past.

CONSTITUTION SHOULD BE APPRECIATED

It is of vital importance that in our homes we should teach our children that this great government and its fundamental law were given to us by God, that he inspired men who framed the Constitution of the United States. Oh, I am fearful that in our schools little consideration is given to the Constitution! I am fearful that our young men and our young women are not learning very much about this great republic, and that being the case, it is time that in the home we, as parents, take upon ourselves the responsibility of teaching the youth of the land the very truth that God revealed for the establishment of the Constitution of the United States and the organizing of our republic.

RESPONSIBILITY OF PUBLIC SERVANTS

It is time that public servants should look upon the matter of serving in government capacity as a great and a sacred calling, not one wherein they receive special benefits for themselves, but one wherein they are willing to serve the people to the best advantage.

Whenever I think of the obligation of serving in government capacity, there comes to mind one of those old patriots who lived shortly after the Revolutionary War and prior to the Civil War, Henry Clay. When he was about ready to lay aside the mantle that rested upon him as one of the servants of his great state, he said:

I can with unshaken confidence appeal to the Divine Arbiter for the truth of the declaration that I have been influenced by no impure purpose and no personal motive, have sought no personal aggrandizement, but that in all of my public acts, I have had a full and single eye and a warm and devoted heart directed and dedicated to what, in my best judgment, I believed to be the true interest of my country.

I would to God that every public servant should have that attitude, and I am sure if they had it, we should receive a service at their hands which would perpetuate and preserve the great principles that this republic rests upon. We have been blessed with prophets of God, who from time to time have called our attention to the Constitution of the United States as being a revelation from God.

Brigham Young declared, and I am sure he echoed the sentiments of all of us when he said:

We need to sustain the Constitution of the United States and all righteous laws. We will cling to the Constitution of our country and to the government that reveres that sacred charter of free men's rights and, if necessary, pour out our best blood for the defense of every good and righteous principle.

A Frenchman whom I do not know made this statement:

It has been stated that America is the only country that pretends to listen to the teachings of its founders as if they were still alive.

I humbly pray that we will more than pretend to hearken unto the teachings of the founders of this great nation, that we will make their teachings a part of our religion to the end that we will become acquainted with these great men of Revolutionary days and revere them and hold them up as servants of God, which I pray we will all do, in the name of Jesus Christ. Amen.

ELDER JOSEPH FIELDING SMITH

Of the Council of the Twelve Apostles

My beloved brethren and sisters: With the help of the Lord, I hope to present to you one of the most vital principles connected with the gospel of Jesus Christ. And in order that I may get it before us properly, I intend to read statements from President Brigham Young and other Authorities, because their statements will have far greater weight than anything that I might say. What I am going to talk about is marriage.

PRESIDENT BRIGHAM YOUNG'S COUNSEL ON MARRIAGE

President Brigham Young, in giving a counsel to the members of the Church said:

When a man and woman have received their endowments and sealings, and then had children born to them afterwards, those children are legal heirs to the kingdom and to all its blessings and promises, and they are the only ones that are on this earth. There is not a young man in our community who would not be willing to travel from here to England to be married right, if he understood things as they are; there is not a young woman in our community, who loves the gospel and wishes its blessings, that would be married in any other way; they would live unmarried until they . . . were as old as Sarah before she had Isaac born to her. Many of our brethren have married off their children without taking this into consideration, and thinking it a matter of little importance. I wish we all understood this in the light in which heaven understands it. (Discourses of Brigham Young, pp. 195, 196, 1934 edition.)

Again:

Be careful, O ye mothers in Israel, and do not teach your daughters in the future, as many of them have been taught, to marry out of Israel. Woe to you who do it; you will lose your crowns as sure as God lives. (Ibid.)

Now, I would hardly dare say that.

Again:

What was the cause of the first, or one of the first, curses that came upon Israel? I will tell you. One of the first transgressions of the family called Israel, was their going to other families or other nations to select partners. This was one of the great mistakes made by the children of Abraham, Isaac and Jacob, for they would go and marry with other families, although the Lord had forbidden them to do so, and had given them a very strict and stringent law on the subject. He commanded them not to marry among the Gentiles, but they did and would do it. Inasmuch as they would not do what he required of them, then he gave them what I call a portion of the law of carnal commandments. This law told them what they might and whom they might not marry. It was referred to by the Savior and his apostles, and it was a grievous yoke to place on the necks of any people; but as the children of this family would run after Babylon, and after the pride and the vanity and evils of the world, and seek to introduce them into Israel, the Lord saw fit to place this burden upon them. (Ibid., 196, 197.)

Again:

How is it with you, sisters? Do you distinguish between a man of God and a man of the world? It is one of the strangest things that happens in my existence, to think that any man or woman can love a being that will not receive the truth of heaven. The love this gospel produces is far above the love of women; it is the love of God—the the love of eternity—of eternal lives. (Ibid.)

ADVICE TO MARRY IN THE CHURCH

Now this from President Joseph F. Smith:

I would rather go myself to the grave than to be associated with a wife outside of the bonds of the new and everlasting covenant. Now, I hold it just so sacred; but some members of the Church do not so regard the matter. Some people feel that it does not make very much difference whether a girl marries a man in the Church, full of the faith of the gospel, or an unbeliever. Some of our young people have married outside of the Church; but very few of those who have done it have failed to come to grief. I would like to see Latter-day Saint men marry Latter-day Saint women; and Methodists marry Methodists, Catholics marry Catholics; and Presbyterians marry Presbyterians, and so on to the limit. Let them keep within the pale of their own faith and church, and marry and intermarry there, and let the Latter-day Saints do the same thing in their Church. Then we will see who comes out best in the end. (Gospel Doctrine, p. 380. 1919 edition.)

This from Elder Orson Pratt, which was delivered by appointment and endorsed by President Brigham Young:

We cannot feel justified in closing this article on the subject of marriage without saying a few words to unmarried females in this Church.

(May I pause at this point long enough to say that while he is speaking to females, it is just as true of males, and we could insert that term just as well as to speak of females, so keep that in mind.)

You will clearly perceive, from the revelation which God has given, that you can never obtain a fulness of glory, without being married to a righteous man for time and for all eternity. If you marry a man who receives not the gospel, you lay a foundation for sorrow in this world, besides losing the privilege of enjoying the society of a husband in eternity. You forfeit your right to an endless increase of immortal lives. And even the children which you may be favoured with in this life, will not be entrusted to your charge in eternity, but you will be left in that world without a husband, without a family, without a kingdom, without any means of enlarging yourselves, being subject to the principalities and powers who are counted worthy of families, and kingdoms, and thrones, and the increase of dominions forever. To them you will be servants and angels—that is, provided that your conduct should be such as to secure this measure of glory. Can it be possible that any females, after knowing these things, will suffer themselves to keep company with persons out of this Church?

It matters not how great the morality of such persons may be, nor how kind they may be to you, they are not numbered with the people of God; they are not in the way of salvation, they cannot save themselves nor their families, and after what God has revealed upon this subject, you cannot be justified, for one moment, in keeping their company. It would be infinitely better for you to suffer poverty and tribulation with the people of God, than to place yourselves under the power of those who will not embrace the great truth of heaven. By marrying an unbeliever, you place yourselves in open disobedience to the command of God requiring his people to gather together. Do you expect to be saved in direct violation of the command of heaven? (Millennial Star, XV: 584.)

ONLY COVENANTS MADE BY GOD ARE ETERNAL

I have some other quotations on another phase, but I want to refer now to what the Lord has said in a revelation to the Church.

Will I accept of an offering, saith the Lord, that is not made in my name? Or will I receive at your hands that which I have not appointed? And will I appoint unto you, saith the Lord, except it be by law, even as I and my Father ordained unto you, before the world was? I am the Lord thy God; and I give unto you this commandment—that no man shall come unto the Father but by me or by my word, which is my law, saith the Lord. And everything that is in the world, whether it be ordained of men, by thrones, or principalities, or powers, or things of name, whatsoever they may be, that are not by me or by my word, saith the Lord, shall be thrown down, and shall not remain after men are dead, neither in nor after the resurrection, saith the Lord your God. For whatsoever things remain are by me; and whatsoever things are not by me shall be shaken and destroyed. (D. & C. 132:9-14.)

Now, I challenge anybody on the face of the earth to disprove this argument. I say it is sound. It is common sense. It is the gospel of Jesus Christ. It cannot be successfully disputed. That being true, then the Lord says:

Therefore, if a man marry him a wife in the world, and he marry her not by me nor by my word, and he covenant with her so long as he is in the world and she with him, their covenant and marriage are not of force when they are dead, and when they are out of the world; therefore, they are not bound by any law when they are out of the world. Therefore, when they are out of the world they neither marry nor are given in marriage; but are appointed angels in heaven; which angels are ministering servants, to minister for those who are worthy of a far more, and an exceeding, and an eternal weight of glory. (D. & C. 132:15, 16.)

IMPORTANCE OF ETERNAL MARRIAGE

There is much more here, and you are acquainted with it. I do not need to read it, but I want to call your attention to the fact that a great many of our beautiful girls and our fine young men that have been born under the covenant are being married out of the Church and out of the temple of God. Furthermore, I have discovered by reading the newspapers that the parents of many of these young people seem to rejoice in it, and so they put big articles and fine pictures in the papers in regard to the entertainments, the receptions, that are going to be given, and they seem to be very proud of the fact that their daughters are to be married or their sons are to be married and they are going to be married by some minister of some other church, maybe by a bishop of this Church who can only marry them for time—he cannot marry them for eternity—and they seem to be happy about it. I do not know how they can, in the face of all that the Lord has revealed. For every contract, every bond, every covenant that is made that is not according to the Lord's will and commandment, and enforced by his law will of necessity come to an end. These young people who seem to be so happy now, when they rise in the resurrection, and find themselves in the condition in which they will find themselves, then there will be weeping and wailing and gnashing of teeth, bitterness of soul, and they have brought it upon themselves because of their lack of faith and understanding of the gospel, and from, I am sorry to say, the encouragement they have received many times from their own parents.

I am quite satisfied in my own mind that the parents are not teaching their children in the home the importance of marriage as the Lord has revealed it. Out in the world they have a false notion about marriage, because they have not the guidance of the Holy Ghost, and they cannot understand and properly interpret the scriptures.

The first marriage that was ever performed in this world, that is on this earth, let me say; not in this world, but on this earth—was performed before there was any death. What the Lord said in answering the question of the Jews:

... What therefore God hath joined together, let not man put asunder.
(Matt. 19:6.)

means nothing more nor less than this: that where God joins in marriage, man cannot put it asunder. And the Lord never does anything just for time. Everything is for eternity.

TEMPLE FOR WORTHY MEMBERS

To those who are satisfied with a marriage for time only, I want to raise a warning voice, to both parents and to the children who have that sort of idea. Of course there are people who are not worthy to go to the temple, and therefore should not go to the temple. No one should go to the temple except those who are worthy, as the Lord has said, "who have overcome by faith," and are cleansed and are just and true. Then they can go to the temple. If they are unclean, if they lack the faith, they had better stay out until they get the faith and are clean.

I wanted to say those few things.

LORD'S COMMAND TO MULTIPLY

Now, just for a moment or two in regard to another matter closely connected with this. When young people are married properly, the Lord commands them to multiply. Now that is not in accord with the teachings of the world, nor the practice of the world, especially the practice, and so I want to read one or two other passages now; this from President Young:

There are multitudes of pure and holy spirits waiting to take tabernacles, now what is our duty?—To prepare tabernacles for them; to take a course that will not tend to drive those spirits into the families of the wicked, where they will be trained in wickedness, debauchery, and every species of crime. It is the duty of every righteous man and woman to prepare tabernacles for all the spirits they can.

To check the increase of our race has its advocates among the influential and powerful circles of society in our nation and in other nations. The same practice existed forty-five years ago, and various devices were used by married persons to prevent the expenses and responsibilities of a family of children, which they must have incurred had they suffered nature's laws to rule pre-eminent. That which was practiced then in fear and against reproving conscience, is now boldly trumpeted abroad as one of the best means of ameliorating the miseries and sorrows of humanity. Infanticide is very prevalent in our nation. It is a crime that comes within the purview of the law, and is therefore not so boldly practised as is the other equally great crime, which, no doubt, to a great extent, prevents the necessity of infanticide. The unnatural style of living, the extensive use of narcotics, the attempt to destroy and dry up the fountains of life, are fast destroying the American element of the nation; it is passing away before the increase of the more healthy, robust, honest, and less sinful class of the people which are pouring into the country daily from the old world. (Discourses of Brigham Young, p. 197, 1943 edition.)

Now I think you bishops, you presidents of stakes, and you presidents of the quorums of the priesthood, ought to consider these things most carefully, and be prepared to teach the people that which the Lord would have them taught, and when our teachers go to visit them in their homes, let them teach the revelations of the Living God and magnify their callings. This I pray in the name of Jesus Christ. Amen.

ELDER MILTON R. HUNTER

Of the First Council of the Seventy

My dear brethren and sisters, it is in deep humility that I stand before you today. I have a prayer in my heart that God will sustain and be with me on this occasion.

AS A MAN THINKETH

The ancient statement, "As [a man] thinketh in his heart, so is he," (Prov. 23:7) is a divine, sublime, and eternal truth. Every act that we have committed and every word that we have spoken have come about as a result of our thoughts. Your character and my character today are the results of the complete sum of all our thoughts. Thus a man is literally what he thinks. Every plant springs forth from its seed. So it is with the deeds of man. Every one of his acts springs forth from the hidden seeds of thought. Our minds are as fertile gardens. If we plant in these gardens seeds of impure and unholy thoughts, these seeds grow as weeds and crowd out that which is pure and noble. Under these conditions, our lives become filled with filthy, ungodly, and immoral actions. Paul, the ancient Christian apostle to the Gentiles, warned humanity against sowing evil thoughts which always result in wicked deeds.

Be not deceived; God is not mocked; for whatsoever a man soweth, that shall he also reap. For he that soweth to his flesh shall of the flesh reap corruption; but he that soweth to the Spirit shall of the Spirit reap life everlasting. (Galatians 6:7, 8.)

In my humble opinion, there is no single passage of scripture that would do more toward saving the world from misery and destruction if the human family would heed its injunction. If all the holy scriptures were suddenly taken from mortal beings but one single passage, and if I were asked to select the passage which I thought would be of most benefit to the human family, I believe I would choose that statement made by Paul. Furthermore, I would print that statement indelibly on a large placard and hold it before the eyes of the people continuously.

Human beings are so prone to flatter each other and to use the art of sophistry that a true measure of character cannot always be accurately ascertained by the words we speak. We adults are not as little children. They are frank and honest in expressing their opinions. Perhaps that is one reason why Jesus declared that except we become as little children we cannot enter into the kingdom of heaven.

CHARACTER SUM TOTAL OF THOUGHTS

The only sure measuring rod of character, therefore, is the sum-total of all our thoughts. The claim has been made that if we could look into the hearts and minds of boys and girls and perceive their thoughts—especially their thoughts when their minds are operating undisciplined away from their daily assigned tasks—we could have a rather safe criterion by which to judge their future happiness and sorrow. It is a well-known fact that as thoughts blossom forth into actions, joy and sorrow are the results. Thus it can be said to a young man or to a young woman: "You tell me your thoughts, and I will tell you your future."

Jesus, the Master of life and salvation, proclaimed that:

... out of the abundance of the heart the mouth speaketh. A good man out of the good treasure of the heart bringeth forth good things: and an evil man out of the evil treasure bringeth forth evil things. (Matt. 12: 34, 35.)

Since all that is evil and all that is good in human nature comes forth from the heart of man, we shall be held accountable before the judgment seat of God for all that comes from the heart. In fact, the gospel plan of salvation proclaims that every man and every woman who have their free agency to choose the course that they follow and who are mentally sound and capable of making choices are held responsible for the actions that they commit. God our Eternal Father is both merciful and just. He is very merciful in that he gave to the human family the gospel; and to be completely just, he requires each of us to obey every word that has come from his mouth.

RESPONSIBLE FOR OUR WORDS AND ACTS

Alma the Younger, a great Nephite prophet-teacher, declared that all men, women, and children who come into this mortal world will eventually be "brought before the bar of God, to be judged according to our works." If we have lived wicked lives while in mortality, according to this Nephite prophet, at the judgment day:

... our words will condemn us, yea, all our works will condemn us; we shall not be found spotless; and our thoughts will also condemn us. (Alma 12:14.)

At the judgment day, so great will be the shame of those who have lived wicked lives in mortality that they will cry for the mountains to fall upon them and hide them from the presence of God. But this cannot be the case. Every individual will have to acknowledge that Jesus is the Christ, the Savior of the world, and that his judgments are just and true.

Alma was not the only prophet of God who declared that we shall be held responsible for every act that we commit, for every word that we speak, and for every thought that we think. Jesus who is the great Judge, Law-giver, and Savior of the world, proclaimed that we shall be held accountable for the secret thoughts of our hearts. He also declared:

I say unto you, That every idle word that men shall speak, they shall give account thereof in the day of judgment. For by thy words thou shalt be justified, and by thy words thou shalt be condemned. (Matt. 12:36, 37.)

The Savior also maintained that all of our secrets eventually shall be made public. To quote his exact words:

For there is nothing covered, that shall not be revealed; neither hid, that shall not be known. Therefore whatsoever ye have spoken in darkness shall be heard in the light; and that which ye have spoken in the ear in closets shall be proclaimed upon the housetops. (Luke 12:2, 3.)

If it is true that our bad unspoken thoughts are recorded against us, will it not be just as true that all our good thoughts unspoken, the kindness, tenderness, sympathy, pity, love, beauty, and charity that enter the breast and cause the heart to throb with silent good, find remembrance in the presence of God, also? Yes, I firmly believe that all of our good impulses and thoughts will find remembrance with the Lord just as much as will the evil that we have thought, said, or done; and certainly since God is our loving Father, he will remember the good with a greater degree of satisfaction and joy than he will the evil.

THINK PURE THOUGHTS

My friends, it will pay high dividends for us to guard our lips, as James, the ancient Christian writer, so plainly taught. "... If any man offend not in word, the same is a perfect man, and able also to bridle the whole body." ... for the tongue which is unbridled "is a fire, a world of iniquity." (James 3:2, 6.)

If it pays well to guard our lips, it pays just as well and even better to guard our thoughts, for every word that we speak is preceded by the thought. We, as Saints of the Most High, should accustom ourselves at all times to think such pure thoughts that if our minds and hearts were laid open before the world, nothing would appear which when brought to light would cause us to blush. Since the key to every man is his thoughts, we should thoroughly understand that our habitual thoughts will completely determine our character, for the soul is truly dyed by the thoughts. Therefore, thought and character are one. Our reputation is what men believe us to be, but our character is what God and angels actually know of us. The Lord gave us the key in modern revelation by which we can build lives of righteousness:

Let thy bowels also be full of charity towards all men, and to the household of faith, and let virtue garnish thy thoughts unceasingly; then shall thy confidence wax strong in the presence of God; and the doctrine of the priesthood shall distil upon thy soul as the dews from heaven. The Holy Ghost shall be thy constant companion, and thy scepter an unchanging scepter of righteousness and truth; and thy dominion shall be an everlasting dominion, and without compulsory means it shall flow unto thee forever and ever. (D. & C. 121:45, 46.)

If we would do as the Lord has commanded, we could rest assured of receiving blessings in great abundance. Surely then we could sing with the psalmist of old:

Who shall ascend into the hill of the Lord? or who shall stand in his holy place? He that hath clean hands, and a pure heart; who hath not lifted up his soul unto vanity, nor sworn deceitfully. He shall receive the blessing from the Lord, and righteousness from the God of his salvation. (Psalm 24:3-5.)

God has revealed to us as Latter-day Saints the true plan of salvation; therefore, it is not only our opportunity, but, according to modern revelation, it is the duty of each of us to "serve him with all [his] your heart, might, mind and strength, that ye may stand blameless before God at the last day." (D. & C. 4:2) Let us heed the solemn warning found in Ecclesiastes which is one of the greatest statements in the Old Testament:

Let us hear the conclusion of the whole matter: Fear God, and keep his commandments: for this is the whole duty of man. For God shall bring every work into judgment, with every secret thing, whether it be good, or whether it be evil. (Ecclesiastes 12:13, 14.)

ROOTS OF SIN IN OUR THOUGHTS

Throughout history, men of God have put forth strenuous efforts to reform those individuals who have strayed from the path of truth into the byways of sin. Repentance has been their theme. It is true that repentance is the only pathway back from sin to God; but when one becomes steeped in iniquity, repentance is a long and difficult process. The Master Teacher had a more keen insight into the building of character than did any of the other great teachers of history. He declared:

Ye have heard that it was said by them of old time, Thou shalt not commit adultery: But I say unto you, That whosoever looketh on a woman to lust after her hath committed adultery with her already in his heart. (Matt. 5:27, 28.)

In this and similar statements Jesus declared that the roots of sin lie in our thoughts. This being true, the proper time to reform people is not after they have formed thought habits but to teach our children while they are in their childhood and youth to think no other than pure and noble thoughts. At that time their minds are clean and pliable, and it is possible for us more easily to implant in their hearts seeds of purity, truth, and righteousness. Surely, as the writer of the proverb aptly stated:

Train up a child in the way he should go: and when he is old, he will not depart from it. (Proverbs 22:6.)

RESPONSIBILITY TO DEVELOP PROPER HABITS

Parents in Israel, a heavy responsibility rests on each of us to help our children develop proper habits of thinking. The Savior has laid the responsibility on us to be the principal agents in teaching our children the gospel plan of salvation. I tremble when I realize the responsibility that is mine as a father. To quote one of the commandments:

And again, inasmuch as parents have children in Zion, or in any of her stakes which are organized, that teach them not to understand the doctrine of repentance, faith in Christ the Son of the living God, and of baptism and the gift of the Holy Ghost by the laying on of the hands, when eight years old, the sin be upon the heads of the parents. For this shall be a law unto the inhabitants of Zion, or in any of her stakes which are organized. And their children shall be baptized for the remission of their sins when eight years old, and receive the laying on of the hands. And they shall also teach their children to pray, and to walk uprightly before the Lord. (D. & C. 68:25-28.)

Teachers throughout the Church who are working in the seminaries and institutes of religion, in the Sunday Schools, Primaries, and Priesthood classes, your opportunities and responsibilities are as great as any opportunities and responsibilities that can rest on the shoulders of men. In your charge is given our most priceless blessing—our sons and daughters. It is your duty and calling to assist the parents in Israel in planting in the hearts of the youth of the Church seeds of thought that will shoot forth into deeds of righteousness. What greater calling could men and women have than to be the molders of character? May God bless you in your noble callings; and may he continuously bless every one of us that we may think pure and holy thoughts, for "as [a man] thinketh in his heart, so is he."

In conclusion, I desire to bear testimony that I know that God lives and is indeed our Eternal Father, that Jesus is the Christ, the Savior of the world, and that Joseph Smith is the Prophet whom God foreordained and sent into the world in the last days to establish the only true Church of Jesus Christ, which Church is endowed with power from on high to bring salvation to the human family. I also bear witness that President George Albert Smith is also a prophet of the Most High and that he holds the keys of the priesthood just as the other holy prophets have done. I humbly pray that God will bless us all in the name of our Lord and Savior, Jesus Christ. Amen.

ELDER CHARLES A. CALLIS

Of the Council of the Twelve Apostles

"I can no more remember the books that I have read than the meals that I have eaten," said Emerson, "but they have made me." To countless thousands, who have basked in the spirit of the Book of Mormon, the truth that Joseph Smith spoke comes home to their souls. He remarked that "a man would get nearer to God by abiding by its [Book of Mormon] precepts, than by any other book."

TEACHINGS OF BOOK OF MORMON

The Nephite record testifies in a heavenly spirit to the truth that the Bible is true. They are one in God's hand to confound false doctrine and to establish peace in the hearts of men. This sacred book tells us that little children are alive in Christ. They need no baptism until they become accountable for their actions. For many years a great many good people believed in the doctrine of "infant damnation." They didn't understand; but the Book of Mormon brought into the world, into the hearts of men and women, the peaceable thought that children, though unbaptized, do not go to Hades.

A few years ago these people met in solemn convention, and the action they took was a credit to their righteousness and to their sense of the justice of God. They passed a resolution repealing the doctrine of "infant damnation," and what a beautiful thing they did when they made that decision retroactive. President Woodrow Wilson, himself a member of that great body of good people that decided against the doctrine of "infant damnation" and declared "the decision retroactive," laughed and said, "Think of all those dear little babies that have been burning in hell so long; now they will all be released."

The Book of Mormon teaches the nobility of service. What is man without work? Work is known by the angels of God. They are immersed in its atmosphere, and that service is eternal. He is a poor "Mormon" elder, hardly worth his salt, who believes that when he goes to heaven, he will sit in inactive, endless bliss. Centuries before he was born in the flesh, according to the Book of Mormon, Jesus said:

... for my work is not yet finished; neither shall it be until the end of man, neither from that time henceforth and forever. (II Nephi 29:9.)

And in another place he said:

For behold, this is my work and my glory—to bring to pass the immortality and eternal life of man. (Pearl of Great Price, Moses 1:39.)

Think of it, brethren and sisters, our work is immortal. As Brigham Young said, "This life is a part of eternity."

I think the spirit of the Book of Mormon with respect to the character of Christ's work is wonderful. It entrances the soul. One of the prophets said of him:

... for it behooveth the great Creator that he suffereth himself to become subject unto man in the flesh, and die for all men, that all men might become subject unto him. (II Nephi 9:5.)

My brethren and sisters, we do become subject to men in the flesh by the work of the ministry, but in God's own due time the people will look upon us as saviors upon Mount Zion, and they will become subject in a heavenly way unto those who taught them the gospel.

NOBLE CALLING OF WIVES AND MOTHERS

I think that the most wonderful being on the earth is a wife and a mother. To be a wife and a mother transcends in glory and in service all the missions she can perform, that is, preaching missions. And a mother, uncrowned by any visible diadem, is crowned with a diadem of affection; she becomes subject unto her children, and by and by they become subject unto her. Joaquin Miller, the poet, said:

Beneath our forty stars is she
The purest woman, sweetest, best,

Who loves her spouse most ardently
 And rocks the cradle oftenest:
 Whose home is filled, whose heart is fed
 With halo of a baby's head.

ECONOMIC SYSTEM OF ANCIENT AMERICA

The Book of Mormon teaches us a glorious economic system. For nearly two centuries after the ascension of Christ, the people were covered with a mantle of the prosperity of Christ. There were no poor, no rich, no one in bonds, and I think that meant the bondage of debt, for debt is a grievous bondage, and we should steer clear of it. For two centuries they lived in peace; they had no strikes; industrial disturbances were not known; but by living the spirit of industry by the golden precepts of the Son of God they prospered and grew in the prosperity of Jesus Christ. God hasten the day when we shall work—the rich and the poor in the kingdom of peace—submitting our troubles to arbitration, for I know that deep down in the hearts of the captains of industry and also of the laboring men, there is an inherent desire to do unto others as they would have others do unto them. We let selfishness repress this feeling that God has placed in our hearts.

IMMORTALITY TAUGHT IN BOOK OF MORMON

In the Book of Mormon we read of the great intermediate state, the great principle of immortality. Horace Greeley lost a boy five years old, and he said to a friend (I haven't time to quote it all):

Now all that concerns me is the evidence . . . that we shall live with and know those we loved here. . . . If I felt sure of the point of identifying and being with our loved ones in the world to come, I would prefer not to live long.

In our hearts, inspired by the Book of Mormon, by its holy and matchless spirit, and it is the spirit of Christ which runs through the Book of Mormon like a golden thread, we know that we shall meet our loved ones, be recognized by them, and we shall recognize them, and throughout eternity, believing that God is a God of work, we shall work with him as co-laborers.

A Presbyterian minister caught this flash of glory in service, and in a hymn which he composed, he said:

We serve no God whose power is spent,
 Who rests amid his firmament.
 Our God his labors but begun
 Toils ever more with powers unspent.

God be praised for the glory of the resurrection, the beauty of eternal life, the knowledge that we shall live with each other, with our wives and our children, with our friends, and live with them in perfect understanding. Did not Paul speak of the whole family in heaven and on earth? These great sections are going to be joined by the eternity and glory and power of the gospel which is the power of God unto salvation.

The Book of Mormon prophets give great comfort to this nation. They declared that this nation was set up by the Almighty and should be pre-eminent among the people of the world. It is pre-eminent in glory and in power, but alas, there are corroding and corrupting influences that are trying to sap the strength of this great republic. This republic is the house of our fathers, our fellow citizens, our friends, and our brothers, and with them we shall stand, by the grace of God, to contest the supremacy of any communist or foreign-born element who seeks to destroy the Constitution.

NEW WITNESS THAT JESUS IS THE CHRIST

The testimony that the Book of Mormon gives us last of all—no, not last of all—from the first page to the last page, is that Jesus is the Christ. If we serve God, this nation will survive, but listen to this solemn warning: Moroni told the people of his day that this was a land of promise, and that God would not suffer any nation to dwell on this earth except they serve him, for if they departed from him they should be swept into the oblivion which lawlessness always provides.

Listen to Moroni's warning:

... this cometh unto you, O ye Gentiles, [this is of our day he is speaking] that ye may know the decrees of God—that ye may repent, and not continue in your iniquities until the fulness come, that ye may not bring down the fulness of the wrath of God upon you as the inhabitants of the land have hitherto done. (Ether 2:11.)

Here is the warning of a prophet of God. He gives a glorious promise with this solemn warning attached.

Fellow citizens, shall we heed this voice of warning? Shall we bend our necks no more to the bondage, to the yoke of sin, but rising in the full fruition of righteousness, in the strength of God, may we stand before him, acceptable as a nation, correct in government, lenient to the poor, righteous in the sight of God; and, oh, how happy we shall be, and then, as Webster said, it shall not be written that this nation had a "decline and fall," for God is our strength.

The spirit and the main purpose of the Book of Mormon is ... to the convincing of the Jew and Gentile that Jesus is the Christ, the Eternal God, manifesting himself unto all nations. (Book of Mormon, Title Page.)

May I humbly answer to this glorious declaration by testifying that I know that Jesus is the Christ, the Son of the Living God. He is the resurrection and the life, the author and the finisher of our faith, and if we will obey his commandments, this nation shall prosper and with him all of us shall go into eternal glory, is my testimony, in the name of Jesus Christ. Amen.

ELDER ALBERT E. BOWEN

Of the Council of the Twelve Apostles

President Smith, in his opening address this morning, spoke about the present confused floundering of the world consequent upon a waning devotion to fundamental principles. Dr. Widtsoe adverted to the same theme and particularly as evidenced by the frustrations of men in their gropings after a longed-for peace without adherence to the principles upon which peace depends. There is one exemplification of the drift away from peace and a powerful contributing factor to the prevailing instability about which I desire to speak. I hope I may do so without offense.

HISTORY OF REDRESS OF WRONGS

You all remember the accounts of earlier times when men took upon themselves the redress of their own grievances. If, for example, one killed a member of my family, I promptly went out and killed him or some member of his family. Then that family sought revenge against me or my family and so the course of reprisal and counter-reprisal ran, growing into family and clan feuds. In like manner, if one took or damaged the property of another, the injured one sought, through his own means, to recover his goods or their equivalent or to visit punishment on his despoiler. It is easy to see that there could be neither stability nor security under such a system. An orderly, stable society of individuals could not exist under such conditions. It was intolerable. The remedy, perhaps the only remedy, was to enact public laws applicable to all alike which defined the rights of individuals and provided remedies for the protection of those rights. A law defined murder and prescribed a penalty for him who committed it. Now if a murder were committed, it became not a private wrong against the murdered person to be avenged by his kindred, but rather an offense against the state which assumed the exclusive right to execute against the offender, the retribution of the law. The injured family may not always have been satisfied with results, but they had to learn to accept them. They no longer had a right to take punishment into their own hands and would themselves be subject to penalty if they did so. Similarly the law forbade theft and fixed the consequences for its violation. So if one's property were stolen, he did not seek by violence to recover it or to punish the offender. The state took care of that through its own processes. These more serious wrongs were called crimes punishable by the state, not for restitution to the injured person, but for the preservation of public order. Other less serious trespasses were still recognized as offenses for the commission of which the injured one might seek recompense to himself. But his remedy was through the processes established by law and not by physical force or violence administered by himself. Thus, for example, if one wrongfully entered upon or occupied the land or dwelling of another, the owner would file his complaint with the court. In orderly manner the cause would be heard and determined, and then the officers of the law would remove the trespasser, instead of the owner's seeking by violence to do that for himself.

JUSTICE UNDER LAW

The finding of the judicial tribunal set up by the law ultimately became final, and the parties in dispute had to abide by it. Thus punishment of grievances, or protection of person and property, was taken out of the realm of private feuding and reprisals by physical might and put over into the realm of impartial judicial determination by reason and the application of principles of justice. This achievement marked a great day in the progress of civilization. Anarchy gave place to order, and it became possible for human beings to live together with a large degree of stability and freedom from haunting fears. Without such an accomplishment, large numbers of people could not have lived together.

INDUSTRIAL DISPUTES

By now, someone will surely be asking what all this has to do with the purpose of a worshiping assembly such as is convened here today. I will tell you. I have presumed to present this sketchy background for the express purpose of drawing a parallel between that and the barbaric methods we now employ in our handling of industrial disputes. I have no hesitancy in saying that the strike is a totally uncivilized way of dealing with them. Strikes arise out of disagreements. Sometimes the dispute is between the employer and his employees; sometimes the employer has nothing to do with it, but it is between two different organized groups of employees, each claiming the right to negotiate with the employer. Sometimes workers are compelled to go on strike when they have no grievance at all and would prefer to go on working, but are compelled to walk off the job by the orders of the organization to which they belong. Sometimes they are voluntary members of such organizations, but often they are forced into membership against their will by violence or threats of violence. Often they are coerced into membership because otherwise they will not be permitted to work at all or to earn their daily bread.

Employees claim that they have long suffered injustices and are now balancing accounts, while employers assert that the demands of the workers are unreasonable and impossible of granting. Obviously, neither party to the dispute is in a condition to make an unbiased appraisal of the merits of these conflicting positions.

I am not here trying to fix the blame or to say who is in the right or to what extent. But I do say that such a situation breeds lawlessness, eventuates in anarchy, and will destroy any government or society that does not find an effective way of dealing with it.

There is no more excuse for permitting those with an industrial complaint, real or fancied, sincerely entertained or shammed, to cover up a sinister purpose, to take into their own hands the redressing of their own grievances, than there is for permitting any private individual to take upon himself the satisfaction of his own wrongs of whatsoever nature without regard to the good order and welfare of the whole society.

There is no more justification for permitting an organized group to stop a farmer carrying his own produce, the fruits of his own toil, to market and tip over and break his truck and destroy his foodstuffs unless he will take on and pay another driver whom he neither wants nor needs, than there is for permitting a man whose son has been killed, perhaps in a brawl, to go out and without investigation kill the perpetrator of the death.

There is no greater right in an organized body to obstruct public streets or to throw picket lines in front of entrances to places of work and hold others out by violence, intimidation, threat, and injury than there is in any person whose property has been stolen to retrieve it by force of arms, killing or maiming if need be in the process.

Neither does it help the cause any to say, even though true, that workers have in the past suffered gross wrongs. An evil is never cured by transferring the power to perpetrate it from one set of hands over into the hands of those on the opposite side. Wrong is just as sinister and just as fatal to orderly living when perpetrated by one side to a controversy as if perpetrated by the other. Former wrongs are not righted by the commission of new ones by the other party.

DEFIANCE OF LAW DECRIED

Our method of handling these industrial disputes belongs to the age of barbarism and is a national disgrace. So long as we tolerate law defiance, disorder, private usurpation of the right to redress wrongs, we have no right to be castigating other nations for their delinquencies or to assume the role of instructor to them. If we cannot maintain domestic order, how may we hope to achieve international order, or to have persuasive influence in establishing it?

The crying need of this age is for men of stature and character in the seats of power—men who have the intelligence to discern the right and the courage to pursue it without regard to personal consequences to themselves or their ambitions, men who will not succumb to the lure of expediency, but who dare to stand on principle though they stand alone. There are too many favor-currying little men sloshing around in positions requiring big men of unwavering integrity to fill them.

Why should great cities be thrown into darkness and their citizens exposed to the marauder because two contending parties choose to be belligerent? Why should water shipping and land transportation be stopped and whole innocent populations be reduced to hunger and cold and privation because two private parties, or perhaps only one of them, sets up its imperious will regardless of the good of the law-abiding public?

If laws are needed to define the rights, privileges, and obligations of the respective contenders, let such laws be passed, but let them be fair, impartial, and unbiased laws. You will never cure the evil with laws that shackle one of the disputants while leaving the other to roam at large with unrestrained license to do evil. If tribunals be needed to administer and enforce the laws, let them be impartially constituted, not packed with personnel so biased that their decision may with certainty be predicted before the cause is heard. And when a judgment has been rendered by a duly constituted tribunal, let that body not be dissolved and its judgment vacated under pressure and another tribunal set up to render the kind of decision the dissatisfied party wants. That practice only brings the whole system into disrepute and the government itself into contempt.

The authority of law must be preserved, orderly procedure maintained, the rights of the unoffending but suffering public made secure regardless of the wishes of the contending parties or the pressures they may bring to bear.

FUTURE FREEDOM OF RELIGION AT STAKE

Another reason for the appropriateness of this discussion here is that the whole future of freedom of religion is at stake. There is war between the concept of a free people under a free government and totalitarian government with its inevitable stifling of individual freedom. That warfare involves religion. If the insufferable and inexcusable condition now prevailing is not corrected, then free government will give way to some form of totalitarianism, whether the despotism of one man or of a class or group or even of the state will not much matter. And totalitarianism must always destroy religious liberty. Free government as we have known it, what commonly is spoken of as our democracy, is foundationed in the great spiritual principle of the supreme importance of the individual and the divine derivation of the human soul. This concept finds its highest political exposition in the Declaration of Independence which proclaims in words of fire that men at birth, by the creative's decree that gave them being—from the mere circumstance that they are men—are God-endowed with certain rights which are "unalienable" and which of right and by force of our basic law are inviolable and which no power on earth, not even the government itself, may properly infringe. Among these inalienable and inviolable rights are the right to life and to liberty. The right of man to liberty—to be free—is thus made coordinate with the right to life itself. The history of human struggle loudly proclaims that life without liberty is intolerable. For a fulness, the two must go together. These conceptions incorporated in the immortal Declaration are the product of more than a century and a half of the teachings of the Christian religion out of which they must draw their nourishment. If this wellspring is suffered to dry up, then individual freedom will wither and die.

CHRISTIAN RELIGION AND DEMOCRACY

For it is out of that religion that the whole concept of the common brotherhood of men as the children of the same God derives, each equal before the law. So intimately are the two intertwined that democracy and the Christian religion must survive or perish together. Neither has worked perfectly in human hands. But the failure of the perfect working of the principles of free government probably is fairly in proportion to the failure of men to live the Christian religion. The perfect working of the latter would insure the perfect working of the former. We may not, except at our peril, discard either of them. Together they have provided an atmosphere in which, in spite of imperfections, we have lived and flourished as has no other nation in recorded history. It is important to note that in those countries where freedom has perished, there has gone side by side with its decline, a breaking down and denial of the Christian religion, and in that country where the breakdown has been most complete, there has been accomplished the most thorough regimentation of the bodies and spirits of men. But a superficial, unbelieving profession of the Christian faith will not withstand the disintegrating forces at play in the world today. Only a genuine, deep-seated religious conviction carried over into practice can do that. The disciples who established the Ancient Church were not men who rationalized Jesus and his doctrines away, nor were satisfied with proclaiming him merely a great ethical teacher. When Jesus asked his disciples, "Whom do men say that I am?" (Mark 8:27.) Peter gave him the various conjectures that men had ventured concerning him. Jesus then put it to him directly, "But whom say ye that I am?" Peter answered without equivocation or hesitancy, "Thou art the Christ, the son of the living God." (Matt. 16:13-16.) That is the kind of living faith which carried the Christian religion into ascendancy in the western world and ultimately gave to the world our democracy. It is the only kind of faith that can save the world from the unchristian doctrine of regimentation and authoritarian dominance over the lives of men.

It is that faith which it is the mission of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints to keep alive in the hearts of men and to perpetuate in this land.

President George Albert Smith

I hope it will not interfere with what you are thinking about for me to say it is written by one of old "choose you this day whom ye will serve; * * * but as for me and my house, we will serve the Lord." To members of the congregation of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints there can be no middle ground. We must either serve God or mammon, and this Conference today has enjoyed the influence of the Spirit of the Lord because we have not come here to have our palates tickled or our fancies smoothed over, but we have come here in the spirit of prayer and of thanksgiving and gratitude to God. I am grateful that we have had this delightful experience today.

The combined chorus of the Singing Mothers of the Jordan Valley Relief Societies will sing, "Peace I Leave With You," by Roberts.

The closing prayer will be offered by President Howard S. Bennion of the New York Stake, after which this Conference will stand adjourned until 10:00 tomorrow morning, Saturday, October 5. The proceedings of that session will be broadcast over KSL at Salt Lake City, KSUB at Cedar City, and KID at Idaho Falls.

The Presiding Bishopric will meet the bishoprics of the Church in this building at 7:00 this evening. Presidencies of stakes and the General Authorities are invited to attend.

Tomorrow, Saturday morning, at 8:00 a.m. the General Welfare Committee will hold a meeting in the Tabernacle, to which all regional, stake, and ward Welfare officers and also all presidencies of priesthood quorums and teachers of Gospel Doctrine classes are requested to be present, and all others are invited who wish to attend.

The Relief Society Singing Mothers sang: "Peace I Leave With You."

Elder Howard S. Bennion, President of the New York Stake, offered the closing prayer.

Conference adjourned until Saturday morning, October 5, at 10 o'clock.

SECOND DAY

MORNING MEETING

The third session of the Conference convened Saturday morning, October 5, and commenced promptly at 10 o'clock.

President George Albert Smith

It is delightful to see this great auditorium filled to overflowing again. I may say for those who may not be able to find seats or standing room that the Assembly Hall is prepared to receive the overflow, with amplifiers, heat and everything comfortable. It is lovely to be here this morning in this great house that has become sacred to us as a result of those who have worked here and served here and who have passed to the other side. I am sure that if they can see us this morning they will be happy that there are so many people coming to Conference when the world is in such distress.

President J. Reuben Clark, Jr., will conduct the services of the morning session.

President J. Reuben Clark, Jr.

This is the third session of the 117th Semi-Annual Conference of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints. We are convened in the Tabernacle on Temple Square, Salt Lake City, Utah.

There are on the stand this morning all of the General Authorities of the Church, except Elder Stephen L. Richards of the Council of the Twelve, who is detained at home by his doctor's orders; Elder Ezra Taft Benson, also of the Council of the Twelve, who is in Europe in charge of the European Mission; and the Patriarch to the Church, also absent on account of illness.

The proceedings of this session will be broadcast over KSL at Salt Lake City, KSUB at Cedar City and KID at Idaho Falls.

We will begin the morning services by the Richfield Combined Choruses singing: "How Excellent is Thy Name." Elder Arden Peterson is the director and Elder Frank W. Asper is the organist.

The opening prayer will be offered by President Edgar B. Brossard of the Washington Stake.

---

The Richfield Combined Choruses sang: "How Excellent Is Thy Name."

Elder Edgar B. Brossard, President of the Washington Stake, offered the invocation.

The Richfield Combined Choruses sang: "Beside Still Waters," by Hamblen.

PRESIDENT LEVI EDGAR YOUNG

Of the First Council of the Seventy

In connection with the voices of the servants of the Lord at this conference, the fundamental to be established in the hearts of humanity for the return of the world to God is the fact that the gospel of Jesus Christ is not a system of thought but a true revelation of God. God makes one man the channel of communication to other men. This channel is never closed.

Three things have the servants of God emphasized in this day: the immortal appeal to fortitude and faith; the returning to God through repentance; and holy baptism by immersion in the name of the Father, the Son, and the Holy Ghost.

... Go ye into all the world, [said Jesus our Redeemer] and preach the gospel to every creature. (Mark 16: 15.)

A century ago, the most majestic character of history gave us with other scriptures, the Doctrine and Covenants. In that book, man is carried to his high destiny. Man is divine. He is in the image of God. He has endless spiritual power and grace. Herein is the Prophet Joseph Smith's masterful idea. The soul's relationship to God. His was a sorrowful life, but he nurtured through all hazards the divine truths God revealed to him, and finally came triumphant when he left us these immortal words:

And now, remember the words of him who is the life and light of the world, your Redeemer, your Lord and your God. (D. & C. 10:70.)

His teachings lead us to the dominion of joy, as witnessed here today.

And so my brethren of the Holy Priesthood, go forth and remember:

He hath shewed thee, O man, what is good; and what doth the Lord require of thee, but to do justly, and to love mercy, and to walk humbly with thy God? (Micah 6:8.)

ELDER SPENCER W. KIMBALL

Of the Council of the Twelve Apostles

My brothers and sisters: To preface my remarks may I quote Paul:

And I, brethren, when I came to you, came not with excellency of speech or of wisdom, declaring unto you the testimony of God. For I determined not to know any thing among you, save Jesus Christ, and him crucified. (I Cor. 2:1-2.)

Today I wish to bear witness of Jesus the Christ and to quote the word of the Lord.

I read recently in a local paper of a pastor of a church in Illinois, who said that he felt the same reverence for Santa Claus that he did for Jesus Christ. He said:

I consider both of them to be folk tales, but in different categories.

He finds one difference, however; he does not question the fact that "a man named Jesus" did exist, and he regards Santa Claus as a "figure of the imagination."

In the magazine, Time, in a recent issue, a noted professor emeritus in one of our largest universities, was quoted at length on his rationalizing. To Jesus of Nazareth he gives human warmth; a great capacity for love; unusual understanding. He calls him a great humanist, a great teacher, a great dramatist. As a typical rationalization, he explains that Lazarus was not dead, but was merely ... brought "back to health" by Jesus, the power of mind and learning, and by the "therapy of his own abundant vitality!"

JESUS LIVES ETERNALLY

I want to bear testimony today that Jesus is not only a great teacher, a great humanist, and a great dramatist, but is in very deed, the Son of the Living God, the Creator, the Redeemer of the world, the Savior of mankind. I want to testify further that he not only lived in the Meridian of Time for approximately thirty-three years, but that he lived eternities before this, and will live eternities beyond it.

He first comes into our knowledge in the pre-existent state, when with a host of spirits, he stood before his Father in solemn assembly.

In the beginning was the Word, and the Word was with God, and the Word was God. The same was in the beginning with God. (John 1:1, 2.)

PRIMEVAL GATHERING

The vision of this primeval gathering is recorded as follows:

Now the Lord had shown unto me, Abraham, the intelligences that were organized before the world was; and among all these there were many of the noble and great ones; And God saw these souls that they were good, and he stood in the midst of them, and he said: These I will make my rulers; for he stood among those that were spirits, and he saw that they were good; and he said unto me: Abraham, thou art one of them: thou wast chosen before thou wast born. And there stood one among them that was like unto God, and he said unto those who were with him: We will go down, for there is space there, and we will take of these materials, and we will make an earth whereon these may dwell; And we will prove them herewith, to see if they will do all things whatsoever the Lord their God shall command them. (Pearl of Great Price, Abraham 3:22-25.)

And one of the number proffered to go down to the earth and by compulsion, save all men, but another "like unto God" came forward with a plan of free agency by which the plan of redemption and exaltation would be offered by him to the people of the earth. And this latter plan, proposed by Jehovah, or Jesus Christ, was accepted.

... and the Word was God. . . . All things were made by him; and without him was not any thing made that was made. (John 1: 1, 3.)

JESUS THE CREATOR

The time finally came when the earth was to be created.

And then the Lord said: Let us go down. And they went down at the beginning, and they, that is the Gods, organized and formed the heavens and the earth. (Abraham 4:1.)

And Jesus the Christ created the earth and gave it light and established upon it the plant and animal life, and finally man, created in his image.

In confirmation, he says long centuries later to the Nephites:

... I am Jesus Christ the Son of God. I created the heavens and the earth, and all things that in them are. (III Nephi 9:15.)

After the creation, the Redeemer bears witness again to Adam:

And in that day the Holy Ghost fell upon Adam, which beareth record of the Father and the Son, saying: I am the Only Begotten of the Father from the beginning, henceforth and forever, that as thou hast fallen thou mayest be redeemed, and all mankind, even as many as will. (Pearl of Great Price, Moses 5:9.)

REDEEMER'S VISIT TO ENOCH

Generations later the Redeemer came again to the earth to visit his choice servant and mighty leader, Enoch, who because of his righteousness, was permitted to hear the voice of Jehovah. Enoch bowed himself to the earth before the Lord, and spake:

... Why is it that I have found favor in thy sight, and am but a lad, and all the people hate me; for I am slow of speech; wherefore am I thy servant? (Moses 6:31.)

And the Lord spake unto Enoch, and said unto him: Anoint thine eyes with clay, and wash them, and thou shalt see. And he did so. (Ibid., verse 35.)

And he beheld the spirit world and all creations not visible to the natural eye. From hills and high places, Enoch warned them, and

... no man laid hands on him; ... for he walked with god. (Ibid., verse 39.)

In concluding his preaching to his people, he bore this testimony:

... I stood upon the mount, I beheld the heavens open, and I was clothed upon with glory; And I saw the Lord; and he stood before my face, and he talked with me, even as a man talketh one with another, face to face. (Moses 7:3, 4.)

The transgressions of the people of Enoch's generation continued unabated, for Noah comes forth to continue throughout the long years of his ministry, a vigorous warning and preachment against the sins of the world, which had become ripe in iniquity.

And thus Noah found grace in the eyes of the Lord; for Noah was a just man, and perfect in his generation; and he walked with God. (Moses 8:27.)

EXPERIENCE OF BROTHER OF JARED

Again at the time of the tower of Babel, the Lord Jesus came to earth when the Jaredites prepared to cross the ocean for the promised land, now known as America, and they went into the mountains and "did molten out of a rock sixteen small stones" (Ether 3:1), and the prophet entreated the Lord to touch these stones that they might shine forth in the darkness of the enclosed vessels to give light while they crossed the sea. And as the Lord touched each stone

... the veil was taken from off the eyes of the brother of Jared, and he saw the finger of the Lord; and it was as the finger of a man, like unto flesh and blood. (Ether 3:6.)

The prophet fell to the earth with fear lest he should be smitten,

... for I knew not that the Lord had flesh and blood. And the Lord said unto him: Because of thy faith thou hast seen that I shall take upon me flesh and blood; and never has man come before me with such exceeding faith as thou hast; for were it not so ye could not have seen my finger. ... And when he had said these words, behold, the Lord showed himself unto him, and said: ... Behold, I am he who was prepared from the foundation of the world to redeem my people. Behold, I am Jesus Christ. ... Seest thou that ye are created after mine own image? ... Behold, this body, which ye now behold, is the body of my spirit; ... and even as I appear unto thee to be in the spirit will I appear unto my people in the flesh. (Ether 3:6, 9, 13-16.)

JEHOVAH SPEAKS TO NEPHI

Again Jehovah speaks. Some centuries later in what is known as the first year of the Christian era, the people on the American continent were watching for fulfillment of prophecy and for the signs of the coming of the Messiah. The wicked ones figured that the day had passed, but Nephi, being greatly concerned, prayed devoutly unto the Lord all day, at the end of which there came to him the voice of the Lord, saying:

Lift up your head and be of good cheer; for behold, the time is at hand, and on this night shall the sign be given, and on the morrow come I into the world, to show unto the world that I will fulfil all that which I have caused to be spoken by the mouth of my holy prophets. (III Nephi 1:13.)

And that night the darkness did not come, and two days and a night were as one day, and the righteous people knew that that day would see the birth of the Savior of the world. A new star appeared as further evidence that the Christ was born.

And the Word was made flesh, and dwelt among us. ... (John 1:14.)

BIRTH OF JESUS

And far across the ocean in the land of Judea that same star shone forth and led the wise men from the East to a stable out of Bethlehem. Here they found a babe wrapped in swaddling clothes and lying in a manger. Mary had become the mother of the Son of God. The shepherds called and paid homage, the angels sang hosannas and the Savior was born into mortality, into his flesh and blood tabernacle. And "his name was called Jesus." (Luke 2:21.)

And the child Jesus was presented in the temple and blessed by the righteous Simeon.

Little is known of the childhood of Jesus, but it is related:

And the child grew, and waxed strong in spirit, filled with wisdom; and the grace of God was upon him. (Luke 2:40.)

Again we hear of him in the temple at Jerusalem at twelve years of age:

And all that heard him were astonished at his understanding and answers. (Luke 2:47.)

He said to his concerned mother:

... wist-ye not that I must be about my Father's business? (Luke 2:49.)

Of his days of preparation we are informed:

And Jesus increased in wisdom and stature, and in favour with God and man. (Luke 2:52.)

HIGHLIGHTS OF MORTAL LIFE OF JESUS

The mortal life of Jesus Christ is well known to us so we mention only a few highlights at this time.

John the Baptist, come from the wilderness and preached repentance.

Then cometh Jesus from Galilee to Jordan unto John, to be baptized of him. (Matt. 3:13.)

And when Jesus came up out of the water

... the heavens were opened unto him, and he saw the Spirit of God descending like a dove, and lighting upon him: And lo a voice from heaven, saying, This is my beloved Son, in whom I am well pleased. (Matt. 3:16, 17.)

We follow our Savior down the dusty roads of Judea over the rocky paths of the highlands and the sandy beaches of the seas, into the synagogues to reprove and rebuke, in the byways to call to repentance.

We find the Redeemer at the marriage at Cana turning water into wine; at the temple at Jerusalem where with his handmade scourge of small cords, he drove from the temple the desecrating traders and money-changers, saying to the cowards:

... make not my Father's house an house of merchandise. (John 2:16.)

The mortal life of the Lord was a hard one. He said:

... Foxes have holes, and birds of the air have nests; but the Son of man hath not where to lay his head. (Luke 9:58.)

He was followed by great multitudes of interested disciples, curious sign-seekers, and critical annoyers with always the vicious lurking in the group, seeking his very life.

He came unto his own, and his own received him not. (John 1:11.)

Even in his old home town he was not appreciated, but was thrust out of the synagogue, out of the city, and led to the brow of the hill to be killed, but he escaped.

And Jesus, walking by the sea of Galilee, saw two brethren, Simon called Peter, and Andrew his brother, casting a net into the sea: for they were fishers. And he saith unto them, Follow me, and I will make you fishers of men. And they straightway left their nets, and followed him. (Matt. 4:18-20.)

And he saw James and John mending their nets and likewise called them and subsequently called other eight from all walks of life to lead his Church, and he "named them apostles."

MIRACLES PERFORMED

The numerous miracles of the Redeemer brought him early attention. The curious followed with wonder; the believers looked on with awe, and because of his increasing popularity, his enemies followed to catch him in lawbreaking, that they might dispose of him.

He blessed loaves and fishes and fed thousands of hungry people. He placed his fingers in the ears of a deaf person, saying "be opened," and the man heard clearly. He "spit and touched" the tongue of one with an impediment in his speech, "and he spake plain." He touched the eyes of the blind saying, "According to your faith be it unto you, and their eyes were opened."

The multitudes marveled saying, "It was never so seen in Israel," as he cast out the devil. His enemies found him healing on the Sabbath and accused him when they heard him say to the man with a withered hand:

... Stretch forth thine hand. And he stretched it forth; and it was restored whole, like as the other. (Matt. 12:13.)

"We never saw it on this fashion," the people said as they saw the roof opened, a sick man let down at the foot of Jesus and saw him carry away his bed at the command: "—take up thy bed and go thy way—" and "Son, thy sins be forgiven thee."

He stopped a funeral procession and touching the bier of the son of the widow of Nain said, "Young man, I say unto thee, Arise." And he that was dead sat up and began to speak.

He astounded the people when he said to the dead daughter of Jairus, "Damsel, I say unto thee arise." They had laughed him to scorn, but now they were shocked when the damsel arose and walked.

The woman who for twelve years of affliction had "spent all her living on physicians, neither could be healed by any" ... "came behind him and touched the border of his garment"—and immediately was healed.

Again he forgave the sinner, stilled the tempest, cleansed the lepers, stirred souls, and raised the dead; even his friend Lazarus who was four days dead, and "by this time stinketh"—when the voice of Jehovah commanded: "Lazarus come forth."

CLOSING EVENTS OF MASTER'S LIFE

And toward the end of his ministry:

... Jesus taketh Peter, James, and John his brother, and bringeth them up into an high mountain apart, And was transfigured before them: and his face did shine as the sun, and his raiment was white as the light. ... While he yet spake, behold, a bright cloud overshadowed them; and behold a voice out of the cloud which said, This is my beloved Son, in whom I am well pleased; hear ye him. (Matt. 17:1, 2, 5.)

Knowing that his hour had come he repaired to the room which had been prepared, and there he gave to his disciples the Last Supper, after which he retired into the Garden of Gethsemane, where he poured out his soul unto his Father:

... O my Father, if this cup may not pass away from me, except I drink it, thy will be done. (Matt. 26:42.)

Then mobsters came, headed by the betrayer.

They stripped him and put on a scarlet robe; they pushed down upon his head a crown of thorns, and placed a reed in his right hand and bowed the knee and mocked and spit upon him, and smote him on the head, and led him to Calvary to be crucified.

Between thieves he was nailed to the cross, and they parted his garments.

Those that loved him crouched about his feet and wept in their helplessness. As his life ebbed, he called:

... Father, forgive them: for they know not what they do. (Luke 23:34.)

... Father, into thy hands I commend my spirit: And having said thus, he gave up the ghost. (Luke 23:46.)

They took his body carefully down, and wrapped it in linen and laid it in a sepulchre.

The three days ended, and Jesus came forth as he had promised. His disciples, both women and men, had been to the tomb and found it empty and were surprised, still not comprehending the fact of the resurrection.

The same day he appeared in the locked room with his apostles and revealed himself to them, convincing them that he lived again. Many hundreds were similarly convinced.

Now his Church was organized, the program clarified, and leaders developed into whose hands he could leave his kingdom. And when his followers were gathered together in Jerusalem:

... he was taken up; and a cloud received him out of their sight. And while they looked steadfastly toward heaven as he went up, behold, two men stood by them in white apparel; Which also said, Ye men of Galilee, why stand ye gazing up into heaven? this same Jesus, which is taken up from you into heaven, shall so come in like manner as ye have seen him go into heaven. (Acts 1:9-11.)

CHRIST'S VISITATION TO WESTERN HEMISPHERE

On the western hemisphere, also, was darkness and destruction, cities burned, mountains leveled, and plains raised, and in the suffering and lamentations of the people a voice was heard among the inhabitants, explaining the disasters and saying:

Behold, I am Jesus Christ the Son of God. I created the heavens and the earth, and all things that in them are. . . . I came unto my own, and my own received me not. . . . I am the light and the life of the world. I am Alpha and Omega, the beginning and the end. . . . Behold, I have come unto the world to bring redemption unto the world, to save the world from sin. (III Nephi 9:15, 16, 18, 21.)

Second Day

Again the Nephites were conversing about Jesus Christ, the sign of whose death had been given to them, and a small, penetrating voice came out of heaven, which pierced them to the very soul and caused their hearts to burn, and the voice again uttered these memorable words:

Behold my Beloved Son, in whom I am well pleased, in whom I have glorified my name—hear ye him. (III Nephi 11:7.)

And as they looked toward heaven:

. . . they saw a Man descending out of heaven; and he was clothed in a white robe; and he came down and stood in the midst of them; and . . . he stretched forth his hand and spake unto the people saying: Behold, I am Jesus Christ, whom the prophets testified shall come into the world. . . . I have drunk out of that bitter cup which the Father hath given me, and have glorified the Father in taking upon me the sins of the world, . . . the whole multitude fell to the earth; for they remembered that it had been prophesied among them that Christ should show himself unto them . . . saying . . . thrust your hands into my side . . . feel the prints of the nails in my hands and in my feet, that ye may know that I am the God of Israel, and the God of the whole earth, and have been slain for the sins of the world. (III Nephi 11:8-12, 14.)

And all the people felt the prints of the nails and of the sword and

. . . did know of a surety and did bear record, that it was he, of whom it was written by the prophets, that should come. (III Nephi 11:15.)

And they worshipped him.

And he organized his Church here, and called his twelve apostles and taught them the doctrines and blessed their children. He restored sight to the blind, strength to the infirm, and wholeness to those who were ill, and after his impressive and continued appearances among them,

. . . there came a cloud and overshadowed the multitude that they could not see Jesus. And while they were overshadowed he departed from them, and ascended into heaven. (III Nephi 18:38, 39.)

Another day he returned, and when he blessed them, they were transfigured and became

. . . white as the countenance and also the garments of Jesus. . . . (III Nephi 19:25.)

A third time he retired to pray

And tongue cannot speak the words which he prayed, neither can be written by man the words which he prayed. . . . he came again to the disciples, and said unto them: So great faith have I never seen among the Jews; wherefore I could not show unto them so great miracles, because of their unbelief. (III Nephi 19:32, 35.)

Such great faith was manifest by his apostles that he touched with his finger the nine who were not to tarry. Again he departed from the earth.

VISION GIVEN TO JOSEPH SMITH

And time passed and the darkness of ages was beginning to be dissipated; the new world of America had been discovered, and honorable God-fearing people had settled upon it. The war had been waged and freedom gained, and religious liberty granted, and the Lord Jesus Christ appeared on earth again to restore and re-establish his kingdom upon the earth, and a young boy with an open and unbiased mind, knelt one beautiful spring morning in a grove, and prayed for light, and though the evil power attempted to destroy him, he was relieved by the appearance of a pillar of light above the brightness of the sun.

Joseph Smith continues story:

... It no sooner appeared than I found myself delivered from the enemy which held me bound. When the light rested upon me I saw two personages, whose brightness and glory defy all description, standing above me in the air. One of them spake unto me, calling me by name, and said—pointing to the other—"This is my beloved Son, hear him." (History of the Church, Vol. I, p. 5.)

There followed warnings, instructions, and commandments and finally, as Joseph says:

When I came to myself again, I found myself lying on my back, looking up into heaven. (Ibid., p. 6.)

Following this vision came numerous other visitations from heavenly beings, in the restoration of the gospel and the establishing of his kingdom upon the earth.

The work went forward, the Church was organized, the Book of Mormon was printed, the revelations were given, twelve apostles were called, the temple in Kirtland was built, and during the dedication of it in 1836:

... Joseph Smith and Oliver Cowdery retired to the pulpit, the veils being dropped, and there bowed in silent prayer. After rising from their knees the Savior appeared to them standing on the breast-work of the pulpit and blessed them, accepting the building in his name. (Essentials in Church History, pp. 191-192.)

TESTIMONIES OF CHRIST'S DIVINITY

And so, having traced the appearances of the Redeemer from pre-existence to date, we look forward now to his second coming as he promised. This promise will be literally fulfilled as were his many other promises, and in the meantime, we praise his holy name and serve him, and bear testimony of the divinity of his mission, with the prophets through the generations!

We testify with John the Baptist, who, as he saw the Lord approaching to him, saith:

... Behold the Lamb of God, which taketh away the sin of the world. (John 1:29.)

Not just a man of human warmth, but the Lamb of God.

We bear witness with Nathanael, an Israelite in whom was no guile:

... Rabbi, thou art the Son of God; thou art the King of Israel. (John 1:49.)

Not merely a great teacher, but the very Son of God.

We testify again with John the Beloved, who seeing Jesus on the shore, said with conviction, "It is the Lord!" not only a great humanist, but the Lord God of heaven.

And with Simon Peter, who, when asked by the Lord, "But whom say ye that I am?" said, "Thou art the Christ, the Son of the living God," (Matt. 16:15, 16), and received this statement from the Savior:

... Blessed art thou, Simon Bar-jona: for flesh and blood hath not revealed it unto thee, but my Father which is in heaven. (Matt. 16:17.)

And finally, we bear witness with the Prophet Joseph Smith who was willing to give his life for his testimony, which comes to us in his own words as follows:

I had actually seen a light, and in the midst of that light I saw two personages, and they did in reality speak to me; ... I have actually seen a vision, and who am I that I can ... deny what I have actually seen? For I had seen a vision; I knew it, and I knew that God knew it, and I could not deny it, neither dared I do it, at least I knew that by so doing I would offend God, and come under condemnation. (History of the Church, Vol. I, pp. 7, 8.)

I repeat my testimony:

I know that Jesus, through eternities past and future, is the Creator, the Redeemer, the Savior, the Son of God. I bear it in his holy name. Amen.

ELDER ANTOINE R. IVINS

Of the First Council of the Seventy

It's a thrilling sight, my brothers and sisters, to stand before you on this occasion, and I trust that you will give me your faith and prayers, that the short time I occupy, my words may be directed by the Spirit of God.

It is two weeks today since Sister Ivins and I finished a tour of the East Central States Mission which was the third mission that I had inspected during this season. I have met the sons and daughters of many of you, and I bring you, from them, a good word. I want to tell you that they are interested in their work, they are devoted to it, and they are striving to the best of their ability and their utmost power to teach and preach the gospel of Jesus Christ. I pray that you will have faith in them, that you will have no misgivings as to their future, for they are in the hands of God and are striving to do his work. It was interesting to study with them their problems, and to strive to help them in the solution of these problems. One of the questions that they confront most often, is the statement of many people, "We could accept your teachings and the principles which you advocate, if it were not for the supernatural conditions that you allege surrounded the birth of your organization."

WORLD'S RELUCTANCE TO ACCEPT MODERN REVELATION

Brother Kimball has told us in the address which he has just finished, of the mission of Jesus Christ, of his appearance to the Prophet Joseph Smith. That seems the hardest thing for Christian people to accept when they think of us, for we allege in that statement that Christ is actually the Son of God, that God is a separate and distinct personage from Christ, and that man is made in their image. That statement topples the Christian idea which prevailed at the time of the Prophet Joseph Smith; it had prevailed for ages before him, and it still prevails. It is the most difficult thing for them to accept. It is miraculous that God and Christ should appear to a human being. At the same time, they will tell you that they accept without reservation the statements of the Bible, and some of them will go so far as to tell you they believe every word that is in it. When we read it, we find that one great prophet of God, Jacob, wrestled during the night with an angel from heaven. That doesn't seem difficult to them. We come down through history, and we find the Israelites in bondage in Egypt, their liberation necessary. We find that God, through the faith of those people, turned back the waters of the Red Sea, so that they walked through on dry ground, and the hosts of Egypt which followed were overcome by the returning waves, and the people were thus liberated. They accept that; it doesn't seem beyond their powers of belief. Those people wander on into the desert, and they find themselves thirsty. They want water, and Moses strikes a stone with his rod, the water gushing forth to quench the thirst of that unhappy people. They accept that. Then they find themselves hungry, and God causes them to be fed from heaven with divine food; and they accept that. Again we find a prophet who is able to call down from heaven fire to consume those who are obstructing the work of God. And thus it goes. We find the Savior himself, praying to his Heavenly Father in Gethsemane. These are all miraculous things, and people accept them more or less as in the ordinary events of the work of God, but they say, "Now why should there be a miracle in our day?" I can't bring myself to believe that those people were in any greater need of divine help than are people in our day. I can't bring myself to believe, either, that they were any more dear to God their Heavenly Father, as his children, than we and our fathers and grandfathers. And I can't bring myself to believe that we are any more unworthy of the aid of God than they were. So to me, it seems a more or less proper thing and a natural thing, that God should so manifest himself.

PERSONALITY OF DEITY AGAIN REVEALED

To me that is the great and underlying reason for the restoration of the gospel in the latter days—the fact that people had come to misunderstand the personality of God; they had come to question his power of intervention in the affairs of men, and it was necessary that they should be taught again the things which they were taught in the testimony that was given at the baptism of Christ, and in the testimony that was given in the appearance of Christ to the Nephites. They were again to be taught that Christ is the Son of God. It is one of the most difficult things for sectarian peoples to accept because of the indoctrination that they have received over these many generations. That is one of the problems that your boys and your girls, young and old, have to present to the people in the mission fields.

Many of them have gone out, not knowing too well these things, sometimes because we at home have failed to do our full duty in explaining these truths to them. Some of us perchance depend upon our Sunday Schools, our Mutuals, and our priesthood quorums entirely for such instruction. But I feel that it is the duty of every father and every mother in Israel to see that their son and their daughter know these things, and to qualify them to testify to the world that it is true, that God came back and visited the Prophet Joseph Smith, and spoke to him thus bringing back to the world the testimony as to the true personality of God. I believe that they should further teach them the various and sundry teachings of the Church, regarding these things; baptism, repentance, faith in God, charity in their lives, chastity, and all the virtues that go to make fine men and women, so that those who may be called for missionary service shall go into the world fully convinced in their hearts that God lives; that he is the Father of their spirits; that he is the guardian of them all; that he actually has personal interest in our welfare; and that he can be sought in prayer for aid and assistance. If they go into the world understanding these things, they will be effective and efficient missionaries for the Church.

SPECIAL CALLING OF THE SEVENTIES

I represent the great body of the priesthood, whose purpose by ordination is to disseminate these truths. Many of those men have family obligations which prevent them from actually going into the world themselves to do this preaching, but they frequently have sons and daughters who can represent them, and I feel it is their duty, after preparing those boys and girls, young men and young women for that work, to present them, even at a sacrifice, if you want to call it such, to the Church for the short period of time that is required in the mission field. That is the work of the seventy, to testify to the restoration of the gospel; and if they can't do it personally, why can they not do it through their sons and their daughters?

It is a pleasing thing to me that there is an increasing percentage of men in the missions of the world. It has been our experience in the stake missions, that as the percentage of men decreased, the hours required for baptism increased. It seems that there is a power in the priesthood of God that is necessary to the ultimate conversion of men. And I would like to see this percentage increase beyond its present status, both in the foreign missions and in the stake missions. When our stake missions began, we had a percentage of sixty from the seventies quorum, whose special duty it is to teach, and today that percentage is as low as thirty-five. I personally would like to see that restored to its original percentage, or better, so that the seventies of the Church will actually be doing the work for which they are set aside by ordination.

Now, that is our duty; it is the duty of the Church to break down the unfounded traditions of the past and to teach the restoration of the gospel. Every man who is warned should warn his neighbor. We are doing a valiant work, but we are likely not doing all we could and all we ought to do in this capacity.

I pray that God may give us a proper appreciation of our obligations to each other and to the world, that he may give us a proper understanding of the principles of the gospel, that may enable us to teach our young men and young women, our boys and our girls, our sons and daughters, the doctrines upon which they should rest their faith, in such a way as to build up in their hearts an undying faith regarding this great work in which we are engaged; so that at such time, when the Presidency of the Church sees fit to ask them for a service, they may be ready for it. May he bless us all, that we may live more near to him, that we ourselves may understand better our obligations to each other, that we may be able to purify our thoughts and our emotions and our actions so as to be worthy recipients of the Spirit of God, I pray in Jesus' name. Amen.

ELDER JOSEPH F. MERRILL

Of the Council of the Twelve Apostles

My dear brethren and sisters: In the few minutes allotted me, I shall not deliver a sermon or make an address or a speech. I propose to make a few remarks relative to a few current matters that I believe to be important. These remarks are made to Latter-day Saints only, and on my own responsibility. Others may listen if they care to. But since other people do not believe our religious teachings, it is hopeless to expect that they will be influenced by anything I say at this time.

THE PRESENT SINFUL CONDITION OF THE WORLD

But to continue: We live in a sinful world. Much wickedness abounds. Crime is rampant and much of it goes unpunished, for many criminals are never even apprehended. Lawlessness is everywhere. There is also an immense amount of wrongdoing going on all the time that can hardly be classed as wickedness or crime. Selfishness, greed, smoking, drinking, profanity, Sabbath breaking, are examples. It is needless to say that any Latter-day Saint who indulges in any of these things, or in many others not mentioned, is violating his covenants. But since many Latter-day Saints do indulge, to a greater or less extent in these things, the need of repentance is ever present among us, and the obligation to repent is much greater with us than it is with other sinners who have not covenanted to keep the commandments of the Lord.

For of him unto whom much is given much is required. (D. & C. 82:3.)

NEED FOR REPENTANCE AMONG LATTER-DAY SAINTS

Regrettable as it may be, sinful indulgences among Latter-day Saint people are often a real handicap to our stake missionary work because non-members see so much bad in many of us that they feel we should first convert ourselves. In other words, they cannot hear what we say because what we are rings so loudly in their ears. They would rather see a sermon any day than hear one. Our principles are lofty, but our indulgences often seem to belie our sincerity, "for a tree is judged by its fruit." For example, we teach total abstinence from the use of narcotics, and Utah is rightly regarded as a "Mormon" state—a state wherein our people are in the majority. Yet, reputedly reliable statistics show that Utah's people consume as much alcoholic beverage per capita as is consumed on an average per capita in the United States. According to official figures, during the fiscal year 1946, there was paid in Utah for liquor and tobacco, two hundred eighty percent more than was paid in the fiscal year 1941.

Yes, frankness compels us to admit that the sins of the world exist among us to a greater or less extent. For this reason, responsible leaders in the Church, the stakes, and the wards are continually calling our people, as well as the people of the world, to real, sincere repentance. Repentance from what, does someone ask? The answer is obvious: Turn away from and do no more those things that are out of harmony with the teachings of the Master, Jesus Christ. These are summarized in two great commandments—to ... love the Lord thy God with all thy heart, and with all thy soul, and with all thy strength, and with all thy mind; and thy neighbor as thyself. (Luke 10:27.)

MAN GIVEN POWER TO CHOOSE GOOD OR EVIL

Why love God, I was once asked. Because he is our Father who loves his children dearly and is the giver of every good we have. It is his work and his glory to bring to pass the immortality and eternal life of man, as he told Moses. Due to these facts, he has given us a way of life to follow, which, if we do, will bring us great joy both here and hereafter. But he does not compel us to pursue the way indicated. He has given us our free agency which we may exercise without severe condemnation only so long as we do not infringe upon the rights of our fellow men, and I repeat, only so long as we do not infringe upon the rights of others. But because of an evil power in the world during the life of the human family, many of the Father's children have yielded to temptation and departed more or less widely from the ways of the Lord. In consequence, sin, wickedness, and crime have developed among men, resulting in misery and suffering in various degrees, depending upon the extent of the departure from the divine path. The Apostle Paul's description of the last days certainly fits these times. He wrote:

... perilous times shall come. For men shall be lovers of their own selves, covetous, boasters, proud, blasphemers, disobedient to parents, unthankful, unholy, ... incontinent, fierce, despisers of those that are good, Traitors, heady, highminded, lovers of pleasures more than lovers of God. (II Tim. 3:1-4.)

These deplorable conditions in the world are now even worse in some respects than Paul described them. Because of man's increasing power to control the forces of nature, he has multiplied the ways of injury both to himself and to his fellow men. As an example, we now have the atomic bomb.

PEACE CAN COME THROUGH FOLLOWING THE GOLDEN RULE

Up to this point, I have spoken only in general terms and have said nothing new. Let me now specify a little. The world at the moment is in a critical and very unsettled condition. Notwithstanding the fact that we have just emerged from the most widespread and destructive war the world has ever seen, there is little or no evidence that men have repented from the sins that brought on the war. The inhabitants long for peace, but there is yet no peace, because selfishness and greed are still dominant, and too many people are determined to get what they want, using to this end, any and every means within their power.

Some keen and wise observers in this country have recently asserted that the United States now faces the most critical period in its history. Various groups of men are striving to agree on terms of peace, but success has not yet been sighted. The spirit of the Golden Rule does not yet dominate the hearts and minds of the negotiators, and so another war may be imminent; it is being talked of in hushed terms. Apparently it can be avoided only if certain great powers will recede from positions they have taken. During the recent war, ideals were set up and efforts to implement them are now meeting with determined opposition, just as was the case following World War I. This country fought then, as it did in the recent conflict, that war should be no more.

Why can't the same rules govern nations as govern individuals? In civilized countries, no two men can go at each other with their fists or guns without subjecting themselves to prosecution in a court. Why can't a similar rule apply to nations? Why is it legal to slay in masses and not in singles? Shall we not continue to hope and pray that efforts to outlaw war will soon succeed? God grant that this may be so, and that we shall not have to await the millennium for this great boon!

THE REPEAL OF CERTAIN LAWS URGED

But international war is not the only danger we face. The outlook internally is very dark. The struggle to get more and more for less and less seems to be growing in intensity and is spreading to more groups and individuals. In all of this, the idea of universal brotherhood and the Golden rule seems to be forgotten. Furthermore, the fundamental principle of the Declaration of Independence from England giving the right to the individual of life, liberty, and the pursuit of happiness is currently violated in the case of millions of people, not only by organizations, but in certain cases, I very much regret to say, apparently by the federal government itself. The right to labor is denied except through membership in organizations, exempt from rules and regulations that govern individuals and industrial organizations engaged in business. Equality before the law does not exist in the relationship of employers and labor unions. Why is this so? One reason is because too many politicians are so deeply afflicted with the itch for office that they will do nothing that is opposed by officers of labor unions. These organizations could be of great benefit to their members and still function within the letter and spirit of the divinely inspired Constitution as it was made by the Fathers of our Republic. The "closed-shop" and so-called jurisdictional and sympathetic strikes should be outlawed at once by the federal government and every state in the American Union. Shall America be as the founder-fathers planned—the land of the free and the home of the brave? If so, the repeal of some laws and the making of better ones is the need of the hour. Who can deny it?

LABOR STRIKES IN AMERICA

Let us glance for the moment at some recent events. Some months ago, a great labor strike was called which directly involved hundreds of thousands of people and indirectly the entire country. An increase of thirty percent in wages was demanded in order that the same take-home pay, enjoyed during the war should continue. But it was requested that there should be no increase in the cost of living—a request impossible to implement. Those making these demands seemed to have forgotten that in order to hasten war production, war workers were given their wage demands and were thus placed in a highly favored class in comparison with all other civilians who received no wage increases. When these workers returned to civilian production, was it fair, right, and just to continue this discrimination? Remember that these discriminated-against civilians greatly outnumbered the war workers. But even so, the politicians know that the majority of the people are unorganized and that labor unions hold the balance of power in elections; hence their subservience to labor unions.

What have the great strikes of the last several months accomplished? Among other things, they have impoverished many of the members of labor unions and it will take years to recover all the wages lost during the prolonged strikes; they have increased the cost of living for everybody; they have brought labor unions into disrepute; they have delayed the production of much needed civilian goods; they have brought unrest, suffering, and uncertainty into millions of homes, and have thrown great multitudes on to public relief; they have brought indecision and trouble to the government, both federal and state, and have weakened the influence of America abroad. The method of the strike has been the mass-picket and the closed shop. What difference, in principle, is there between this method of holdup and that of a gun? In both, force is applied. Then are not both methods forms of robbery? And is not robbery intolerable to our American way of life? Does not freedom demand that all forms of robbery shall be outlawed? Shall not the cries of a suffering people be heard and relief be granted? Do we not need statesmen and fewer weak-kneed politicians in public office? Shall the selfish interests of a few continue to prevail over the interests of the many? Are not the interests of the public always involved in strikes and lockouts? Hence, does it not appear that a means of bringing peace to management and labor is an imperative need of the hour, if we are to revert to the way of life given us by the founders of our Republic—a way that made our country great? Various means to this end have been proposed by both writers and speakers; but as I see it, no means of bringing permanent peace can succeed unless they are characterized by the spirit of the Golden Rule. I discussed this phase in a radio address given last November, showing that fairness, right, and justice must be the basis of settlement to attain permanent peace. To this end arbitration courts seem necessary.

A WARNING AGAINST COMMUNISM

I would like to call attention to what appears evident to me—the similarity of the spirit seen in some phases of certain labor troubles with that of communism as it exists in some parts of Europe. I again remind you that I am speaking to Latter-day Saint people. I ask your attention while I read a circular given to the people of the Church by the First Presidency ten years ago and published in The Improvement Era of August 1936. It is as follows:

WARNING TO CHURCH MEMBERS

With great regret we learn from credible sources, governmental and others, that a few Church members are joining, directly or indirectly, the communists and are taking part in their activities.

The Church does not interfere, and has no intention of trying to interfere, with the fullest and freest exercise of the political franchise of its members, under and within our Constitution which the Lord declared: "I established . . . by the hands of wise men whom I raised up unto this very purpose," (D. & C. 101:80) and which, as to the principles thereof, the Prophet dedicating the Kirtland Temple, prayed should be "established forever."

But communism is not a political party nor a political plan under the Constitution; it is a system of government that is the opposite of our Constitutional government, and it would be necessary to destroy our government before communism could be set up in the United States.

Since communism, established, would destroy our American Constitutional government, to support communism is treasonable to our free institutions, and no patriotic American citizen may become either a communist or supporter of communism.

To our Church members we say: Communism is not the United Order, and bears only the most superficial resemblance thereto; communism is based upon intolerance and force, the United Order upon love and freedom of conscience and action; communism involves forceful despoliation and confiscation, the United Order voluntary consecration and sacrifice.

Communists cannot establish the United Order, nor will communism bring it about. The United Order will be established by the Lord in his own due time and in accordance with the regular prescribed order of the Church.

Furthermore, it is charged by universal report, which is not successfully contradicted or disproved, that communism undertakes to control, if not indeed to proscribe the religious life of the people living within its jurisdiction, and that it even reaches its hand into the sanctity of the family circle itself, disrupting the normal relationship of parent and child, all in a manner unknown and unsanctioned under the Constitutional guarantees under which we in America live. Such interference would be contrary to the fundamental precepts of the gospel and to the teachings and order of the Church.

Communism being thus hostile to loyal American citizenship and incompatible with true Church membership, of necessity no loyal American citizen and no faithful Church member can be a communist.

We call upon all Church members completely to eschew communism. The safety of our divinely inspired Constitutional government and the welfare of our Church imperatively demand that communism shall have no place in America.

Heber J. Grant
J. Reuben Clark, Jr.
David O. McKay

I have read this letter because I feel the need for it is more evident today than it was ten years ago. The spirit of communism is unquestionably wholly foreign to the spirit of true Americanism. As seen in the country where it has long been dominant, it is wholly atheistic; it denies the existence of God; as frequently manifested, it is extremely cruel and inhuman. Confiscation and murder have been employed to reach its end. It should be impossible to get any Latter-day Saint to give the least degree of sympathy to communism as it is manifested in Europe.

Brethren and sisters, there is but one safe course for us—which is to be steadfast, loyal, and true to the Church and its leadership. May the Lord help us to be so, I pray in the name of Jesus Christ, our Lord. Amen.

ELDER MARION G. ROMNEY

Assistant to the Council of the Twelve Apostles

My brethren and sisters: This is a tremendous experience for me. I know that the importance of this occasion is far above personalities, but I never get up to address you in general conference but what something happens to my voice, and my spirit, and my body.

RESPONSIBILITY OF ADDRESSING A GENERAL CONFERENCE

I know the gospel is true. I doubt if I shall know it better, that is, with more certainty, when I stand before my Maker and give an account of the deeds done in the flesh. So I am not frightened on that account. But somehow it seems that the enemy of all righteousness keeps suggesting to me, "You can't do it; you can't address this great congregation in conference assembled."

I suppose the reason why the responsibility seems so great is that I accept, without any reservation whatever, the truth that this is a general conference of the citizens of the literal kingdom of God. I know that the Redeemer is here in spirit today, and I know that the men through whom he speaks to all the rest of his brothers and sisters now on the earth, all of God's children, are right behind me on my right. I know that if the Savior should come to earth today, he would come here. I know that you know that, and I know that you have come here to get spiritual food and to be built up in your faith.

And since I am called to speak, I know that I have the responsibility of giving a message worthy of this occasion, and so I pray that while I stand here, you will support me with your prayers. I want to say something that will be worth your while and that will help to build up God's kingdom in the earth. The thing I have had in mind to say has been referred to in almost every sermon given in this great conference. President George Albert Smith mentioned it. He said, speaking of world conditions, that there is no way to improve them other than by obedience to the plan the Lord has outlined. Brother Widtsoe talked about the way to peace, and as I understood him, he said there is no way to peace except through obedience to those principles upon which peace is founded.

THE PRINCIPLE OF OBEDIENCE

I want to say a word about the principle of obedience, and I pray that the Lord will bring the thoughts to my mind in organized fashion. We who are here have great hopes for peace in this world and exaltation in the presence of God in the world to come. That is our objective. We hope for something more than the rest of the world hopes for in this respect. We are no better than the rest of the world, let me say, except to the degree to which we accept the commandments of the Lord and obey them. But we have great hopes that we can gain an exaltation in the presence of our Heavenly Father.

It is my firm conviction, however, that the only saving hope we have in this matter, is that hope which is based upon a faith strong enough to impel obedience to the things which we know are right. I don't have very much respect for a man who testifies that he has faith in the principle of tithing, unless he lives it. Neither do I think his faith will do him any good unless he does pay his tithing. And I almost have contempt for the men who say they have faith in the leadership of this Church, who do not follow in their living the things which the leadership of the Church teach them. I refer, of course, to the men whom we sustain as prophets, seers, and revelators.

The principle of obedience to the laws of the gospel is fundamental. It lies at the base. The Prophet Joseph Smith learned it very early in his ministry. He learned it when he went that first morning, after the visits of Moroni, to the Hill Cumorah. He had gone there under the direction of the angel, who had told him that he should have no thought in mind other than to bring to pass the righteousness of God and the accomplishment of his purposes in the earth. Joseph's family was very poor, and as he walked toward the hill, he thought about the intrinsic value of the things that the angel had told him were buried there. He wondered if the plates, or something else to be found with them, could not be used to relieve the poverty of his parents and their family. When he uncovered the box and saw the gold plates, he reached to take them out and received a shock that set him back. He reached again and received a more severe shock. Then the third time, thinking all he needed was physical strength, he reached with all his might to take the plates and received still another shock which sapped his strength, and he cried out, "Why can I not obtain this book?" And unexpectedly to him, the angel said, "Because you have not kept the commandments of the Lord." And then Joseph received a great manifestation that I have not time here to tell you about, but it kept him reminded all the days of his life that he had to obey in order to receive the promised blessings. The angel told him that he could not get the plates then, and that he would not be able to get them until he was not only willing to obey the laws of God but also was able to do so.

OBEDIENCE BRINGS BLESSINGS

That is a great lesson we all must learn. The Prophet, later, through the inspiration of the Lord, stated the principle thus:

There is a law, irrevocably decreed in heaven before the foundations of this world, upon which all blessings are predicated—And when we obtain any blessing from God, it is by obedience to that law upon which it is predicated. (D. & C. 130:20, 21.)

Our obedience, brothers and sisters, must be self-impelled. We should not render obedience because we are forced to do it, or because the bishop is looking, or because the General Authorities are present. We must render obedience because we love righteousness and have a testimony of the truth in our hearts, and because we want to go back to our Father in heaven and help take all his children with us.

Furthermore, we ought to obey his commandments as they are given. We ought not to twist and turn and bend them to our will; we ought to obey them as they come from the mouths of these men who sit here on this stand, because they speak for God. If we do not, our faith is vain.

SAUL AND THE AMALEKITES

Now, I want to take an example from the Old Testament scripture to illustrate what I have in mind and to help drive this principle home. There was a very wicked clan of people, a nation, who lived in the days of Saul, known as the Amalekites. They had been wicked for a long time. Even back in the days of Father Abraham, they had persecuted the people of God, and he had said, through his prophets, on numerous occasions, that when they became ripened in iniquity, they should be destroyed.

That time came in the days of Saul. Through the Prophet Samuel, the Lord told Saul to go and destroy the Amalekites, every one of them and all their livestock. Saul went with his army and destroyed all the people except their king, Agag, whom he spared in violation of the commandment of the Lord. He likewise destroyed all the ordinary livestock, but when he came to the choice sheep, and the cattle, and the fatlings, and the lambs, the pressure of the people, who desired to possess them, was so great on Saul that he yielded and took them with him as he returned.

The Lord told Samuel what had happened, and Samuel went out to meet Saul, who greeted him with the salutation:

... Blessed be thou of the Lord: I have performed the commandment of the Lord. And Samuel said, What meaneth then this bleating of the sheep in mine ears, and the lowing of the oxen which I hear? (1 Sam. 15: 13, 14.)

Then Saul began to justify himself. He argued that his partial performance was a complete performance, and that he had done what the Lord had asked him to do. Samuel called to his attention that when he was humble, "When thou wast little in thine own sight," he said, the Lord took you out of obscurity, and raised you up, and magnified you, and made you king over Israel, and now you have chosen to disobey the commandment of the Lord. (See 1 Samuel 15:17-19.) Saul hit on the best excuse he could find when he said that they had brought the cattle and sheep and lambs and fatlings back to offer as sacrifices unto the Lord. He thus claimed to be relying on the commandment to offer sacrifices.

And Samuel said, Hath the Lord as great delight in burnt offerings and sacrifices, as in obeying the voice of the Lord? Behold, to obey is better than sacrifice, and to hearken than the fat of rams. For rebellion is as the sin of witchcraft, and stubbornness is as iniquity and idolatry. Because thou hast rejected the word of the Lord, he hath also rejected thee from being king. (1 Sam. 15:22, 23.)

That brought something home to Saul. He was being told by the prophet who had anointed him king, that he had been rejected because he had not obeyed the Lord. He then showed some regrets. But he did not exhibit that godly sorrow which worketh repentance, but rather the sorrow of the world which worketh death. He asked Samuel to pray with him that he might again prevail with the Lord. Samuel said he could not do that, but at Saul's persistent urging he did so without success, for the Lord did not again accept Saul. You know the sequel. Saul lost his kingdom, and David was chosen to take his place.

FULL OBEDIENCE REQUIRED

Now, there are a number of things in this incident which can be applied in our lives today. First, Saul received his directions through the prophet living in his day. We come to conference to receive directions from the living prophets in our day. Second, Saul used his own judgment as to whether he would perform the commandment given to him, and decided that he would not do it exactly as he was commanded. And third, when he was called to account, he prevaricated about it. He said, "I have done it."

There is another very interesting thing about this incident. When Samuel confronted Saul with what he had done, Saul said, "Because I feared the people, . . . [I] obeyed their voice." That reminded me of the statement of the Lord in the third section of the Doctrine and Covenants, where he told the Prophet Joseph that he should not have yielded to the persuasions of men. This revelation was given, you will remember, after Martin Harris had lost the one hundred and sixteen manuscript pages of the Book of Mormon translation. With Saul, it was the fear of the people, and with the Prophet it was the persuasions of men. The Prophet learned never to yield again.

That is where our temptations come from, my brothers and sisters. The people around us do not believe what the prophets say, and we yield to their arguments. I know, of course, that there is great faith in Israel, and I suppose you do not need this talk, but there are many people who do need it.

The other day I was at a conference not far from here, and a man stood up to talk, a humble middle-aged man who had a house full of children to rear with only a limited amount of means with which to do it. He said, "I want to tell you about a letter I received from my mother." And this is about what she had written in that letter: "My son, for many years I have been looking forward to the time when I would reach my present age, in order that I might receive an old age pension so that I would not need to call upon you for support out of your limited income. And now, just as I reach it, the Church says, don't take it. I don't know that I understand all the reasons why the Church says don't take it, but I do know that the Church has always been right. Therefore, please continue to remit each month." And the man said, "I am glad to remit."

ADAM'S IMPLICIT OBEDIENCE

I liked that. I like that spirit and that action. It reminded me of the obedience evidenced by our great progenitor Adam, the first man. He was commanded by the Lord, you remember, after he and Eve had left the Garden, that they were to build an altar and offer sacrifice, and he did it. He built an altar and offered sacrifices, and after many days an angel of the Lord stood by Adam and said,

... Why dost thou offer sacrifice unto the Lord? And Adam said unto him: I know not, save the Lord commanded me. (Pearl of Great Price, Moses 5:6.)

What a lesson! Here was a man, a great man. In our understanding, he stands next to the Redeemer of the world. He built an altar and killed the offering and offered it on the altar without knowing why he did it. How men have changed! Had Adam been a modern, he would not have offered that sacrifice until someone had presented to him a human argument which to his mind justified sacrificing the animal rather than putting it in his cold-storage locker.

But, thank goodness, Adam was not a modern. He had faith, a faith which impelled him to obey the commandment of the Lord, and after he had obeyed he learned why the commandment was given. The angel told him that the sacrifice was in the similitude of the sacrifice of the Only Begotten of the Father, and he taught him the principles of the gospel, which Adam accepted and obeyed, thereby receiving all the blessings thereof which he never could have received without that obedience.

As Adam had to obey, so must we. God help us to listen to his living prophets and get their messages and obey them as they are given, that we may gain the great rewards which the Lord holds out to us, I humbly pray in the name of Jesus Christ. Amen.

President J. Reuben Clark, Jr.:

We shall now hear from Elder Joseph Anderson, the Clerk of the Conference, one of the most loyal, devoted servants who work in the cause of the Lord.

ELDER JOSEPH ANDERSON

Clerk of the Conference and Secretary to the First Presidency

My brethren and sisters, this is truly a great honor; it is also a great shock. I have sat here in these conferences for now many years, in fact I think this is the fiftieth conference that I have helped to report. Many wonderful messages have been given to the people during that time. I have been inspired by them as you good brethren and sisters have been. However, this morning, I cannot think of a single word of any of those messages that I heard. I do feel sure that the spirit of the messages has continued with me!

It is a great privilege to serve in the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints. It is a wonderful blessing to have a testimony that this is the true Gospel of Christ. It is marvelous to me, when I look back over the history of the Church, to realize the great progress and accomplishments that have been made. This Church which was started a hundred and sixteen years ago, with only six members of an average age of perhaps twenty-four years, just young men, today has nearly a million members on the rolls. During that time the Lord has inspired the leadership of the Church. The Prophet Joseph Smith gave to us the foundation of this Church, the fundamental doctrines, none of which we have had to change. While he, himself, was not an educated man in the sense that the world looks upon education, yet he drew to himself, to his aid, men of great education, men of great ability and men who had faith in his leadership.

Brigham Young, who succeeded him, was raised up by the Lord to perform the great work that he performed. He was truly a man of God. There were those who were willing to follow the Prophet Joseph who were not willing to follow Brigham Young. One man said of the Prophet Joseph, "I could follow that man to the ends of the world, but I cannot follow Brigham Young." He and some others led away groups from the Church, expecting to establish other churches, but they failed. The true and faithful and devoted members of the Church followed Brigham Young into these valleys of the Rocky Mountains. They were willing to lay down their lives for the Gospel and for the testimony that they had, for they knew that God had again spoken from the heavens. Many of them did lay down their lives as they crossed the Plains. These men, the Prophet Joseph Smith, Brigham Young, and their successors, have been truly men of God, and they have accomplished the work that the Lord required at their hands.

It has been my good fortune to have the privilege of becoming well acquainted, intimately acquainted, with the leaders of this Church in our day, and I am very grateful for that opportunity. I can say to you, of them, as I have said of their predecessors, that they are truly men of God. When I first came into the office of the First Presidency, President Heber J. Grant was the President, and Charles W. Penrose and Anthony W. Ivins were the Counselors. It was a glorious privilege to be with those men, to hear their counsels and advice. Since that time they have passed away and others have come.

With President Grant, I have travelled from one end of this country to the other many, many times, and in Europe, in Canada, and in the Hawaiian Islands and other places. I think I knew President Grant as well as any man knew him. I have heard his testimonies borne in this tabernacle many times. I have heard his testimony borne in Europe, and in all these places I have mentioned. I have even heard him bear testimony to me alone, and I think that one of the things that will stand out in my memory regarding President Grant, as much as anything else, is the strong, vigorous testimony that he bore. He knew that the Gospel is true, and what I say of President Grant I can say of President Smith. President Smith is one of the most kindly, generous, lovable men that I have ever known. In fact, I do not see how one could be greater in those respects.

President Smith recently visited the Mexican Mission, and I had the opportunity of going there with him. I think he accomplished a wonderful work in meeting with the Saints in that mission. He impressed those who had drifted away from the Church, with the truth of the Gospel, and I am sure that a marvelous work was accomplished by him at that time. These men who are associated with him, his Counselors, the brethren of the Twelve and the other Authorities, I bear testimony to you are truly servants of the Lord Jesus Christ. Their only desire is the welfare and blessing of this people, and the progress of the Church of God upon the earth.

For me, it is difficult to understand how anyone who claims to be a member of the Church, especially one who holds the Priesthood of God, can question the counsel and inspiration that come from these men. As I say, I have been with them now over quite a period of time; I have heard their counsel, their advice, their instruction to the people; I have recognized the inspiration of the Lord to them. I have yet the first occasion to know of when they have been wrong, when they have deliberated upon a matter and then given instruction or counsel to this people. I know that the Lord is with them and I am grateful for the privilege of serving them.

Brethren and sisters, we have in the Church inspired leadership, the servants of the living God. My humble pleading to you today is, that you will listen to their counsels, and that you will follow their advice. I doubt that they would have called on me to speak today had they known that I would speak along the line that I have spoken. I feel, however, that I should be remiss in my duty if I did not mention these things. The Lord bless us and help us to carry on the great work in which we are engaged, help us to sustain these brethren who stand at the head of the Church, not only by our uplifted hand but by our every act, I humbly pray, in the name of Jesus Christ. Amen.

President J. Reuben Clark, Jr.:

The Richfield Combined Choruses will now sing, "O Death, Where is Thy Sting?"

The closing prayer will be offered by President Elton L. Taylor of the Carbon Stake, after which this Conference will stand adjourned until 2:00 this afternoon.

The proceedings of the afternoon session will be broadcast over KSL at Salt Lake City and KSUB at Cedar City.

The Richfield Combined Choruses sang, "O Lord, Have Mercy," after which the closing prayer was offered by Elder Elton L. Taylor, President of Carbon Stake.

Conference adjourned until 2 o'clock p.m.

SECOND DAY

AFTERNOON MEETING

Conference reconvened at 2 o'clock Saturday afternoon, October 5th.

President George Albert Smith:

The time has arrived for the beginning of our meeting this afternoon. The house is filled to overflowing and people standing in the gallery and in the doorways in the lower part of the house. I would like to suggest, brethren and sisters, that those of you who can squeeze up just one inch on a bench will give quite a number of people an opportunity to be seated. The Assembly Hall is open and is also warmed, and the radio is working over there.

President David O. McKay will conduct the services this afternoon.

President David O. McKay:

This is the fourth session of the 117th Semi-Annual Conference of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints. We are convened in the Tabernacle on Temple Square, Salt Lake City.

There are on the stand this afternoon all the General Authorities of the Church, except Elder Stephen L Richards of the Council of the Twelve, who is detained at home by his doctor's orders; Elder Ezra Taft Benson, also of the Council of the Twelve, who is in Europe in charge of the European Mission; and the Patriarch to the Church, also absent on account of illness.

The proceedings of this session will be broadcast over KSL of Salt Lake City.

We will begin the afternoon services by the Richfield Combined Choruses singing: "Sun of My Soul." Elder Arden Peterson is the director. Elder Frank W. Asper is the organist.

The opening prayer will be offered by President Henry H. Rawlings of the Franklin Stake.

The Richfield Combined Choruses sang: "Sun of My Soul."

President Henry H. Rawlings of the Franklin Stake offered the opening prayer.

The Richfield Combined Choruses sang: "O Lord Have Mercy."

ELDER RICHARD L. EVANS

Of the First Council of the Seventy

First of all I should like to express my deep appreciation for my membership in this Church, and for my fellowship with you, my brethren and sisters.

A TRIBUTE TO JOHN H. TAYLOR

I should like to say, too, with what acute feelings I miss at this conference, the presence of my beloved associate, Brother John H. Taylor. We cannot be so closely or so long associated with such men, sitting in council in a common cause, with understanding and brotherly kindness, without feeling that someone as near as our own kin has gone from us. He was a gentleman and a servant of God, in every noble meaning of these two terms.

QUESTIONS TO BE ASKED OF OURSELVES

My thoughts have been directed by the remarks of several of my brethren, into channels somewhat different from those which I at first anticipated following, and I earnestly hope that I may be given utterance in talking my way through some of the things that have come to me during these last three sessions.

I recall a sentence from a magazine editorial of not so long ago, in which the writer asked the question, after addressing himself to the world in general and to the men and women of America in particular: "Are there any principles for which you would stand unflinchingly?" Before asking this clinching question, he invited attention to the many acts of expediency and of compromise, and to the many motives which have prompted many actions and many decisions on the national and international scene. "Are there any principles for which we would stand unflinchingly?" This suggests a series of questions which we might well ask ourselves:

Is there any principle for which we would give up our comfort, our convenience?

Is there any principle for which we would give up some of our appetites and habits?

Is there any principle for which we would give up popularity?

Is there any principle for which we would give up our time, or our property?

Is there any principle for which we would give up being elected to public office?

Is there any principle for which we would give up life itself?

Fortunately generations of patriotic Americans and generations of members of this Church have answered these questions affirmatively many times over, and would again, I have no doubt. But so rapid have been the changes of the years in which we live, and so confusing have they been at times, that I am sure principles have been confused with some other things. And I am afraid we have sometimes let ourselves be over-impressed by the appeal of the word "change," without discriminating as between good changes and bad changes. We have sometimes let "change" come to be synonymous with "progress," which it is not. It may be, but is not necessarily.

CHANGE NOT ALWAYS PROGRESS

As parents and as advisers of youth, we often feel our young people strain at the reins that wisely hold them back in some things, and one of the perennial remarks with which we are confronted, one which is supposed to be an unanswerable dictum, is the reminder that "times have changed."

Well, there is no argument about it, times have changed, but there are a good many things which have not changed, and it is our responsibility to distinguish between what may change without loss, and what may change in the name of progress—what changes are not good and do not constitute progress, but rather retrogression. Times may have changed, but human nature has not. Times may have changed, but the commandments of God have not, and neither have the consequences of disregarding them.

SAFETY IN STRONG FOUNDATION

I recall having read some time ago an item, to me astounding and almost unbelievable, from an engineer's report as to the physical characteristics of the Empire State Building—an item to the effect that in a wind of high velocity, into the upper reaches of that structure—perhaps in the topmost tower—there has been built such flexibility that it will sway in an arc as much as eight inches. As I recall, it would require about an eighty-mile wind to sway it to that extent, and it would move about six and a quarter inches downwind and back to about an inch and three quarters upwind—an almost unbelievable fact in a great and massive structure so seemingly solid. And up there it doesn't matter. It was built to take it. But I have often thought, and have sometimes given utterance to the thought, what would happen to the Empire State Building if some earth movement or some super force of some kind should shift its foundations eight inches. It would be but the prelude to destruction.

Our lives are lived, if we are to follow the path of safety and if we are to realize those things of which we are capable, on the foundational structure of the principles of the gospel of Jesus Christ, and by this test and standard all things must be proved. Now, up in the upper reaches, up in the superficial structure of our lives, there are many changes that can occur without any hazard whatsoever. It really doesn't matter whether we wear double-breasted or single-breasted suits, or whether ladies' shoes have holes in the toes when they buy them or after they wear them for awhile. These are the superficial changes which can sway in the wind without any damage to the structure. But any change which would shift the basic principles of our lives, must be resisted with every legitimate means of resistance. And it is up to us to teach our youth these basic principles, so that they will be able to discriminate and judge for themselves as to what changes are good, as to what changes conform to the standards of the gospel of Jesus Christ and are on the road toward eternal progress and what changes are actually retrogressive. Those who would advocate taking men back to days of serfdom and regimentation, to days before they had won their freedom, and the rights of free men, are the real reactionaries of the world, and they must be known for what they are.

THE UNCHANGEABLENESS OF TRUTH

I am grateful that I belong to a Church which will accept all the change of progress and which is committed to the principle of eternal progress. I am grateful that I belong to a Church which will accept all truth, no matter who discovers it, or where, or when. And I am also grateful for my membership in a Church which has within it the basic principles whereby we may judge the desirability or the undesirability, the truth or the falsity, of the changes, the theories, and all of the other passing things that come and go. Change may be progress or it may be disintegration. It isn't a word to be accepted without question, and it is not synonymous with either of these other two terms. May we help our young people to weigh, and may we ourselves weigh all things by these standards.

A number of references have been made in this conference, either by direct word or implication, to those who would change the principles of government under which we live. As I see them, roughly they divide themselves into at least three groups. There are those who have chronic "changeitis." Perhaps they were born with it. It does not matter what it is, they're "agin" it. They are for changing whatever is; and if we should change to meet their present views, they would have some other views tomorrow. There is another group who are sincerely deceived, comparatively few in number, I would think, and there is a third group, who have their own motives, and who would use freedom to destroy freedom. And as they advocate the regimentation of men and the loss of liberties, they see themselves as the leaders of new movements, and not as the regimented. In their thinking, they are leading the parade; they are not in the rank and file. But seemingly they have very little to lose in a free country, because if they fail, they will claim the prerogatives and protection of free men, and will not expect to be punished in any manner. But if they win, they shall gain power, so they think or suppose, over other men's lives and properties and all that pertains to them.

BASIC PRINCIPLES

But the basic structure of the gospel of Jesus Christ, which accepts all progress, and which accepts all truth is still founded on two cardinal principles, among others: the free agency of men, and the eternal permanence of the individual; and anything which is contrary to the operation or the belief or the free exercise of these two basic principles is change for the worse and not for the better.

May our lives be flexible enough to adjust ourselves to the changes of our time which are necessary or which are not destructive of basic principles; but may we be solid enough in our convictions, in our beliefs, and in our defense of them, to withstand all attempt to shift the foundations and bring the destruction that inevitably would follow.

Times have changed, but many things have not. May God help us to discriminate, and help us to help our youth to do likewise, that we may accept all progress and resist all disintegration and reversion to things from which we have emerged and which were bought at great cost, I ask in the name of Jesus Christ. Amen.

PRESIDENT J. REUBEN CLARK, JR.

First Counselor in the First Presidency

My brothers and sisters: In humility I ask for your help that what I may say today may be in that same sweet spirit which has been with us during this conference until the present time.

As the Savior and the apostles were on the shores of the Sea of Galilee on that early morning, Jesus asked Peter:

... lovest thou me more than these? ... Yea, Lord; thou knowest that I love thee. ... Feed my sheep. (John 21:15, 16.)

And the only excuse and likewise the only reason that any of us have for standing before you in this conference is that we shall feed you.

Brother Widtsoe yesterday made allusion to a principle, spoke somewhat about it, to which I wish now to refer. He spoke of our duties and our obligations as those who held the truth. It is a very great blessing, not only, to have the truth, but it imposes likewise a great responsibility. We of this Church are possessors of the truth in so far as it has been revealed, the ultimate truth, and we are the possessors and custodians of the power of the Holy Priesthood.

MORE BLESSED TO GIVE THAN TO RECEIVE

We speak often, and properly, of the great blessings which we have, the blessings that are given to us by the Lord. But sometimes I wonder if our thought may not be mostly concerned with what we get instead of what we give. In that great sermon of Paul to the elders of Ephesus, he said Jesus had declared:

... It is more blessed to give than to receive. (Acts 20:35.)

There is something very remarkable about what we have to give under the gospel plan. No matter how much we give of truth, of good example, of righteous living, our stores, our blessings increase, not decrease, by that which we give away. There are two or three miracles in the Bible that impress me in this connection. One was the barrel of meal which Elijah blessed after the good woman who owned it said that if she gave it to him it would take all she had. That barrel of meal, blessed by Elijah, did not thereafter fail. The more she took from it, the more she had to give. Elisha blessed that cruse of oil for the widow who was in dire debt and about to lose her sons as bondmen, so that she filled from that cruse not alone the utensils which she herself had, but those which, pursuant to the prophet's orders, she went out and borrowed. All were filled that she could obtain. The Savior on the banks of the Sea of Galilee fed five thousand with five loaves and two little fishes, yet when they had finished they gathered up twelve baskets full of what was left. So when on the plain he fed the four thousand, from seven loaves and a few little fishes.

And so it is with God's spiritual blessings to us. We have the truth; we possess the priesthood; both are given into our care. We are responsible for the use we make of them. We are expected to give out of our store all that we possibly can give away, and in proportion as we give unto others, we become thereby more and more enriched ourselves. "It is more blessed to give than to receive." I repeat, as possessors of truth, our mission is to minister therefrom to others. And the more of truth we give away, the more we shall have. The more we righteously use the priesthood, the greater its powers will grow in us.

PRINCIPLES GOVERNING IN TIMES OF WAR

As all of you were, I am sure, I, too, was much impressed yesterday by the talk which Brother Bowen gave. As he proceeded, I thought perhaps it might be useful (and if I did not think it would, I would not proceed) if I were to trace out very briefly and imperfectly some of the principles governing the intercourse of nations in times of war. We have fallen just as far in our concepts there, as in the respects to which Brother Bowen referred. Brother Romney this morning referred to one of the terrible incidents in the Old Testament history where the Lord, not man, commanded the imposition by Israel of a penalty of the extermination of a people. In the early history of the world, wars of extermination or enslavement were more or less the rule. However, when the Roman Empire became all powerful, it adopted more temperate rules; it had more humane feelings about war, its deceptions, stratagems, and artifices. A certain honor was observed towards enemies, so much so, indeed, that it is said that on one occasion the Romans declined to recognize one of their generals in a victory he had won by using bribery. On another occasion they declined to take advantage of an offer made to them that by the use of poison they could accomplish the destruction of certain of their enemies.

HUGO GROTIUS' WORK ON INTERNATIONAL LAW

However, after the fall of the Roman Empire, the world fell into the Dark Ages, and then apparently every excess that could be invented by man was practised as nations went to war. Things became so bad that finally at about the period of the Reformation, men's consciences became shocked at man's inhumanity to man, and they began to try to see if something could not be done to bring more humanity into the conduct of war. Along in the late fifteen hundreds a very great Dutchman was born, Hugo Grotius, who, in the course of his life, prepared the first great work on international law. In the preface to that monumental work which has stood as the great classic from that time until this (and you cannot reach much farther back when you go into international law of the modern time, than Grotius), as I say, in his preface, he made this statement of the reasons why he wrote this treatise:

I saw prevailing throughout the Christian world a license in making war of which even barbarous nations would have been ashamed; recourse being had to arms for slight reasons or no reasons; and when arms were once taken up, all reverence for divine and human law was thrown away, just as if men were thenceforth authorized to commit all crimes without restraint.

Because of this condition Grotius wrote his work De Jure Belli et Pacis, which was the beginning of the bringing into war of something of humanity, if humanity may be properly spoken of in connection with war.

First, an effort was made to draw the distinction between combatants and non-combatants. War was to be waged between armies and not between civilian peoples. Statesmen and nations sought to relieve non-combatants from the woes, cruelties, and horrors of war. Old men, women, children, the decrepit and infirm were to be protected, not slaughtered. Many other humanizing elements came in, relating to prisoners of war and the treatment of wounded.

PRINCIPLE OF NEUTRALITY

When our nation was formed, we contributed to the world some great principles, among the greatest being that of neutrality, the intent thereof being to confine the war conflagration in as narrow a space as possible with the purpose of providing that the peoples of the nations that were not fighting might conduct their intercourse as usual. The miseries and woes of war were not to be inflicted upon innocent, disinterested peoples. We came to the brink of war in the last years of the eighteenth century to maintain this principle as applied to ourselves. The effort was to make it impossible to have what we have now come to glorify as "global war" and "total war." We then knew such a war was a curse.

RULES GOVERNING CIVIL WAR

Then came our own Civil War. Up until that time there never had been a written code of rules governing war between nations; and up until that time civil war was a war by traitors; those who were taken as prisoners of war were treated as traitors. But Francis Lieber, a political refugee from Germany, drew up for Lincoln what were known as "General Orders 100," which went out to the Federal armies in the field, and thereafter governed the conduct of our armies in the Civil War. These rules went further than any practice of nations up until that time in international war. These rules forbade the bombardment, without notice, of places where there were civilian peoples. It provided for the protection of museums, of libraries, of scientific institutions. These were to be saved from the ravages and destruction of war. Undefended towns were not to be attacked. Civilians were to be spared. Old men, women, and children, the wounded, all were to receive the maximum possible protection. As time went on and as a result of that code, other codes were framed by various international conferences, notably The Hague conferences of 1899 and 1907. Furthermore, they provided certain inhibitions on the waging of war which I think you might be interested in hearing me name. They adopted a declaration prohibiting the dropping of projectiles from balloons; they provided that poison gases should not be used; that poison itself should not be used. They repeated the prohibitions that undefended towns should not be bombarded. Family honor was to be respected; pillage and rape and arson and the whole train of like crimes that we read so much about today were forbidden.

WORLD WARS I AND II

Then came World War I, and we began to sag back into barbarism. World War II followed. All distinctions between combatants and non-combatants disappeared. This was inevitably so, if they used the kind of weapons they employed. So we had destroyed in England many towns, some of those suffering most being Sheffield, Hull, Manchester, Coventry, and London. There were many towns in Germany equally destroyed, including Berlin, and particularly Dresden, and as to this last city, some of our people, Americans, are affirming that the bombardment of Dresden (where it is said we killed in two nights more than two hundred fifty thousand people, men, women and children, including wounded who had been collected there) was in violation of a tacit understanding that if Germany would leave Oxford and Cambridge alone, we would not touch Dresden. I do not know how true this report is; but we know the result.

TRAGEDY OF USE OF ATOM BOMB

Now do not forget that all of the nations had prepared before World War II to use aircraft; they had already used submarines in World War I; and we in this area know we were prepared to use poison gases. Then as the crowning savagery of the war, we Americans wiped out hundreds of thousands of civilian population with the atom bomb in Japan, few if any of the ordinary civilians being any more responsible for the war than were we, and perhaps most of them no more aiding Japan in the war than we were aiding America. Military men are now saying that the atom bomb was a mistake. It was more than that: it was a world tragedy. Thus we have lost all that we gained during the years from Grotius (1625) to 1912. And the worst of this atomic bomb tragedy is not that not only did the people of the United States not rise up in protest against this savagery, not only did it not shock us to read of this wholesale destruction of men, women, and children, and cripples, but that it actually drew from the nation at large a general approval of this fiendish butchery.

The other day there appeared in the New York Times, it may have appeared here, too, but I have it from the New York Times, an article which I shall read to you.

A new super-deadly poison, the most potent known to man, has been developed by the special projects division of the United States Chemical Warfare Service. [That is, it is officially developed.]

An innocent-looking crystalline toxin, the poison is so powerful that an inch-cube size of it, roughly an ounce, could kill every person living in the United States and Canada, silently and swiftly.

"If World War III comes, which we pray will never happen, it will be a war in which most people may die from silent, insidious, anti-human weapons that make no sound, give no warning, destroy no forts or ships or cities, but can wipe out human beings by the millions," Dr. Gerald Wendt of New York City, editorial director of Science Illustrated magazine, declared in a General Electric Science Forum address.

Dr. Wendt said: "The United States has already spent $50,000,000 in research on it, a small sum compared with the cost of radar and the atomic bomb. Most startling are two facts: These killers are invisible, microscopic in size, capable of spreading to reach every living enemy"; [I wonder how we are going to direct these killers so that they will work only on the enemy.] "and they can be easily and cheaply prepared by any belligerent who has as much as a brewery and the skill to operate it.

"If any small nation is competent in biological warfare, a large nation, even with atomic bombs, may be helpless against it."

There are other new biological weapons, Dr. Wendt asserted, that "operate through the slow agony of starvation. It is the attack on plants and animals."

PROTEST AGAINST SAVAGE METHODS

Thus we in America are now deliberately searching out and developing the most savage, murderous means of exterminating peoples that Satan can plant in our minds. We do it not only shamelessly, but with a boast. God will not forgive us for this.

If we are to avoid extermination, if the world is not to be wiped out, we must find some way to curb the fiendish ingenuity of men who have apparently no fear of God, man, or the devil, and who are willing to plot and plan and invent instrumentalities that will wipe out all the flesh of the earth. And, as one American citizen of one hundred thirty millions, as one in one billion population of the world, I protest with all of the energy I possess against this fiendish activity, and as an American citizen, I call upon our government and its agencies to see that these unholy experimentations are stopped, and that somehow we get into the minds of our war-minded general staff and its satellites, and into the general staffs of all the world, a proper respect for human life.

May God give us the strength to stand in these times of stress and trial and crisis. May he give us the wisdom and the inspiration to put hate out of our hearts, a hate that is consuming us. May he give us the power as a people so to bring our influence to bear that men, mankind, may be saved, I humbly pray in the name of Jesus. Amen.

President David O. McKay:

We have in the congregation today several returned mission presidents, some of whom have returned from their fields of labor as long ago as 1943, and others since that time. We have not had an opportunity heretofore to hear from them, but we shall have an opportunity to hear from a few this afternoon.

Elder John F. Bowman will please come to the rostrum after the Richfield Combined Choruses and congregation sing "Come, O Thou King of Kings."

The Richfield Combined Choruses and the congregation, sang:
"Come, O Thou King of Kings."

ELDER JOHN F. BOWMAN

Former President of the Central States Mission

It is a thrilling experience, my brothers and sisters, to see this great congregation from this point. I had just about forgotten many things about my mission and concluded probably I would never be called upon to report my activities in the mission field. I want to say now, however, that that experience for a little over four years in the Central States Mission was the most thrilling experience in about fifty or fifty-five years of active service in the Church. It was a great thing to labor with your sons and daughters in the ministry and to learn of their faith and their ability to bring this great message of righteousness and salvation to those who sit in darkness. Through their humble efforts, while Sister Bowman and I presided over that mission, the membership of the mission increased from a few over six thousand to about eighty-two or eighty-three hundred. Over two thousand of that number were converts to the faith as a result of the humble, inspired efforts of the fine young men and women who labored in that mission.

It was a thrilling experience for us to live and to labor in that particular mission, one of the most interesting places in all the world and one of the most important. There are many things concerning that part of the United States that many of us, especially the younger generations probably have forgotten all about, or never knew. We lived in Independence, Jackson County, Missouri, which was on the western borders of civilization, at the time our Saints first went there. It is east of the Missouri River, which was the borderland of the Lamanites who lived beyond that river to the west. In those parts we have learned, through the inspiration of God to his servant, the Prophet Joseph Smith, that the Lord God Almighty planted His Garden, the Garden of Eden. That always thrilled us while we lived there. That was a sacred, hallowed, holy spot to us because the great beginnings of the world were there, and not on the eastern hemisphere, where it is commonly thought that they were. Of course we undoubtedly have in mind that in that day the earth had not been divided, that the earth was divided in the days of Peleg and as I remember it, that probably was a hundred fifty or two hundred years, after the flood. But the Garden of Eden was planted in what is known now as Jackson County, and the Lord God Almighty placed his great servant, Adam, in that garden and later gave him his wife, Eve, with the commandment that they should multiply and replenish the earth, that of all of the trees of that garden they might freely partake, but of the tree of the knowledge of good and evil they should not partake, but in the event that they did partake of it, in the day that they should eat thereof, they should surely die.

It was an interesting thing to us to know that that happened there, that they did partake of the forbidden fruit, and as a result they were driven out of the garden, and there was brought about what we commonly know as the fall of man. After they were driven out of that beautiful place, Eve found that she was about to become the mother of a child, and they rejoiced before the Lord, that now they evidently were in a condition to fulfill that great commandment for which they were sent upon the earth, to multiply and replenish the earth, and they rejoiced before the Lord because of that blessing which was now to come to them. They went out of the garden, and it is interesting to know, as we understood it there and as I understand it now, that they went not far away. They traveled north-easterly, for about seventy-five miles, and there they lived in Adam-ondi-Ahman of which you read in the revelations of the Church, and that was the land where Adam and Eve dwelt. They may have traveled far, and possibly lived at times in the country that is now looked upon as the place where the race started, in the Orient, but in the valley of Adam-ondi-Ahman is where Adam dwelt, and when he was nine hundred twenty-seven years old, stooped with age, he called his faithful followers together in that valley to receive an accounting of their stewardships and to bless them, and on that occasion, certainly the most important gathering that had been held in the history of the world up to that time, Our Lord and Savior, Jesus Christ, appeared at that point upon this land, to bless Adam and comfort him in his old age, and Adam told his people what would happen, down to the end of the world. Those things are written, and in the future, probably not the far-distant future, we will have the history of the world, written in advance by Adam which will undoubtedly be a great blessing to us. There, three years later, Adam died, probably at Adam-ondi-Ahman, and was buried there. That makes that a very sacred place and one of tremendous interest. There, we understand from the prophecies of the ancient prophets and the modern prophets and revelators of our Church, Adam will sit as the Ancient of days upon his throne, and a thousand times a thousand will come there to pay homage to him and ten thousand times ten thousand will come there to receive judgment at his hand. Our Lord and Savior, Jesus Christ, will appear at that point and through the great conclave of Priesthood leadership that will be called into conference at that point in the next few years, we are inclined to think, our Lord and Savior, Jesus Christ, will appear and there he will be crowned King of Kings and Lord of Lords, the reign of Satan will be terminated and the kingdoms of this earth shall become the kingdoms of our God and His Christ, and He shall reign with his people forever and forever. Those are things of tremendous importance to us, and in that land you are reminded of them. I was glad to learn on a trip there about two months ago, shortly after President Smith had been there, that he reminded the people of the tremendous things that are to happen there, the great things that have happened there and that the great Temple of the Lord, the new Jerusalem is to be established in that part. One of the greatest buildings that has ever been erected in the history of the world will be established in Independence, Jackson County, Missouri, and the glory of God will rest upon it as a pillar of cloud by day and a pillar of fire by night, and from that center will reign our Lord and Savior, Jesus Christ, and the law will go forth from Zion as the word of the Lord will go forth from Jerusalem.

We are thankful that we had the opportunity to labor there in that holy land, in that sacred place, because of the tremendous things that happened there and because of the tremendous things that are to take place. These things will happen there, my brothers and sisters you will find them written in the revelations. We haven't been excused from the great responsibility of building up the center place of Zion. Many of us think that we have the center place of Zion here. It is the center place now; these stakes will never be disrupted, but that is the center place of Zion, under the revelations, and that is where the great Temple will be built and people will be called there in the due time of the Lord to build up that place, preparatory to the coming of our Lord and Savior, Jesus Christ.

Now let me remind you of one thing in closing. From this pulpit, in 1898, President Snow, the Prophet, Seer and Revelator of the Church at that time, in answering some of the questions that were arising in the minds of the people as to whether they had been discharged from their responsibility pertaining to the building up of the center place of Zion, told the people: "We are not going back to Jackson County today, nor next week, nor next month, but I testify to you in the name of the Lord that we will go back there, and there are many, there are hundreds," and then he repeated it, "yes, hundreds sitting in this congregation who will live in the flesh to go back to Jackson County to assist in building the Temple." "This is important to us in that it indicates to us the nearness of the coming of our Lord, and the best council that I can think of to give to myself, to my family, and to you, my brethren and sisters, is the council that our Lord and Savior gave to his apostles, when they asked him when these things would be, that Christ was speaking of that would happen at the end of the world, and he stated, to watch and pray that ye be not taken as a thief in the night.

May the Lord help us to measure up to our responsibilities of carrying forward this great work, to preach this Gospel in all the world as a witness unto all nations as we are undertaking to do it now, with the realization that when we have filled our responsibility, then the end will come and our Lord and Savior, Jesus Christ, will come to reign personally upon the earth for a thousand years. May the Lord help us to do it, I humbly pray in the name of Jesus. Amen.

ELDER WILLIAM P. WHITAKER

Former President of Southern States Mission

I am truly grateful for this day, my brethren and sisters. For about six years, since I was appointed President of the Southern States Mission, I have squirmed on my seat down there, expecting I might be called to this position. Now I have in mind, the opportunity of sitting in the audience and listening to these wonderful conferences, as you brothers and sisters now sit.

I have enjoyed greatly everything which has been said and done in this conference, as I do always in the conferences when I am privileged to attend. It was a great blessing which came to Sister Whitaker and me to be called into the Southern States Mission for a second time. Thirty years ago, we filled our first mission in the Southern States, soon after having been married, and were met there by President and Sister Callis, who opened their arms and welcomed us, at a time in our lives when we needed just such a welcome as they gave to us. We learned to love those dear people as we have learned to love few people in our lives. We see the great blessings which have come to the Southern States Mission because of their services. It was a great privilege to follow such men as President Callis, President LeGrand Richards, President Merrill D. Clayton, and others who had been there.

During the last three years we were there, that great mission grew from about twenty-two thousand members to more than twenty-five thousand. A little in excess of eleven hundred baptisms each year. Only you who have been in the Southern States can realize the kind of converts which are made in that mission. We have many of them here today. Many of them are among the leaders of this Church. Many of them are there on the old battlegrounds, spending their entire lives in preaching the Gospel to those whom they meet from day to day. I have often said it would be very difficult to go many blocks in that great mission without finding some person who would be willing and ready to hand you a tract and bear his testimony to you.

There were 92 branches in that mission when I left, several hundred Sunday Schools and several hundred Primary Associations. Many of these Sunday Schools and Primaries are out in remote sections where only a few families may participate, but our members are active in inviting their neighbors and their neighbors' children to attend. In that way the Gospel is being preached in a way that would astonish most of you.

It was a great blessing to us to receive some 450 of your boys and girls as missionaries, every one a splendid young man or woman, young men and women whose only desire was to serve God and do the thing which they were called to do. A great blessing came into our lives when we became personally acquainted with each one of the General Authorities of this Church. I have often said that if no reward came to us other than just becoming personally acquainted with the General Authorities of this Church we should be amply rewarded for the time we spent as missionaries.

May God bless these great men who have been called, ordained and sustained to lead, guide and direct His Church here upon the earth in this, the last dispensation. I bear testimony to you that they are indeed prophets and apostles; they are indeed chosen servants of our Father in heaven, that they hold the power and the priesthood that was held by the ancient apostles and prophets, and that they have been truly and divinely commissioned to perform their great mission.

May God continue to bless President Meeks and those missionaries who continue to serve in the South. May He bless that wonderful people there, who open their homes and their hearts to the missionaries as they come to them, I pray in the name of Jesus Christ. Amen.

President David O. McKay:

The speaker to whom you have just listened is President William P. Whitaker, who served in the Southern States. We will now hear from Elder George F. Richards, Jr., who served a few years ago in the North Central States.

We see in the audience Emile C. Dunn who has but recently been released, but who by appointment antedates any of these brethren. Brother Dunn will follow Brother Richards.

ELDER GEORGE F. RICHARDS, JR.

Former President of North Central States Mission

It would be difficult for anyone to occupy this position, before such a vast audience and on such a glorious occasion, without sensing deeply the responsibility of the few moments which might be used. In humility I appear before you at this time, and express sincere gratitude for the great experiences, privileges and blessings that Sister Richards and I enjoyed with your missionaries and the Latter-day Saints in the mission field, and for the special privilege which is incident to a mission abroad.

My brethren and sisters, the mission to which we were sent was in a splendid condition when we inherited it. Sister Richards and I always wondered if we might, through our faith and prayers and work, carry it on as well as the former President, Brother David A. Broadbent and his good wife had done; and we have lived to see the work progressing further since we left the mission field, under the leadership of President William L. Killpack.

I often said in the field, and also since returning home, that the authorities of this Church sent to us the very cream of the young men and women of the Church to serve as missionaries, and we shall always feel that way about it. Their faith, their devotion, their wisdom and the knowledge they acquired, together with the Spirit of the Lord that gave them power to preach the Gospel and administer the ordinances, have been a very great inspiration to us. We had about two hundred and fifty-five missionaries during our experience. Our territory was large. The membership of the Church was about three thousand when we were appointed and did not change materially during the time we were there, but we accomplished some fine things. The Lord was with us, and I want to say to you, my brethren and sisters, as President McKay said in instructing us before we went out, that no one can accomplish anything in this work, the Master's work, without His help, without enjoying the Spirit of the Lord and the sustaining influence of him who restored this Gospel in this dispensation of the fulness of times.

The Lord sometimes lets us wait a long time for the answer to our prayers. He has let me wait a long time, but in every instance when I needed Him—and I need Him all the time and on special occasions—He has waited until I almost despaired but then came through with a full measure of support. I thank God for this in our missionary experience.

There could be no choicer people in the world than those good Latter-day Saints of the North Central States Mission. I thought while I was there and I still feel that if some of us at home could see the way the Saints live in the missions they would be ashamed that they do not take better advantage of the opportunities which are theirs here with the body of the Church. The members who served locally as missionaries, and all who helped the work of the Lord there, were wonderful people of whom we are very, very proud indeed.

My brothers and sisters, I have been deeply impressed by the words spoken in this conference session. When President Bowman referred to the location where he presided, I thought, too, of the instance of record in scripture of our Father Adam who was offering sacrifice. The scripture says: "After many days an angel of the Lord appeared unto him and asked why he offered sacrifice, and Adam answered and said unto him, I know not save God hath commanded me."

I wish every Latter-day Saint could get the import of that answer. Then the angel went on to say: "And this thing is a similitude of the sacrifice of the Only Begotten of the Father which is full of grace and truth; wherefore, thou shalt do all that thou doest in the name of the Son, and thou shalt repent and call upon God in the name of the Son forevermore."

That is the message given to Adam; it is a message we bear to the world; it is a message we should give unto ourselves and live by it. If we order our lives so that we will have the blessings of the Lord and the Savior's approval upon our actions we shall not need to worry as to whether or not there will be a place for us in the mansions of our Heavenly Father when we have completed our work here; nor shall we need to be concerned about whether or not life will be sweet and joyful as long as we are permitted to live and serve in mortality.

I know the Gospel is true, my brethren and sisters. I know that God lives and I have borne testimony to the Prophet's experience, that glorious revelation of the Father and the Son, and also to the vitality of the Church brought down through the various leaders to the present time. God bless our leaders and may we be willing always to listen to their counsel and to live accordingly, that thus we may expect an eternal reward worthy of those who are good and true. May this be our desert, justifiably, I humbly pray, in the name of Jesus Christ. Amen.

President David O. McKay:

The speaker to whom you have just listened is President George F. Richards, Jr., formerly President of the North Central States Mission. We shall now go with Elder Emile C. Dunn to one of our Polynesian Missions, the Tongan Mission, where Brother Dunn and his faithful wife have served ten successive years.

ELDER EMILE C. DUNN

Former President of Tongan Mission

Your faces look almost too white. If they were brown I would feel more at ease in talking to you.

I have spent the last ten years trying to teach people who are honest in heart those things which our Father in Heaven desires that they should be taught. It was in 1936, March 12th, that we arrived in the Tongan Mission. Brother Wiberg was there. He had been there for two years alone.

We were happy to arrive in Tonga, and the Saints were ready with a feast, as the Saints of the Pacific Islands often do, a feast as a farewell for the mission president who was leaving and a feast for the new comers. They accepted us with open arms. They seemed happy to see us, and Sister Dunn and I were happy to see them.

In going to an island mission there is the problem of learning the language. All missionaries have to learn the language before they are of much value to the people there and to the Church. Sister Dunn did all she could while learning the language, helped me in writing and other things, and became acquainted with the Saints.

I wish to tell you a few things about the physical aspects of the Tongan Mission. It covers a space of six hundred miles and none of the islands is so large but what you could walk the length of the island in a day. Tongatapu is 35 miles long and 5 miles wide, and in the Hapai group there are over a hundred islands. In the Vava'u group there is one large island that is so cut up with water that it is much quicker to get from one part of the island to another with a boat than it is to go around. Then we have two other islands which are new to the Church. In 1939 I felt impressed to send a missionary to Kepples Island Niuatoputapu. It was during a conference. I called two men, one young man and one older man, to go to this island, and I said, "Gather all the genealogy you can from that island and try and convert some of the people."

They went over there and two months later we received a wireless that four people had been baptized. The next February, I got on a boat and went over there, not thinking of how I was going to get back. I went over on a large steamer and went ashore. After I got ashore there were two sailboats there. I found that they were going around by Niuafo'ou and I concluded I had better stay there rather than go to Niuafo'ou which was another 200 miles west and then it would be 220 miles back to Vava'u. I thought I would rather wait and go back 160 miles straight south. So I stayed there. It was not until April that I was able to get off the island again, but during that time I visited every home on the island and copied all of the dates of birth, all of the marriage dates and the dates of death from 1888 on that island, and those were the first records I could find because they had had a hurricane and water had destroyed all of their previous records.

We have found since that my time spent there, through the providence of the Lord in keeping me there, was most profitable. Those records have been more valuable to the people in the Tongan Mission than any we have had, because many of the people go back to this island of Niuatoputapu where they stop. Then Niuatoputapu was the collecting place of the people from 'Uvea Samoa and Ni'ua and Niuafo'ou. They seemed to collect on this island, as it was in the center, and we found that from there a lot of our genealogy to these other countries could be traced.

In 1938 we were favored with a visit from Brother, now President, George Albert Smith. He arrived in Tongatapu early in the morning. A three-day conference was scheduled. Before we started the first meeting Brother Smith said to me: "Brother Dunn, what is our program?"

I said: "We are going to try and visit every person in the Tongan Mission."

He said: "Are they all here in Nuku'alofa?"

I said: "Not any of the other islands are here."

He said, "It will be difficult to go out from this island. I thought you would have all of the people here in Tongatapu."

I asked President Smith, "Did you come to see those who are wealthy, those who are strong in body, those who are able to travel around, or did you come to see everyone who is a member of the Church, and to contact all those who are not so fortunate, who are not able to go so far in sailboats?"

He said: "I want to see them all."

We had our conference in Nuku'alofa, then we got on a boat—I imagine it looked rather small to Brother Smith; the length of it was about half the width of this building. It rocked back and forth when it got out on the sea. We gave Brother Smith the bunk that was crosswise in the boat and he lay there and the waves rocked him to sleep. The next morning he awoke and said: "Why, we have soon made the trip up here to Ha'apai."

Then we went on to Vava'u and the Saints came to conference. Those who could not walk were hauled on trucks; those who could not see could get there and hear. Those who were weak in the faith, too weak to have travelled two hundred miles on a little sailboat, were able to get there, and the house, the Peter Pan Theatre, was filled to capacity.

If any person wants to feel the Spirit of the Lord he just needs to stand by the side of the pulpit and translate word for word the message of a prophet of the Lord, when he stands before the Saints and proclaims the Gospel to them through the inspiration of God. If you do not soften before the Lord in that situation, then you cannot be softened. I never felt the Spirit of the Lord so much in my life as when I was translating for Brother Smith, and saw those Saints just drink it in.

I feel greatly privileged through my missionary experiences. President McKay came to Tonga in 1921. I had the privilege of listening to him talk to the Saints there for almost a week. I listened to these two brethren talk about the Southern States Mission. I have always had a little feeling in my heart that I would like to go to the Southern States, simply because I was called there. My first missionary call was to the Southern States, but my father, who was called to Samoa in 1894, was unable to go. I always felt from the sorrow that was in his heart that he was not able to fill that mission, that he would like me to go there, so when the call came to the Southern States I asked President Grant if I might be privileged to go to Tonga or some of the South Sea Islands. I told him why, and he gave me that privilege.

I have not regretted my missions in Tonga. I spent four years there from 1920 to 1924. This time it has been ten short years, and the longer you stay the shorter they get. It seems like we would just get one yearly report out, send it to Zion, visit the mission a couple of times, teach the school for a little while, and there was another report on your hands. I could have stayed there for another ten years and I am sure that each year would have been shorter. I have not, as the Tongans say "fiu." That means, had enough. I have not had enough of missionary work. I can see too many situations in this world that need missionaries.

In those islands, there are Tonga, and Samoa, right out there in the middle of thousands of islands that have never been touched. I am very grateful that the missionaries were sent from New Zealand over to Rara-Tonga, because President Grant wrote me at one time and said: "Brother Dunn, we would like to have you go over to Rara-Tonga and open up the work over there."

Rara-Tonga is an isolated place from Tonga. The two names go together but if you hear the names, Rara-Tonga is not Tonga. It is Maori because they have the "r" and we have the "l." In Tonga we call it Lalo-Tonga. In Maori they say Raro-Tonga. So, take the "r" from New Zealand and they speak nearer the same language.

It would have taken me on a trip to Samoa, New Zealand, back to Rara-Tonga, and then back to New Zealand and back to Samoa to return to Tonga. That would make about two thousand miles, or a little more, to get there and four thousand miles to get back, so I wrote and told them the situation, that I could only go over there once in six months, and I felt that if it could be worked from New Zealand, it would be easier to take care of. They did change and send missionaries from New Zealand and I understand now that there are 29 Saints in Rara-Tonga. It is quite a relief to me because I felt that there was a load on me, that I had not completed a job that had been given to me.

While I was in New Zealand I tried to fix it up for them. I went to New Zealand looking for a missionary for Tonga. The young man had married a Canadian girl and had gone through the Temple seven times in Canada before going back to New Zealand, and this young man was so desirous of going on a mission before they went back to Canada that he said: "I would certainly like to go to Tonga or some place on a mission."

I said: "Well, I am not the mission president any longer, but I can certainly speak to the mission president, and they need missionaries in Tonga very much."

So I spoke to the mission president and he asked: "Are you speaking for a missionary for Tonga or for Rara-Tonga?"

I said: "I don't care, Brother. I have interest in Rara-Tonga. If you will send those people over there I will be very happy." I hope that some day they will go over there.

I am grateful for the opportunities that have come to me to be in Tonga, in the Pacific Islands, and I am sure that any missionary who might go into the islands would be happy to have the opportunity of being there. There is one island near Samoa and near Tonga that has not been opened up yet. That is the Niue Island and they should have missionaries. Then we have planned on opening Rara-Tonga up. That is one out of about nine islands there. Then in the Savage group there are several islands; we have never had missionaries on Fiji and the people on the islands all through the Solomons have never had the Gospel preached to them.

We say that we have two thousand missionaries. Two thousand missionaries will never take care of the work when we start to work in Asia. Asia is a big country. We have not been in China lately; we have not been in Japan lately. And when were we in Russia? There is missionary work to be done. The Gospel of the Kingdom shall be preached to "every nation, kindred, tongue and people, and then the end shall come."

We have heard about Jackson County, but Jackson County cannot be settled and the work finished until we have preached the Gospel to every kindred, tongue and people upon this earth. Who is going to do that? You and I, our sons and our daughters, and those who are honest in heart who will go out in the world, and spend their time, who will take their money and will devote their life unto God.

May the Lord bless us and help us that our testimonies will grow. I wish to bear my testimony to you, brethren and sisters, that the Lord will bless those who are honest in heart, especially those who are humble and prayerful, those who pay unto Him one tenth of that which He gives us.

When I went into the mission field the good Saints of Tonga were struggling along, trying to run their mission. The mission presidents had done all they could. Since that time prosperity has come to the country and they have been able to get out of debt. Now they support themselves. During the time we were there, tithing was preached to the Saints and many paid an honest tithing. I am sure that they were blessed because of paying their tithes and their offerings unto the Lord. I am a staunch believer in being honest in paying our tithes and offerings and I am sure the Lord will take care of us if we do that.

President Smith has asked me to mention one thing. While President Smith was in Tonga we asked him to help us to get the Book of Mormon translated into the Tongan language. He has given us a lot of assistance. While he was there he said: "I will try and do my best to get the sanction of the Church Authorities to let you translate the Book of Mormon, Brother Dunn."

Of course I could have translated the Book of Mormon, and there has been a lot of credit given me for translating of the Book of Mormon. I am not due all the credit that is written on the front page of the Book of Mormon in Tongan. I am not due all that credit. There is one young man to whom is due that credit. He is Brother Ermel J. Morton. I found I had so many duties that my translation was going very slowly and so in one conference I gave Brother Morton the assignment to translate the Book of Mormon. After his translations and my translations were completed, we would compare the two and put them together. Brother Morton was through so quickly that my translations did not amount to much.

Of course I worked with Brother Morton and we corrected it and sent it to Zion and we thought that it should be printed at that time. Our translation, no doubt, was not just what it should have been so it was changed a bit and sent back to me, and then was returned again. It seemed as if there were a lot of stalling, that there were a lot of things being done that could have been avoided, but I know now it was not that. It was not the will of our Father that those things should be printed as they were, because since that time the Tongan language has taken a radical change. They have put in all of the glottal stops, they have put in "ng" instead of a "g," they have thrown out the "B" and put all "p's" and several other things have been changed in the language. After all those changes were made, then Brother Morton copied the Book of Mormon into the proper language and today we have it. I was very happy to receive the Book of Mormon in Tongan before I left, to present to the Queen and some of the people there, and a shipment of the Book of Mormon no doubt has arrived there before now.

When those Saints receive that they will have a testimony to bear to other people and they will have something that the people can see, something they can read, and I am sure that the Book of Mormon will convert a lot of those fine people.

The Tongan people, as a whole, and the Samoan people, are not against the Church. Some of the leaders and others are agitating some things among them, but, really, if you talk to the Tongans they are interested in knowing the history of their ancestors; they are interested in the Gospel; they are interested in knowing the truth, and if we were to say that they are a fine people, every word of it is true.

The Sabbath day is the Sabbath day in Tonga. If any man would work he would be shunned by all the people. There is no work done. The entire nation is at rest on the Sabbath day. I am very thankful to the Lord that they are not as wealthy as some other people and they have to live on the land that the Lord has given them and they are humble.

May the Lord bless us all, I pray in the name of Jesus Christ. Amen.

President David O. McKay:

We shall ask Brother Dunn to bear his testimony for two minutes in the Tongan language.

(Brother Dunn bore his testimony in the Tongan language.)

President David O. McKay:

I dare say there are not a few Polynesian missionaries in this audience who could understand what President Dunn has said. There is a kinship among those nations called the Polynesian nations, the Hawaiian, Samoan, Maori, Tahitian, and those of our elders who have been down to these other missions undoubtedly understood some of what Brother Dunn said.

After the singing, President Leon H. Swenson of the Nampa Stake will offer the closing prayer, after which the Conference will stand adjourned until 10:00 tomorrow morning. However, in accordance with the practice of the Church, the general meeting of the Priesthood of the Church will be held tonight in this Tabernacle beginning at 7:00.

Tomorrow, Sunday morning, at 8:30, Elder Matthew Cowley of the Council of the Twelve will speak on the Columbia Church of the Air Service. Those desiring to attend this service should be in their seats by 8:15 a.m. The doors will be closed during this broadcast.

The Tabernacle Choir broadcast will begin at 9:30 and continue until 10:00 a.m. Those attending this broadcast should be in their seats by 9:15 a.m. The doors will be closed during this broadcast also. The regular session of the Conference will begin at 10:00 tomorrow morning, immediately following the Tabernacle Choir broadcast.

We thank these choice young men and young women who have furnished the music this afternoon and who have rendered such excellent service in this impressive hour.

The Richfield Combined Choruses will now sing, "Send Forth Thy Spirit."

---

The Richfield Combined Choruses sang: "Send Forth Thy Spirit."

President David O. McKay:

May we caution everyone to walk cautiously, drive carefully, and watch the lights.

President Leon H. Swenson of the Nampa Stake will offer the benediction.

---

Elder Leon H. Swenson, President of the Nampa Stake, offered the closing prayer.

Conference adjourned until Sunday morning, October 6th.

CHURCH OF THE AIR

The Church of the Air program was presented Sunday morning, October 6, at 8:30, over Radio Station KSL and the Columbia Broadcasting System.

The Tabernacle Choir, under the direction of J. Spencer Cornwall, provided the music for the service. Alexander Schreiner was at the organ. Richard L. Evans was the announcer.

The Choir sang as an opening number: "Come Thou Glorious Day of Promise"—Smyth.

As a second number the Choir sang a hymn by Roger Quilter: "Lead Us, Heavenly Father."

The speaker was Elder Matthew Cowley, who delivered the following address:

ELDER MATTHEW COWLEY

Of the Council of the Twelve Apostles

As one reads the signs of the times there comes a certain conviction that the redemption of man comes not from the kingdoms of the earth; that if the race is to ascend from the valley of darkness into which it has been cast by "man's inhumanity to man," it will do so only by seeking a power outside and beyond the limitations and wisdom of the world.

MANKIND RESPONSIBLE FOR THE EVILS OF THE WORLD

Granting that the kingdoms of the earth are sincere in their present efforts to seek deliverance from the forces which persist in striking at the very existence of humanity, if proof may be found in precedents, then it may not be presumptuous to say that their efforts are doomed to failure. The outlook, to say the least, is not encouraging.

The perverted use of man's free agency, arising as it does from a false sense of values, has brought down upon all earthly kingdoms, with crushing impact, the fears and frustrations which now beset them. The God of the universe, who "ordereth all things well," did not design, neither did he desire, that the destiny of man should be so fearful and awesome.

The evils that men do are of their own making. God always proposes that the divine impulses implanted within man be released to reach out to the divine beyond; but man, much to his own sorrow, too often disposes otherwise.

During the tragic days of the recent war, when men's hearts were failing them, and the road to victory seemed so long and hazardous, rulers of nations and kings of the earth appointed days of prayer, when their subjects and citizenry were enjoined to cry unto the Almighty for mercy and help.

From desperation and anxiety came these spontaneous expressions of the nobler impulses which are inherent within the human heart. When men, however, thus seek divine assistance, from necessity rather than from practice, they may but seek in vain. At such times the will of God may be identical with the desires of men, but this, more often than not, is coincidental rather than the result of infrequent prayers. But notwithstanding his intermittent prayers, the fact that man prays at all is to some, convincing evidence that there is a power beyond himself which brings him to his knees in his hour of despair.

SEEKING THE KINGDOM OF GOD

The most urgent need of our time is for that same power to govern in the affairs of nations, to the end that peace will dwell regnant in the hearts of all men. Without some manifestation of the divine power,

... the wisdom of their wise men shall perish, and the understanding of their prudent men shall be hid. (Isaiah 29:14.)

With it, "the kingdom of God is at hand."

In that memorable Sermon on the Mount, the Master set forth in the Beatitudes, some of the conditions upon which citizenship in the kingdom of God is predicated. And in continuing he said:

seek ye first the kingdom of God, and his righteousness; and all these things shall be added unto you. (Matt. 6:33.)

The promise here is that those who seek the kingdom of God, will find righteousness, and that all things should be added unto them.

The kingdoms of this earth are not, in and of themselves, righteous kingdoms. Within them, however, there are many righteous souls who have found, by earnest seeking, the kingdom of God in the midst of evil.

In teaching his disciples to pray, Jesus said:

After this manner therefore pray ye: Our Father which art in heaven, Hallowed be thy name. Thy kingdom come. Thy will be done in earth, as it is in heaven. (Matt. 6:9, 10.)

This prayer suggests the coming of a kingdom which was not to be set up during Christ's mortal existence; for while Jesus sojourned among men the will of God was not done in the earth as it is in heaven. And this is not the same kingdom as the one referred to when he said: "The kingdom of God is at hand. Repent ye and believe the gospel," as this kingdom of God he did establish during his earthly ministry.

THE INTERPRETATION OF NEBUCHADNEZZAR'S DREAM

In the interpretation of the human image dream of Nebuchadnezzar, king of Babylon, the Prophet Daniel foretold the establishment of four great kingdoms, each of which would be of empire proportions. Also he divined the breaking up of the last of these world powers into many kingdoms. And then he prophesied as follows:

And in the days of these kings shall the God of heaven set up a kingdom, which shall never be destroyed: and the kingdom shall not be left to other people, but it shall break in pieces and consume all these kingdoms, and it shall stand for ever. (Daniel 2:44.)

This, no doubt, is the kingdom for the coming of which, Jesus taught his listeners to pray; and when God's will would be done in the earth as it is in heaven. This then would be a kingdom of heaven.

As a matter of historical record, the Meridian of Time was not in the days of these kings when the God of heaven shall set up a kingdom, never to be destroyed. (See Daniel 2:44.)

Instead, Christ's life and ministry were during that period when the fourth of the great kingdoms of Nebuchadnezzar's monarchy vision was a world empire. Indeed it was by order of a tribunal of that empire that the Son of God was crucified. Had the heavenly kingdom of Daniel's prophecy been established in the Meridian of Time, Christ would have reigned over it as King of kings and Lord of lords; and certainly his crown would not have been one of thorns.

So that Jesus in teaching his followers to pray: "Thy kingdom come. Thy will be done in earth, as in heaven," foresaw, as did Daniel, the coming of a kingdom which would stand forever and whose king would not be crucified.

CHRIST'S TEACHINGS REGARDING THE KINGDOM OF GOD

The kingdom about which the Master spoke when he said:

... The time is fulfilled, and the kingdom of God is at hand: repent ye, and believe the gospel, (Mark 1:15.)

is a kingdom of God which is at hand whenever the priesthood of God is upon the earth, as it was in the Meridian of Time. Of this kingdom it has been said:

... strait is the gate, and narrow is the way, . . . and few there be that find it. (Matt. 7:14.)

The Pharisees demanding of Jesus when the kingdom of God should come were answered as follows:

... The kingdom of God cometh not with observation: Neither shall they say, Lo here! or, lo there! for, behold, the kingdom of God is within you. (Luke 17:20, 21.)

Strange words these: the kingdom of God is within you, yet it cometh not with observation!

In one of his epistles to the Corinthians, the Apostle Paul wrote that:

... the things which are seen are temporal; but the things which are not seen are eternal. (II Cor. 4:18.)

The universe holds within it many forces or kingdoms of power, which come not with observation, and yet man converts these hidden forces to his own use and purpose, and he knows, without questioning, that these forces are eternal. The elements, for instance, which are transmitting the sound of my voice to many distant points do not come within my observation, neither does the power which sets them in motion come with observation, yet no one questions the existence of that power.

Christ went about healing the sick, restoring vision to the blind and hearing to the deaf; making the lame to walk and cleansing the leper. These gifts of the spirit and powers of his priesthood were made manifest throughout his ministry. These powers, like the air waves in the kingdom of the radio, were powers that could not be seen, but they could be set in motion for the good of mankind.

In the baptism by John to which Jesus submitted himself, because, as he said:

... for thus it becometh us to fulfil all righteousness, (Matt. 3:15)

whatever agency or force the water set in motion to the end that righteousness would be fulfilled, could not be seen, but the Father's voice of approval came down from the heavens, saying:

... This is my beloved Son, in whom I am well pleased. (Matt. 3:17.)

Of those who sought the kingdom of God, Christ required complete conversion, or the second birth as explained by him to Nicodemus: "The kingdom of God is within you"; therefore, conversion must needs come from within. And by conversion the kingdom of God within man impels him to reach out for the guidance and tuition of the organized kingdom of God with which he will seek affiliation.

If the kingdom within man does not impel him to an earnest quest for the established kingdom among men, then the kingdom within has not attained unto its fullest expression.

"Seek, and ye shall find," said the Master.

THE POWER WITHIN THE KINGDOM OF GOD

The kingdom of God would be a New Order, and yet it would not be elusive. It would become known to all who would reach down within themselves and discover that other kingdom which "cometh not with observation."

It would be both corporate and spiritual, and be endowed with power and gifts which would be available to all members. It would be the body of Christ. It would be his Church. And it would provide a design for living that would make for righteousness in the earth. Both its principles of faith and form of organization would be eternal, unchangeable, and indispensable to God's purposes in the regeneration of men.

In the redemption of souls, efficacy would obtain only in "One Lord, one faith, one baptism," and the gospel of the kingdom would be the power of God unto salvation. In the corporate organization of his Church, he would give

... some, apostles; and some, prophets; and some, evangelists; and some, pastors and teachers; For the perfecting of the saints, for the work of the ministry, for the edifying of the body of Christ: Till we all come in the unity of the faith, and of the knowledge of the Son of God, unto a perfect man, unto the measure of the stature of the fulness of Christ: That we henceforth be no more children, tossed to and fro, and carried about with every wind of doctrine. (Eph. 4:11-14.)

God would not withhold his will from the priesthood of the kingdom, because, as the Prophet Amos said:

Surely the Lord God will do nothing, but he revealeth his secret unto his servants the prophets. (Amos 3:7.)

Divine revelation would be the foundation rock of the Church, for hath it not been said that:

Where there is no vision, the people perish. (Prov. 29:18.)

And did not Christ promise to be with his organized kingdom even unto the end, if men would but "believe and be baptized" and "all nations be taught to observe whatsoever he commanded."

God would call men to the ministry in his kingdom. They would not if they could and could not if they would, arrogate the authority unto themselves.

And no man taketh this honour unto himself, but he that is called of God, as was Aaron, (Hebrews 5:4.)

The works that Christ did, his authorized ministry would do also. And greater works would they do because he must go to his Father.

After his departure, the Father would send the Comforter, which is the Holy Ghost, to all those who would seek the kingdom. It would come as a gift to the repentant and the baptized—just as Peter had promised on the day of Pentecost in these words:

... Repent, and be baptized every one of you in the name of Jesus Christ for the remission of sins, and ye shall receive the gift of the Holy Ghost. (Acts 2:38.)

ADMONITION TO SEEK FIRST THE KINGDOM OF GOD

So, in brief, these are some of the principles of faith and distinguishing marks of God's kingdom among men.

To seek this kingdom should be man's first concern. As someone has said: "We have tried Christianity for two thousand years, now let us try the religion of Christ."

Peace cannot come in our time; nor in any time, if, as the foundation thereof the kingdom of God is ignored. Neither will men nor nations be lifted from the "Serbonian Bog" of a sordid and selfish world, until they "seek . . . first the kingdom of God and his righteousness." This is the only way out.

The old Hawaiians knew whereof they spoke when they adopted as a motto of government these words: "Ua mau keea o ka aina i ka pono." "The strength of the land is in righteousness." In other words, it is "righteousness that exalteth a nation."

The world cannot be set right unless man becomes right. Confucius understood this procedure when he said:

Their hearts being rectified, their own selves were cultivated; their own selves being cultivated, their families were regulated. Their families being regulated then states were rightly governed. Their states being rightly governed, the whole empire was made tranquil and happy.

Without starting with the individual, peace could never become international. As with Confucius, so with Christ: "Ye must be born again." This is the way, and there is none other. It is irrefragable and eternal; and the call still rings down from the Mount as it did nearly two thousand years ago:

... seek ye first the kingdom of God, and his righteousness; and all these things shall be added unto you. (Matt. 6:33.)

... The time is fulfilled, and the kingdom of God is at hand: repent ye, and believe the gospel. (Mark 1:15.)

The Choir sang the hymn, "God Be With You."

THIRD DAY

MORNING MEETING

Preliminary to the commencement of the fifth session of the General Conference, which convened at 10 o'clock a.m., Sunday, October 6, the regular Sunday morning nation-wide Tabernacle Choir and Organ Broadcast was presented from 9:30 to 10 a.m. The large Tabernacle was crowded to capacity long before the hour arrived for the presentation of the broadcast, people from all over the Church having assembled to listen to this radio program and the session of the General Conference which was to follow. In addition, the Assembly Hall was crowded to capacity, and hundreds of others assembled on the Tabernacle grounds, loud-speaking equipment having been installed in the Assembly Hall and on the grounds, that those who were unable to find accomodation in the Tabernacle could listen to the services as they were broadcast from the Tabernacle.

TABERNACLE CHOIR AND ORGAN BROADCAST

From 9:30 to 10:00 a.m. the regular Sunday morning nation-wide broadcast of choral and organ music and brief spoken comment was presented by the Tabernacle Choir and Organ, and broadcast through the courtesy and facilities of the Columbia Broadcasting System's coast-to-coast network, throughout the United States. The broadcast, written and announced by Elder Richard L. Evans, originated with radio station KSL, Salt Lake City and was as follows:

(Organ began playing "As the Dew," and then on signal the organ and choir broke into "Gently Raise," singing words to end of second line, and humming to end of verse for announcer's background.)

Announcer: Again with music and the spoken word, we welcome you to the crossroads of the West, as another week of life begins for all men.

At this hour the Columbia Broadcasting System and its affiliated stations bring you another presentation in the 18th year of this broadcast from Temple Square in Salt Lake City, with J. Spencer Cornwall conducting the Tabernacle choir, Alexander Schreiner at the Tabernacle organ, and the spoken word by Richard Evans.

We begin with "Les Preludes" by Franz Liszt, with choral arrangement by Bruno Reibold. The words by Peter W. Dykema are based upon Lamartine's Meditations Poetiques—words that ponder ageless questions: Whence is our life? What stills all strife? Why, then, comes pain? Whence peace with its blessings? We hear "Preludes to Eternity!"

(Choir sang "Preludes to Eternity"—Liszt)

Announcer: As we present Alexander Schreiner, Tabernacle organist, from Temple Square today, we turn to the moving and melodic phrases of the "Finale from the First Symphony" by Louis Vierne.)

(Organ presents "Finale from the First Symphony.")

Announcer: This hour from Temple Square continues with a hymn by Thomas McIntyre with words written by Eliza R. Snow, sung by the Tabernacle choir, "How Great the Wisdom and the Love."

(Choir sang "How Great the Wisdom"—McIntyre)

Announcer: There is an old and simple truth so commonplace as to be frequently ignored, but so vital that it never should be. It is the truth that knowledge alone won't save us. There are infinite examples of this, some of which we mention merely to indicate the inexhaustibility of those we do not mention: A man may know how to take nourishment, but if he doesn't, he will starve. A man may know how to breathe, but if he doesn't he will die. These simplest of illustrations are basic to life itself, and in principle, to most of our troubles, for it is probable that there is not one among us who does not know better than he sometimes does. It is probable, for example, that there are few doctors who live as well as they are capable of telling their patients how to live. It is probable that there are few teachers but who can expound what to do better than they sometimes make a practice of doing. It is probable that there are few private or public advisers but who can tell the world how to get out of its difficulties better than they can keep their own affairs out of difficulties. It is probable that no people, no generation ever found themselves in serious trouble without some knowledge, some intuition, some warning voice as to the consequences of the course they were pursuing. Of course there are times when men do perish for lack of knowledge, but more often it isn't what we don't know that gets us into trouble, but what we do know and ignore. There are many seemingly "smart people" who seem to know all the "answers." But "smartness" so-called may be of the kind that is akin to wisdom or it may be merely the brilliant stupidity of those who think that "knowing the answers" gives them immunity from the rules of life and from the consequences of breaking the rules. But again, merely "knowing the answers" won't save anyone. It has been scripturally recorded and long since accepted that "Where there is no vision, the people perish." (Proverbs 29:18.) But where there is vision, and it is disregarded, they perish also—and with greater condemnation. What good is vision, what good is all the experience of mankind, and all the word of God, and all the record of the ages, if knowing it all, we leave it out of our living lives? What this world needs is not merely more men who know the "answers," but also more men who have the good sense to practice what they know.

(Without announcement organ presented "Behold the Great Redeemer Die—Careless.)

Announcer: We have heard from the Tabernacle organ one of the hymns of George Careless: "Behold the Great Redeemer Die."

And now in closing this day from Temple Square, we turn to another of the hymn arrangements of J. Spencer Cornwall, with the music of Haydn, and the words of Robert Grant: "To Nations long dark Thy light shall be shown; Their worship and vows shall come to Thy throne, Thy truth and Thy judgment shall spread all abroad, 'Till earth's every people confess Thee their God."—"O Worship the King."

(Choir sang "O Worship the King"—Haydn)

Announcer: Until we beckon your thoughts again unto the hills, may peace be with you, this day—and always.

This concludes the 898th presentation of this broadcast from the Mormon Tabernacle on Temple Square, brought to you by the Columbia network and its affiliated stations, originating with Radio Station KSL in Salt Lake City, at the Crossroads of the West.

J. Spencer Cornwall conducted the singing of the Tabernacle choir. Alexander Schreiner was at the organ. The spoken word by Richard Evans.

Immediately following the conclusion of the Choir and Organ Broadcast, the Conference session commenced.

President George Albert Smith:

We will commence the Conference session this morning. This is the fifth session of the 117th Semi-Annual Conference of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints. We are convened in the Tabernacle on Temple Square, Salt Lake City. The usual broadcast has just been finished. The house is packed to suffocation. People are standing all around in the aisles and doorways. The Assembly Hall is occupied by a large audience, equipped with amplifiers and every other convenience.

There are present on the stand this morning all the General Authorities of the Church, except Elder Stephen L. Richards, who is detained at home by his doctor's orders; Elder Ezra Taft Benson, acting as President of the European Mission; and the Patriarch to the Church, also absent on account of illness.

The proceedings of this session will be broadcast over KSL of Salt Lake City, KSUB of Cedar City, and KID at Idaho Falls.

We will begin this morning's session by the Tabernacle Choir and congregation singing "Come, Come Ye Saints," Hymn book page 47, L.D.S. Hymns 194.

I think this a fine opportunity for the people who are here to help the Choir and let us sing this great hymn that has been sung so many times in all parts of the world. Elder J. Spencer Cornwall will be in charge of the Choir as director, and Elder Alexander Schreiner is the organist.

The opening prayer will be offered by President Carl A. Patten of the Santaquin-Tintic Stake of Zion.

The Choir and congregation sang the hymn: "Come, Come, Ye Saints," (Hymn Book, page 47, L.D.S. Hymns No. 194.)

Elder Carl A. Patten, President of the Santaquin-Tintic Stake, offered the invocation.

President George Albert Smith:

We have a message from President Selvoy J. Boyer of the British Mission:

"Sparkhill, Birmingham, England

50 Elders and 600 Saints send greetings from British Mission Conference, Birmingham, England to loved ones and friends assembled in Zion. All is well.

Pres. Selvoy J. Boyer."

I am sure many of those in this audience are familiar with the place from which this message comes and remember with love many of those who are sending it.

The Tabernacle Choir will now sing, "Holiness Becometh the House of the Lord," by Stephens, after which President David O. McKay of the First Presidency will address us.

The Tabernacle Choir sang: "Holiness Becometh the House of the Lord," by Stephens.

President George Albert Smith:

I want to have you folks see this boy here, 87 years young—George Margetts. He has attended every Conference that has been held here for 64 years, as the chief usher most of the time, and he is always on hand smiling, with some kind of flower for some of the Brethren.

PRESIDENT DAVID O. McKAY

Second Counselor in the First Presidency

"I charge thee," wrote Paul to Timothy, "before God, and the Lord Jesus Christ, . . . Preach the word; be instant in season, out of season; reprove, rebuke, exhort with all long-suffering." (II Tim. 4: 1,2.)

In the same letter he prophetically declared "that in the last days perilous times shall come. For men shall be lovers of their own selves, . . . lovers of pleasures more than lovers of God; Having a form of godliness, but denying the power thereof. (II Tim. 3:1, 2, 4, 5.)

It is in the spirit of Paul's charge and prophecy that I approach the subject of safeguards against delinquency of youth. In naming these safeguards I have nothing new to offer. You have heard them mentioned frequently, but I think as with the gospel principles, it is fitting that we be active in season and out of season, that we reprove, rebuke, exhort, admonish, with all long-suffering as we contemplate the rising crime wave and bring home to each of us, if possible, the realization that greater diligence is needed.

Few will question that we are living in perilous times, that many people have lost their moorings and are being

. . . tossed to and fro . . . with every wind of doctrine, by the sleight of men, and cunning craftiness, whereby they lie in wait to deceive. (Eph. 4:14.)

A short time ago, a commission on evangelism, appointed by the archbishops of Canterbury and York, made a report revealing some astounding facts on the present-day status of "Christian" England. The report said:

The present irrelevance of the Church in the life and thought of the community in general is apparent from two symptoms which admit of no dispute. These are (1) the widespread decline in Church going; and (2) the collapse of Christian moral standards.

Associated with this was the statement that only from ten to fifteen percent of the population are closely linked to any Christian church.

Commenting upon this report, one of the daily papers in England said, among other things:

Youth is largely indifferent to Christianity—finding in religion no relevance to life, and in life itself no meaning. If we inquire what it is that has caused these alarming symptoms of national decline and fall, the answer is that our generation has succumbed to the age-long delusion of a self-sufficient humanism which puts man (not God) in the center of his world, and regards man (not God) as the standard of reference. The worst, however, is not yet told, for the Church itself has become infected with the spirit of the age, and has thereby lost its vision, its vitality and its spiritual authority. The real problem is not the ninety percent which stand outside the churches, but the ten percent inside the churches, so many of whom are only half converted and ill-instructed.

Truly it would seem that men and women are either groping blindly for the truth or have become lovers of pleasure more than lovers of God, having a form of godliness, but denying the power thereof.

Among the glaring evil products of the war and postwar periods are two which seem to me to be most portentous and which should be curbed if we would preserve true Christian ideals. These are: first, an increasing tendency to dishonor the marriage vow; and, second, the upswing in juvenile delinquency. Careful research would undoubtedly disclose a close relationship between these two unwholesome social conditions.

MARRIAGE LOOSENESS AND INFIDELITY

As evidence of the first, we need only to glance at the number of divorces even among temple marriages, mentioned impressively in his appeal last evening by President George Albert Smith. In the country at large, one out of every five marriages are separated by the ever-grinding divorce mill. Recent statistics disclose that we now have one out of three.

Bearing tragic witness to the lessening regard for purity in marriage is the large number of so-called war brides whose husbands have returned to face broken promises and tragic instances of infidelity.

JUVENILE DELINQUENCY

But it is to the ever-increasing crime wave that I desire to call attention this morning. Children are being corrupted by it; youth are caught in its whirlpool, and are being contaminated overwhelmingly by it. According to the director of the Federal Bureau of Investigation, ... it is mounting in intensity. It is growing in severity. It is not isolated. It is nationwide.

Referring to conditions during the war, he comments:

There was the spirit of wartime abandon, for example, with its last-fling philosophy which provided justification to less resolute wills to violate the conventions of society. Lessons in school became secondary. Girls sacrificed virtue on a false shrine of patriotism. Arrests for prostitution increased three hundred seventy-five percent, disorderly conduct three hundred fifty-seven percent, and drunkenness and driving while intoxicated one hundred seventy-four percent among girls under eighteen in the wartime years. To those who were not grounded in fundamentals, established values disappeared, and an attitude of impermanence superseded individual responsibility. Conflicts between liberty and license manifested themselves in wrongdoing. Personal responsibility in too many homes has become archaic and old fashioned.

The passing parade of crime presents a sordid spectacle.

Out of each one thousand marching in this endless parade, five hundred twenty-one have marched before to a prior arrest, and two hundred ten are under twenty-one years of age. More persons aged seventeen are arrested than in any other age group. Of each one thousand murderers, one hundred forty are under twenty-one years of age; of every one thousand robbers, three hundred sixty are under twenty-one; of burglars, five hundred ten; of thieves, three hundred forty; of arsonists, two hundred fifty; of one thousand car thieves, six hundred thirty are under twenty-one; and of one thousand rapists, three hundred twenty are under twenty-one years of age.

In calling attention to these conditions, and in my comments later, I would not have you think that young people generally do not merit our confidence. It is the few, not the many, of whom we now speak.

When, a few years ago, a little four-year-old lad wandered into the bad lands of North Dakota, the whole countryside was aroused and organized for the rescue. They gave no thought, however, to the hundreds of four-year-olds who were safe in their mothers' keeping. A train wreck or an airplane disaster shocks us to attention, awakens sympathy and a demand for more safeguards, while to the hundreds of trains and airplanes carrying millions to safety, we give scarcely a passing thought.

So while we solicitously call attention to the tragedies in the stream of human life, let us not be unmindful of the much greater group who move steadily and successfully along, avoiding the sandbars and rapids of sinful indulgence and spiritual decay, whose noble lives confirm and increase confidence in the growing generation. As we seek the lost sheep, let us be appreciative of the "ninety and nine" that are safe in the fold.

But no matter how firm our confidence in the majority of the young, we must not close our eyes to the fact that the number of delinquents and youthful criminals is increasing. In the interest of the moral atmosphere of our communities, the welfare of the state, the perpetuity of our democratic form of government, we must search for the causes of this upswing in crime, and, if possible, remove them and apply the proper remedies.

THE HOME THE FIRST SAFEGUARD

One cause of the increase in child delinquency is a letdown in home ideals. The exigencies of war induced many mothers to take up war work, and to leave their children in the care of others, or, too often, to let them shift for themselves. A growing desire for economic independence, or a too eager willingness to improve financial circumstances, has influenced some mothers to neglect the greatest of all responsibilities—the rearing of a family. The national director of the Federal Bureau of Investigation makes the definite statement that ... in the background of these youthful offenders lies the story of shocking neglect. Boys and girls are being deprived of the care and guidance necessary to the proper foundation of their characters. Their lawlessness had its roots in every instance in broken homes, in homes where mothers and fathers because of their neglect, misunderstanding, or irresponsibility had failed in their primary obligation. More often than not, God was unknown, or, more important, was unwelcome in their homes.

On the other hand, in nearly every instance the youthful offender would have been a strong, upright citizen had he been given a chance.

If his pent-up energies and desires had been directed along wholesome channels; if his problems—the problems that made him a problem child—had been solved by patient and attentive parents, he would have proved to be an influence for good in his community.

You may think me extreme, but I am going to say that a married woman who refuses to assume the responsibilities of motherhood, or who, having children, neglects them for pleasure or social prestige, is recreant to the highest calling and privilege of womankind. The father, who because of business or political or social responsibilities, fails to share with his wife the responsibilities of rearing his sons and daughters, is untrue to his martial obligations, is a negative element in what might be and should be a joyous home atmosphere, and is a possible contributor to discord and delinquency. A President of the United States once said:

Our country has a vast majority of competent mothers. I am not so sure of the majority of competent fathers!

Fathers may and should exercise a helpful, restraining influence, where a mother's tenderness and love might lead to indulgence on the part of the children. In this respect, however, every father should ever keep in mind that he was once a mischievous youngster himself, and deal with his boy sympathetically.

The home is the best place in the world to teach the highest ideal in the social and political life of man; namely, perfect liberty of action so long as you do not trespass upon the rights and privileges of another.

The great need in the American home today is more religion. Parents should make it obvious both by their actions and their conversation that they are seriously interested if not in outward forms in the fruits of true religion. Example of parents should emphasize the need of honesty in our dealings with our family, our neighbors, and all with whom we come in contact; of kindness to our employees, of fair play to our employers, or good measure to our customers. "Talk about these intangibles should become as common practice in our homes and offices as talk about golf, parties, and profits, if we want to succeed in solving the family problem."

The Lord places the responsibility directly where it belongs, wherein he says that it is the duty of parents to teach their children the principles of the gospel and to walk uprightly before the Lord, and if they do not so teach, the sin be upon the heads of the parents.

THE CHURCH

Next to the home as a safeguard to delinquency, the church should be a dominant force. In the Church of Jesus Christ every child should be more or less safeguarded; first, by the ward teacher, whose duty it is to "... watch over the church always (the "church" meaning members), to be with and to strengthen them." (D. & C. 20:53.) Today the perfunctory obligations of the ward teacher are fairly well performed, but the looking after of individuals is woefully neglected. If every teacher, as an appointed representative of the bishopric of his ward, were properly and fully to perform his duty, he would be aware of the activity or inactivity of every child, and of every youth in the Church, each teacher watching over the assigned families.

In more direct contact with individuals are the quorum officers and instructors. It is the duty of these officers and instructors to know the status of every youth from twelve years to twenty, and to take personal interest in each. I pause to let you comprehend the significance of this divine organization.

A third dominant force is the auxiliary associations, comprehending in their enrollment every child and youth from six years of age and upward.

Indifference manifest in the world generally towards church should tend only to spur men of the priesthood and teachers in the auxiliaries in the Church of Christ to more earnest and diligent activity.

THE SCHOOLS

If the reports be true, with reference to the indifference of the country as a whole toward Christian churches, we shall have to place next to the home, not the church, but the public school, as the most influential factor in lessening delinquency.

Present-day conditions emphasize the fact (and I believe it with all my heart) that the most paramount objective of the public school system from kindergarten to the university should be character building and the evolving of true, loyal citizens of the republic. The teaching of the three "R's," of the arts and the sciences, even the delving into research work, should be but a means to the development of true manhood and noble womanhood. Education for loyal citizenship! Ralph Waldo Emerson (sometimes referred to as the wisest American) truly said:

Character is higher than intellect; a great soul will be fit to live as well as to think.

A few years ago inquiry made into the school status of juvenile delinquents in one of our Utah school districts, revealed the fact that eighty-one percent of the offenses were found committed by five percent of school pupils. A committee appointed to deal with this situation made the following report:

1. Since the school offers one of the best resources in the state to prevent and treat delinquency, every effort should be made by both school and court to help the delinquent make a satisfactory school adjustment. In order to accomplish this result, cases which come to the court should be immediately referred to the school coordinator or attendance department of the school district in which the juvenile resides in order to determine whether or not the delinquent has a satisfactory school or work record. If he has not, the court and schools should not cease their efforts until the delinquent is either in school full time on a satisfactory program, or is employed and under proper supervision.

2. That immediately after the juvenile court has disposed of a case, the school coordinator should be notified of the disposition made.

3. That the industrial school notify the proper school authority when it releases a boy or girl to his or her own home.

THE COMMUNITY ATMOSPHERE

A fourth and final safeguard against delinquency of youth is the moral atmosphere of the town or community. This is determined by the ideals and actions of adults, and particularly of civic officers and those who are entrusted to enforce the law. The following from one of our leading columnists (Miss Dorothy Thompson) referring to the "pervasive example of the behavior of adult civilization," is pertinent:

As long as we publicize and condone violence; reward profiteering; intensify civil strife; glorify personalities with the sexual morals of rabbits; teach in our high schools and colleges a cheap relativism which denies personal responsibility and places all our sins upon the "economic system" or "infantile conditioning," so long will we have juvenile criminals. Our children are reflections of ourselves, or of the things in our communal life that we tolerate. England, now, is making special films to be shown in special theatres for teen-agers—films which are partly educational and partly pure entertainment, made by first rate artists, and frankly designed to magnify and make attractive virtue.

The writer then quotes Thomas Jefferson who "did not believe that you can get a good society except through good, honest, well-mannered, considerate, law-abiding, clean-living citizens. He thought, in fact, that if education concentrated in the first line on creating these, society and the state would take care of themselves."

Yes, we are living in perilous times, but let us hope that they may be to the present generation as the fiery furnace that consumes the dross but purifies the gold.

A clean man is a national asset. A pure woman is the incarnation of true national glory. A citizen who loves justice and hates evil is better than a battleship. The strength of any community consists of and exists in the men who are pure, clean, upright and straightforward, ready for the right and sensitive to every approach of evil. Let such ideals be the standard of citizenship.

They are fundamentals in the Church of Jesus Christ.

God bless the workers in the priesthood and auxiliary organizations that they may search out the young, be constant in season and out of season, guarding well those boys and girls who are not bad but who lack proper guarding. Victor Hugo was not far from the truth when he said:

There are no bad boys, and there are no bad men, there are only bad cultivators.

God give us power to be good cultivators of youth, I pray in the name of Jesus Christ. Amen.

President George Albert Smith:

We have just listened to President David O. McKay of the First Presidency, who will now be followed by Elder Alma Sonne, one of the Assistants to the Twelve. Elder Sonne will leave immediately after the conclusion of our Conference work here to go to England to preside over the European Mission. I suggest, my brethren and sisters, that he will carry a message from this Conference to many of your loved ones on the other side of the great ocean.

ELDER ALMA SONNEAssistant to the Council of the Twelve Apostles*

Brothers and sisters: We have just listened to a great sermon, a sermon of precious truths. I hope and pray that during the few moments I stand here I may be prompted and directed by the good Spirit, for I desire to bear my testimony and to make acknowledgment of the rich spiritual heritage which is mine, and which I know is yours, because of our membership in the Church.

CONVICTION NECESSARY TO ACTION

The other day there came to my office a man to dissuade me, and to discourage me from accepting the call to the mission field. It was the same line of argument which I had heard thirty-five years ago. "Why must you go?" he asked. "Isn't the soul at home as precious to save as the soul in Europe?" he asked. I answered him very briefly. "I suppose," I said, "it's a matter of conviction." And then he replied, "It is very important what we believe."

I knew this man; I knew his background; I knew his family. I remember that from his youth he had walked in a road that led away from the Church. I recall his old grandfather, a pioneer. As a boy I had heard his testimony. He had seen the Prophet. He had heard him speak. This veteran came to Nauvoo when mobocracy and persecution were rampant. He later left his home and his little farm and cast his lot with the persecuted and driven people, driven across the prairie to the Rocky Mountains. Why did he do it? Because he had conviction!

A TESTIMONY OF THE TRUTHFULNESS OF THE BOOK OF MORMON

When I was a young man, feeling my way cautiously and thoughtfully, and I hope, prayerfully, I asked my father, "Why did you join the Church?" The question came to him as a challenge. He hesitated for a moment and then replied, "Because I read the Book of Mormon." He had come to America, not for the gospel's sake, but because he believed America was a land of opportunity, in which a person could make headway if he worked and saved and struggled toward an end. And then someone handed him a Book of Mormon. "Read it," he was urged. He read a chapter or two every night, before retiring, until the book was read from cover to cover. He put it aside, not particularly impressed. Then one day as he was working in the field a thought came to him: "That book is God-given. Joseph Smith never wrote that book." And then he came to a logical conclusion: "If that book is a revelation, then 'Mormonism' is true, and the gospel and the priesthood are upon the earth." Then he sought out the bishop of the ward in which he was residing, and asked to be baptized a member of the Church.

A MOTHER'S FAITHFULNESS

I recall now that my mother, when she was not yet in her 'teens, walked across the prairie from Council Bluffs, Iowa, to Cache valley, Utah, behind a yoke of oxen and a covered wagon; she, and her parents, trudged along over the dusty and sun-baked plains, until they reached the "valleys of the mountains." The first year was spent in a dugout; they endured hardships and privations. Why? Because a humble missionary had brought the gospel to their home and explained it to them in such a way that they could understand it. So it seems to me that we all have such a heritage. I am thankful for it.

PREPARATION FOR THE RESTORATION OF THE GOSPEL

We have been talking about America, the land of the free. There is an old American motto which is inscribed on our coins. It reads, "In God we trust." I am convinced if freedom in America, and elsewhere, is to be preserved, we must return to God. Indeed, I believe that years before the gospel was restored, preparations were made for its restoration. It was no accident that Christopher Columbus reached the shores of San Salvador in three flimsy vessels. It was no accident that the invincible armada of King Phillip of Spain was scattered by a storm which arose at an opportune moment on the high seas. It was no accident that a few drops of water, more or less, as Victor Hugo said, fell on the battlefield of Waterloo and brought about the defeat of Napoleon Bonaparte. It was no accident that thirteen loose, unorganized colonies on the Atlantic seaboard, without money, without credit, without a navy, without an army, were victorious in the Revolutionary War. It was no accident that the profound and great political truth set forth in the Declaration of Independence found expression through the pen of Thomas Jefferson. Why? Because he was inspired, and freedom of worship was an essential part of the gospel of Jesus Christ.

May God help us to appreciate the blessings which are ours. May he preserve our land and our nation in these crucial days, that America may live and freedom may go out to all the world, so the gospel of the kingdom can be preached without fear or favor to the nations everywhere, I pray humbly, in the name of Jesus Christ. Amen.

The Choir and congregation joined in singing the hymn, "O Ye Mountains High," by Penrose.

President George Albert Smith:

I would like to say to those who do not know it, that the glorious hymn which we have just sung was composed by a man who had never seen the Rocky Mountains, never been here, but wrote it under the inspiration of the Lord.

ELDER CLIFFORD E. YOUNG

Assistant to the Council of the Twelve Apostles

I never was more conscious, my brothers and sisters, of the truthfulness of the statement that "A speech, to be immortal, should not be eternal." I recognize the value of time here this morning. May I just say in passing, with reference to President Penrose, to whom President Smith has alluded, in harmony with what President Dunn related to us yesterday of his experience in the Islands in translating for one of the brethren, that it was my good fortune to travel with President Penrose in the northern part of the German Mission and to translate for him. I can bear witness to you that if there was any doubt in my mind as to the gift of tongues, that doubt vanished as I stood by the side of that great leader and prophet and endeavored to convey to the Saints in German what he said in English. President Dunn bore witness of this yesterday, and I can testify to that truth.

IMPORTANCE OF LISTENING TO SERVANTS OF GOD

I desire to call attention to a matter or two that I think need to give us concern, and may I preface it by relating to you the circumstance of the Savior as he went into the wilderness after his baptism. You recall that he fasted for forty days and forty nights and then was hungered, and Satan came to him and tempted him, saying:

... If thou be the Son of God, command that these stones be made bread. (Matt. 4:3.)

Of course, the implication was that by bread, hunger may be appeased. And then Jesus said:

... Man shall not live by bread alone, but by every word that proceedeth out of the mouth of God. (Matt. 4:4.)

Supplementing this, is the statement of the Lord where he says:

... whether by mine own voice or by the voice of my servants, it is the same. (D. & C. 1:38.)

We have had brought to our attention during this conference many of the problems confronting us, but it seems to me that if we could burn in our hearts the truthfulness of that statement that we should live by every word that proceedeth forth from the mouth of God, we would go a long way in solving these problems. These brethren whom God has called to preside and give us direction, when they speak they do not speak flippantly, they officially declare to us what we should do. "It is the same," the Lord says. "It is my word," and we should recognize it as such.

GET OUT OF DEBT

Now in harmony with that thought may I call attention to a matter about which I have considerable concern, and I am sure you do. In this pulpit in 1903, President Joseph F. Smith admonished the Saints that they should get out of debt. At that time we were enjoying a good deal of prosperity, and President Smith admonished the Saints to pay their debts and be free from bondage while money was plentiful. Well, many of them did, but some did not. As is the case now, so it was then—all did not accept the advice and counsel. By and by the first world war came on and the demand for commodities increased; prices soared; money was plentiful and again the temptation to borrow! Farmers bought more land; livestock men increased their flocks and herds, much of this on borrowed money, overlooking the possibility that there might again come a day of reckoning. And so, many of our people took on the obligations of debt. In 1930-32, we felt the pinch of it, and I may say without fear of contradiction, had we not had the bondage of debt as we did at that time, the depression would not have been so tragic with many of us. But being in debt, not being able to pay our interest, not being able to pay our obligations due to the fact that commodity values had gone way down below any level that had existed at the time the debts were incurred, the result was that it was impossible for men and women to pay their debts, and bankruptcy, sorrow, and tragedy followed.

COUNSEL TO RETURNED SERVICEMEN

History is again repeating itself, my brothers and sisters. We have come again into a time of complacency. Money is easy; wages are high; very few people are out of work—indeed, we may say no one needs to be out of work now if he will work. And yet we have still the same danger, and there is one phase of it that comes home to us: Our boys are coming home from the service, and by the way, we brethren who hold the priesthood must not overlook the counsel that was given to us a year or so ago that we should take cognizance of these boys as they come home, and advise with them. Their coming home is becoming a common thing with us, and we are neglecting them and failing in many instances to give advice and counsel where it is needed. And so may I remind us again of our obligation to these boys.

As our boys return, they are in need of homes, and opportunities to borrow money and invest in land or livestock are before them, as such opportunities were before us twenty-five years ago. Money is easy, and my apprehension, my brothers and sisters, and it comes from some experience in contacting many of our boys, is that we are not protecting them against heavy obligations—obligations that they cannot meet. It is an easy thing, under the present system, for our boys to go heavily in debt for the purchase of a home. I am not decrying that—I went in debt for my own home, and I suppose nearly every other young man as he started out in life and had nothing to begin with did that very thing and thought himself justified in doing it, as many no doubt were. The danger, however, lies in taking on ourselves debts that we cannot pay. Now with these young men, the tendency under the G. I. Bill of Rights is to incur obligations that it will be impossible to meet when the day of reckoning comes. Values are high and when you consider a boy, who has nothing, obligating himself for a seven or eight thousand dollar home, with good wages now, but with the possibility that when the leveling off comes his wages will be very meager, one can see the danger that confronts our youth. And so, my brethren and sisters, we should give them the benefit of our experience, our counsel and advice in these most serious problems.

May we avoid debt just as far as possible, and may we help our youth to avoid these pitfalls. Some of them are justified in obligating themselves if they can see their way out, but we should bear in mind that we cannot always maintain the wage level that obtains today, try as we will. I don't care what the theories of the economists are, it just simply can't be done. There is a law of retribution that operates in these matters, just as in everything else, and some day we shall have to pay. High wages will not always exist, hopeful as we are; neither will jobs be as plentiful as they now are. And so when that day comes, we do not want our boys in bondage as many of us were in the early thirties when the depression broke.

And so I say to you, it is well for us to accept the counsel and advice that is given us by the men whose right it is to give it, and I repeat again:

... whether by mine own voice or by the voice of my servants, it is the same. (D. & C. 1:38.)

And God help us so to do, in the name of Jesus Christ. Amen.

BISHOP LEGRAND RICHARDS

Presiding Bishop of the Church

I don't know that I have ever attended a conference of the Church that I have been more inspired and lifted up, or more grateful for my membership in the Church and my association with the Saints of God. At the close of the last April conference I said to my wife, if I had two million dollars I wouldn't know what in the world I could buy with it that would mean as much to me or bring me as much joy and happiness as my membership in this Church and my opportunity to associate with the Saints and minister among them. And more than anything else this day, I desire that my ministry and efforts may be acceptable to God and a blessing to the people of this great Church.

YOUTH NEED TESTIMONIES

President McKay spoke this morning about our responsibilities to the youth of the land, and I thought over my own life and I believe, my brothers and sisters, that what our young people need more than anything else in this world, is a testimony of the divinity of this work, and if in all our auxiliaries and our priesthood quorums we lay a little more stress on the spirit of the work rather than on the letter of it, I believe we would find the results in the lives of our boys and girls most acceptable.

I think of the time when I was a boy and the things that impressed me, and I remember reading the Life of the Prophet Joseph Smith by George Q. Cannon. It did something for me and caused my soul to burn within me, and I couldn't help wishing that I might have shared some of the responsibilities of those early days. Then I read his own statement where he was so concerned, and wondered because he was persecuted for telling the truth. He said he felt as he imagined Paul felt when he stood before Agrippa. He said, "I had seen a light; I had heard a voice; I knew that God knew that I knew it; and I dared not deny it, for I knew that by so doing I would come under condemnation before the Lord." (See "Extracts from the History of Joseph Smith.") Then I remember how that impressed me, and I thought that does not sound like the testimony of a deceiver or a false prophet, and I remembered the testimony of Paul, which I think is one of the most wonderful testimonies we have ever heard about, when he stood before King Agrippa and most noble Festus and bore his testimony how he, on the way to Damascus, had seen a light and heard a voice, and knew that God knew that he knew it. And how, when he had borne that testimony, Festus turned to him and said, "Paul, thou art beside thyself; much learning doth make thee mad," to which Paul replied, "I am not mad, most noble Festus; but speak forth the words of truth and soberness." To that Agrippa replied unto Paul, "Almost thou persuadest me to be a Christian," and Paul replied, "I would to God, that not only thou, but also all that hear me this day, were both almost, and altogether such as I am, except these bonds." (Acts 26:24-29.)

I tell you, brethren and sisters, there is no motivating power in this world in the lives of boys and girls, or men and women, comparable to a testimony of the truth because God does something for men and women, and he does it for boys and girls when they have a testimony of the divinity of this great latter-day work.

TESTIMONY OF THE THREE WITNESSES

I remember leading the Sunday School in one of our Sunday School conferences when Brother Karl G. Maeser and Brother George Goddard were present, in reciting the testimony of the three witnesses, and I would like to read that to you today. I believe I could recite it without the book, but I will keep it here for fear I cannot: "Be it known unto all nations, kindreds, tongues, and people, unto whom this work shall come: That we, through the grace of God the Father, and our Lord Jesus Christ, have seen the plates which contain this record, which is a record of the people of Nephi, and also of the Lamanites, their brethren, and also of the people of Jared, who came from the tower of which hath been spoken. And we also know that they have been translated by the gift and power of God, for his voice hath declared it unto us; wherefore we know of a surety that the work is true. And we also testify that we have seen the engravings which are upon the plates; and they have been shown unto us by the power of God, and not of man. And we declare with words of soberness, that an angel of God came down from heaven, and he brought and laid before our eyes, that we beheld and saw the plates, and the engravings thereon; and we know that it is by the grace of God the Father and our Lord Jesus Christ, that we beheld and bear record that these things are true. And it is marvelous in our eyes. Nevertheless, the voice of the Lord commanded us that we should bear record of it; wherefore, to be obedient unto the commandments of God, we bear testimony of these things. And we know that if we are faithful in Christ, we shall rid our garments of the blood of all men, and be found spotless before the judgment-seat of Christ, and shall dwell with him eternally in the heavens. And the honor be to the Father, and to the Son, and to the Holy Ghost, which is one God. Amen." (Book of Mormon, testimony.)

Now, if you want to read the conclusion of those testimonies, just read the histories of those three men when they lay on their deathbeds, and when a peace came over them when they lifted their voices before they went into the eternal world to bear witness that the testimony they had given was of God.

I want to tell you, brothers and sisters, that when your boys and girls feel that, they have something that will hold them against all the powers of wickedness in this world. I would rather trust my boys and my girls in this world with a testimony of this work burning in their souls than all the information you can give them out of all the schoolbooks that have ever been written.

DIVINITY OF BOOK OF MORMON

I think the Book of Mormon is our greatest and most tangible evidence of the divinity of the mission of the Prophet Joseph Smith. When that book was first handed to my grandfather, Willard Richards, he opened it in the middle of the book and read a few pages; he then closed the book and said: "That book was either written by God or the devil, and I intend to find out who wrote it." He read it through twice within the next ten days, and he said the devil couldn't have done it; it was from the Lord. It is from the Lord, brothers and sisters, and that is what our boys and girls ought to know.

APPRECIATION OF GERMAN E. ELLSWORTH

I want to express here a deep appreciation for my friend, President German E. Ellsworth. I have reason to call him friend beyond just the common friendship of brother to brother. I think possibly outside of the early founders of the Church, no other man has sponsored the distribution of the Book of Mormon as has Brother Ellsworth, and I noted here a little statement he made in the meeting of the mission presidents last Wednesday when we spent from nine o'clock in the morning until four-thirty in the afternoon listening to the inspiration of these men who are laboring with your boys and girls in the mission field. Brother Ellsworth spoke of the time when he was president of the Northern States Mission and of the thousands and thousands of copies of the Book of Mormon he published that were distributed to the world. He said as he walked off the Hill Cumorah one day, the voice of the Lord said unto him: "Push the distribution of the record taken from this hill; it will help bring the world to Christ." I think that when all other evidences fail, the Book of Mormon will do that very thing in this world, and as far as I am concerned, I think we haven't all the evidence yet. There will be plenty more to come.

VALUE OF ARCHEOLOGICAL RESEARCH

I believe it was in 1934 that I read an article in the newspapers of a visit here to the United States of a William A. Kennedy from Lima, Peru. He was here in the interest of gathering funds for the erection of a research institution in Lima, Peru. The article indicated that with the money that was promised by the small Americas to match what could be gathered in the United States, that he already had the assurance of thirty million dollars, and that this amount would be increased to sixty or seventy million dollars within ten years. Former President Herbert Hoover was named as one of the board members of that institute, and it was to be erected for what purpose? To investigate the early civilization of America, particularly dealing with the Inca and the Maya civilizations.

I heard Brother Callis once say that when Joseph Smith received the plates he got down on his knees before the Lord, and said, "O, God, what will the world say?" And the voice of God came to him, "Fear not, I will cause the earth to testify of the truth of these things." And by the time this institute spends this sixty or seventy million dollars, we may have evidences, far beyond anything we have read of up to this time, of the divinity of the story told in the Book of Mormon.

APPRECIATION OF BOOK OF MORMON TRUTHS

Ten years ago Brother Nicholas G. Smith, one of my dearest friends, stood in this pulpit in the general conference. He was then presiding over the California Mission, and I was president of the Southern States Mission. He told this story. You can find it in the conference report; I didn't need to look there because I remembered it. He told about being invited by the dean of religion from the University of Southern California at Los Angeles to come to his church to listen to him preach, and he asked to borrow a copy of the Book of Mormon. One of the missionaries handed him his copy. Now all you missionaries know how we underline certain passages in red, and the minister stood up before his congregation, Presbyterian, as I remember, with Brother Smith and some of our missionaries present. He held that Book of Mormon up to his congregation. He said, "I have here a volume of scripture which has been in our midst for over one hundred years, and we haven't known anything about it." And then he opened it, and turned page after page, reading the passages that were underscored in red, and then, holding it before his congregation again, he said, "Why can't we fellowship a people who believe in such beautiful things as I have read to you out of this volume of scripture?"

Two years before that, we received, from a man who visited on this block, a letter from down in Texas, in which he said that he had been a minister in a Methodist church for thirty-seven years. He said, "I have spent over twelve thousand dollars building a library of the choicest books I could find. I have now in my library one book which is worth more than all the others because it is a volume of holy scripture," and he named it as the Book of Mormon.

Brothers and sisters, we just don't know the value of the Book of Mormon. I was out on the Boston Commons one night, holding a street meeting. Following the meeting, a young missionary walked up to me and said, "Brother Richards, I don't know the gospel is true." I said, "You don't?" And he said, "No." "Well," I said, "you take the Book of Mormon and live with it and think with it and pray about it, and it will not be very long before you will know the gospel is true." We were back there again, a few weeks later—I didn't happen to be laboring in that town, but we came in for a conference or a priesthood meeting. That night I was in charge of the meeting. That same missionary walked up to me and said, "Brother Richards, may I speak tonight?" He had been in the field only a short time, and I said, "You surely can." He walked out before the group that had gathered and held up the Book of Mormon, and pulled out of his pocket some postcards of buried cities in Central and South America that had been uncovered, and said, "If that Book of Mormon isn't true, you tell me how Joseph Smith knew those cities were buried out in Central and South America." It didn't take him long to find the truth.

MISSIONARY GAINS TESTIMONY

Then we had another missionary come to us in the South, who said, "I had a hard job to make up my mind to come on my mission. My professors told me it would be a waste of time." He was a college student. He said, "You know, I am a very practical sort of a fellow. I like to be able to walk out in a garden and pick the pears off the pear tree, and then I know it is a pear tree." "Well," I said, "my boy, I wouldn't worry too much about that if I were you. Pears grow on our tree, too. Now you take the Book of Mormon, and you apply all the analysis you can to it from every source; how it could have been written; who could have written it; who could have put in it the information that is there save God the Eternal Father, or someone to whom he gave that information."

Well, I sent this boy out into Alabama. A few weeks later I went over to attend a conference, and I said to the district president that I would like to hear from that young man down there. He called on him. He bore a magnificent testimony. I walked up to him after the meeting. I said, "You must have found some pears on the pear tree." And he said, "Oh, President Richards, forget it."

My wife was in company with me one day when we met a boy we had helped rear and who had learned about twelve languages and had a Ph.D. She turned to him and said, "What do you think is the greatest evidence of the divinity of the Book of Mormon?" "Why," he said, "every page in it! No human being could have written that book of himself. No knowledge in this world could have given it, save it was from God."

Now brothers and sisters, I must not take more time, but I want to tell you that when our boys and girls get to feel the truth of that book, there will be less worry about where their feet are leading them by day and by night. God bless the youth of Zion. God bless every man and every woman who bears responsibility in the home and in the organizations and in the priesthood quorums, and may our testimonies and our lives so affect theirs that they will become powers for good in this world, and may this book yet fulfill this great decree, as written in the preface, that it shall be a witness of the Lord Jesus Christ, unto all nations. I pray, and leave you my testimony, in the name of the Lord, Jesus Christ. Amen.

ELDER S. DILWORTH YOUNG

Of the First Council of the Seventy

I should like to testify of the truthfulness of what Bishop Richards has just told you. If we could send our boys and girls into the mission fields with a thorough knowledge of the Book of Mormon, they would never want for a witness and a testimony to bear to those who, in their hearts, are ready to hear the gospel.

My experience in traveling about the missions is that when the missionaries know this great witness, they have no doubt in their minds. They have confidence in the truth of the gospel and are possessors of a sure testimony of its restoration and of the goodness of the Savior to us in this day.

A TRIBUTE TO JOHN H. TAYLOR

It is not my purpose to talk about the Book of Mormon at this time, and before I begin on the subject I have chosen, I should like to digress for a moment and add my voice to that of my fellow member of the First Council of the Seventy, Richard L. Evans, in honor of our departed brother, John H. Taylor.

My first introduction to scouting as a profession was punctuated, and set off in quotation marks, by the work of this man. Many men living in the area which I served were boys during the years after 1912 when President Taylor directed this, the Scout organization for the Church. These men have told me many times of their love for this great leader and of the value to them of his teaching of scouting principles.

When I came into the First Council of the Seventy he treated me as a son, rather an overgrown son it is true, but he made me feel that he had a fatherly interest in me. He gave me gentle, humorous guidance, for John H. Taylor had a very deep and abiding sense of humor, which was delightful to hear, and which I enjoyed very much. He offered his counsel in so kindly a manner that no offense was ever given, and he applied the brakes to my impetuous nature in such a way that I did not know that I was being slowed up.

All the while he was doing this, his wife, Sister Rachel Grant Taylor, took Sister Young and me into her heart. She had us to her home and made us feel that we belonged as no one else has done in a long time. John Taylor possessed great humanity, great humbleness, and great gentleness. He was a gentle man. Sister Taylor is a gentle woman.

AN INSIGHT INTO THE LIFE OF A MISSION PRESIDENT

I should like to speak today about the mission presidents. Many of us wonder what these men do, and what their responsibilities could be.

As an elder or a sister boards a train in Salt Lake City, and it disappears around the bend, Mother and Father wipe the tears from their eyes, turn homeward, and wonder what kind of man will receive their loved one. All they know is that they have given their child for two years to a man who is only a name to them. They wonder if he will understand the temperament and disposition of their missionary, and if he will bring out the best qualities which are in him.

What is the life of a mission president? No one doubts that these servants of the Lord are chosen from among the best people we have in the Church. What kind of life do they lead, and what are their problems?

The mission president first worries over finding someone to take his house for three or four years with some hope of receiving it back in good condition. Then he has to decide which of his possessions he will store away and which he will take with him. While engrossed in these operations, he is stopped many times by his friends who say words something like this, "I envy you now that you are going to have a three-year vacation at the expense of the Church." He has this repeated to him so often that before he is fairly on his way, he begins to wonder if in some way he could be taking advantage of the Church—that is, until he arrives in the mission.

In due time he reaches the mission home with his family. He rings the bell, and is welcomed by the office staff and the housekeeper, if he is lucky enough to have one. They all make the new president and his family welcome. If any children are tagging along, they are looked upon with some suspicion by the office staff. Certainly the children are equally suspicious of them.

The first meal is an eye opener. If he had an idea he could ever have his family to himself, it is dispelled here. The table is set for from ten to fifteen people. Never again will the president be free from strangers at mealtime. The number will vary, but it will always be more than was expected. Somehow his children must adjust to this new condition. They must learn that other things are more important. New table manners must be taught. Often they feel lost in the immensity of it all. The president's wife is, in the meantime, rearranging her idea of things. She used to plan for three, or four, or six, now she must plan for double or treble the number. She must supply the physical wants of from six to twelve extra people all the time.

Sleeping problems are continually pressing. About the time rooms are permanently assigned to the regular dwellers, someone from headquarters comes to visit, and things must be rearranged. Elders are continually going to and coming from their fields of labor. Often they stay all night, or two, or three nights. New missionaries arrive and have to be cared for while they are being assigned.

Then in the middle of all of these problems, the president and his wife have to be away visiting the branches and the missionaries in their fields of labor. Fully sixty percent of their time is spent away from the home.

Problems multiply. There are from three to six thousand Saints to care for, to talk to, to encourage. As the presidential party arrives in any one town, it would appear that all of the accumulation of problems since the last visit are suddenly thrown at them. In addition, they find time to visit with the missionaries, your boys and girls. They listen to their difficulties and give them new courage from the abundant supply of their own.

They go from town to town, visiting with people, holding meetings, climbing to the top floor of dingy office buildings to meet, in dark, unpleasant halls, the Saints who loyally gather to hear the word of the Lord, and to receive encouragement and good counsel at their hands.

The questions they solve are knotty. One very prevalent one is that of the young woman member who wants to know how she can get married. She can't come to Utah; she can't find any Latter-day Saint boys—there aren't any where she lives. Shall she marry a non-member? The president is puzzled as to what to advise in many cases. I would be puzzled, too, if I had to answer the questions.

If the missionaries become ill, and they sometimes do, the president has to see that they are taken care of. If they need a doctor and hospital care, he has to get it done. He knows better than anyone else that he has the choice children of the Church in his care, and that he must leave no stone unturned to assure their safety and protection from harm. No one can do it for him—his alone is the responsibility. He must make all the decisions for all the missionaries and all the Saints without help from a high council, or counselors. His only aid is his wife, and it is she alone to whom he must turn.

Together they face disease and death. They go into places where, lacking strong resistance and the protection of our Father in heaven, they could easily contract fatal maladies—yet they do all this unflinchingly, without malice, with love in their hearts for the people to whom they administer the gospel.

All the time they are visiting in the mission, they are directing the affairs of the mission home by mail. The wife supervises the food budget and the general home control by mail, while the president in the same manner is instructing those who cannot wait for his personal visit. All the time the welfare program, the Relief Society program, and the auxiliaries must be kept moving and active.

They return to the mission home after an extended tour, and the moment they arrive, the president disappears into his office and burns the midnight oil catching up on affairs which have awaited his return, and strives desperately to get enough done so that he can leave in two or three days for another visit.

Anyone who thinks that a mission is a vacation at the expense of the Church for three years would certainly have his eyes opened if he followed the president around for two or three weeks. You mission presidents have my profound admiration.

WORDS OF ENCOURAGEMENT

I should like to add one thing as I stand here looking at this great audience. There are assembled in this room one percent, approximately, of the Church. I am sorry you mission presidents are facing this way. If you could turn your chairs around and see the faces of those who support you, and who pray that you may have strength to do what you are called upon to do, you would go back to your missions happy and pleased to think that you have the backing of the finest group of men and women there is on the earth. They want you to send their boys and girls home safely to them; they want you to teach them the gospel that they may come home with a testimony; but they want you to know, too, if I sense the feeling of this group, that you have their unbounded backing to the limit, and will always have it. And they envy you, it is true, because they would like to be in the same boat, and they would like to row it with you. They do go with you vicariously.

May God bless these mission presidents who carry the great load of preaching the gospel to the nations of the earth. The rest of us can go around and inspect and talk to them, and give them advice and counsel, but after we have gone home, they have to do the job. And they do it most nobly. They love the people of their missions; they give them courage; they build up their spirit; and they bring them to the Zion of the Lord our God in happiness and in joy. They bear their testimonies to the nations of the earth and teach the boys and girls of our community the kind of courage they must have to do the same thing. May the Lord sustain them in their high and holy calling, I ask, in the name of Jesus Christ. Amen.

President George Albert Smith:

I am sure we have had a wonderful time this morning. It is lovely to be in the House of the Lord on the Lord's Day. There is no other place where you will have more comfort and satisfaction, under the influence of the Spirit of our Heavenly Father. He is always with us when we meet in His name.

The Tabernacle Choir will now sing the "Hallelujah Chorus," from the "Mount of Olives," by Beethoven.

The closing prayer will be offered by President H. Golden Tempest of the East Jordan Stake, after which this Conference will stand adjourned until 2:00 this afternoon. Proceedings of that session will be broadcast over Station KSL at Salt Lake City and KSUB at Cedar City.

The Tabernacle Choir sang, as the concluding number, "The Hallelujah Chorus," from "The Mount of Olives," by Beethoven.

The closing prayer was offered by Elder H. Golden Tempest, President of the East Jordan Stake, after which Conference adjourned until 2:00 p.m.

THIRD DAY

AFTERNOON MEETING

The sixth and concluding session of the Conference convened at 2 o'clock p.m., Sunday, October 6th.

Once more the Tabernacle was crowded to capacity, the Assembly Hall was filled with people, and a great number of others congregated on the grounds.

President George Albert Smith:

The time has arrived for continuing our Conference. I can see quite a number of people who are too comfortable in their seats. They have too much room, and if you will just follow the rule now and move toward the center of these benches, making room for two or three people on each bench, we can seat another 150 or 200 people this afternoon. Thank you very much! I knew you would be delighted to do it. Now if you are all comfortably seated, we will continue.

This is the sixth and closing session of the 117th Semi-Annual Conference of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints. We are convened in the Tabernacle on Temple Square at Salt Lake City.

There are present on the stand this afternoon all the General Authorities of the Church, except Elder Stephen L. Richards, who is detained at home by his doctor's orders, Elder Ezra Taft Benson, who is in Europe presiding over the European Mission, and the Patriarch to the Church, also absent on account of illness.

The proceedings of this session will be broadcast over KSL at Salt Lake City and KSUB at Cedar City.

We will begin the afternoon services by the Tabernacle Choir singing; "Song of Praise," by Gates. Elder J. Spencer Cornwall is the director, and Elder Frank W. Asper is the organist.

The opening prayer will be offered by President Milton F. Hartvigsen of the Bannock Stake.

The Tabernacle Choir sang: "Song of Praise."

Elder Milton F. Hartvigsen, President of the Bannock Stake, offered the invocation.

Selection by the Tabernacle Choir, "Come Thou Fount of Every Blessing," by Wyeth.

ELDER MARVIN O. ASHTON

First Counselor in the Presiding Bishopric

I can truthfully say that I have been to no conference that I have appreciated, and been more inspired with, than this conference. All I regret is that I didn't know ahead of time I would be left this late to speak so I could appreciate it that much more. If I had my way,

I should before you people, thank the Lord for my blessings. I was never more grateful in my life. I would do that, then I would compliment you people for the fine things you are doing, and sit down. I am sure when you compliment people you are on the safe side of things. Someone has said, "Once upon a time there was a man who wouldn't listen to compliments. He was deaf."

I am mindful of the way in which we who visit you people of the different stakes are treated. I'm not only thinking of the presidents of stakes and counselors; I'm thinking of your wives and the courtesies you have extended. All I regret is that we don't have enough time or opportunities to reciprocate the way we'd like to. We appreciate your kindness very much. We appreciate the fine things you are doing.

THE YOUTH PROBLEM

When I hear President McKay make the observations about delinquency that he does, and did this morning, the truth hurts. But we might as well face it. I can't help but think of the comments of Mark Petersen about these dark amusement halls. We are reminded of some of the amusement halls that should be there that are not there because of the inactivity of some people.

We live on a corner. On one street, the main street, there is lawn between the trees and the parking. This street gives us no trouble at all. On the other side, the street is not so well kept. Until a few years ago I put in most of my time cleaning up around the yard and knocking over weeds. I found it was much better to plant grass than eternally to scrap weeds. There is some philosophy in that. If we'd stop trying to kill so many weeds and plant more grass, we'd have less trouble with our youngsters. Someone has said that education is a lot like eating. You can't tell what part of what you eat goes to muscle and brawn, but you can tell what causes your stomach trouble. It's down in the sweets; it's down in your amusements. There's where your trouble is. We're not going to take care of this youth problem until we go with the young folks more than we do.

There are some people—I am not guessing, I know what I am talking about—that have a thousand cattle on a thousand hills, and if you'd ask them for a thousand dollars, they'd get nervous prostration. And those same people would hammer the stand and remind us where those young people are going. As far as they are concerned, the young people would go to that place, and you know what place I am talking about. I wouldn't want to break these fine fibres of this radio, but you know what I am trying to say. As far as those men are concerned, the young people would go there, and they would not have a return ticket, either. If we would spend more time in going with young people, we would have less trouble.

If you think I am not mindful of what is being done as far as going with young people is concerned, you are mistaken. I have seen trains roll into the Bamberger Station, loaded with four hundred people, mostly young people, on excursions, and with proper chaperons and guidance. Those little excursions happened last year, one right after another. Leaders were going with the young people, showing them a good time. Those are the things we've got to do.

One president of a stake told me a day or two ago that his stake is arranging for a thousand young people to come here in 1947. We'll have less trouble if we just go with youth more. Thank the Lord for these fine bishops and presidents of stakes who have taken that philosophy and are going with their young people. It's easy enough to say they're going to that certain place. It's a different thing entirely to try to keep them away, by going with them to proper places. I think we ought to take this thing just as seriously as we possibly can.

FAITHFULNESS TO BE ENCOURAGED

This singing we have had in this conference is a sample of what we ought to be thankful for. The Singing Mothers on the first day of this conference and those fine people who came from Richfield, most of them young, are an inspiration. A lot of young people are going to this place we are talking about, but there are thousands of them that we're taking care of through the fine cooperation of the people of this Church. This work that N. Lorenzo Mitchell has been doing with the boys of his chorus is a sample of what can be accomplished.

May I just shift gears a little bit and mention another side of things. Do we think of those lowly, patient, sacrificing fellows or wives or families that in every ward are doing their duty and living their religion? Sometime ago at a stake conference, I noticed a little lady about eighty years of age, plodding up the steps, the best she could. My hand automatically went to her arm to give her a little lift. In talking with the stake president, later, he said, "Do you know who you walked up the steps with?" I said, "No, sir." He said, "The mother of sixteen children, eight of her own and eight of the good lady who died, whose place she took. She, with her husband, operated eighty acres of land. When everybody else had automobiles, they had a horse and buggy; but they pulled all those boys into the mission field and pulled all those children into college—all from that eighty acres."

Now, let's not forget those people. We who have the responsibility such as I have right at this minute are not worth very much, except for the devotion and stability of people like this good lady that I am talking about.

Hyrum Jensen, on Highland Drive and Twenty-seventh South Street, in Salt Lake City, has put a double roof over the little adobe house down there. It is the home of Mary Fielding Smith. That little lady, after the death of her patriarch husband, took her little family under her arms and under her wings and on her own initiative went through life taking care of those children, facing the obstacles that she had. That double roof over her little adobe house is a shrine, and it should be. Let us not forget that kind of people. They are the sinew and the muscle of this Church, and without them we wouldn't be worth ten cents. Let's not forget it.

I ask you, Bishop; you, Stake President; and you, Officer of the ward, wherever you are, are you mindful of these people? Are you playing to others with large machines or wealth, or do you keep in mind eternally that the most important thing you can do, is foreverlastingly to pay courtesies and tribute to people who have given their lives for the Church? If you don't mind, I am going to relate a story that probably I have told before some of you, and if you'll act as if you've never heard it before, I'll certainly appreciate it.

When you think of this upside down world and what the world needs, it doesn't take much intelligence to know what the conditions are. But the important thing now is the need in this world of character, of men and women making decisions, forgetting what is going to happen if you do this or what is going to happen if you take the other course. What's right? How many men will figure out what's right, then pull the trigger, regardless of what the results are? We do too much catering; we always ask ourselves, "What will happen?" How much steel have we got in our spines? Do we make decisions no matter what happens?

A STORY FROM LINCOLN'S LIFE

Here's the story:

He is a man whose birthday we celebrate. He's six feet four, in his stocking feet. He is running for Congress. One afternoon a little lady comes in to see him, and he isn't in. She leaves a tiny note on his desk. She has to go on her way because of the stress of conditions. She goes, praying that he'll get the note. He does. When his campaign director, Sherman, comes in, he says, "Bill, I don't make that talk tonight."

(By the way, his adversary had been going up and down the country. He had thrown all the "mud" he possibly could at him, and I suppose if there is anything in the world that raises the hair of a man with any ordinary corpuscles in his veins, it is to answer an antagonist, especially if the antagonist is careless about what he says.)

He says, "I won't make that talk."

To make the story short, the next morning we find that great big lanky fellow climbing over something, wading through streams. When the sun comes halfway up, he's sitting on a log, munching his meal out of his one pocket and maybe an apple out of the other, begging or buying a little milk to go with it. Then he goes on his journey. About ten o'clock in the morning he finds himself entering a little courthouse, jammed to capacity. It is summer. The winter ashes are still in the court stove. What's happened? A boy of sixteen is up for murder. The country people are assembled. Notwithstanding the boy's age, the law takes its course. He is being tried. This big lanky fellow I am talking about sits in the back unconcerned-like; yet they know that probably he is the lad's attorney. They pick the jury, and go on with the trial. He stays mum. (We'll have to shorten this story up a little.) Finally it is important that the attorney for the boy talk. He faces the jury, calls each man by his name. He says, "Years ago, boys, I came here as a lad, helpless, trying to split some rails, calling at this door and the other door, but only one family beckoned me in and helped me out. God bless them. I told God if he'd ever give me a chance to pay that bill, I'd pay it. Sometimes when God calls us, he expects a sacrifice with it. Gentlemen, I have made that sacrifice."

The jury goes out; comes in: "Not guilty." One of those great big arms cupped the mother; the other arm cupped that boy as he swooned.

Incidentally, the boy had got into a tangle with a farmer, his boss. The farmer got out of patience. The boy, not understanding, struck him with a pitchfork. That's the way the farmer met his death.

"Not guilty."

That fellow didn't go to Congress. He was defeated, but he dared to say, "This is the way. I'm pulling the trigger, regardless of what happens."

Later when they had that convention in Chicago and brought those hickory rails in, they raised the roof higher than the architect intended it to be. Abraham Lincoln was nominated President of the United States. He dared to do what was right. He dared take notice of those who are not noticed. He dared put emphasis on the humble walker through life. Do you dare? Do I dare?

A DOCTOR'S DEVOTION

There was a little story in one of the magazines, some weeks ago. It is a story of one of those faithful doctors you read about. No matter whether the stork was making his journey, and he was trying to get there first, or a boy was dying, the doctor was always on the job, sitting through and holding that dear person's hand through the night. He made every sacrifice in the world. His little office was on the second floor on the main street, and all the designation that was given was, "Dr. Jones, upstairs."

They tell us in that story, that on the day of his wedding, he got a call from a poverty-stricken Italian family. Their boy had been in an accident. His life was hanging on a string. The doctor had to make the decision quick and fast, whether to marry the girl right this minute or five hours later. He chose to go to the bed of that little sufferer. Of course, the intended wife got her "spunk" up, whirled on her heels, and said: "If he thinks more of the Italian lad than he does of me, well, let him go." (I think that fellow just saved a lot of unnecessary miseries in going through life.)

Well, to shorten the story, he goes through life unmarried—a life filled with devotion, and then he died. The town thought so much of him, that people went about suggesting, "We will build a monument to his name."

Weeks went on. Months went on. His grave remained unmarked. Finally the father of the boy that he helped, went one day to the grave, unbeknown to anyone. He labeled the grave right: "Here lies the body of Dr. John Jones. Office upstairs!"

THE WAY TO THE CELESTIAL KINGDOM

Now we don't know too much about the celestial kingdom. I don't. I don't know how much you know about it, but it's my judgment that we who get up there, if we're not too presumptuous, will get up there because of sacrifice, service, and making the right decisions, no matter what happens.

May the Lord help us to make the decisions, to do what is right, to have steel up our backs, I pray in the name of the Lord, Jesus Christ. Amen.

PRESIDENT GEORGE F. RICHARDS

Of the Council of the Twelve Apostles

I have carried in my pocket the manuscript of a talk which I thought I might give should I have the opportunity of speaking in conference, but I have not received the inspiration to use it. I have tried to assemble some of my thoughts so as to express them in a way that will be of interest to you, my numerous friends, brethren and sisters, and to say a few words upon the greatest thing in the world. I read a book a few years ago entitled The Greatest Thing in the World, and that thing was love.

THE GREAT COMMANDMENT

The Savior has had something to say upon this subject, and the thought just occurred to me that if he were here in the presence of this large congregation so that we could look upon him and hear what he would say, perhaps his words would be more impressive than they have been to us by reading them in the scriptures.

A learned man, a lawyer, approached him on one occasion and asked him:

Master, which is the great commandment in the law?

Jesus said unto him, Thou shalt love the Lord thy God with all thy heart, and with all thy soul, and with all thy mind. This is the first and great commandment. And the second is like unto it, Thou shalt love thy neighbor as thyself. (Matt. 22:36-39.)

On another occasion he said:

... Love your enemies, bless them that curse you, do good to them that hate you, and pray for them which despitefully use you, and persecute you. (Matt. 5:44.)

We are also told in the scriptures that we should walk in the light as he, Jesus, was in the light, or, in other words, to follow his example.

When he prayed in the Garden of Gethsemane, his perspiration was like blood dropping upon the ground. We are told, by an angel to King Benjamin, a great Book of Mormon prophet, that blood would ooze from the pores of his body, so great should be his anguish, because of the wickedness and the abominations of his people, occasioned, of course, by the love that he had for the people.

We mourn and have anguish of soul if a daughter goes wrong, or a son, because we love them so.

GOD SO LOVED THE WORLD

Then we read that,

For God so loved the world, that he gave his only begotten Son, that whosoever believeth in him should not perish, but have everlasting life. (John 3:16.)

We also know that the Savior gave himself voluntarily for all; that his atonement meant, in life and in death, a voluntary gift for us, a manifestation of love that has no comparison. When he was upon the cross in the agonies of death, he turned his thoughts toward his Father in heaven and prayed earnestly:

... Father, forgive them; for they know not what they do. (Luke 23:34.)

There is the example of the Prophet Stephen, who, when being stoned to death, knelt upon the ground and prayed God not to lay that sin to the charge of his persecutors.

LOVE WOULD SOLVE PRESENT DAY PROBLEMS

If such love obtained in the world today as the Lord intended that it should, love of God and love of fellow men, there would be no wars, contentions, and strife among the children of men. And that there is such, is due to an indifference by men to heed the admonitions and teachings of our Lord and Savior Jesus Christ.

I profess love for you, my brethren, sisters, and friends, my hearers. I hope to be able to comply with the law to the extent that I can love all who hear my voice, whether they be in the Church or out of the Church, whether they be good or bad, whatever their condition of life. They are the children of our Eternal Father; they are our brothers and sisters.

No doubt we with them rejoiced and were happy together,

When the morning stars sang together, and all the sons of God shouted for joy. (Job 38:7) that the plan of salvation had been made and that the Savior had been chosen. We, no doubt, were happy together, all of the children of God. The Prophet Joseph tells us that we were all present in the spirit, intelligent beings able to sit in council with the Gods. We must have been living in love and helpfulness under those conditions, and the fact of our having come to earth should not change our thoughts and our feelings. We ought to love one another just the same here as when we lived in love and happiness in our heavenly home.

MEANING OF LOVE REVEALED THROUGH DREAM

The Lord has revealed to me, by dreams, something more than I ever understood or felt before about the love for God and the love for fellow men. I believe in dreams, brethren and sisters. The Lord has given me dreams, which to me, are just as real and as much from God as was the dream of King Nebuchadnezzar which was the means of saving a nation from starvation, or the dream of Lehi who through a dream led his colony out of the old country, across the mighty deep to this promised land, or any other dreams that we read of in scripture.

It is not out of place for us to have important dreams, for we read in the scriptures:

And it shall come to pass in the last days, saith God, I will pour out of my Spirit upon all flesh: and your sons and your daughters shall prophesy, and your young men shall see visions, and your old men shall dream dreams. (Acts 2:17.)

More than forty years ago I had a dream, which I am sure was from the Lord. In this dream I was in the presence of my Savior as he stood in mid-air. He spoke no word to me, but my love for him was such that I have not words to explain. I know that no mortal man can love the Lord as I experienced that love for the Savior unless God reveals it unto him. I would have remained in his presence, but there was a power drawing me away from him, and as a result of that dream I had this feeling, that no matter what might be required at my hands, what the gospel might entail unto me, I would do what I should be asked to do, even to the laying down of my life.

And so when we read in the scriptures what the Savior said to his disciples:

In my Father's house are many mansions: . . . I go to prepare a place for you . . . that where I am, there ye may be also, (John 14:2, 3.)

I think that is where I want to be. If only I can be with my Savior and have that same sense of love that I had in that dream, it will be the goal of my existence, the desire of my life.

OBLIGATION TO LOVE OUR ENEMIES

Then a few years ago, at the closing of a conference of the St. Johns Stake, we had had a wonderful conference I thought, and I was very happy on retiring. I was sleeping in the home of the president of the stake, Brother Levi Udall, and that night I had a remarkable dream. I have seldom mentioned this to other people, but I do not know why I should not. It seems to me appropriate in talking along this line. I dreamed that I and a group of my own associates found ourselves in a courtyard where, around the outer edge of it, were German soldiers—and Führer Adolph Hitler was there with his group, and they seemed to be sharpening their swords and cleaning their guns, and making preparations for a slaughter of some kind, or an execution. We knew not what, but, evidently we were the objects. But presently a circle was formed and this Führer and his men were all within the circle, and my group and I were circled on the outside, and he was sitting on the inside of the circle with his back to the outside, and when we walked around and I got directly opposite to him, I stepped inside the circle and walked across to where he was sitting, and spoke to him in a manner something like this:

"I am your brother. You are my brother. In our heavenly home we lived together in love and peace. Why can we not so live here on the earth?"

And it seemed to me that I felt in myself, welling up in my soul, a love for that man, and I could feel that he was having the same experience, and presently he arose, and we embraced each other and kissed each other, a kiss of affection.

Then the scene changed so that our group was within the circle, and he and his group were on the outside, and when he came around to where I was standing, he stepped inside the circle and embraced me again, with a kiss of affection.

I think the Lord gave me that dream. Why should I dream of this man, one of the greatest enemies of mankind, and one of the wickedest, but that the Lord should teach me that I must love my enemies, and I must love the wicked as well as the good?

Now, who is there in this wide world that I could not love under those conditions, if I could only continue to feel as I felt then? I have tried to maintain this feeling and, thank the Lord, I have no enmity toward any person in this world; I can forgive all men, so far as I am concerned, and I am happy in doing so and in the love which I have for my fellow men.

I love the Saints of God, as I love the Lord and his work. I love you faithful men and women who are laboring for the Lord, and for your fellow men.

FAITHFULNESS COMMENDED

I would like to endorse what Brother S. Dilworth Young said in complimenting the mission presidents of this Church. I feel as he feels in that regard. The picture was not overdrawn, and I think we could draw a similar picture of the presidents of the stakes in this Church, and of the bishops of wards, and of many other faithful men and women.

I remember on one occasion going by train to Alberta, Canada. As we approached Raymond, the wind was blowing, and there had been a light snowfall which was drifting, and I saw a woman and two or three children out in the beet fields working among the beets, and I have never forgotten the feeling I had. Those people working, almost their finger ends off, to make a living, and because God has said that one tenth of their interest should be given annually to him for the building up his kingdom when they get their meager returns, as faithful Saints, they will give to the Lord one tenth. And that is going on all through this Church.

As we visit the stakes and learn that these stake officers and ward officers, almost universally, are full tithepayers and keep the Word of Wisdom, hundreds of thousands of them, manifesting their love for God, their faithfulness in keeping his commandments, their willingness to help carry on this great latter-day work, how can we do otherwise than love them?

God bless you, brethren and sisters, for your faithfulness, and reward you abundantly therefor in time and throughout eternity, I pray, in the name of Jesus Christ. Amen.

ELDER HAROLD B. LEE

Of the Council of the Twelve Apostles

I sincerely pray that the Spirit of the Lord might guide my few remarks and that they might be in full harmony with all that has been said on this occasion.

We have a scripture recording the words of the Master:

... I am come that they might have life, and that they might have it more abundantly. (John 10:10.)

MODERN CONCEPTS OF ABUNDANT LIVING

That scripture has been the text for certain economic philosophies that are with us today, and from that text has been coined a term, "The abundant life," which has been used frequently to refer to a condition of plenty or sufficiency or a profuseness of the material things of life. But if we are to strip those philosophies of all their high-sounding phrases and explanations, we might describe them in this language: "Giving more and more to an individual in return for less and less from him."

As I think back over my life, I remember that these philosophies did not begin with the last few years. When I think of the first political campaigns that I, as a young boy, heard about, and fortunately we did not hear as much about them in those days as we hear about them today, I remember that some of the slogans of those days sounded very much like the kinds of philosophy we have today. I remember in one campaign there was one something like this: "We stand for a full dinner pail," and on another occasion: "We stand for a chicken in every pot," and still later, "Two cars in every garage." I remember picking up a magazine and seeing a picture of a family in a beautiful convertible, off to the movies, and underneath it said: "This is the American way of life." And more recently, we have a philosophy, or slogan: "Full employment for everybody in America and a pint of milk for everybody in the world."

Now, I call these sayings to your attention, and you, who are older than I, can add other slogans along the same line, not to ridicule, but to call your attention to the fact that in this land, and perhaps other lands, we have been choosing as ideals these material benefits, and we have called them the way to an abundant life.

In commenting about these things that seemingly have existed here in America, the president of one of our great American universities said this:

But the ideal of comfort which is the best we have been able to think of for ourselves will never do as an aim for a world order. Men can never be comfortable enough; we can never have enough material goods, if material goods are what we want. Any world order with this ideal will be torn to pieces by the divisions to which it leads.

As long as it is assumed, then, that it is the duty of all of us to get all we can and make the ideal of comfort our goal in life, then we may expect a similar fate to that nation, or community, or that family which builds on such an ideal. They will certainly be torn to pieces by the divisions to which such an ideal will lead.

I think I would be safe in saying, and I believe you would agree with me, that perhaps never before in the history of the world has so much been said about the abundant life and so little effort expended in obtaining the essentials that make for an abundant life.

THE MASTER'S STATEMENT

I should like to read you the parable that preceded the Master's statement of that text to which I referred. These were his words:

Verily, verily, I say unto you, He that entereth not by the door into the sheepfold, but climbeth up some other way, the same is a thief and a robber. . . . Then said Jesus unto them again, Verily, verily I say unto you, I am the door of the sheep. . . . I am the door: by me if any man enter in, he shall be saved, and shall go in and out, and find pasture. (John 10:1, 7, 9.)

And then he closed his lesson with this statement:

. . . I am come that they might have life, and that they might have it more abundantly. (John 10:10.)

To his disciples on another occasion he said:

. . . I am the way, the truth, and the life: no man cometh unto the Father, but by me. (John 14:6.)

It was the same message that he gave to Nicodemus who asked what he must do to be saved and in reply the Master answered:

... Except a man be born of water and of the Spirit, he cannot enter into the kingdom of God. (John 3:5.)

Those who seek for the abundant life in any other way, then, but by the way the Master has laid out in the gospel plan, or, "as a thief and a robber," to use the Master's words. But the tragedy is that he who does so rob, is also the victim of his own robbery, and his own house is left to him desolate in the day of his great spiritual need. Then, certainly, such a one is poor indeed, and he is as the man to whom the Master referred in his Sermon on the Mount as, one who builds his house upon the sand and when the storms come, the winds blow and the rains descend, his house will fall, because it is founded upon the sand. (See Matt. 7:26-27.)

SCRIPTURES CHART WAY TO ABUNDANT LIFE

But the scriptures have given us unmistakably a charted way for the living of the abundant life and the preparation therefor. It was the Apostle Paul who said to the Hebrews:

Therefore leaving the principles of the doctrine of Christ, let us go on unto perfection. (Hebrews 6:1.)

In explaining what salvation means, the Prophet Joseph declared that:

Salvation is nothing more nor less than to triumph over all our enemies and put them under our feet. And when we have power to put all enemies under our feet in this world, and a knowledge to triumph over all evil spirits in the world to come, then we are saved. (Teachings of the Prophet Joseph Smith, p. 297.)

But apparently, as I read the scriptures, the Lord did not intend to convey that a fulness of the abundant life was attainable even in this life, for we find him saying in a revelation to the Prophet Joseph Smith:

Wherefore, fear not even unto death; for in this world your joy is not full, but in me your joy is full. (D. & C. 101:36.)

The Apostle Peter has reduced that teaching to a formula, a pattern, or a way of life. These were his words:

And beside this, giving all diligence, add to your faith virtue; and to virtue knowledge; And to knowledge temperance; and to temperance patience; and to patience godliness; And to godliness brotherly kindness; and to brotherly kindness charity. For if these things be in you, and abound, they make you that ye shall neither be barren nor unfruitful in the knowledge of our Lord Jesus Christ. But he that lacketh these things is blind, and cannot see afar off, and hath forgotten that he was purged from his old sins. Wherefore the rather, brethren, give diligence to make your calling and election sure: for if ye do these things, ye shall never fall: For so an entrance shall be ministered unto you abundantly into the everlasting kingdom of our Lord and Savior Jesus Christ. (II Peter 1:5-11.)

When I understand the full import of the Apostle Peter's words, describing that way of life by which we might obtain that abundance, or in other words that "abundant entrance" into the kingdom of our Lord and Savior, Jesus Christ, I am made aware that we cannot obtain it by spiritual gratuities any more than we can obtain a temporal abundant life by receiving temporal gratuities, for the Lord declared:

Not every one that saith unto me, Lord, Lord, shall enter into the kingdom of heaven; but he that doeth the will of my Father which is in heaven. (Matt. 7:21.)

Only can an individual receive that joy and that abundant life whose life is patterned to the standards as laid down in the gospel of Jesus Christ. We have a splendid illustration that I should like to call your attention as to how this might be obtained.

LIFE OF SAUL OF TARSUS

Saul of Tarsus was one who had been valiant and conscientiously engaged in trying to stamp out Christianity which he believed to be a sect defiling the word of God. He even held the coats of the men who stoned Stephen, and having obtained letters of authority was on his way to Damascus there to prosecute his work, and it was about noonday:

And as he journeyed, he came near Damascus: and suddenly there shined round about him a light from heaven: And he fell to the earth, and heard a voice saying unto him, Saul, Saul, why persecutest thou me? And he said, Who art thou, Lord? And the Lord said, I am Jesus whom thou persecutest: it is hard for thee to kick against the pricks. And he trembling and astonished said, Lord, what wilt thou have me to do? And the Lord said unto him, Arise, and go into the city, and it shall be told thee what thou must do. (Acts 9:3-6.)

He went and found Ananias, a humble man of God. Ananias taught him the way to an abundant life. He baptized Paul and then sent him to the apostles where he received his commission that sent him out to be one of the greatest missionaries among the Gentiles, and we know him from that time forth as the Apostle Paul.

The rewards that come from a life of sacrifice and service are also illustrated in an incident in his life. You recall, he was now a prisoner on his way to Rome. As they put out from an island in the Mediterranean Sea, he had the impression that all would not be well, and they were hardly out of sight of land until a furious storm broke, and for fourteen days that frail ship was tossed about, and when, as the scriptures say,

... neither sun nor stars in many days appeared, and no small tempest lay on us, all hope that we should be saved was then taken away. (Acts 27:20.)

Then it was that the Apostle Paul went down into a place by himself and prayed, and here are the words that are recorded in the scriptures which describe his experience:

... after long abstinence Paul stood forth in the midst of them, and said, . . . And now I exhort you to be of good cheer: for there shall be no loss of any man's life among you, but of the ship. For there stood by me this night the angel of God, whose I am, and whom I serve, Saying, Fear not, Paul; thou must be brought before Caesar: and, lo, God hath given thee all them that sail with thee. (Acts 27:21-24.)

Then the Apostle Paul quieted his shipmates with this testimony:

Wherefore, sirs, be of good cheer: for I believe God, that it shall be even as it was told me. (Acts 27:25.)

There we might find illustrated the essential steps toward the abundant life, of which the Master spoke. The first step is to live the kind of life that permits up to receive the light of heaven, and a testimony that Jesus is a living reality, and that he can speak to us. One possessed of such testimony, then, from the depths of his heart, will say, as did the Apostle Paul: "Lord, what wilt thou have me to do?"

DOING THE WILL OF GOD

I wonder if you will think about that, you who preside in the missions and the stakes of the Church, in the various organizations, and priesthood quorums, those of us who sit in places in the presiding councils of the Church, whenever we come to the selecting of an officer or the determining of policy for the welfare of Zion, how well it would be if always we would say, we who have that testimony of Jesus, "Heavenly Father, what wilt thou have me do?" And if we will remember that, as fathers and mothers in dealing with a wayward child, if we will remember that when we sit in judgment upon the sinner, in all our business affairs, and the youth in his love affairs! May we who have the testimony remember that lesson of the Apostle Paul and from our hearts cry out to our Father: "Lord, what wilt thou have me do?"

And if we pray in real sincerity and faith, there will come back to us from out of the scriptures the answer to that prayerful inquiry. The answer has come oft repeated, time and time again, that all that we do should be done "with an eye single to the glory of God." What is the glory of God? The Lord told Moses that:

... this is my work and my glory—to bring to pass the immortality and eternal life of man. (Pearl of Great Price, Moses 1:39.)

With that goal always before us, seeing every act of our lives, every decision we make as patterned toward the development of a life that shall permit us to enter into the presence of the Lord our Heavenly Father, to gain which is to obtain eternal life, how much more wisdom there would be in the many things of life. Cannot you see, mothers, if yours is the responsibility and you sense it, as the Lord has placed it upon you, to teach your little children that there is a Heavenly Father and that life has a purpose, and that purpose is to prepare to go back to his presence in a day not far distant, then when that child, thus possessed of faith from such motherly teachings, comes to a decision in the choice of educational subjects in school, shall it be a course in home economics, or a career in theatrical fields, I am wondering if this child may not well choose rightly in such a question?

If there should come a problem as to what kind of business a man should be engaged in, whether he should invest in this matter or that, whether he should marry this girl or marry that girl, where he should marry, and how he should marry, when it comes to the prosecuting of the work to which we are assigned, how much more certainly would those decisions be made, if always we recalled that all we do, and the decisions we make, should be made with that eternal goal in mind, with an eye single to the ultimate glory of man in the celestial world.

DIVINE GUIDANCE AVAILABLE

If all our selfish motives, then and all our personal desires, and expediency, would be subordinated to a desire to know the will of the Lord, one could have the companionship of heavenly vision. If your problems be too great for human intelligence or too much for human strength, you too, if you are faithful and appeal rightly unto the source of divine power, might have standing by you in your hour of peril or great need an angel of God, whose you are and whom you serve. One who lives thus worthy of a testimony that God lives and that Jesus is the Christ, and who is willing to reach out to him in constant inquiry to know if his course is approved is the one who is living life to its full abundance here, and is preparing for the celestial world, which is to live eternally with his Heavenly Father.

I bear you my humble testimony, as one of the humblest among you: I know there are powers that can draw close to one who fills his heart with the kind of love of which President Richards has spoken so beautifully this afternoon. I came to a night, some years ago, when on my bed, I realized that before I could be worthy of the high place to which I had been called, I must love and forgive every soul that walked the earth, and in that time I came to know and I received a peace and a direction, and a comfort, and an inspiration, that told me things to come and gave me impressions that I knew were from a divine source. I know that these things are true and that God lives, that Jesus is the Christ, and that each of us might live the abundant life by drawing thus close to him, and I bear you that testimony, in the name of the Lord Jesus Christ. Amen.

The Choir and congregation joined in singing the hymn, "O Say, What Is Truth," by Melling.

PRESIDENT GEORGE ALBERT SMITH

This has been a wonderful conference. The Lord has said that if two or three shall meet together in his name, he will be there to bless them, and this house has been filled to overflowing seven times during the last week by the sons and daughters of the Living God.

ALL ARE CHILDREN OF GOD

I esteem it a great privilege to be here with you, my brethren and sisters, and when I say "brethren and sisters," I am reminded of the fact that every man is a son of God, every woman, a daughter of our Heavenly Father. Wherever they may be, all that have been born upon the earth are the children of the Lord, and our Master taught that to love our neighbors as ourselves is the second great commandment. If we would follow the advice of Brother George F. Richards to love our neighbors, it would go a long way towards bringing happiness into the world.

I trust that during the few moments I occupy I may be blessed of the Lord to say the things that he would have me say. I trust that we who are here may be inspired of our Heavenly Father to rejoice in the blessings that are ours, and that we may be here today as brothers and sisters in the sense in which he desires that we should be.

This is only a small congregation compared to the multitude of our Father's children scattered over the earth, but it is a very choice congregation, because so many of those who are here have devoted most of their lives to going about doing good. That, in a measure, is the sum of the meaning of the gospel of Jesus Christ, to go about doing good. While there are in this congregation men and women who are not members of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints, I hope that you will feel that you are welcome in this great congregation, and then realize that wherever you may go and find members of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints who are worthy of the name, you will be welcome, and they will be glad to do you good.

Last night over ten thousand men assembled in this house and the adjoining building, all listening to the same voice at the same time. It was probably the largest group of men that have ever been assembled together in a priesthood meeting since the world began. The fact that so many of you brethren have the priesthood, of course, is one principle that many people do not understand.

THE PROBLEM OF SAFETY

In this fast-moving age, the problem of safety is of great importance. We pick up the papers day by day to find that this man has been run over by an automobile, or that automobile has overturned and been wrecked, and those riding in it have been killed. We hear of collisions between railroad trains and automobiles. Nearly every day the headlines of our papers tell how many people have lost their lives by accident, and I may say to you that in almost every case, if proper precautions had been taken, those lives would not be lost. So, today, safety campaigns are being carried forward in an attempt to preserve the lives of people that are being wastefully destroyed. I hope that the membership of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints will be among those most anxious and most willing to lend their efforts to preserve life. It is very precious. We have only one life, and if we keep the commandments of God and live as we should, it will be an eternal life of happiness. That is the blessing which comes to us from the gospel.

On our highways, some turn over high-powered cars to children, as soon as they can handle the wheel, and they do not always wait until they are entitled to drive by procuring that privilege from the state in which they live. They do not measure the danger and the result is that many accidents occur. Many accidents result because some men, and some women, I am sorry to say, presume to sit down at the wheel of an automobile and drive off into traffic when they themselves ought to be in bed under the care of a physician, and some of them ought to be in jail sobering up.

Now, what can we do? Let us join with the nation. Let this group of men and women here exercise their influence in encouraging our sons and our daughters and our neighbors, while we are setting the example ourselves, to safeguard the lives of every one of these, our Father's children. They are his, and he will not be pleased with us if by our carelessness, or our wickedness, we destroy their lives.

A number of years ago we did not drive so fast. I remember when the governor of this state drove a car at a time the limit was thirty miles an hour. Of course that was flying in those days, it was so much faster than a horse. I was riding with the governor and noticed that he drove very carefully. As we rode along the highway, I said: "You are a pretty safe driver, aren't you?"

He said: "I want to be."

I said, "This is a lovely car you are driving."

"Yes," he said. "The state furnishes me this car, and just as soon as I got it, my boys and girls wanted to drive it. I couldn't very well keep them from doing it, and so we had this agreement, that whenever we were in the car it would be law-abiding. So," he said, "this is one car in the state that observes the law."

I have thought of that a good many times. If we teach our children to be law-abiding and reasonable, perhaps we will be the means of preserving lives that are very precious to our Heavenly Father. In this day when we are talking about safety everywhere, let us do something about it. Let each of us do our part.

There are so many things that crowd my mind, I do not know what to talk about. I hope you will not be in the position of the little fellow who sat through a long meeting. When the last speaker got up and said: "I just don't know what to talk about," the little fellow helped him by saying, "Talk about a minute."

DISOBEDIENCE BRINGS DISTRESS

What a blessed thing it is to know that we are living eternal lives. What a wonderful thing it would be if all the people in the world knew that they are living eternal lives. How blessed it would be if all men knew that our Heavenly Father was the Creator of the heavens and the earth, and that he is our Father, the Father of our spirits. What a happy world it would be if men everywhere recognized their fellowmen as brothers and sisters, and then followed that up by loving their neighbors as themselves. Think of the sorrow and the distress that have been in this world for the last few years, due to the great war. Of what benefit has it been? Millions of lives have been sacrificed; millions in treasure have been wasted; and beautiful cities have been wrecked and destroyed. Many people tonight will be sleeping, either on the ground or in wrecked homes because of the great war. There are widows who have been left, and orphans who will have to go through life without father and mother. Why? Because men have refused to keep the commandments of God.

One of the great commandments that was given at Sinai was: "Thou shalt not kill."

I wonder if we realize how easy it is to violate a commandment of God? Think of the Ten Commandments that were given to ancient Israel when they were in the wilderness, spoken by the Lord and written by his finger upon tablets of stone. If the people, during the hundreds of years that have elapsed since that time, had honored those Ten Commandments, this earth would have been heaven, most of the time, and the men and women who have lived upon it would have attained great blessings that we have not known yet.

It was a simple thing for the prophet of God, Moses, to bring those Ten Commandments among the people, but it seems to have been most difficult for the men and women who have lived upon the earth to observe them. I fear that the time is coming, unless we can find some way not only to prevent the destruction of human life by careless accidents, but also unless we can call the people of this world to repent of their sins and turn from the error of their ways, that the great war that has just passed will be an insignificant thing, as far as calamity is concerned, compared to that which is before us. And we can avoid it if we will; if we will each do our part, it can be prevented.

EARLY SCENES IN SALT LAKE CITY

I am standing here today not more than about three hundred yards from the very spot where I first breathed the breath of life. It was just across the street in a little humble home, a little adobe house with four or five rooms, surrounded by a little garden and orchard. That is where I began. Salt Lake City at that time was a village. We did not have any water pipes. All our water was picked up in buckets and barrels at the side of the ditches that ran down our streets, and then it was carried to the house in smaller receptacles. We did not have any electric lights in those days. We had tallow candles, or kerosene oil lamps, but no electric lights. The gas did come a little later while I was a child.

At that early day we did not have a foot of pavement in the city, either on the roads or on the sidewalks. I can remember this great wide road just at the west of us here. There used to be about six inches of dust upon it in the summer time, the finest dust that you could ever put your feet into. That is the way we used to play, barefooted, running up and down the street playing ball. We did not have to dodge automobiles. Nobody had ever dreamed of an automobile at that time, I think; at any rate it was a long time after that before the first one came here, and then it was a curiosity. I am thinking of what has happened since. This house was built at the time I was a child. The temple was begun before that time, and when it was completed I still lived across the street.

During the time that has elapsed since my birth I have traveled in many parts of the world and met many of our Father's other children, men and women of various creeds and nationalities; and what occasion I have this day to be grateful for the kindness they have extended to me! It is not difficult for me to love my fellow men because I have known so much kindness from them, wherever I have been. Of course I have found, occasionally, individuals who had not grown up. They had bitterness and jealousy, and suspicion, and hatred in their hearts for their fellows, but that was not the kind of training that I had.

MOTHER'S TEACHINGS

I was trained at the knee of a Latter-day Saint mother. One of the first things I remember was when she took me by the hand and led me upstairs. In the room there were two beds, the bed in which my parents slept, and a little trundle bed over on the other side. I can remember it as if it were yesterday. When we got upstairs, she sat down by my little trundle bed. She had me kneel in front of her. She folded my hands and took them in hers, and taught me my first prayer. I will never forget it. I do not want to forget it. It is one of the loveliest memories that I have in life, an angelic mother sitting down by my bedside and teaching me to pray.

It was such a simple prayer but I can repeat it today.

Now I lay me down to sleep. I pray the Lord my soul to keep. If I should die before I wake, I pray the Lord my soul to take.

That was my first prayer. That prayer opened for me the windows of heaven. That prayer extended to me the hand of my Father in heaven, for she had explained to me what it all meant as far as a little child could understand. From that day until now, while I have covered approximately a million miles in the world among our Father's other children, every day and every night, wherever I have been, when I have gone to my bed or arisen from it, I have felt I was close to my Heavenly Father. He is not far away.

My mother gave birth to eleven husky children, three of them girls. It was the gospel of Jesus Christ that prompted her to bring us into the world, notwithstanding the anxiety we gave her. She wanted to do what God had commanded our first parents to do, to multiply and replenish the earth. As long as she lived upon the earth, I was taught to love my Heavenly Father. I had an angel mother, for she was an angel, as we understand angels these days to be. And as I stand here today, after the experiences of a long life I realize that she was only one of the daughters of my Heavenly Father, and he loves them all.

Just a few days ago the national Relief Society of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints filled this building with women, many of them wives and mothers and grandmothers. They, just like the men who were here in this building last night, had the training given to them when they were children that we believe in God the Eternal Father, and in his Son Jesus Christ, and in the Holy Ghost. That is the training of the children of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints, and of course of many other churches. But I am thinking of what your privileges have been, of how the Lord called you out from the world, that call which was heard by one of old:

... Come out of her, my people, that ye be not partakers of her sins, and that ye receive not of her plagues. (Rev. 18:4.)

BLESSINGS OF THE GOSPEL

Many of you who are in this house came from foreign lands, from sections of the world where there were not the blessings you enjoy here. You have come to the tops of these everlasting hills, to the headquarters of the Church, and what has been the result? When you started, you found that the Lord had promised this:

... seek ye first the kingdom of God, and his righteousness; and all these things shall be added unto you. (Matt. 6:33.)

That is what brought your parents and mine, your grandparents and mine, from other lands, and from other parts of this country. They came because they felt that they held their Father's hand. Many of them had a hard time when they came. There was not very much food, not much clothing, and housing accommodations were poor, but they held their Heavenly Father's hand. Morning and evening they bowed in thanksgiving and prayer to him who is the giver of all. They taught us who were born later to adjust ourselves so that we could be happy by being filled with the love of God and the love of our fellows in the world.

THE TABERNACLE CHOIR

I am thinking of how the Lord's promise has been fulfilled. Here you are today, listening to this great choir. This choir has been singing not only to the United States, but during the war the broadcast has also been carried to our boys and women in the armed services in different parts of the world. Year after year, the faithful men and women in this choir have given their time, without compensation, because they wanted to sing the sacred things of our Heavenly Father to his children.

EVAN STEPHENS

We used to have here a number of years ago a young man who came from Wales. He did not have the opportunity of a college education, but he was a Welshman, full of Welsh music. When he came here, he became the leader of this great choir. He it was who had joy, along with those who preceded him and those who followed, in building a choir not just to sing but to sing praises to our Heavenly Father.

I want to tell you a little incident about Evan Stephens. Some very prominent people were coming here. In that day we did not have so many visitors of prominence. We were too far out in the wilderness. One of our good bishops came to Evan Stephens and said: "Brother Stephens, I have some company coming next Sunday to the religious meeting"—(we used to have a meeting here at two o'clock every Sunday)—"and I hope you are going to have some good music."

Brother Stephens said: "All right, Bishop, we will have good music."

The bishop did not think that was enough assurance so he pressed it a little. He said: "These people are not ordinary people. They are men of affairs and wealth. Their families are wealthy, and I would like them to see just what a fine choir we have. Now, won't you give us something just a little extra?"

Brother Stephens said: "Bishop, we have already had our practice. The music has all been prepared. I don't see how we can make a change. I think it will be good enough for your friends."

Then the bishop pressed him a little harder, and then Brother Stephens' Welsh got up, and he said: "Now look here, Bishop, we have prepared the music for next Sunday to sing to the Lord, and I suppose if it is good enough for the Lord, it is good enough for your company."

That is the spirit that has always been here. This house was dedicated to the worship of God, by the spoken word and by music, by song and by story. I stand in a pulpit here that has been sanctified by the righteous men and women who have stood here and have testified of their knowledge of God and have encouraged others to keep his commandments, that they might be happy. I feel very grateful for my blessings.

• WARNING AND TESTIMONY

In conclusion let me say: We are not out of the woods. This world is in for a housecleaning unless the sons and daughters of our Heavenly Father repent of their sins and turn to him. And that means the Latter-day Saints, or the members of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints, along with all the rest, but we, first of all, ought to be setting the example. We have sent over seventy thousand of our sons and daughters into the world, paying their own expenses, to divide the gospel of Jesus Christ with his other children. Why? Because we know it is the only plan God has given to the children of men to earn a place in the celestial kingdom. That is why it is so important. In this great building that has been so sacred to all, after listening to the splendid choir and the organ, listening to the prayers that have been offered here, listening to the testimonies that have been borne, I want to leave my testimony with you and say to you: I know that God lives. I know that Jesus is the Christ. I know that Joseph Smith was a Prophet of the Living God, and had restored to him the true gospel of Jesus Christ in these latter days.

That might sound like boasting if it were not so serious. It is serious, and I know that I will have to answer for that testimony as I leave it with you today. It will not be long until this man who is talking will have finished his work and passed to the other side, and when I go, I want to be worthy to join my grandparents and my parents, my brothers and sisters who have passed on. I know they have earned a place that is worth while. I want to go where they have gone, and I know that if I were not to tell you the truth in regard to this matter, I might lose that opportunity.

So, realizing the seriousness of a testimony like that, realizing what it means, and with love unfeigned and a desire to be a blessing to all our Father's children, I leave this witness with you that this is the gospel of Jesus Christ, the only power of God unto salvation in preparation for the celestial kingdom, into which kingdom we may all go if we will, but it will be on his terms, and I bear you that witness this day, in the name of Jesus Christ, our Lord. Amen.

President George Albert Smith:

We now have one order of business that is customary with these Conferences; that is, the presentation of the Authorities of the Church to be sustained by the vote of the people. I hope that you will realize, all of you, that this is a sacred privilege, and I hope that if you know of any reason why you should not sustain the leadership of the Church that you will make that reason known to those who handle the situation. On the contrary, if you feel that you want to carry on, that you want to sustain those who are doing the work and have been for a long time, and others who may be added today, we want you to hold up your hand. It will not be just a symbol but it will be an indication that, with the help of the Lord, you will carry your part of the work. And so, with that understanding, we will now ask President McKay to present the General Authorities for your vote. I have been in meetings sometimes when you could not tell that people had their hands up, they kept them down so far. I do not think your arms are longer than other peoples', but we would like to see your hands, either for or against those whose names will now be presented by President McKay.

President David O. McKay then presented the General Authorities, General Officers, and General Auxiliary Officers of the Church, and they were unanimously sustained by those present, as follows:

President David O. McKay:

The voting so far as I have noticed, has been unanimous in the affirmative.

You will note that in the presentation of the General Authorities the name of the Patriarch to the Church was omitted. The President of the Church has from Patriarch Joseph F. Smith the following letter:

Centerville, Utah
3 October 1946

"President George Albert Smith
47 East South Temple
Salt Lake City, Utah

"Dear President Smith:

"As you know I have been very ill for many months. While I am slowly gaining strength and hope soon again to be able to do some work, I do not know when, if at all, I shall be able to stand the full drain upon my energy incident to the office of Patriarch to the Church. As you know the duties of the Patriarch entail heavy exhaustion. Since but one man holds that office, if he is measurably incapacitated, its work must in that degree suffer.

"I know, of course, that one neither resigns nor asks to be released from such a calling, out of personal considerations, any more than one requests appointment or asks for office. My chief desire is that the work of the Lord shall prosper.

"Bearing these things in mind, I am writing to say that if you desire me to carry on, I shall do my best. If, however, in the circumstances, you should feel that the interests of the Church would be best served by releasing me at this time, I want you to feel at liberty to do that. I am therefore writing this letter to let you know you have my full support for whatever you decide.

"I am grateful for the Lord's goodness to me and mine.

"Ever praying the Lord's choicest blessings upon you, I am

"Sincerely your brother,
/s/ Joseph F. Smith"

After careful and prayerful consideration, and with deep regret and sympathy for his condition, the First Presidency, with the expressed assent and approval of the Council of the Twelve, have decided, under all the circumstances, that Brother Joseph F. Smith shall be released from his duties as Patriarch to the Church.

President George Albert Smith:

So far as I could see the voting was unanimous, as it usually is. Now, brethren and sisters, we are going to our various homes, and they are thousands of miles apart. Let us take to those homes new determination to be worthy of him in whose image we are created, and seek in every way possible to please mankind by the example that we set and by giving of ourselves and our substance wherever it may be necessary.

I hope now that you will go from here feeling that you have waited upon the Lord and that he has answered your prayers, and with love in our hearts unfeigned for all his children let us carry on.

We want to thank all those who have helped us and cooperated with us in our great Conference, and we want the Tabernacle Choir to know how much we appreciate and love them, that they are remembered throughout the world because of the peace and love that they radiate from this great building that has been dedicated to our Heavenly Father. They will now conclude their portion of the Conference service by singing: "The Spirit of God Like a Fire is Burning," by W. W. Phelps. The closing prayer will be offered by President Wilmer J. Maw of the Farr West Stake of Zion.

The Choir sang the hymn, "The Spirit of God Like a Fire is Burning," by Phelps.

President George Albert Smith:

For your information we will say that there are approximately 12,000, not less than 12,000 people at worship in this building and the adjoining building and outside on the block.

Tonight at 7:00 will be the regular conference of the Deseret Sunday School Union. Those of you who have never been here to that fine meeting and the program carried on by the Sunday School, I am sure will enjoy it, and everybody is welcome.

President Maw will now offer the benediction.

The benediction was pronounced by President Wilmer J. Maw of the Farr West Stake.

Conference adjourned sine die.

The congregational singing was directed by J. Spencer Cornwall, Conductor, and Richard P. Condie, Assistant Conductor of the Tabernacle Choir.

The Salt Lake Tabernacle Choir was in attendance at the Sunday sessions and presented musical numbers at those meetings. J. Spencer Cornwall, Conductor, directed the singing of the Choir.

The Relief Society Singing Mothers of the Jordan Valley Region, Florence Jepperson Madsen, director, furnished musical numbers at the Friday morning and afternoon sessions.

At the Saturday morning and afternoon meetings the Richfield Combined Choruses, Elder Arden Peterson, Director, furnished the musical numbers.

The music of the Tabernacle Choir and Organ Broadcast, Sunday morning, 9:30 to 10:00, as also the music for the Church of the Air broadcast, Sunday morning 8:30 to 9:00, was directed by J. Spencer Cornwall, Alexander Schreiner was at the organ, and the spoken word was by Richard L. Evans.

Accompaniments and interludes on the great organ were played by Alexander Schreiner and Frank W. Asper.

Stenographic notes of the Conference were taken by Frank W. Otterstrom and Joseph Anderson.

Joseph Anderson,
Clerk of the Conference.

AND EVENTS OF HIS TIME

By Bryant S. Hinckley

As the polished facets of a diamond flash back brilliantly the rainbow of colors from the light which plays upon them so do certain historic characters reflect the light and color of their times.

Daniel Hammer Wells was one of these.

Bryant S. Hinckley, always illuminating and inspirational, turns the spot light of appraisal and appreciation upon a distinctive character in the great drama of Mormon history.

This book is in fact a new approach to the study of Church History. It offers the events of the history of Mormonism as one of the principal actors saw them happen and as he acted in, and was acted upon by them.

The book is a biography and more, a tribute of appreciation and more—it is a history throbbing with the pulse beats of great personalities as they struggle through one crisis after another.

His life ran the long span which included actively within it labors of love for and loyalty to every man who has been president of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints.

Daniel H. Wells saw it all happen: The rise of the Church in the Middle West; the story of Nauvoo; the catastrophe of the martyrdom; the pain, travail, and power of pioneering; the building of the West; the crises of pre-statehood days; and the long, hard pull which finally established the Mormon people on the heights where they are now building.

Published privately by President Heber J. Grant, as a tribute to the loyal friend of his youth, it will stand as a welcome addition to the faith-promoting literature of the Church.

FIRST DAY MORNING MEETING

The opening session of the Conference was held Friday morning, April 4, at 10 o'clock. The great tabernacle was filled to capacity.

President George Albert Smith presided and conducted the meeting.

President George Albert Smith:

Good morning everybody. I am happy to see you so comfortable in the House of the Lord.

This is the opening session of the 117th Annual Conference of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints. We are convened in the Tabernacle on Temple Square in Salt Lake City, Utah.

There are on the stand this morning all the General Authorities of the Church, except Elder Alma Sonne, who is in Europe in charge of the European Mission.

Elder Joseph Anderson is the Clerk of the Conference.

This whole service will be broadcast over station KSL, Salt Lake City, as will also the service this afternoon, beginning at 2 p.m., likewise the services tomorrow, Saturday, at 10 a.m. and 2 p.m., and also the two services on Sunday at 10 a.m. and 2 p.m. These same sessions will be broadcast over station KSUB, Cedar City, and KDYY, at Pocatello.

The choir singing at this session of the Conference will be by the Relief Society Singing Mothers of the Salt Lake and Central Utah regions. Sister Florence Jepperson Madsen is the conductor, Elder Frank W. Asper, the organist.

The first song will be, "Dear Land at Home," by Sibelius.

The opening prayer will be offered by President Ivan Call of the Nevada Stake.

Singing by the Singing Mothers of the Salt Lake and Central Utah Regions, "Dear Land of Home," by Sibelius.

Elder Ivan Call, President of the Nevada Stake, offered the invocation.

Singers, by the Singing Mothers, "Hear My Prayer," by Will James.

PRESIDENT GEORGE ALBERT SMITH

It is my pleasure this morning to bid you welcome to the house of the Lord. It is a beautiful picture to see this great tabernacle filled, the seats occupied and people standing, at the beginning of the one hundred seventeenth annual conference of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints. The Church was organized under great difficulties and unpleasantness to those who became its members. People who accepted the gospel did so because they knew it was the Lord's will, and the result was that they were able to endure the persecutions and difficulties and sorrows that followed them until they finally were driven from the East and came here to these desert lands to make their homes with the wild animals, and at that time, the still more savage red men.

PERSECUTIONS OF CHURCH

Remarkable as it may seem, but running true to form, the Church from its inception endured persecution. It was so in the days of the Old Testament, also during the mortal life of the Savior as well as in our day. The people were moved about, buffeted from place to place, but I think it could be safely said that every day when the sun went down the Church was stronger than it had been the day before.

Representatives from many parts of the world are in attendance today. Many of you have traveled a long distance, and I am sure you will receive a blessing because of your investment.

SEVENTY-SEVENTH ANNIVERSARY

This happens to be an unusual occasion for me. Seventy-seven years ago today I came to Salt Lake City. My mother's home was just across the road west of us, and that is where I was born. From the best of my recollection the ground was covered with snow that morning, just as it is now. In addition to my memory I have the testimony of my mother who later told me there was deep snow on the ground.

Many things have transpired since then. I have seen this city grow and develop. When I was a child, there were no paved streets. The dust on West Temple Street was the most delightful playground the children could have. We ran barefoot in it, and we had a happy time.

SEEK FIRST THE KINGDOM OF GOD

Little by little conditions improved, and now in this year of the one hundredth anniversary of the coming of the Pioneers, on the 24th of July next, we see one of the beautiful cities of the world, one of the most delightful places in which to live that can be found anywhere. Fortunately for me, I have been able to observe and enjoy that development. The Lord made a promise a long time ago. It was this:

"Seek ye first"—not last—"Seek ye first the kingdom of God, and his righteousness; and all these things shall be added." (Matthew 6:3.)

And when our people abandoned their comfortable homes in the East because of force, also in different parts of the world, and began to trek their way across the plains to this then-wilderness, they had to have faith to believe that they could enjoy in this deseret land the blessings that people enjoy elsewhere. The Lord never fails to fulfil his promise, and I stand here today a witness to the fact that in this promised land, are some of the happiest people that can be found on the earth, and the advantages and opportunities here are unsurpassed. Not only do we have the blessings that our Heavenly Father has bestowed upon us as individuals, but people also come from all parts of the world to see what has been accomplished.

In an earlier day, if anybody wanted to hear the best music and be trained in great universities, he had to go away from here. Today those who have been trained here in our universities are serving in many parts of the United States as instructors in other educational institutions. Those who used to go away to receive their musical training and learn how to operate a pipe organ may now get that instruction here, and from this Tabernacle the Choir sings to the world, and the music of the Organ is sent everywhere that radio reaches.

UTAH KNOWN FOR ACCOMPLISHMENTS

After one hundred years the Lord has made his people known for good. It is remarkable what has been accomplished. This state is classified as number one among the states of the Union for the largest number of high school students and the largest number of university students in proportion to population. We are recognized because there have been more scientists and more men and women of affairs born in this state than in any other state in the Union in proportion to population. You cannot go anywhere in the world where Utah is not known. As you sit here this morning, you are doubtless in the most comfortable, the most desirable meeting place for its size—and it is one of the largest—to be found in all the world. You are in an edifice where a pin drop can be heard two hundred feet away. And all these things, with thousands of others that might be mentioned, have been coming one by one that we might enjoy them in tained us delightfully, and the great Organ that is famous the world that this was a land choice above all other lands, and at this time those who are fortunate enough to dwell in this part of it feel that there is no better place in which we may live.

"COME OUT OF HER, MY PEOPLE"

I see these mission presidents from the various missions of the earth, stake presidencies, bishops, counselors, high councilors, and as already has been said, on this stand are all the General Authorities of this Church with one exception. I welcome you all. We have this marvelous chorus of singing mothers who have already entered dwell in this land in peace and safety; and how do we feel today over. Think, if you can, of any place in all the world that you could go to attend a service that would compare with this. Surely the Lord has fulfilled his promise. In our homes we have not suffered for the necessities of life during this terrible war period. A commandment was given long ago through a prophet of old to "... Come out of her, my people, that ye be not partakers of her sins, and that ye receive not of her plagues." (Rev. 18:4.) Many of you who are in this audience today are descendants of those who followed this advice, and some of you have come yourselves from distant lands for the gospel's sake, and by so doing you escaped the ravages of world wars. Our Heavenly Father is mindful of his own.

FORMER MISSIONARIES PRESENT

We are here this morning not to see and be seen, but we are here to worship, and there will address us from this stand a group of men whose lives are devoted to disseminating the gospel of Jesus Christ. In this audience there are hundreds who have filled missions, have been away from home for a term of years, at their own expense or the expense of their loved ones, to divide the gospel of Jesus Christ with our Father's other children. I would like to have all those who have filled missions for the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints outside the states in which they live, raise their hands. Thank you.

I wish all who are outside the building could see that sight. Hundreds, both men and women, have indicated that because of their assurance that God lives, that Jesus is the Christ and that Joseph Smith was a Prophet of the Lord, they have been willing to leave home and loved ones and go from door to door among the homes of our own and other lands, asking for the privilege of sharing the truth that the others did not possess in order that they too might enjoy greater happiness.

GRATITUDE FOR BLESSINGS

These are some of the things that come to my mind this morning. I am grateful to my Heavenly Father that I was born in this land of the free, in this great nation, in this valley, among the people who have dwelt here. I am thankful for the companionship during my life of the best men and women that can be found anywhere in the world both at home and abroad. This morning we are here to wait upon the Lord. We are here to listen to the inspiration that will flow from him to us. We are here to say by our prayers and by our singing voices, "Heavenly Father, we thank thee for all that we enjoy." This is a blessed privilege.

We have here this morning mayors of cities, the governor, and other officials of the state, some members of the Church and some not, and how happy we are to have our visiting friends with us. While you are here in the city, I would like to plead with the Latter-day Saints to see to it that everyone has a place to stay in comfort. Let this conference be notable for the generosity of the people who reside here, and let us see to it that everybody is properly taken care of.

I take this occasion to thank dozens of my friends, that I cannot thank in any other way, for their greetings and good wishes on my birthday. It has been a very delightful experience, and I thank you all, wherever you may be who are listening in, who have written to me or telegraphed or telephoned your good wishes. Surely it is a blessed thing to be associated with such people, and from the depths of my soul I pray that our Heavenly Father will now give us the satisfaction of listening to his voice and his instructions during this conference, and when the meetings are finished and we return to our homes, that we may take with us the influence and the truths that we have enjoyed here to share with those who are not fortunate enough to come here. I pray for these blessings, in the name of Jesus Christ our Lord. Amen.

Group Canning:

The following canning was done at Welfare canneries for their own use by 759 groups, consisting of 14,992 people:

Fruits and Vegetables .....	689,615 quarts	(1,010,916 cans)
Meat and Fish .....	42,902 pounds	( 32,313 cans)

1,043,229 cans

Field Activities:

Field activities carried on in the production of the 1946 Welfare Budget include 568 crop projects, cultivating 3,985 acres of land; 158 livestock projects, which produced 755 head of livestock, 8,340 chickens, 399 rabbits, and 56 stands of bees.

51,638 man days of work were donated on these projects, and 6,860 man days of work were donated in operating storehouses and processing plants.

For purposes other than the production of the budget for the Bishops' Storehouse program, there were 87 crop projects, 28 livestock projects, and 48 manufacturing projects operated during 1946. These agricultural projects utilized 528 acres of land and produced 109 head of livestock.

Assistance Rendered:

There have been from 17,913 to 55,460 persons assisted through the bishops' storehouse program each year since 1938. In 1946, there were 22,336 persons so assisted in the United States. We also sent to Europe enough food and clothing to help almost an equal number, or over 40,000 persons all told in 1946.

During this period and outside of Europe more than 1,032 families have been helped to become self-supporting; 7,383 persons have been assisted in other ways; and 1,675 construction projects have been completed in addition to the construction for the bishops' storehouse program.

Welfare Meetings Being Held:

Of the 156 stakes reporting, 126 hold Stake Welfare Committee meetings monthly or oftener; 24 hold them less frequently; and 6 are not holding any meetings; Of the 862 wards reported, 183 hold weekly Ward Welfare Committee meetings; 652 hold them less frequently; and 27 are not holding any meetings. No report from 477 wards.

Persons Relinquishing Government Relief:

During the past four years 1,729 persons have relinquished their position on Government Relief rolls. Of this number 690 have been rehabilitated and are receiving no aid from the Church, nor so far as known from any other gratuitous source; 697 are yet receiving part of their support from the Church; and 342 are receiving all their needs from the Church.

Relief Supplies Sent to Europe:

Relief Supplies sent to Europe and Japan through the Welfare Program, as of March 25, 1946. (Shipments commenced October 29, 1945.)

Parcel post packages:

To Europe	8,319 parcels of clothing 6,726 parcels of bedding
To Japan	292 parcels of clothing 64 parcels of food
	<hr/> 15,401

A total of 15,401 parcels, the equivalent of 6 freight carloads, valued at $84,531.00 at a cost for postage of $24,925.00.

In addition to the foregoing, shipped by parcel post, we sent to Europe in bulk shipments:

	16 cars of clothing 29 cars of food
A total of	<hr/> 45

The value of these 45 cars was $463,623.00; they were shipped at a cost in freight of $117,742.00.

This makes a total of 51 freight carloads, valued at $548,154.00, at a transportation cost of $142,667.00, a total of $690,821.00.

The materials sent to Europe went to the Church members in Belgium, Czechoslovakia, Denmark, Finland, France, Netherlands, Norway, Great Britain, and Germany.

Emergency Activity:

During 1946 the Welfare Program was again called upon to meet a major problem involving a flood catastrophe similar to the one in Arizona in 1942 and the one on the Avenues in Salt Lake City in 1945.

On Wednesday, July 24, a cloudburst in the mountains immediately east of Mt. Pleasant in Sanpete County washed mud, boulders, and debris into the city covering an area varying from 50 to 300 feet wide and 1-3/8 miles long. Sixty homes and 4 business establishments were damaged. Twelve homes had basements completely filled with mud; four had considerable damage done to them by mud entering on the main floor. Four barns, three chicken coops, and three garages were damaged and 250 chickens and three haystacks were lost. The flood covered 43 lawns and 30 gardens.

On Monday July 29, 235 men, together with tools, wheelbarrows and some motorized equipment, removed the muck and debris from the basements and main floors of all homes and from the sidewalks leading thereto. During that day 2,480 man hours, 186 horse hours and 96 truck hours of work were furnished. Work was then suspended for one week to allow the mud to dry. Beginning Monday, August 5, the five stakes of the Juab-Sanpete Region carried on an organized clean-up campaign. This work continued for nearly five weeks with 120 men on the job the first day and an average of 10 men on the job each day thereafter until the rocks and debris were removed from the lawns, driveways and gardens.

The Red Cross organization furnished some heavy power equipment to assist in this work and the city took care of hauling the mud and debris after it was removed to the street. The city also cleared the wide streets of Mt. Pleasant.

One hundred fifteen cases of fruits, vegetables and meats were distributed to replace, partially, the foods which had been destroyed by the flood. Neighbors were very generous in contributing vegetables from their gardens as long as they lasted.

President J. Reuben Clark, Jr.

We feel that this is another demonstration of what the Welfare Program can do in dire emergency.

I should like to add to this a word or two. Unemployment seems to be increasing. We shall probably have greater need this year, locally, than ever before if this unemployment increases. I want to read an excerpt from a letter from President Walter Stover of the East German Mission, dated February 16, addressed to the First Presidency.

"I went to visit one sister whose husband was killed in action in Russia. She lives with her three children in an attic which has no heat, no windows, no water, the toilet facilities were all frozen, and there was hardly any bedding. Two small children were in bed shivering. The mother was hard of hearing and the oldest daughter, eleven, was almost insane, half-starved and frozen. The little girl had no shoes and little clothing. The mother was unkempt and had not washed for want of water. Brother Ranglack and I closed the open windows with ply wood from the boxes I shipped in, gave a little wood from the mission home, and brought the mother and daughter to the mission home, where we gave them warm food and clothing.

"I will never forget the thankful expression on the little girl's face when she got underclothing, a dress, stockings, and new shoes. We also could help the mother and other little children from the Welfare supplies. We gave them a couple of blankets and a few other things. The family might well have frozen to death if they had not come to our attention. We have since visited them, and although they have no heat, they have something to wear and warm bedding.

"There are many more similar cases and we do not know them all. Some families are refugees and we have not found them yet, but little by little we find more and more and we are doing everything possible to relieve the situation. Every morning I get a stack of letters from people pleading for help. Children are fainting in school for want of nourishment. I am happy that now we can send them some relief."

Brother Alma Sonne wired, pursuant to our request, on March 13th:

"Welfare supplies en route and on hand sufficient through summer. Situation not improved in Germany. Need continues acute for wheat, fats, sugar, milk, meat, dried beans, peas, concentrated foods. Great need for heavy worn clothing, underwear; large, heavy men's, women's and children's shoes; soleing materials, blankets, bedding. Dutch needs few. Air mailing further information, seed needs, and distribution problems."

We have a task ahead and I can foresee that it may be necessary for us to call for private contributions in addition to all that we can do under the Welfare program. God grant that we may not fail to meet this challenge in caring for the distressed of our Saints abroad who have been loyal and true through conditions of which we can scarcely dream, I humbly pray, in the name of Jesus Christ. Amen

President George Albert Smith:

President J. Reuben Clark, Jr. of the First Presidency has just read the Financial Statement. While he was talking I wondered if we here in this room, any of us, appreciate what it has meant. The Lord has blessed us abundantly, and while we have been able to make some contributions to the helpless, in all this time we have had everything we have needed to preserve life and make us reasonably comfortable. What a blessed people we have been!

Elder Orval W. Adams will now read the report of the Church Auditing Committee.

REPORT OF CHURCH AUDITING COMMITTEE

Salt Lake City, Utah
March 24, 1947

President George Albert Smith and Counselors
Dear Brethren:

Your Committee has reviewed the Annual Financial Report of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints for the year ending December 31st, 1946. The accounting system is modern and adequate. The funds of the Church are being conserved with great care and expended only after thoughtful and careful consideration. The report shows the Church to be in a strong financial condition and free from debt.

Respectfully submitted,

Orval W. Adams
Albert E. Bowen
George S. Spencer
Harold H. Bennett
Auditing Committee

President George Albert Smith:

Elder Orval W. Adams has just read the report of the Church Auditing Committee.

In view of the report we have just received I hope that those who have been so anxious and concerned about the poverty of the Church are listening in, if they are not in this building.

The Relief Society Singing Mothers and the congregation will now sing "High on the Mountain Top," by Beesley, No. 123 in the Hymn Book, L.D.S. Hymns 131. Elder J. Spencer Cornwall, leader of the Tabernacle Choir, will be the conductor.

The Congregation and the Singing Mothers joined in singing, "High On the Mountain Top."

President George Albert Smith:

I would like to call attention to these beautiful calla lilies that decorate the stand. They come with the the compliments of the Berkeley Stake of Zion.

Elder Clifford E. Young, one of the Assistants to the Quorum of the Twelve, will now address us.

ELDER CLIFFORD E. YOUNG

Assistant to the Council of the Twelve

It must be a source of pride, my brethren and sisters, to all of us to belong to the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints, and in the light of the reports to which we have just listened we ought to be more grateful than ever before for the goodness of our Heavenly Father. Frequently we hear complaints of the requirements that are made of us, and many times these complaints are presented in "lump sum," so to speak.

THE WELFARE PROGRAM AN OPPORTUNITY FOR SERVICE

The welfare budget, for example, is regarded from the totals that are presented, and as we see the program in the light of these totals, we think of it as a burden on us as members of the Church. As we analyze it, however, the per capita assignment is not so heavy, and this field of activity becomes not a burden, but an opportunity for service. As a matter of fact, the welfare program is not measured in dollars and cents but in kind, and it may be possible in the future that our money may have little value. But we shall still be in a position to render relief to those who may be in need by reason of this program of producing through the concerted efforts of all the members of the Church. Is it not a source of satisfaction to know and to feel that if and when the day of need comes to us, we may go to those whose right it is to extend help and that help will be available? As I said, it may not be in dollars and cents, but it may be in the very things of which President Clark spoke; the example in Germany to which he referred. It wasn't money that those poor people needed. It was something to put on their backs, and food to eat, and warmth. Money couldn't buy what they needed because the things they needed were not to be purchased. But in this great program to which we have subscribed, food and clothing were available without money. This is the reason that to the Latter-day Saints the welfare program has in it the elements of security, and how grateful we ought to be for it.

EXPERIENCES OF A PIONEER FAMILY

This is a great year, an anniversary year, and I think we may reflect on some of the things that have gone before, and they may give us inspiration for the future. I am thinking this morning of a little log cabin that stands down in Liberty Park, built by my grandfather Riter. It was transported there from one of our pioneer lots by the Daughters of the Utah Pioneers and others who are interested in preserving shrines that they may be a source of inspiration to the people. This little log cabin is no different from many that were built in 1847. It was originally a one-room log cabin and built in that year. Later on a partition was placed in it so that there were two rooms. The mother who lived in that little log cabin was a convert to the Church from Pennsylvania. She, her sisters, her mother, and her husband were caught in the "Gospel Net," to use the term that Brother Widtsoe affectionately uses in speaking of his worthy mother, and may I say in passing, the type to which he refers in his delightful book is the type that sometimes we forget. They too were pioneers. They came out of the world. The physical hardships may not have been quite so severe when they came, but they pioneered, nevertheless. They left their homes, their kindred, and many times their own parents for an unpopular faith because they had in their souls a testimony of the divinity of this work. Well, this little family to which I referred, the mother who at one time lived in this little log cabin, came to Nauvoo, there to find not a home as she expected, because shortly after she came, she was to witness the martyrdom of the Prophet and his brother, the patriarch. Then the family moved on, and they started across those boggy Iowa plains of which Brother Preston Nibley has been telling us so vividly in his News Church Section articles. I doubt that you and I can visualize, can appreciate, the difficulties under which they traveled. As they began their journey they met with discouragement, hunger, lack of things to keep them warm. The conditions were indescribable, yet there was no complaint. Oh, some of them felt and wondered why. In this little band there was a father who was a practical fellow. He was a Pennsylvania Dutchman. He left a home where things were reasonably secure, and he said one day to his wife,

Friday, April 4First Day

"We'd better turn back. We'd better go back whence we came. Conditions are so uncertain." That is a natural thing for any father to say. It is a natural thing for a mother to think. They were traveling among Indians and were not sure just where they were going, and conditions were not very favorable. They naturally would think of their children. They had two boys. They thought of the boys' welfare, not of their own. I am wondering how many of us would want to turn back, but that mother wouldn't turn back. She had been caught in the "Gospel Net," and she knew it was true, and so she said, "We will not turn back—we'll not turn back; we're going on!" That was my grandmother Riter, and her faith and indomitable spirit have always been an inspiration to me, and that spirit should be a source of inspiration to all of us.

NO "TURNING BACK"

This Church is now celebrating the one hundred seventeenth anniversary of its organization. There has been no turning back since that memorable day; there must be no turning back now. Some perhaps have dropped by the wayside. One of the great contributions of pioneer life and of pioneer colonizing was the fact that the "Mormon" people did not turn back. You have read the story of other pioneer companies who came to the West in those early periods. Many of them started out perhaps with thirty or forty people and ended with half the number. They were not home builders; they were trappers; they were men seeking something else than homes. But it was different with the Latter-day Saints. They were to come West under the direction and inspiration of a great leader to build homes, and there was little turning back, and that is the inspiration for us today, my brethren and sisters, that there be no turning back, there be no wavering.

Brother Anderson read of the growth of the Church, of its membership. We are gratified about that, but when we come to analyze it, numbers mean very little. We are only strong, we're only powerful and influential insofar as we live the things that God has revealed for us, his children. We are only a great people as we cling to those concepts that were revealed for our benefit and blessing.

The welfare program and every program of the Church are strong only as we support them with our faith and with our devotion. And we are strong only as we live the concepts of right as revealed by the Lord Jesus Christ.

God help us that we may live so to do and that we may not turn back and not waver, but be worthy and strong in the faith, I humbly pray, in the name of Jesus Christ. Amen.

ELDER GEORGE F. RICHARDS

President of the Council of the Twelve Apostles

In listening to the reports this morning, notwithstanding there are a great many of us here, this building being filled to overflowing, having a variety of thoughts and reflections, I believe that we will be united upon this point, that this work in which we are engaged is a marvelous work and a wonder. As Elder [Clifford E.] Young has suggested, we should appreciate our membership in this Church with all that it means to us, and I believe the Latter-day Saints do. In fact, we have an abundance of evidence of that fact. But for the faithfulness of the Latter-day Saints in the payment of their tithes and offerings and answering the call of authority that comes to them, what has been reported of accomplishment during the past year would have been impossible.

MANY OPPORTUNITIES FOR WORK IN THE CHURCH

As General Authorities of the Church, if I may speak for them, we regard it as an honor shown to us by your presence here in such great numbers. We appreciate your faithfulness as Saints in the living of your religion and as officers constituting the leadership of the Church and the ministry of the Lord. We pray for you, and you pray for the General Authorities of the Church, and there is harmony existing. I know of nothing to the contrary, and the Lord is blessing this people abundantly, and we have opportunity of showing our appreciation of his blessings. There is no person that can fear being shelved in this work if he is worthy to be used. There is ample opportunity for every member to work to his full capacity to the one end, the accomplishment of God's purposes, looking to the saving of souls of the children of men, the living and the dead.

I would offer a few words of caution to the Latter-day Saints. We are apt unwittingly to find ourselves, if we are not careful, deviating from that straight and narrow way that leads to life everlasting. Perhaps a few words of caution will not be out of place. I would like, if I could, to give to you, my brethren and sisters and friends, some of the real bread of life and have you take it with a relish and proper assimilation, or in the words of the Apostle James:

... be ye doers of the word, and not hearers only, deceiving your own selves. (James 1:22.)

BEARING FALSE WITNESS COMES FROM THE EVIL ONE

I would call your attention to two important characters about whom I have something to say, the acquaintance of one to be cultivated, the other to be ignored. The one is the friend and Savior of men; the other is the enemy of God and of mankind.

Why did the Lord give the commandment?

Thou shalt not bear false witness against thy neighbor. (Exodus 20:16.)

He gave it because of the subtle methods of the adversary in his effort to divide and tear asunder the love and the unity of the Lord's people! To bear false witness may not appear to be a very serious offense, but its results are far-reaching and cruel, hence, the use made of it by the instigator of evil. The Lord warns us against this evil practice. Bearing false witness, talebearing, slander, gossip, scandal, fault-finding, backbiting, and evil speaking are in the same category of evil practice and are some of the means employed by Satan to disunite us as a people and destroy brotherly love, kindness, and helpfulness toward one another.

. . . Thou shalt love thy neighbor as thyself. (Matthew 22:39.)

We do not knowingly injure whom we love. No one loves a character assassin. By the Spirit of God one is led to love his fellow men and to speak well of them, magnifying their virtues. Such a one has the spirit and the kingdom of peace, the kingdom of God within. By the spirit of Satan one bears false witness and broadcasts the weakness of his neighbor. He becomes a talebearer, a character assassin. He robs his neighbor of that which greatly impoverishes his neighbor without enriching himself. He makes others miserable and unhappy and has within himself the kingdom of Satan.

. . . choose you this day whom ye will serve. . . (Joshua 24:15.)

SATAN'S PLAN TO HINDER GOD'S WORK

Satan is an enemy of God and of man and is constantly working to defeat the purposes of the Lord in his efforts to save the children of men. We should be on the alert lest we be found rendering aid to Satan and hindering the work of the Lord. When we say anything bad about the leaders of the Church, whether true or false, we tend to impair their influence and their usefulness and are thus working against the Lord and his cause. When we speak well of our leaders, we tend to increase their influence and usefulness in the service of the Lord. In his absence our brother's character when assailed, should be defended, thus doing to others as we would be done by. The Lord needs the help of all of us. Are we helping or are we hindering? Quoting:

Cursed are all those that shall lift up the heel against mine anointed, saith the Lord, and cry they have sinned when they have not sinned before me, saith the Lord, but have done that which was meet in mine eyes, and which I commanded them.

But those who cry transgression do it because they are the servants of sin, and are the children of disobedience themselves. (D. & C. 121:16, 17.)

... All other sins are not to be compared to sinning against the Holy Ghost, and proving a traitor to thy brethren.

I will give unto you one of the keys of the mysteries of the kingdom. It is an eternal principle, that has existed with God from all eternity: That man who rises to condemn others, finding fault with the Church, saying they are out of the way, while he himself is righteous, then know assuredly that that man is on the highroad to apostasy; and, if he does not repent, will apostatize, as God lives. (Joseph Smith, Compendium, pp. 270-271.)

It is possible for us, by bearing false witness, to destroy the faith of others. It may be a child, a parent, a wife, or some other dear friend. We may later repent, but we cannot repent for them. We should be doubly careful not to do any injury we cannot repair. When we bear false witness, we injure at least four: ourselves, him about whom we speak, him to whom we speak, and the Lord.

... inasmuch as ye do it unto the least of these, ye do it unto me. (D. & C. 42:38.)

THE WAY TO HAPPINESS

Are we sure that upon the screen of life there is no picture of which we would be ashamed to have exhibited? Or do we doubt the ability of God to record and reproduce at will what man can do, the voice, the actions, and even the thoughts and intents of our hearts?

George Eliot writes:

It is the glory of Christianity that it requires its followers to do good to men: to rejoice in their prosperity, not in their failures: to offer sympathy and not to make their position a terrible one in the sight of others.

We should so live and labor that our friends will not credit anything bad that may be said of us, so that it would require a preponderance of evidence to convict us, in their minds.

And he gave some, apostles; and some, prophets; and some, evangelists; and some, pastors and teachers;

For the perfecting of the saints, for the work of the ministry, for the edifying of the body of Christ:

Till we all come in the unity of the faith, and of the knowledge of the Son of God. . . . (Eph. 4:11-13.)

Said the Lord:

... I say unto you, be one; and if ye are not one ye are not mine. (D. & C. 38:27.)

We would be lonely if we had to live alone on the earth. If we appreciate one another, we should show it by living together in love and sympathy and by making the association pleasant. This is done by sacrifice and service for one another. We should avoid those things which disrupt and tear asunder these finer feelings. As a people, the Latter-day Saints are well taught and know the course they should pursue in order to obtain happiness and the blessings of salvation and eternal life. What we most need, it seems to me, is being impressed with the necessity of doing as well as we know.

The inspired words of the poet, in poetic form, are calculated to make the truth attractive and impressive, so upon the subject of bearing false witness and kindred evils, let me here use some of their expressions:

Don't look for the flaws as you go through life;
And even when you find them,
It is wise and kind to be somewhat blind,
And look for the virtues behind them.

Just stand aside and watch yourself go by,
Think of yourself as "he" instead of "I,"
Pick flaws, find fault, forget the man is you,
And strive to make your estimate ring true.
—"Watch Yourself Go By,"
by Strickland Gillilan.

There is so much good in the worst of us,
And so much bad in the best of us,
That it hardly becomes any of us
To talk about the rest of us.

BEARING FALSE WITNESS A GRAVE OFFENSE

A small boy returned from Sunday School one morning and found his father reading the newspaper. He called to his father, "Daddy, Daddy, which is worse, to steal or to bear false witness?" The father raised his glasses and, looking over his newspaper, answered let's see, the Lord said, "Thou shalt not bear false witness." He also said, "Thou shalt not steal." What do you think about it, Sonny?" "Why, it's worse to bear false witness." "How do you make that out?" "Well, if I were to steal something from my neighbor and afterward be sorry for it, I could take back what I had stolen and ask forgiveness and thus make right what I have done, but if I were to bear false witness against my neighbor I might be ever so sorry afterwards, but I wouldn't be able to undo the wrong which I had done." An application of this principle is found in the poem entitled, "Scandal."

A woman to the Holy Father went,
Confession of sin was her intent;
And so her misdemeanors, great and small,
She faithfully rehearsed them all.
And chief in her category of sin,
She owned that she a talebearer had been—
Had carried a bit of scandal up and down,
To all the long-tongued gossips of the town.
The Father, for other sins granted the absolution asked him;

But, while for all the rest he pardon gave,

He told her this offense was very grave
And that to do fit penance, she must go,
Out by the wayside where the thistles grow,
And gather the largest, ripest one;
Scatter its seeds; and that when this was done,
She must come back another day,
To tell him. His command she did obey.

The woman, thinking this a penance light,
Hastened to do his will that very night,
Feeling right glad she had escaped so well.
Next day, but one, she went the Priest to tell.
The Priest sat still and heard her story through.
Then said, "There is something still for you to do.
These little thistle seeds which you have sown,
I bid you go regather, every one."
The woman said, "But Father, 'twould be in vain,
To try to gather back those seeds again;
The winds have scattered them both far and wide,
Over meadow, vale, and mountainside."

The Father said, "Now I hope from this,
The lesson I have taught, you will not miss.
You cannot gather back those scattered seeds,
Which, far and wide, will grow to noxious weeds;
Nor can the mischief once by scandal sown,
By any penance be again undone."

Those who have yielded to temptation and committed sin of a grave character may have done so because of the weakness of the flesh rather than through sinful desire. They are to be pitied rather than to be censored and condemned.

A PLEA FOR THOSE WHO ERR

Finally:

Think gently of the erring one;
O let us not forget,
However darkly stained by sin,
He is our brother yet.

Heir of the same inheritance,
Child of the selfsame God,
He hath but stumbled in the path
We have in weakness trod.

Speak gently to the erring ones;
We yet may lead them back,
With holy words, and tones of love,
From misery's thorny track.

Forget not, brother, thou hast sinned,
And sinful yet mayst be;
Deal gently with the erring heart,
As God has dealt with thee.

—Henry A. Tuckett.

Quoting from James:

If any man among you seem to be religious, and bridleth not his tongue, . . . this man's religion is vain. (James 1:26.)

We are benefited by a discourse of this character only as we make use of it in our course of life, being governed by its precepts. Is there anything of merit in this message, brethren and sisters, worthy of serious thought and reflection? If so, I shall be happy, and I pray the Lord will sanctify it to our mutual good and benefit, in the name of Jesus Christ. Amen.

President George Albert Smith:

One of our brethren is here who acted as mission president of the Danish Mission during the war, Brother Orson B. West. We would be glad to have Brother West come quickly to the stand and tell us about his experiences over there and bear his testimony if he feels like it.

ELDER ORSON B. WEST

Former Acting President of the Danish Mission

My brothers and sisters, may I be excused if I am not able to express my thoughts in the way I really would like. I am very humble, standing before this vast congregation, and I pray that my Heavenly Father will be able to help me. You who have been on foreign missions know what it is to speak in a foreign tongue. I have addressed a congregation in English only a couple of times before and I hope that I may be able to express myself in a pleasing manner unto you.

I bring greetings from Denmark, from President Alma L. Petersen, the missionaries and the saints. I want to tell you that as far as I am able to determine I do not think there is a better or more loyal people to the Church than are the Danish saints. They pray for the General Authorities every day, morning and night, and they are very loyal to them. You know we were separated for about four years, and the saints managed, directed their affairs in a marvelous way, but still we were very happy to receive President Ezra Taft Benson of the European Mission and his secretary, Elder Frederick Babbel, in February last year. You can imagine our happiness and our joy to receive those two servants of the Lord and they made a wonderful impression upon the saints of Denmark. We had a very fine opportunity to have them speak in several branches of the Danish Mission, and wherever they went they made our saints happy and glad, and we even had the opportunity of an interview over the radio with President Benson, so that most of the Danish people heard this man of God.

I am very grateful to be here today. This is my first visit to America and you do not know what it means to be here. We who have embraced the gospel in far-off lands have always been looking forward to the day we could arrive in Zion and this has been my privilege and my family's privilege. I want to tell you that we feel right at home and we shall never forget the welcome which we have received, and to be here in this Tabernacle is an experience which I cannot express in words.

I am very, very grateful that I had the opportunity to come here, and my only desire is to go forward and serve the Lord and be a better man from day to day. We all have our shortcomings, our faults, but I know if we try to live up to the standards of the Church we will be blessed so that we will be able to do the things which the Lord requires of us. You cannot understand how I feel to be in this historic building, of which I have heard so much, to be on this stand and looking into the faces of this vast congregation and into the faces of the General Authorities of the Church. I do know that they are men of God and I hope I shall always hold them in high esteem as such. I hope that they will visit frequently the missions in Europe. You do not know what it means to the people there to have one of the General Authorities visit them. People talk about it for days before the brethren arrive; they look forward to their coming with interest and with a desire to learn more from these men of God.

I am very happy to be a member of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints. I do know that this is the work of God and I hope and pray that we all may be faithful unto the end. The Lord has said that those who are faithful to the end will be saved in the Kingdom of God.

May the Lord bless this marvelous Church, this great Church. May President George Albert Smith and his counselors, the Quorum of the Twelve, the Seventies and all who have responsible positions be blessed of him is my humble prayer, in the name of Jesus Christ. Amen.

President George Albert Smith:

You have just listened to Orson B. West who during the war was Acting President of the Danish Mission.

If Brother Max Zimmer will now come to the stand we shall be glad to have him do so. Brother Zimmer was the Acting President of the Swiss Mission during the war and during the past year was acting Mission President of the West German Mission. A week ago he was over there. This morning he is here.

ELDER MAX ZIMMER

Former Acting President of the West German Mission and Also of the Swiss Mission

My brethren and sisters, this makes me very humble to stand before such a large audience, realizing my poor English and feeling how difficult it is to express my thoughts and feelings in the language which I have at my command.

I want to take this opportunity, first of all, to bring you the greetings and love of the eight thousand saints of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints in the West German Mission, and more especially to bring their thankfulness and to express my own appreciation of the wonderful help you have rendered to these poor saints over there through the Church Welfare plan.

As you all know, these saints have been faithful during the war. There may have been a few exceptions, but they only confirm the rule. A vast majority have been very faithful and true to the Church. They have suffered much. When I think of the change within a week or so to me, it is like being in another world. After having traveled about eighteen months through about a hundred destroyed cities, and then coming to this beautiful city of Salt Lake, entirely untouched by the war, with happy people all over, people who are abundantly blessed by our Heavenly Father, it is truly like being in another world.

The Latter-day Saints in the West German Mission, over which it was my privilege to preside about a year, even though in many cases they have been stripped almost of every earthly possession and in many cases they have lost loved ones, they were happy because they had one thing in their possession which means more to them than anything else,—their testimony of the divinity of this great work, their positive knowledge that the heavens have been opened to the Prophet Joseph Smith, that he was a chosen servant of the Lord to restore the true gospel of Jesus Christ and that this work is to prepare for the second coming of Christ. This testimony was more to our saints in Germany than anything else, and those who lost almost everything held that they still were not poor for they have the knowledge of the gospel. They realize that.

So far as temporal conditions are concerned, they have suffered a great deal but now since shipments of Church Welfare have arrived there, the Church has contributed very liberally, and I may say in regard to the food situation, our saints in Germany are well taken care of. So far as clothing and shoes, underwear and other things are concerned, as Brother Stover has mentioned in his letter, they are still suffering, but I am happy to know that even such things are on the way and in a short time they can be distributed among our saints.

I only wish, brethren and sisters, you had had opportunity to be in our fast meetings, for instance, after these shipments arrived and were distributed, and to see the happy faces, to feel the spirit of thankfulness and appreciation of those who have been benefitted by your liberal contributions through the Church Welfare plan. I never realized so much that we had one great brotherhood as I did when these shipments came in. We always knew that we are all brethren and sisters, all children of our Heavenly Father, but now we have experienced that we have been blessed with the manifestation of this spirit of brotherhood and even among our friends who are non-members of the Church, I think this has been the most impressive thought during the last year, that the Mormons are really one great family, that when they say Brother and Sister to one another, they mean what they say. It is not a common thing with them; it is practical Christianity. Many times in the mission field we have discussed this question as to whether or not Christianity has failed, especially during the past ten years. How happy we are to be in a position to give our testimony from our own experience that the true Church really practices Christianity as this Church has done. I am very thankful, more than I can express, for this manifestation of brotherhood in this great Church.

I am grateful also for the blessing of association with men like the General Authorities of the Church. I was in London a week ago and had the privilege of meeting President Alma Sonne. I have known President Benson, I have traveled with him, I have been with him in high places, in his interviews with General McNarney in Frankfurt, and with General Clay in Berlin. I listened to the conversations he had with these men and I never had the impression that he was inferior to them, but he had some influence with him which was above the spirit and influence of these men. I know that the Lord has been with him; otherwise he could not have done what he has done in the re-opening of the European Mission, overcoming so many obstacles and handicaps and putting us on our feet again in these missions in Europe.

I know without doubt that this is the Church of Jesus Christ, that the men at the head of this Church are really what we believe they are, brothers and apostles of the Lord Jesus Christ, in a real sense of the word, which we know from the New Testament and from the revelations of God. I know that this gospel of Jesus Christ makes men and women happy if they obey the commandments of the Lord. I know that one of the best things we can do in this Church is to cultivate the spirit and the attitude of brotherhood, that we may continue to be a great Church of brothers and sisters, realizing that we are all children of our Heavenly Father, trying to help each other and in this way trying to come nearer to our Heavenly Father.

That this may be the case more in the future even than in the past is my humble prayer in the name of Jesus Christ. Amen.

President George Albert Smith:

You have just listened to Brother Max Zimmer, Acting Mission President of the Swiss Mission during the war, and during the past year Acting Mission President of the West German Mission, who left London about a week ago on his way here. Hearing these humble men who have come from other lands and feeling of their spirit and realizing what a change has come to them, how grateful we ought to be for our homes in the valleys of these great mountains, far from the sorrows and distresses of those destroyed buildings, wrecked families and sorrowful people, many of whom may never again know what it is to be happy while they live in mortality.

After the singing and the closing prayer, this Conference will adjourn until 2 o'clock this afternoon. The afternoon session will be broadcast over KSL at Salt Lake City, KSUB at Cedar City, and KEYY of Pocatello. The audience should try to be back and in their seats not later than ten minutes before 2 o'clock.

The choir singing for this session of the Conference has been by the Relief Society Singing Mothers of the Salt Lake and Central Utah regions, with Sister Florence Jepperson Madsen conducting and Elder Frank W. Asper at the organ.

How they have rejoiced our souls with their lovely music, and we thank them for it.

They will now sing for us, "O That Thou Hadst Hearkened," by Sullivan, after which the closing prayer will be offered by Lawrence T. Dahl, President of the West Jordan Stake.

Singing by the Singing Mothers, "O That Thou Hadst Hearkened," by Sullivan.

President George Albert Smith:

I just want to call your attention to the marvelous age in which we live. This beautiful lei from the Hawaiian Islands could have been there yesterday, and I suppose it was, and here we enjoy it with all its fragrance.

President Lawrence T. Dahl of the West Jordan Stake offered the closing prayer.

Conference adjourned until 2 p.m.

FIRST DAY AFTERNOON MEETING

The second session of the Conference convened at 2 p.m., Friday, April 4th. Again the building was filled to capacity.

President George Albert Smith:

This is the second session of the 117th Annual Conference of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints. We are convened in the Tabernacle on Temple Square, Salt Lake City, Utah, and the house is packed.

There are present on the stand this afternoon all the General Authorities of the Church, except Elder Alma Sonne who is in Europe in charge of the European Mission.

The proceedings of this session will be broadcast over KSL at Salt Lake City, KSUB at Cedar City, and KDYY at Pocatello.

The singing of this session will be by the Relief Society Singing Mothers of the Salt Lake and Central Utah regions. Sister Florence Jepperson Madsen will conduct their singing. Elder Frank W. Asper will be at the organ.

We will begin the services by the Singing Mothers rendering "How Lovely Are Thy Dwellings," by Little; soloist, Sister Shirley Westover.

The opening prayer will be offered by President Lamont B. Gunderson of the East Mill Creek Stake.

---

The Singing Mothers sang, "How Lovely Are Thy Dwellings."

Elder Lamont B. Gunderson, President of the East Mill Creek Stake, offered the opening prayer.

The Singing Mothers sang, "All In the April Evening," by Diack.

ELDER S. DILWORTH YOUNG

Of the First Council of the Seventy

I have been much impressed, as I read in the history of the Church, by the simple faith and desires of the men who began things over a hundred years ago. When they discovered that Joseph Smith the Prophet had access to their Heavenly Father, there were many men who came to him and asked if he would inquire of the Lord what was desired in their behalf.

THE WORD OF THE LORD TO EARLY MEMBERS

I suspect this importuning sometimes embarrassed the Prophet and at times made him impatient, but he did many times go to the Lord on behalf of his friends and his brethren, and he invited the Lord to tell him what they should do in the kingdom of our God. His father, Joseph Smith, Senior, inquired. Oliver Cowdery invited instruction. Hyrum Smith, his brother, Joseph Knight, Senior, David Whitmer, Thomas B. Marsh, Ezra Thayre, and Northrup Sweet were among those who received reply. Nearly all of these brethren, in the course of the Lord's instruction to them, were told that if they wanted to serve God, they were called to do the work and that now was the time. They should thrust in their sickles and reap while the day lasted, for there were many souls that were ready to be harvested. The main burden of the refrain which I catch from the spirit of the Prophet Joseph's utterance is that if men desire to be called, they may be called. I believe that is the way it has always been.

The other day in the Tooele Stake a sister came to me and said that a certain member of the stake wanted to go on a mission but that the family concerned was sitting back waiting for the inspiration of the Lord to tell the bishop of this particular person's desire. Well, I think the Lord will eventually inspire the bishop to feel that way about it, but it would be a lot easier if the person concerned would go to the bishop and express his desires, thereby putting himself in line with what these brethren did over a hundred years ago.

What does the Lord want in our behalf? He wants us to serve him and do all things which his servants, the leaders of the Church, ask.

THE SPECIAL CALLING OF THE SEVENTIES

May I say a few words to the seventy concerning this matter? It is that particular group which I have a desire to help. The seventy are the missionaries of the Church, if I read the Doctrine and Covenants correctly. I do not mean by that that they are the only missionaries but that they are called especially to be missionaries. When a man becomes a seventy and is ordained as such, he ought to begin immediately to develop his powers of expression, to understand the principles of the gospel, and to seek every opportunity he can to express himself, that he might some day be able to fill his calling and do missionary work. I can recall about fifteen or sixteen years ago when President J. Golden Kimball came to Ogden and asked all of the seventy assembled in the Ogden Stake how many would go on missions if they could. All raised their hands. Then he wanted to know further how many would be willing to die for the gospel's sake, if necessary. Again all raised their hands. I thought at that time, how in the world can all these men go on missions? They work; they have families; there is no way they can leave their dependents behind and let the Church take care of them. How can they fill that particular call? Now it is easy to see. There are missions in the stakes of Zion. Each stake has its mission. From these missions the missionaries are prepared and are sent to the non-members of the Church who should hear the gospel, should have it preached to them, should be given an opportunity to accept it. Any man who is a seventy, who wants to do missionary work and thus fill his calling as a seventy should waste no time in reporting to his stake president that he so desires to do it, and in the due time of the Lord, as these brethren are inspired, they will call this seventy to the work of the ministry and to the mission field. Let it not be thought that this work is not important. One of the most fruitful places that we do missionary work is among our people right here at home. There were two brethren in my stake who went out on a missionary call. Before they went out, they said to themselves and to the Lord, "We shall give every minute of our time away from our business to this work," and so they did. Soon they were spending five evenings a week of their time visiting people and teaching the gospel to them. Within sixteen months after holding a series of cottage meetings and promulgating the truths of the gospel to their neighbors, they had baptized, after conversion, the unbelievable number of twenty-two adults—twenty-two adults in sixteen months! You can find no more fruitful field than that in this day anywhere, and those brethren told me that as they went down the street to do their tracting, very often they felt the whisperings of the spirit saying to them, "Turn into this place," and having turned into that place, they were able to convert the family. I cannot recall ever hearing my father or any of my relatives telling any better stories of missionary experiences than that. That happened right at home, right among our own people. These brethren did not spend any money going into the mission field. They were right where they could be every night with their families after getting through with their evening's labors. The Lord blessed their labors, and he will bless your labors.

So, brethren of the seventies' quorum, (there are about somewhere in the neighborhood of twenty thousand of you), when you say to the presidency of your stake, "What may we do?" when you inquire of the Lord what he desires of you, perhaps the reply will be, "We shall call you to a mission, as your office requires; and we shall ask you to spend what spare time you have in teaching the gospel to our friends who do not belong." If such a call should come to you, it is my personal hope that you will accept and go forth with your might and reap while the day lasts. I believe that is the call to us as seventies. It matters not whether we go far afield or whether we stay at home, so long as the call comes, and our brethren who preside want us to do it.

I have only a desire to preach the gospel personally. I am to be sent away from you for awhile. All I can promise in that respect is that I shall do my best to build upon the foundations laid by those who shall have been my predecessors, and to teach the people of the New England States, through your lovely missionaries, the gospel of Jesus Christ, for I know it is true. It is an honor to me to be sent to do this thing with your boys and your girls, who are so anxious to tell the world, as they know and I know, that Joseph Smith was a Prophet; that through the power of our Lord and Savior Jesus Christ, Joseph Smith was able to bring back the gospel of Jesus Christ to the earth. This is my hope and my prayer in the name of Jesus. Amen.

ELDER MATTHEW COWLEY
Of the Council of the Twelve Apostles

President Smith first announced me as Matthias F. Cowley. He has been dead for a number of years, but nothing would please me more than to have him speak through me at this time. I only wish that I were as well prepared to propound the scriptures and explain the gospel after my many years in the missionary service as my father was at the age of nineteen when he first went to the Southern States, at which time he knew by heart four hundred eighty-three passages of scripture.

I am very grateful to be at this great conference today. I am grateful for the privilege I have to engage in the missionary service in this Church wherever the call may take me.

VISIT TO THE LEPER SAINTS

A week ago yesterday I was in a little settlement known as Kaulapapa on the Island of Molokai in the Hawaiian group. That is a leper settlement. I flew over there to spend an afternoon with our leper Saints. It was my first experience with those people. I went expecting and apprehending that I would be depressed. I left there knowing that I had been exalted. I attended a service with those people. I heard a chorus sing our beautiful anthem, conducted by an aged man, blinded by the dread disease. I heard them sing, "We Thank Thee, O God, for a Prophet," and as long as I live, that song will never ring in my soul with such beautiful harmony as came from the hearts and the voices of those emaciated lepers of that colony.

PRESENT DAY PIONEERS

When I heard the brethren from Europe speak this morning, my heart went out to the people who live in those countries. We are here today paying tribute to the great pioneers who came here a hundred years ago to make this desert blossom as the rose. I have often wondered if we still had great pioneers in this great Church, as great as those who came here a hundred years ago. After hearing the two brethren from Europe this morning, I am reassured. We have just as great pioneers living today in this Church as we had one hundred years ago. When we think of those who pioneered through the great war years of Europe, who have suffered the horror and the devasation of their homes and cities, but who have pioneered through all those experiences faithfully and devotedly to the gospel of Jesus Christ without such leadership as our pioneers had when they came to this desert wasteland, I say we still have as great pioneers in the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints as we ever had.

FASTING AND FAST OFFERINGS

I have a message for you, my brothers and sisters. It is based upon one of the things that was referred to in the statistics this morning, and I offer this message in connection with our people in the war-torn areas of Europe who suffer: That message has to do with fast offerings. We heard it read here that our death rate is very, very low. If we are honest in the payments of fast offerings, we are living miracles. We are not obeying the principle of the fast, and it is a principle of the gospel of Jesus Christ. We are not paying to the Lord and to the Saints in Europe who have neither bedding nor clothing nor food, that which God expects us to pay. We are paying less, I suppose, than ten cents a month in fast offering. Does that represent the cost of the food we are eating or that we are refraining from eating on fast day? All you have to do is take one look at me and know that I know that I owe more than a dollar a month fast offering to this Church, and yet it was announced here that we had not reached our goal. What is it, one dollar a year? I don't know. The goal is, brothers and sisters, an honest offering for that which we refrain from eating in accordance with the plan of God on the first Sabbath of each month.

We cannot appreciate the suffering, the wants of our brothers and sisters in the countries of Europe unless we fast and fast often, and we need to fast! The great pioneers who came here were fasting pioneers. They were not men and women of financial means. This building, the great building east of here, all of this temple block was built, not with money, but with faith, with privation, and the foundation of it all is righteousness, good character, initiative, independence, self-reliance. If we are building upon the foundation which our pioneer fathers laid for us here, we will not build better buildings; we will build better characters. I know that this is the greatest force in all the world to develop character, to bring righteousness into the lives of men and women. Christ said, "Whosoever committeth sin is the servant of sin," (John 8:34) and when man becomes the servant of sin, he loses his freedom. Men who drink say they have the right to drink, that is their freedom, but too often they lose that freedom by becoming the servant of drink and not the master of it. Our freedom, brothers and sisters, is the freedom which our pioneers brought here, the freedom to do what God wants us to do and what we ought to do, rather than what we ourselves desire and are pleased to do, and it is our responsibility to hold high that great torch of freedom founded upon righteousness which those great parents of yours and of mine carried here into this valley.

Now, in conclusion, may I say that we are all here in fulfilment of the promise of God through his prophets, that in the last days would the mountain of the Lord's house be established in the tops of the mountains and be exalted above the hills and that all nations would flow unto it. We are all here today in fulfilment of that prophecy, and yet throughout the world we have thousands of Latter-day Saints, in Germany, Scandinavia, in the islands of the sea, who have a burning desire in their hearts to fulfil that same prophecy just as you and I have fulfilled it, and their eyes are looking up, and their hopes are reaching out to the tops of the mountains, and the only way we have of bringing them here to us is by reaching out to them where they are and seeing that they do not suffer, that they do not want for food, that they do not want for clothing.

We came here to these valleys to be sustained on the foundations of this Church. We must extend now into all the world the same sustenance which we have received here. Pay your fast offerings, obey the principles of the welfare plan, and let us take the mountain of the Lord's house and all its gifts and blessings to the four corners of the earth, I pray in the name of Jesus Christ. Amen.

ELDER BRUCE McCONKIE
Of the First Council of the Seventy

I know that Jesus is the Son of the Living God and that he was crucified for the sins of the world. I know that he came into the world with the definitely appointed mission to be the Redeemer and the Savior of men. I know of him, as he himself said to the Nephites:

... I came into the world to do the will of my Father, because my Father sent me. And my Father sent me that I might be lifted up upon the cross. ... (III Nephi 27:13, 14.)

A TESTIMONY OF THE RESTORATION OF THE GOSPEL

This I believe to be the great burden of the message of the restored gospel.

I believe and know also, by the revelations of the Holy Ghost to my soul, that Joseph Smith was the instrument in his hands of restoring in this day the fulness of those principles and authorities and graces whereby you and I can go back into our Father's kingdom. I testify and know of Joseph Smith, as the inspired document which announced his martyrdom states:

Joseph Smith, the Prophet and Seer of the Lord, has done more, save Jesus only, for the salvation of men in this world, than any other man that ever lived in it.

I think that this is the second great message of the restored gospel in this day. And in addition to that, because a testimony must be brought up to date if it is to have any saving force and value in the lives of men, I testify that I know that the keys of the kingdom have continued with the Saints from the days of Joseph Smith, and that George Albert Smith who stands at the head today is the Lord's anointed and the Living Oracle.

It is all well and good to sing praises to the ancient prophets and build sepulchres to their names, but there is no salvation in that fact standing alone. If men in this world in our day want to go back to our Father's kingdom, it is incumbent upon them to come to the Living Oracle and have exercised in their behalf the authority of the priesthood. They must accept and live in harmony with the counsels of those men whom God has chosen today.

... he that receiveth my servants receiveth me. (D. & C. 84:36.)

And on the other hand if we do not receive the servants of the Lord, we do not receive the Lord.

HOW A KNOWLEDGE OF THE TRUTH IS OBTAINED

In my judgment one of the first cornerstones of all righteousness in this world is for a person to get for himself a knowledge, by the revelations of the Holy Ghost to his soul, that this work in which we are engaged is true. How does one get such a knowledge? God is no respecter of persons and he, through the Holy Ghost, will reveal to every person who abides the law upon which the receipt of that revelation is predicated, a knowledge that this work is true. The first step in complying with that law is for a person to desire to know. Men are given according to their desires, and unless they desire in their hearts to know that this work is true, that Jesus is the Christ and that Joseph Smith was a Prophet of God, they will never exert the effort, and they will never comply with the law which will entitle them to know. And I think that the second step is that they must study the principles of the kingdom. The Lord does not pour a testimony into a vacuum. Men have to know what the doctrines of the kingdom are. Men are saved no faster than they gain knowledge of Jesus Christ and the principles of salvation. No man can be saved in ignorance of Jesus Christ and the laws of salvation. Christ said to the Jews:

Search the scriptures: for in them ye think ye have eternal life: and they are they which testify of me. (John 5:39.)

He said in our day as the preface to his Book of Commandments:

Search these commandments, for they are true and faithful, and the prophecies and promises which are in them shall all be fulfilled.

We have to learn of the doctrines of the kingdom if we ever in this world expect to gain a revelation that those doctrines are true.

And the third step is that we must practice the principles which we learn. The Lord said:

... My doctrine is not mine, but his that sent me. If any man will do his will, he shall know of the doctrine, whether it be of God, or whether I speak of myself. (John 7:16-17.)

We must practice the principles which we learn and make them a living part of our lives.

And as a fourth step, because a testimony comes by the revelations of the Holy Ghost and not from any other source, we must pray to the Lord in humility and in faith and beseech him to reveal to us whether this work is true or whether it is not. In writing of the things that were on the gold plates, Moroni said this:

And when ye shall receive these things, I would exhort you that ye would ask God the eternal Father, in the name of Christ, if these things are not true; and if ye shall ask with a sincere heart, with real intent, having faith in Christ, he will manifest the truth of it unto you, by the power of the Holy Ghost.

And by the power of the Holy Ghost ye may know the truth of all things. (Moroni 10:4, 5.)

Now there is not a person, a God-fearing and righteous person in this world, who cannot come to this kingdom and by obedience to that law, embracing those four steps, gain for himself a knowledge that this work is true, a knowledge that Jesus is the Christ, that Joseph Smith was the head of this dispensation and that the keys of the kingdom are with the Saints today. The Church has not strayed away. This is the Lord's work. This Church is literally the kingdom of God on earth, and the Lord's hand is in it, and there is inspiration at the head. There is no peace, and there is no safety; there is no salvation or solace or comfort or anything like these for the Latter-day Saints outside the kingdom. On the outside there is darkness and anguish of spirit and turmoil of heart and everything that upsets a man and that leads him on the broad course that goes down. But there are peace and joy for us here in this life, and there is a hope of eternal life for us hereafter, if we stand by the Church, and if we hearken to the counsels that come from the Living Oracles today. They are the voice of God to the Latter-day Saints and to the world in the day in which we live.

The first thing that a person ought to do is to know for himself that this work is true, and after he gets that kind of knowledge in his heart, he will have a desire to work the works of righteousness. He will want to do as Alma said at the waters of Mormon. To mourn with those that mourn; and to comfort those that stand in need of comfort, and to stand as a witness of God at all times, and in all things, and in all places, and then having that desire in his heart, he will want to covenant in the waters of baptism to do righteously in return for having the Spirit of the Lord poured out upon him in abundance.

And I think that that covenant is the second step in the plan of salvation, and that the third step is to press forward with a steadfastness in Christ, having a perfect brightness of hope and a love of God and of all men, and then as Nephi wrote:

If ye shall press forward, feasting upon the words of Christ, and endure to the end, behold, thus saith the Father: Ye shall have eternal life. (II Nephi 31:20.)

THE LATTER-DAY SAINTS A BLESSED PEOPLE

On one occasion Christ preached a sermon where the doctrine was very strong, the sermon on the bread of life. After he had done it, the multitudes, including the disciples, began to fall away, and he turned, and I suppose it was with a note of sadness, said to the Twelve:

"Will ye also go away?"

And then Simon Peter who was to be his mouthpiece, the Living Oracle for that day, spoke up and said:

Lord, to whom shall we go? thou hast the words of eternal life. And we believe and are sure that thou art that Christ, the Son of the living God. (John 6:68, 69.)

That is the condition that the Latter-day Saints are in today. We have the revelations of heaven. God has spoken in this day. Light and knowledge have been poured out upon us, and there is no place in all this world that we can find peace or solace or comfort—unless we keep the commandments of God and desire to do the things that he wants us to do.

I do not know anything in this world that is greater than to have the constant companionship of the Holy Ghost, and that is the gift of the Holy Ghost, and every Saint has been promised that in connection with his baptism; and I do not think there is anything greater in eternity than to have the companionship of those of the celestial world, to have exaltation and eternal lives, and that is the thing that has been promised to the Saints on condition that they obey the law, that they keep the commandments of God.

Now there is nothing in this world that I would rather do than have the privilege of preaching the gospel and of devoting such time and abilities as the Lord may bless me with to the building up of his kingdom. I am grateful beyond any ability that I have to express for the privilege of being a member of the First Council of the Seventy and mingling with you Latter-day Saints and traveling in the stakes of Zion, and I pray that the Lord will bless me and will bless you and pour out his spirit upon the Saints, that we may keep the commandments of God and be entitled to the great blessings that flow therefrom, and I ask it in the name of Jesus Christ. Amen.

BISHOP LEGRAND RICHARDS

Presiding Bishop of the Church

This is the year that we are paying special tribute and honor to our pioneers. Many of us are descended from them. They made great sacrifices to come to these valleys of the mountains. They left their homes, and President Grant used to say they left willingly because they had to. They could not bring very much with them in the way of this world's goods, but they brought something that was more precious than all else in this world. They brought with them faith in the Living God and in the Prophet of this dispensation and in the Holy Scriptures.

THE LAST DISPENSATION

We are told that by faith the worlds were formed, and of the many mighty things that have been wrought in days past by the prophets of God. We live in a day that the prophets of old have foreseen, when many of the marvelous things that God had in store for his children should come to pass. In the words of Paul:

That in the dispensation of the fulness of times he might gather together in one all things in Christ, both which are in heaven, and which are on earth; even in him. (Eph. 1:10.)

And God never decreed such a fulness of gospel dispensation for any other period of time.

Some of you will remember reading the words of Roger Babson in Fundamentals of Prosperity, when he told of an interview he had with the president of the Argentine Republic when the president asked him how he accounted for the fact that notwithstanding that South America had so many more natural resources than North America, North America had made so much greater progress than South America. Roger Babson asked the president what he thought was the reason, and he said he had given it much thought, and he decided that it was because those who went to South America went in search of gold and those who came to North America came in search of God.

And so, brothers and sisters, it brings us back to a realization that "except the Lord build the house" as the prophet of old said, "they labor in vain that build it." God has been building this land of North America, and not only that, but he has also been building the work that has been accomplished here in these valleys of the mountains.

The Saints were never discouraged because the Prophet of this dispensation had said that they should suffer much persecution and should continue to be driven until they should ultimately come to the Rocky Mountains, and many of them should live to see the the Saints become a mighty people here in the valleys of the Rocky Mountains. It was this prophetic utterance from the voice of him whom they knew to be a Prophet of God that encouraged them to go on and to meet every obstacle that came in their way.

The Saints had their enemies, and they had great persecutions to meet at their hands before they came into these valleys. The evil one is still alert. He is seeking to lead away the souls of men and women from following after God. And right in our own community; in this land that was established by our pioneer fathers who came here in search of God that they might worship Almighty God according to the dictates of their own consciences, there are many things transpiring, seeking to lead away the hearts of our young people, particularly, from believing the things that were so precious and so dear to the hearts of our pioneer fathers.

A COLLEGE MAN'S QUESTION

I was talking with a man recently who in attending one of our state colleges, heard the professor in the room propound this question to his class: "Is there anyone in this class who has any idea whatever that there is any way possibly to foretell the events of the future?"

He was a college man; he was their professor; and there was not one of the students who dared take issue with him. But I have asked myself, and I think every father and mother in Israel ought to ask themselves, what would my boy or girl have said if that question had been propounded to them. They may not have given the answer, but in their own souls they would have had an answer. And when no one dared answer, the professor said, "I am glad to see there is no one in this room who follows the traditions of their parents in this regard." Then he added, "Ninety percent of the things taught you by your parents is false."

Many of our young people would not have been influenced by the statement of that professor, but there are others who might have been. As parents we should be close enough to our children to know that their faith would enable them to withstand even such an attack as that on the teachings of their parents. As far as I am concerned, I do not like to see our tax money go to pay the salaries of such apostles of infidelity, and I believe that not only do the Latter-day Saints feel this way about it but also most of our Christian neighbors and friends. It is not their right to come into our schools and destroy the faith of our children.

Peter of old said:

We have also a more sure word of prophecy; whereunto ye do well that ye take heed, as unto a light that shineth in a dark place, until the day dawn, and the day star arise in your hearts. (II Peter 1:19.)

And as far as I am concerned there is nothing in this world more sure than the word of prophecy. The Redeemer of the world said that,

Heaven and earth shall pass away, but my words shall not pass away. (Matthew 24:35.)

And our boys and girls ought to realize this and know that the words of the prophets will be fulfilled.

MANY PROPHECIES FULFILLED

You Latter-day Saints who live in these valleys of the mountains and see this magnificent temple here, on this block, know that it is here in fulfilment of the words of the prophets Isaiah and Micah, when they said:

And it shall come to pass in the last days, that the mountain of the Lord's house shall be established in the top of the mountains, and shall be exalted above the hills, and all nations shall flow unto it.

And many people shall go and say, Come ye, and let us go up to the mountain of the Lord, to the house of the God of Jacob; and he will teach us of his ways, and we will walk in his paths: for out of Zion shall go forth the law, and the word of the Lord from Jerusalem. (Isaiah 2:2, 3. See also Micah 4:1, 2.)

Is there any unbelief in this world that can stop the God of Israel from fulfilling such promises as this? Every time I walk around this temple, I wonder what these prophets of old could have seen that could have been more grand and glorious and beautiful than the temple of God established in the tops of these mountains. These prophets did not only say that it should be established here, but they also said that men and women should come from all nations of the earth, and this gathering here today is a witness of the divinity of their prophetic words.

If there were time, I would like to show you what the prophets saw about the development of these valleys of the mountains, the fulfilment of which is recorded in the history that has since been written by the coming of the pioneers. Isaiah saw rivers of water flowing down from the high places which, as far as I can interpret, is nothing more than the great reservoirs that have been constructed in our mountains, and he saw fountains in the midst of the valleys—thousands of acres of desert lands are now being irrigated from flowing wells, and "rivers in the desert," and when you travel up and down these states, and particularly in Idaho, and see the great service canals led out of the Snake River, they are literally rivers of water. Jeremiah saw the people "... come and sing in the height of Zion," (Jer. 31:12.) For nearly eighteen years this splendid Tabernacle Choir has been singing over the radio to all the world out of the heights of Zion, and where else can you look to find fulfilment of these words of prophecy?

The thirty-first chapter of Jeremiah is but "Mormon" history written three thousand years ago when the Lord said through Jeremiah:

For there shall be a day, that the watchman upon the mount Ephraim shall cry, Arise ye, and let us go up to Zion unto the Lord our God. (Jer. 31:6.)

Then he indicates that the Lord would gather them from the coasts of the earth, and with them the blind and the lame, the woman with child, a great company should return thither. They should come with weeping and supplications, and he promised that he would cause them to walk by the rivers of waters in a straight way, wherein they should not stumble. And when the pioneers came to these valleys of the mountains, they traveled some six hundred miles along the Platte and North Platte rivers, fulfilling literally the words of Jeremiah in the gathering of the people to Ephraim's mountains, and they did come as a great multitude and with them their sick and their lame and the blind and the woman with child, and they came sorrowing because they were driven from their homes. And how did Jeremiah know all this three thousand years ago if, according to the teacher I have referred to, there is no way men can know things before they actually transpire?

And then read the final climax of that great gathering, how the Lord should turn their sorrow into rejoicing and their young and old should rejoice together in the dance, and they should sorrow no more at all, and he should satiate the souls of his priests with fatness (See Jer. 31:12-14); and I want to tell you that even though the elders of Israel are not paid for their services, there are no ministers of religion in all the world as well paid as the elders of this Church.

God grant that we may have the faith to carry on as our pioneer fathers, and that we may have the power to plant that faith in the hearts of our children, that we may be worthy of our noble heritage, I pray in the name of Jesus Christ. Amen.

ELDER HAROLD B. LEE

Of the Council of the Twelve Apostles

Recently I had a conversation with a sister who had heard a funeral sermon in which it had seemed to her the doctrine had been taught that it was possible to know what one's place was to be in the eternal worlds, even before the day of judgment spoken of by John the Revelator when he said he saw the dead, small and great, stand before God to be judged, every man according to the deeds done in the flesh. And then she asked the question: "How is it possible for one to know what the place of an individual is to be before the resurrection takes place?"

A QUESTION AS TO LIFE AFTER DEATH

That question suggested some important scriptures. As I thought about what she had asked, I found that apparently Alma had a similar question propounded to him for he made this explanation to his son Corianton:

And it is requisite with the justice of God that men should be judged according to their works; and if their works were good in this life, and the desires of their hearts were good, that they should also, at the last day, be restored unto that which is good.

And if their works are evil they shall be restored unto them for evil. . . . for as he has desired to do evil all the day long even so shall he have his reward of evil when the night cometh.

And so it is on the other hand. If he hath repented of his sins, and desired righteousness until the end of his days, even so he shall be rewarded unto righteousness.

... and thus they stand or fall; for behold, they are their own judges.
 ... [Italics author's.] (Alma 41:3-7.)

In agreement with that explanation of the Prophet Alma, the Lord, in revealing the place the world shall occupy at the day of the redemption of mankind, said:

That bodies who are of the celestial kingdom may possess it forever and ever; for, for this intent was it made and created, and for this intent are they sanctified.

And they who are not sanctified through the law which I have given unto you, even the law of Christ, must inherit another kingdom, even that of a terrestrial kingdom, or that of a telestial kingdom.

For he who is not able to abide the law of a celestial kingdom cannot abide a celestial glory.

And he who cannot abide the law of a terrestrial kingdom cannot abide a terrestrial glory.

And he who cannot abide the law of a telestial kingdom cannot abide a telestial glory; therefore he is not meet for a kingdom of glory. Therefore he must abide a kingdom which is not a kingdom of glory. (D. & C. 88:20-24.)

And finally we have the testimony of Amulek:

Ye cannot say, when ye are brought to that awful crisis, that I will repent, that I will return to my God. Nay, ye cannot say this; for that same spirit which doth possess your bodies at the time that ye go out of this life, that same spirit will have power to possess your body in that eternal world.

For behold, if ye have procrastinated the day of your repentance even until death, behold, ye have become subjected to the spirit of the devil, and he doth seal you his; therefore, the Spirit of the Lord hath withdrawn from you, and hath no place in you, and the devil hath all power over you; and this is the final state of the wicked. (Alma 34:34, 35.)

As I pondered those scriptures brought to my attention, as we discussed the question of this sister, these conclusions seemed clear to my mind. In the first place, we are our own judges of the place we shall have in the eternal world. Here and now in mortality, each one of us is having the opportunity of choosing the kind of laws we elect to obey. We are now living and obeying celestial laws that will make us candidates for celestial glory, or we are living terrestrial laws that will make us candidates for either terrestrial glory, or telestial law. The place we shall occupy in the eternal worlds will be determined by the obedience we yield to the laws of these various kingdoms during the time we have here in mortality upon the earth.

JESUS THE LIGHT OF THE WORLD

The Lord characterized himself as, "the light of the world." And in that testimony he declared further that those who would follow him would not walk in darkness but should have the light of life in the celestial world in the presence of the Lord.

The Master in his Sermon on the Mount has given us a high standard to attain:

Be ye therefore perfect, even as your Father which is in heaven is perfect (Matthew 5:48.)

And the scriptures declare to us that the prime purpose of the organization of the Church was for the "perfecting of the Saints." We have been told the way by which the Master attained to the fullness of his power. The Apostle Paul said:

Though he were a Son, yet learned he obedience by the things which he suffered;

And being made perfect, he became the author of eternal salvation unto all them that obey him. (Hebrew 5:8, 9.)

SACRIFICE AND SERVICE ARE SAVING PRINCIPLES

The very core of that which we call Christianity is to be found in the record of the writer of the gospel of John in which he quoted the Master's testimony of his own divine mission as the Savior of the world. These were his words:

For God so loved the world, that he gave his only begotten Son, that whosoever believeth in him should not perish, but have everlasting life. (John 3:16.)

Thus has been stated the highest service that we can render here in mortal life, the willingness to sacrifice of our own self for the welfare of others. The place of sacrifice and service in this sanctifying process of life was explained by the Prophet Joseph Smith:

A religion that does not require the sacrifice of all things never has power sufficient to produce the faith necessary unto life and salvation.

It was through sacrifice and this alone that God has ordained that men should enjoy eternal life. . . .

If we could apply to ourselves and to our own lives that principle by which we might lay hold upon that precious gift, we would be indeed wise. It was King Benjamin who taught his people in his closing address:

. . . when ye are in the service of your fellow beings ye are only in the service of your God. (Mosiah 2:17.)

That great principle of sacrifice and service was exemplified in that declaration of the Son of God which I have already quoted:

For God so loved the world, that he gave. . . . [Italics author's.]

Giving, then, is an expression of one's love, and when one truly gives himself, it is an evidence of an abiding love in that individual who thus is willing to give. The Master so loved mankind that he gave his life. It was he who said:

Friday, April 4

First Day

I am the good shepherd, and know my sheep, and am known of mine.

... and I lay down my life for the sheep.

No man taketh it from me, but I lay it down of myself. (John 10:14, 15, 18.)

The Prophet Joseph Smith so loved the truth that had been revealed to him that he was willing to sacrifice everything he possessed in the world, not withholding his life, all to the end that he might bear that testimony and that it might be heard by the nations of the earth. He characterized his life in the closing years in these words:

I am like a huge, rough stone rolling down from a high mountain; and the only polishing I get is when some corner gets rubbed off by coming in contact with something else, ... all hell knocking off a corner here and a corner there. Thus I will become a smooth and polished shaft in the quiver of the Almighty. ... (Teachings of the Prophet Joseph Smith, 1940 edition, p. 304.)

The pioneers, whom we honor in this centennial year, so loved the freedom to worship God according to the dictates of their own consciences that they gave up their homes, they gave up their lands and their possessions, left friends in the eastern lands, and came here to a forbidding mountain desert in order that their righteous desires might be realized.

A SERVICE MAN'S EXPERIENCE

I was out visiting a stake some months ago and was asked to interview some young men as prospective missionaries. I had been told by the stake president that one of the young men had, after a long period of hospitalization, recovered from a severe shell shock that he had received while in military service. As I faced this young man for the interview, I asked him, "Why do you want to go on this mission?"

He sat thoughtfully for several moments, and then he replied "When I went into the service, it was the first time I had ever been away from my home. I found conditions strange. I found temptation on every side and the invitation to sin. I needed strength to keep from sin, and I went before my Heavenly Father and prayed to him in faith to give me that strength to resist evil. God heard my prayer and gave me that strength. After the period of training was over and we neared the combat area, we heard the booming of the guns that foretold the message of death that was coming over constantly. I was afraid, and I was quaking all over. I prayed to God for courage, and he gave me courage, and there came over me a peace that I had never enjoyed before. When we got over in the Philippines, I was assigned to duty as an advance scout which meant I was ahead of the combat forces and sometimes was almost surrounded by the enemy. I knew that there was only one power in the earth that could save me, and I prayed to that power to protect me, to save my life, and God heard my prayer and returned me back to my company."

Then he said to me: "Brother Lee, I have all those things to be grateful for. It is little enough that I can do to go out now as an ambassador of Jesus Christ, to teach mankind these blessed things that I have received as a child in my home."

As I heard such an expression of faith from that young man, I contrasted it with those whom I had heard say that they thought by going into the mission field they would gain a training, they would see the world, they would gain valuable experience that would benefit them personally. I wish that our missionaries would exemplify in their service the standards of the great missionaries of the past, one of whom has passed from us since the last general conference. Brother Charles A. Callis lived and died the great missionary; aye, he gave his life and was willing to sacrifice all he possessed that he might teach this truth that was so precious to his soul.

HAPPINESS THROUGH SERVICE

Our young people come to the marriage altar having been taught in the public schools how important it is to make a certain adjustment in marriage, and many of them are very fearful about that adjustment. If these young people would understand that the application of that principle of sacrifice and service would be the answer to the problem of adjustment, their fears would be subdued. If they would resolve from the moment of their marriage, that from that time forth they would resolve and do everything in their power to please each other in things that are right, even to the sacrifice of their own pleasures, their own appetites, their own desires, the problem of adjustment in married life would take care of itself, and their home would indeed be a happy home. Great love is built on great sacrifice, and that home where the principle of sacrifice for the welfare of each other is daily expressed is that home where there abides a great love.

A selfish grasping for personal advantage does not come from the teachings of truth but comes rather from the teachings of him who is an enemy of truth. It is expressed in that scripture which tells us of the proposition that Satan made to our Heavenly Father:

... Behold, here am I, send me, I will be thy son, and I will redeem all mankind, that one soul shall not be lost, and surely I will do it; wherefore give me thine honor. (Moses 4:1.)

There was the selfishness and the exemplar of it before the world.

That man who is ambitious for personal gain and personal advantage is never a happy man, for before him always are the receding horizons of life that will ever mock his attempts at acquisition and conquest. That man who serves unselfishly is the man who is the happy man.

In the military service there were awarded ofttimes for outstanding accomplishment, national decorations and certificates of merit, and always with the citation were these suggestive words: "For meritorious service beyond the call of duty."

Therein lies the way by which we, too, can reach the highest goals and win the merited plaudits of our Heavenly Father. That which we do beyond the call of duty, beyond that for which we are compensated by material wealth is that which gives us the greatest joy in life.

As I look at the experiences of our brethren and hear their testimonies, I become persuaded of one great truth: Whenever the Lord has a great blessing for one of his children, he puts that son or daughter in the way to make a great sacrifice.

THE WAY OPENED THROUGH PRAYER

I sat down in the temple some years ago with a member of my high council as we went to our prayer circle one early Sunday morning. He told me of his financial difficulties that had almost destroyed his wealth, and he said: "I had no place to turn; I was about to lose everything I had in the world; finally, last week I went to my Heavenly Father and said to him, 'Father in heaven, if you will open up the way by which I can refinance myself, I will give more than my tithes and my offerings. I will make greater sacrifices for that if you will only help me to save what I have.'" And he said, "Brother Lee, I got up from my knees, and the way opened up in a most miraculous way. The Lord did his part, and I want you now to help me to do my part. Will you help me to find an avenue by which I can make greater sacrifices for this Church?"

Out of that man's planning there came one of the things that today has been a mark in the welfare activities of that stake. Today we have the welfare program that is giving us an avenue for sacrifice and for greater service. We have listened today to the reports and the appeals of the demands of this program. Surely we must not let these things fall upon deaf ears, for if in this day the Church rises to the call of the First Presidency, and if Church members sacrifice of their means, their time, their talents for the upbuilding of the kingdom of God, notwithstanding their own lives, if that were necessary, then there will come to this people, and to that individual who thus is willing to consecrate himself, the greatest joy that can come to the human soul.

God bless us that we might teach our youth the way by which this happiness will come, and let us plan our banquets for youth in such a way to give youth the opportunity to banquet their leaders rather than for their leaders to make all the sacrifice for the benefit of youth. Give them the joy of service and expect from them such sacrifices as may be necessary to build the faith necessary to lay hold upon eternal life, I pray humbly in the name of the Lord Jesus Christ. Amen.

President George Albert Smith:

If Brother Frederick W. Babel who recently returned from the European Mission, and during the time he was there acted as secretary to the mission president, will come to the stand we would be glad to hear from him, and we would like Brother Hilton A. Robertson of the Japanese Mission also to come to the stand if he is here. Brother Babel will now address us.

ELDER FREDERICK W. BABBEL

Formerly Secretary to the President of the European Mission

This is an inspiring sight, my brothers and sisters. I believe I feel very much like Brother Zimmer and Brother West felt this morning. This too, is my first General Conference in the Church. The past fourteen months in Europe have been a great experience and a very sobering one. I don't wish to take much of your time today by way of report, but I do wish to leave with you the assurance that this is the work of God. So many things have happened this past year to convince me of that. Ways were opened which seemed to be impossible for the accomplishment of the work that had to be done.

I know of no man in the Church better prepared and more richly endowed and blessed than was Elder Benson in the work which he had to undertake in Europe. In a matter of six months the work in Europe was firmly reestablished. Relief and welfare supplies were reaching our Saints. The necessary contacts had been made to permit missionaries to come back in numbers.

Today, in Europe, the people are distressed. It is such a joy and a happiness to see the Latter-day Saints, to look into their faces and see that something greater and deeper is burning within their bosoms than that which exists in the lives of those around them. Europe today stands almost on the threshold of another war. There is fear in the hearts of the people, there are rumors of war, rumors of impending disaster. One of the great agricultural leaders of Great Britain just recently made a pronouncement that Great Britain would probably have to face a dreadful year of famine this year. As I left Britain by plane, as far as the eye could see Britain was under water. It seems that even the elements have conspired against the people, and yet today Europe as a whole is spiritually sick. How they cry out to know that God lives! What they would give if their hearts could have the answer that is in the hearts of the Latter-day Saints.

President Sonne wished me to extend his love and greetings to you whom he cannot see today, and the Saints of Europe join in extending their love and their confidence to the General Authorities of the Church, and almost as one body they wish to sustain the servants of God.

One thing has developed from this mission for which I am deeply grateful, and that is a knowledge which has not come from men that this is the work of God; that God lives; that he speaks to his servants and that his servants go in humility before him to learn his mind and will concerning his children.

I have a testimony of the divinity of this gospel. There is no greater opportunity that can come to men and women in the Church than that of service to their God. This is the true way of life. This is the message that God wants all of his children in all parts of the world to hear, and we as Latter-day Saints have the responsibility of letting people hear it. It is not given to another people to give that message, and "Oh ye that embark in the service of God, see that you serve him with all of your might, mind and strength." I wish that you could realize some of the sufferings of the Saints in Europe; that you could see their devastated lives, their homes in shambles. Nearly ninety percent of our saints have lost their homes. Many of them have lost all of their possessions. Some have lost all of their loved ones. I recall in February, in Berlin, the arrival of a group of Germans from Poland, over five hundred of them were frozen to death and were unloaded from the cars by the side of the tracks, lifeless. They had been traveling in open cattle cars during that sub-zero weather. Conditions are horrible, and today people's hearts are failing them. They don't know where to turn. I think it is safe to say that our Saints in Europe, nearly thirty thousand strong, would arise as one man to come out of the world and to join with the Saints here if such were possible; yet they realize that under existing conditions it is not possible. They have striven with their might and with their strength to serve the God of this world who is Jesus Christ, and by serving him, to have his spirit with them, that they may stand in holy places in the days of his judgments, and have the assurance that even as they were preserved by his almighty hand during this past catastrophe, that they shall have the strength, perhaps, not to live through a new catastrophe but to return to God with clean hands and pure hearts and with thanksgiving in their souls for the gospel of Jesus Christ. For when men and women have everything taken away from them, nothing remaining but a testimony of the gospel, and yet they can arise with tears in their eyes and thank Almighty God for his blessings unto them, such people can see the beauties of the gospel of Jesus Christ in the lives of men and women.

God grant that we may have the strength to serve him with all of our heart, might, mind and strength, that we may give unselfishly of our time and our talents, that we may be true Latter-day Saints, true sons and daughters of God, for such we have been called who have entered into the waters of baptism and become a part of the kingdom of God on earth.

I testify that this is the work of God. I am grateful for that testimony and thank the Lord for the privilege of bearing it to you, my brethren and sisters, in all humility and in the name of Jesus Christ, Amen.

ELDER HILTON A. ROBERTSON

Former President of the Japanese Mission

My dear brothers and sisters, I am happy to be here this afternoon with you. I believe my name has been called out more than that of any other mission president, since my return from the mission field in 1940. It seems that during the sessions that I have been in attendance I have not been called upon to speak, and when I have been away my name has been called.

I read the inscription in the Central Union Church in the City of Honolulu. When the architect was preparing the church he wanted an inscription of not to exceed twenty letters which would be appropriate for all meetings, under all circumstances, with all nationalities of people, meetings such as we have today at Easter time, Christmas programs, wedding receptions, etc. The one that was given, and that hangs under the cross at this time is "Love Never Faileth."

My experience has led me, as President Grant used to say, in "far-off" Japan. In 1921 Sister Robertson and I went into the mission field after the return of President David O. McKay and Brother Hugh J. Cannon from their trip around the world, when they visited the Japanese Mission. We went, together with other young couples, to assist with the work there. It was very hard and I think many times the Japanese people have been condemned because they did not accept the gospel, but I feel that the missionaries were partly responsible for this. You heard many times President Grant make the expression that he learned the Japanese language but the people couldn't understand their own language when he spoke it. This, I think, was true of most of the missionaries. However, I think that the mission was closed for a purpose in 1924 when we returned home. I feel that the Lord knew what was going to transpire and he called the missionaries home and ordered the mission closed temporarily. Later on we find that the other denominations throughout the world who were proselyting in Japan were forced to close their missions and return to America at great loss and sacrifice. I am sure that people did not realize the true heart of the Japanese people, and especially they could not foresee what is going on amongst them at the present time.

I returned to Japan in 1939 while the war was still on with China, and I found there at that time a number of the children and some of the relatives of the saints who joined the church during the time that President Grant was there—from President Grant's time up until the close of the mission, they had been waiting for baptism. I had the privilege at that time and the blessing of baptizing fourteen people, one of them a lady sixty-seven years old, a sister of one of the saints and a daughter of one of the members. I baptized children of the saints who had been very faithful during our time.

When we went into the Hawaiian Islands we found a different situation entirely. We found that the people had become more closely associated with other groups of people. They spoke the English language and they were very eager to learn, and we contacted them from a different standpoint than we had formerly done. We tried to reach the mothers and fathers in Japan. In Hawaii we reach the fathers and mothers through the children, and today there are between five and six hundred Japanese members of the Church who are as faithful as any members we have.

I was thrilled in talking with President McKay while I was in the hospital, after my return, when he returned from dedicating the tabernacle in the Hawaiian Islands, to hear him tell of the experience of a lady, Sister Okemuto who, with her family, became the first family of the Japanese nation to come into the Church as a unit. She spoke to the subject: "What the gospel means to me as a mother," and she said, "I had been taught as a child that my spirit was eternal, that I would come back to this life, but that spirit would enter into a different form of life, and I would be rewarded according to my living. I had tried to live a righteous life as I had been taught by my parents, especially my mother", but she said, "today, since I have accepted the gospel of Jesus Christ, I understand that I will come back to this life as a mother, that I shall be a mother eternally, and that I will continue on if I am obedient to the principles of the gospel which I have been taught, throughout eternity and progress and have added joy and happiness together with my family." That's what the gospel has done for the people in the islands. I have heard no more fervent and sincere and interesting testimony borne than I have heard given by Japanese people.

The greatest miracle in the Church, my brothers and sisters, to me is not the healing of the sick. It is not making the blind to see nor causing the lame to walk. The greatest testimony to me is to see a soul brought from the depths of darkness wherein he or she has had no light and understanding of the true and living God nor of his or her relationship to Him, brought unto a knowledge of the Gospel of Jesus Christ and to see the transformation, the rehabilitation, the complete making over of an individual, the change in the facial expression and in the person's whole attitude toward life. They become better mothers and better fathers. They become better citizens, better sisters and better brothers. Our love, my brothers and sisters, must not be distorted because of race or color or creed. If we are to be the people that we are intended to be, we must have love for all people. We are God's children. I heard Roger W. Babson say in the City of Honolulu that the Japanese people are as kind and hospitable as any people he had ever seen. They are laboring under a condition which is as bad or worse than was the condition under Stalin or Hitler at their worst. That was before Stalin became one of our allies. These people are a kind and hospitable people and while we were in the cities of Japan I had no fear for my wife or for the missionaries or myself. They were a law-abiding people, kind and hospitable, and I love them. Some of my best friends in this life are those people and I have seen the gospel touch their lives. I know how faithful and true and sincere and loving and kind they are, and I know of their testimonies, that no more sincere and strong testimonies are given in this church than are borne by those people. There are brethren in this audience, of the General Authorities, who know that this is true.

I hope and pray that the blessings of the Lord will be with us, my brothers and sisters, that we will have no fear in going wherever we are called, and that we will be happy and willing to go. I know we can go. I know the circumstances under which I went into the mission field the first time, and I know that the Lord blessed us and that we were able to perform that service.

I spoke at a farewell of a missionary just recently, called into that mission in the Hawaiian Islands. He had just come out of the military service of his country. He had nothing but hatred and distrust for that people, and he couldn't understand why he was called to go there. I talked to him and I talked at the farewell and told the people if that boy did not love the people there when he was with them in his missionary activity, he himself would be at fault. He wrote back not so long ago to the bishop and said that he could not love a people more than he did those people and he was happy that he had been called to that mission.

We should all be ready and willing to go whenever and wherever the call comes, and be willing to give of our time and our means to support this great Church.

I bear you my testimony, my brothers and sisters, that I know this gospel is true. I know that God lives. I know that this is his work. I have seen its influence in the lives of the people, and unless we have love and apply it every day of our lives to our brothers and sisters, regardless of who they are, we are not living the gospel of Jesus Christ. "Love never faileth," and it will give us great returns and great rewards for our efforts.

Let me relate one little incident before I close. I would like to tell you how the Lord directs our efforts, if we are willing. I traveled for seven days on the water. I entered the City of Yokohama in 1939, with nearly a million people. I was trying to find an address. I was in a rickshaw and as we went along inquiring along the way and stopped opposite a public bath a young lady about nineteen or twenty years old came out of that institution and started in the opposite direction to which I was going. Contrary to all customs of etiquette in Japan, this lady came across the street to inquire what it was I wanted, and I asked for the name of a certain person and she said: "That is my mother." I traveled for seven days and was in a city of a million people and this girl, at the very minute that I came to this point came out before me. Was I being led? It was the key to my whole visit there, because through this family I received the addresses of other people and was able to contact them.

My brothers and sisters, let us so live that we might have the inspiration and guidance of our Father in Heaven at all times to direct our efforts, I pray and ask the blessings of the Lord to be upon you, and all, in the name of Jesus Christ, Amen.

President George Albert Smith:

You have just listened to Brother Hilton A. Robertson, formerly President of the Japanese Mission.

After the closing hymn, Conference will be adjourned until 10 o'clock tomorrow morning, that is, Saturday, April 5. The proceedings of that session will be broadcast over KSL, Salt Lake City, KSUB at Cedar City, and KDYY at Pocatello. Tomorrow morning the audience should be in their seats not later than ten minutes before the time of beginning.

The choir music for this session and for this morning's session has been furnished by the Relief Society Singing Mothers of the Salt Lake and Central Utah regions. Sister Florence Jepperson Madsen has conducted the choir and Elder Frank W. Asper has been the organist. I am sure we have enjoyed the contribution of this fine group of Singing Mothers. It has been my pleasure to listen to the Singing Mothers of the Relief Society of this Church in many parts of the world and I think it was an inspiration when they were called Singing Mothers and brought together in the form in which they were. I have been where I could not understand their language but I did enjoy their music. I refer now to the South Seas particularly. We are very grateful to them for what they have done for us today and I am sure they will go away from here feeling that they have made a part of the contribution that we are all trying to make, not only to this Conference but to the Centennial year of the coming of the Pioneers.

The Singing Mothers will now sing to us, "Holy Redeemer" by Marchet. The closing prayer will be offered by President Leland W. Redd of the San Juan Stake.

Selection by the Singing Mothers, "Holy Redeemer," by Marchetti.

Elder Leland W. Redd, President of the San Juan Stake, offered the closing prayer.

Conference adjourned until Saturday morning, April 5, 10:00 a.m.

SECOND DAY MORNING MEETING

Conference reconvened Saturday morning, April 5, at 10:00.

President George Albert Smith:

Good morning, everybody! We are glad to see you here. The house is full and hundreds of people are standing, notwithstanding the snow on the ground and the discomfort outside. It is delightful to be here in the house of the Lord.

Our services this morning will be as follows: This is the third session of the 117th Annual Conference of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints. We are convened in the Tabernacle on Temple Square, Salt Lake City, Utah. There are present on the stand this morning all the General Authorities of the Church except Elder Alma Sonne who is presiding over the European Mission.

The proceedings of this session will be broadcast over KSL of Salt Lake City, KSUB at Cedar City, and KDYY at Pocatello.

The choir singing during today's sessions will be by the Brigham Young University mixed chorus, with Elder Franklin Madsen conducting, and Elder Alexander Schreiner at the organ.

We will begin the morning services by the Brigham Young University mixed chorus singing, "Open Our Eyes," by McFarlane, soloist, Elder Kennar Kartchner.

The opening prayer will be offered by President Preal George, Millard Stake.

---

The Brigham Young University Mixed Chorus sang, "Open Our Eyes." Soloist, Elder Kenner Kartchner.

President Preal George, of the Millard Stake, offered the invocation.

The Brigham Young University Mixed Chorus sang: "Hosanna," by Granier; with Elder Ray Wood singing the solo.

ELDER JOSEPH FIELDING SMITH

Of the Council of the Twelve Apostles

My beloved brethren and sisters, it is with some fear and trembling that I address you here this morning, and I seek the guidance of the Spirit of the Lord in what I shall say.

SUFFERINGS AND PERSECUTIONS OF THE EARLY SAINTS

We are living one hundred years from the time the Pioneers commenced their journey and came into this valley. It is only natural that the brethren should call attention to the Pioneers and the great work they performed. I have visited most of the scenes of early Church history. I have gone over a good part of the trail which they followed when they came to these valleys. I have reflected a good deal upon these scenes, the travels, the hardships, the travails, and suffering and persecutions of these early days, and as I have stood in these hallowed spots and have traversed some of the territory which they passed over, my heart has been touched, but I have realized that it is beyond my power to understand and perhaps to feel all that these good faithful souls endured, and all for the sake of the gospel of Jesus Christ.

The Church had its beginning in New York. Persecution came upon the Saints from the beginning, and they were driven out. The Lord gave them a commandment to assemble in Ohio. They established their headquarters at Kirtland in that state. No doubt they had no intention of leaving, when they first went there, but the Lord revealed to them that there was another place, the place which he called "Zion," on the borders of the Lamanites, and so their hearts were turned to that place; however, they never had intended to forsake altogether their headquarters in Kirtland, but persecution came upon them, and they were forced out. With rejoicing they assembled in large measure in Jackson County where it had been made known to them that the great city, the new Jerusalem or Zion would be built, and they rejoiced over it, but they were not privileged to remain there. Their enemies came upon them with hatred and bitterness in their hearts and drove them out. They moved to another part of the state of Missouri and there again intended and tried to establish themselves, but persecution still followed them, and the hatred of the officials in that state resulted in their banishment and an edict coming from the governor of that state that they would have to leave or be exterminated. They went back eastward, crossed the great river, and made their settlement at Nauvoo, in the state of Illinois. For a season they prospered but not without persecution, not without hatred, and finally that hatred reached its peak, and their prophet and his brother, my grandfather, were martyred. Their enemies thought that would be the end of the Church. The papers so declared it. Their enemies rejoiced, but it did not bring the end. Still the Church grew. So also grew the animosity and the hatred of their enemies, and finally the Saints were driven from their homes, robbed of practically all that they possessed and thus set upon their journey to this western land, destitute, in poverty, and the world said they had gone to their destruction, and rejoiced.

I tell you, my brethren and sisters, we don't realize all that they went through; their hardships, their sufferings, the persecutions, the murders, the drivings that came upon them before they started on their westward journey; and they arrived in this valley rejoicing. It was President George A. Smith who was responsible for the statement that they came here of their own free will and choice—because they had to; and that is true. They crossed the plains, many of them pushing handcars, containing the meager possessions which they had. They traveled the weary miles with sore and bleeding feet, through hardships and suffering which we do not understand, and arrived in this valley of the Salt Lake, and were grateful to the Lord that he had preserved their lives and brought them to a place of peace where they could worship; and all this, if you please, because they loved the truth.

THE FIRST SABBATH IN THE VALLEY

The Pioneers arrived, that is President Young with the company of the Pioneers, arrived in this valley on the 24th day of July in the year 1847. The next day was Sunday. In the gratefulness of their hearts they held meetings as it was their intention and their practice to do. In the morning session Elders George A. Smith, Heber C. Kimball, and Ezra T. Benson were the speakers, and with their eyes filled with tears, they rejoiced and thanked the Lord that he had brought them safely through. In the afternoon, another service was held and others of the brethren spoke. Elder Wilford Woodruff, Elder Orson Pratt, and Elder Willard Richards were the speakers, and they also bore testimony to the truth and expressed their gratefulness that the Lord had brought them to this land, and they prayed in their hearts that the people would remember their covenants and their obligations and be true and faithful to the Lord and serve him with full purpose of heart. President Brigham Young was ill, but he did make some remarks. He spoke briefly, and I want to call attention to one thing that he said as it was reported by Elder Wilford Woodruff. Said he, in the brief remarks made by President Young, "He told the brethren that they must not work on Sunday, that they would lose five times as much as they would gain by it. None were to hunt on that day, and there would not any man dwell among us who would not observe these rules. They might go and dwell elsewhere if they pleased but should not dwell among us"; and they meant it, and why shouldn't they? Why should anyone come to this land as a member of the Church, in that day or since, who doesn't have in his heart a desire of keeping the commandments of the Lord and walking in righteousness?

HOW ARE WE MEASURING UP?

Now I have been thinking, as I have thought many times in the past, of this great legacy which is ours, the great blessings which have come to us, built upon the foundation of persecution, death, hardships, men and women laying down their lives that we might dwell in this land in peace and safety; and how do we feel today about it? Do we keep the Sabbath day holy? Do we pray? Are we grateful in our souls for all that has been done for us by these sturdy people who loved the truth and came here that they might worship God according to the dictates of their consciences? How do we feel? When I see reports of conditions in this state and surrounding states where Latter-day Saints dwell, the amount of liquor that is consumed and tobacco that is consumed, and tea and coffee and other things destructive of health, and contrary to the commandments of the Lord, when I see the people violating the Sabbath day and committing all other kinds of sins contrary to that which they have been taught, I wonder if the Lord is pleased with us.

PUNISHMENT OF ANCIENT ISRAEL

I'd like to call your attention to a statement in the scriptures that when the Lord led Israel into the land of Palestine, then known as Canaan, he gave them commandments, he told them what would happen if they broke those commandments, and among those commandments was that of keeping the Sabbath day. Not only were they to keep the Sabbath day holy but their land was also to have a Sabbath at certain intervals, and the Lord told them, through Moses, that if they did not keep the Sabbath day holy, if the land itself did not have a chance to rest, the day would come when the land would observe its Sabbath because the people would not be there. He would move them out of their place; and that happened. After the ten tribes of Israel had been carried away, and Babylon had come and laid siege to Judah and had carried those of that kingdom captive, Ezekiel the Prophet spoke to them and called their attention to all these promises the Lord had made to them and said that because they had violated these things, these destructions and drivings, had come upon them. Two verses I want to read in his admonition. The Lord speaking:

And I gave them my statutes, and shewed them my judgments, which if a man do, he shall even live in them. Moreover also I gave them my sabbaths, to be a sign between me and them, that they might know that I am the Lord that sanctify them. (Ezekiel 20:11, 12.)

And then again:

I am the Lord your God; walk in my statutes, and keep my judgments, and do them; And hallow my sabbaths; and they shall be a sign between me and you, that ye may know that I am the Lord your God. (Ezekiel 20:19, 20.)

This is also a sign to us. If we don't keep the Sabbath day holy, he may still be our God, but we may not be his people, for all the people of the earth are his, but we are a peculiar people, and by that we mean that we are different and should be different from the rest of the world because we are not of the world. We are in it. We are not of it.

STATEMENT OF PRESIDENT JOSEPH F. SMITH REGARDING THE SABBATH

Now, time will not permit saying much more, but I have here a statement by President Joseph F. Smith, taken from a letter that he wrote to his daughters who were away from home in school, and they wanted to know about the Sabbath day, because the people, where they were, were not living it, and so they wanted to know why we had to obey the Sabbath day, and I think I have just about time to read this.

All things should be done with prudence and in moderation. The Sabbath: "And on the seventh day God ended his work which he had made; and he rested on the seventh day from all his work which he had made. And God blessed the seventh day, and sanctified it; because that in it he had rested from all his work. . . ." [Genesis 2:2, 3.] "Remember the sabbath day, to keep it holy. Six days shalt thou labor, and do all thy work: But the seventh day is the sabbath of the Lord thy God; in it thou shalt not do any work. . . ." [Exodus 20:8-10.] This is the command. It is binding upon all. There are sound religious reasons for it and physiological reasons not less sound. Indeed it is a physiological as well as a divine law. Those who keep it will reap the reward of obedience to divine law, will enjoy the benefits of the physical law. It is not less needful to the human being than sleep although not so speedily felt. No one can live without sleep, neither can anyone survive long without rest. The result of sleep is no more potential to prolongation of life than the Sabbath rest, although we may survive longer without the latter than without the former, speaking from a physical point of view. From a spiritual point of view the willful violation of the law of the Sabbath rest is as deadly to the moral growth and faith as is the sleepless eye to the mortal being. But the great point is God has said it, not for his own but for man's well-being. He therefore should obey. If he does not, he will have to abide the consequences both temporal and spiritual to himself. Again, "For verily this is a day appointed unto you to rest from your labors, and to pay thy devotions unto the Most High." [D. & C. 59:10.] We learn to do by doing. Never can we learn to do by not doing. One who closely shuts his eyes is more blind than those who are blind indeed. The things of God are discovered by the spirit of God, not by the spirit of man nor of the world. Those who seek shall find and to those who knock at the door shall it be opened, and those who ask shall receive and not otherwise. He that hath the spirit discerns by the spirit, loves the work of the spirit, for they give delight and joy. Who gives himself to do works, good works, finds beauty and reward in them, and he who sows to the wind will reap the whirlwind. Not now, perhaps, for that which was sown must first take root then spring forth in leaf, then bear fruit. The fruit will be after the kind of its own seed. We learn a principle by coming in close contact with it and studying it and admitting it into our minds and hearts.

. . . truth is eternal. It was not created or made. It is a precious gem. It lies hidden from us, and we must find it and apply it and make it ours.

The Lord bless you I pray, in the name of Jesus Christ. Amen.

ELDER MILTON R. HUNTEROf the First Council of the Seventy*

My dear brethren and sisters, it is in deep humility that I stand here this morning before you. Elder Joseph Fielding Smith has just told of the coming of the Mormon Pioneers to Utah, in a very beautiful way. I would like also to say something on that subject this morning. Throughout 1947 a million people are observing the centennial of the arrival of the Mormon Pioneers in the Salt Lake valley. Our hearts are turned with love and adoration to this noble race of men and women who just one hundred years ago were driven from their homes in the East and suffered untold hardships while crossing the plains. Many of them sacrificed their lives while others came to Utah, and here they built a great commonwealth in the arid region of the Rocky Mountains.

A TRIBUTE TO THE PIONEERS

These people endured extreme hardships and made great sacrifices because they knew that the Eternal Father and his Only Begotten Son had come down from heaven in answer to the Prophet Joseph Smith's prayer in the Sacred Grove. They also knew that angels had brought to Joseph Smith the Holy Priesthood. The Holy Ghost had borne testimony to their hearts that God had established upon the earth again the true gospel of Jesus Christ which they had embraced. Thus these Mormon pioneers were a devout, God-fearing people who firmly believed that they had been called of the Lord to build up Zion and to prepare the world for the millennial reign of the Son of Man. In fact, they endured because they firmly believed that such scriptures as the following applied to them:

But ye are a chosen generation, a royal priesthood, an holy nation, a peculiar people; that ye should shew forth the praises of him who hath called you out of darkness into his marvelous light. (1 Peter 2:9.)

It is not the material things of life which make a people great but the high spiritual qualities of the soul engendered in men and women through faith in God, through a conviction of immortality, and through a recognition that there exists a moral order of laws which must be obeyed, which lifts a race of mortals to a position "a little lower than the angels." (Psalm 8:5.) In fact, these intangible spiritual qualities exalt man to his full stature as a son of God.

The Mormon pioneers were great men and women, and we honor them today because they possessed these spiritual qualities and extended their vision into the eternities.

THE FULFILMENT OF PROPHECY IN THE SETTLEMENT OF THE SAINTS IN THE WEST

The question has oftentimes been discussed as to why and when the Mormon pioneers decided to select the Great Basin as their home.

Bishop LeGrand Richards very beautifully pointed out yesterday that the ancient prophets looked down through the stream of time and saw that in the last days the Saints would establish themselves in the tops of the mountains. I would like to add to that thought today a definite statement that history affirms that this people settled Utah because God selected this spot for them and revealed to the modern prophets that here was the place in which to establish his people and to build Zion. In fact, as early as August 6, 1842, the Lord made known to the Prophet Joseph Smith that the Saints would be driven from their homes in Nauvoo and would migrate to the Rocky Mountains. On that date the Prophet wrote in his journal:

I prophesied that the Saints would continue to suffer much affliction and would be driven to the Rocky Mountains, many would apostatize, others would be put to death by our persecutors or lose their lives in consequence of exposure or disease, and some of you will live to go and assist in making settlements and build cities and see the Saints become a mighty people in the midst of the Rocky Mountains. (Documentary History of the Church, vol 5, p. 85.)

A year and a half later and only four months before the death of Joseph Smith, he was making definite arrangements to explore the West preparatory to the anticipated migration. On February 20, 1844, he wrote in his journal:

I instructed the Twelve Apostles to send out a delegation and investigate the location of California and Oregon, and hunt out a good location, where we can remove to after the temple is completed, and where we can build a city in a day, and have a government of our own, get up into the mountains, where the devil cannot dig us out, and live in a healthful climate, where we can live as old as we have a mind to. (ibid., vol. 6, p. 222.)

We should keep in mind that California included Utah at that time, and Oregon included Idaho; therefore, when Joseph Smith mentioned Oregon and California, he referred to the region that we are living in today.

In accordance with instructions given by Joseph to send out a company to explore the West and select a site for a city of the Saints, four men immediately volunteered to go, and four others were assigned to accompany them.

Two days later the Prophet told the Twelve Apostles that he wanted an exploration of the entire intermountain country. He said:

Send twenty-five men. . . . Appoint a leader, and let them beat up for volunteers. I want every man that goes to be a king and a priest. When he gets on the mountains he may want to talk with his God. (ibid., vol. 6, p. 224.)

The following Sunday (February 25, 1844) Joseph Smith spoke to the Saints and then recorded in his journal his principal thought as follows:

I gave some important instructions, and prophesied that within five years we should be out of the power of our old enemies, whether they were apostates or of the world; and told the brethren to record it, that when it comes to pass they need not say they had forgotten the saying. (ibid., vol. 6, p. 225.)

The proposed exploring expedition to the Rocky Mountains, however, was never made. Right at this time the persecution of the Saints increased greatly and was climaxed with the martyrdom of Joseph and Hyrum. However, only five days before their deaths, Joseph and others made temporary arrangements to flee to the Rocky Mountains for safety and have the Saints join them there later. Governor Ford had demanded that Joseph, Hyrum, and other Mormon leaders appear at Carthage for trial. When the governor's letter was read to Joseph Smith, he said to those with him:

The way is open. It is clear to my mind what to do. All they want is Hyrum and myself; then tell everybody to go about their business, and not collect in groups, but to scatter about. There is no doubt they will come here and search for us. Let them search; they will not harm you in person or property, and not even a hair of your head. We will cross the river tonight, and go away to the West. (ibid., vol. 6, pp. 545, 546.)

Later that same day Hyrum confirmed Joseph's decision to flee to the Rocky Mountains. In a statement made to Reynolds Cahoon, he said:

A company of men are seeking to kill my brother Joseph, and the Lord has warned him to flee to the Rocky Mountains to save his life. (Hyrum Smith cited in ibid., vol. 6, p. 547.)

Joseph and Hyrum crossed the Mississippi River preparatory to going to the Rocky Mountains; but as the result of complaints made by some of the Saints, they returned to Nauvoo, and shortly thereafter they were killed.

OPINIONS OF EARLY EXPLORERS

Following their deaths, the enemies of Mormonism actively worked to destroy the Church. In the fall of 1845, vicious men mobbed the Saints in the outlying settlements. Since it was generally known at the time of Joseph Smith's death that he contemplated a move to the West, the people of Illinois demanded that the Saints leave the state and migrate into the wilderness. Brigham Young, who had now assumed leadership, and his associates accepted their demand and announced that the Saints would migrate the following spring.

The maps and the account of John C. Fremont's exploration of the Far West had recently been published. Throughout the winter of 1845 and 1846, while the Saints were preparing to abandon their homes and move, Brigham Young and the other Mormon leaders carefully studied Fremont's exploration of the Rocky Mountain region.

In the fall of 1846, fifteen thousand exiled Saints had made temporary homes on the banks of the Missouri River where the cities of Omaha and Council Bluffs now stand. While there they gleaned all the information they could regarding the Great West. Father Pierre Jean DeSmet, a Jesuit priest who had spent many years as a missionary among the Indians in this region, visited the Mormon refugees. He reported a conversation he had had with the Saints as follows:

They asked me a thousand questions about the regions I had explored and the valley [meaning the Salt Lake valley] which I have just described to you, pleased them greatly from the account I gave them of it. (Cited in Levi Edgar Young, The Founding of Utah, p. 86.)

When the pioneers were crossing the plains the following summer, on June 26, 1847, near South Pass, they met Major Moses Harris. He was a man who had spent twenty years in the Rocky Mountains. Orson Pratt recorded in his journal the conversation they had with Major Harris. He wrote:

We obtained much information from him in relation to the great interior basin of the Salt Lake, the country of our destination. His report like that of Captain Fremont's is rather unfavorable to the formation of a colony in this basin, principally on account of the scarcity of timber. (Orson Pratt, Journal, June 26, 1847, cited in Andrew Jenson, Historical Record, vol. 9, p. 58.)

Two days later, the Pioneers met James Bridger who was on his way to Fort Laramie. Pratt stated that Mr. Bridger,

... being a man of extensive acquaintance with this interior country, we made many inquiries of him in relation to the "great basin" and the country south. His information was rather more favorable than that of Major Harris. (Orson Pratt, Journal, June 28, 1847, cited in Millennial Star, May 15, 1850.)

And William Clayton added the thought that Bridger

... thinks the region around Utah lake is the best country in the vicinity of the Salt Lake. (William Clayton, Journal, June 28, 1847, cited in Andrew Jenson, op. cit., p. 60.)

We should be aware of the fact that each of these experiences bears indisputable evidence that the "Mormon" leaders knew where they were going long before they arrived in the Salt Lake valley, because they were being led there by divine revelation from the Lord.

BRIGHAM YOUNG'S INSPIRATION

On June 30, the Pioneer band had arrived on the banks of the Green River in Wyoming. There they were met by Samuel Brannan. He had come from San Francisco to persuade the Mormons to settle in California. Although he gave Brigham Young a glowing report of the wonderful country around San Francisco Bay and an equally discouraging report regarding the barren desert wastes of the Rocky Mountain region, President Young refused to take the Saints to California. The Mormon leader was following the inspiration of the Lord, and he could not be induced to exchange it for the wisdom of man. God had pointed out to him, as well as to the Prophet Joseph Smith, that the place to settle the Saints was in the "midst of the Rocky Mountains."

The fact that on July 12, Brigham Young commissioned Orson Pratt to lead a vanguard company ahead of the main body of Pioneers for the purpose of making a road into the Salt Lake valley gives additional evidence that the Mormon leaders knew where they were going. Nine days later Erastus Snow overtook Elder Pratt, saying Brigham Young wanted Elder Pratt to bear slightly northward after leaving the canyon and select a spot for plowing, planting seed, and building a city. On July 21, Orson Pratt and Erastus Snow emerged from the mouth of Emigration Canyon. Then they climbed to the top of a hill and viewed the Great Salt Lake valley lying before them. Regarding this experience, Elder Snow recorded the following in his journal:

From the view we had of the valley from the top of the mountain, we supposed it to be only an arm of prairie extending up from the Utah valley, but on ascending this butte we involuntarily, both at the same instant, uttered a shout of joy at finding it to be the very place of our destination, and beheld the broad bosom of the Salt Lake spreading itself before us.<sup>1</sup> (Erastus Snow, Journal July 21, 1847, cited in B. H. Roberts, A Comprehensive History of the Church, vol. 3, p. 216.)

Pratt's vanguard company camped on a stream subsequently known as City Creek on July 23. There he called his associates together and dedicated the land as the new home of the Saints.

Erastus Snow testified that God directed Brigham Young to the Salt Lake Valley. To quote:

President Young said . . . that this was the place he had seen long since in vision; it was here he had seen the tent settling down from heaven and resting, and a voice said unto him: "Here is the place where my people Israel shall pitch their tents." (Erastus Snow, "Address to the Pioneers," Journal History, July 24, 1880, ms.)

A VISION OF THE FUTURE

On that memorable day of July 24, 1847, right at the time when Brigham Young made the famous statement, "This is the place! Drive on," the Lord confirmed his previous revelations to Joseph Smith and Brigham Young by letting the Pioneer leader view in a vision many things which would take place in the Salt Lake valley. Wilford Woodruff described this experience in his journal as follows:

This is one of the most important days of my life, and in the history of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints. . . . We came in full view of the valley of the Great Salt Lake; the land of promise, held in reserve by God, as a resting place for his Saints.

We gazed in wonder and admiration upon the vast valley before us, with the waters of the Great Salt Lake glistening in the sun, mountains towering to the skies, and streams of pure water running through the beautiful valley. It was the grandest scene that we had ever beheld till this moment. Pleasant thoughts ran through our minds at the prospect that, not many years hence, the house of God would be established in the mountains and exalted above the hills; while the valleys would be converted into orchards, vineyards, and fruitful fields, cities erected to the name of the Lord, and the standard of Zion unfurled for the gathering of nations.

President Young expressed his entire satisfaction at the appearance of the valley as a resting place for the Saints, and felt amply repaid for his journey. While lying upon his bed in my carriage, gazing upon the scene before us, many things of the future concerning the valley were shown to him in a vision. (Wilford Woodruff, Journal, July 24, 1847, cited in Andrew Jenson, op. cit., vol. 9, p. 77.)

When Brigham Young, Wilford Woodruff, Orson Pratt, Erastus Snow, and others of the Pioneer leaders first saw the Salt Lake valley, they were not viewing the barren desert region covered with sunflowers, sage and salt flats—a country infested with millions of black crickets—as were many of their pioneer followers. These men of God were looking through the eyes of holy prophets; therefore, they saw the Great Basin as it would be in the future as a result of the industry and thrift of the people coupled with the blessings of the Lord. On a later occasion Wilford Woodruff described the entrance of the Pioneer band into the Salt Lake valley, and he pointed out exactly what Brigham Young beheld. To quote:

When we came out of the cañon into full view of the valley, I turned the side of my carriage around, open to the west, and President Young arose from his bed and took a survey of the country. While gazing on the scene before us, he was enraptured in vision for several minutes. He had seen the valley before in vision, and upon this occasion he saw the future glory of Zion and of Israel, as they would be, planted in the valleys of these mountains. When the vision had passed, he said: "It is enough. This is the right place, drive on." (Wilford Woodruff, Utah Pioneers, p. 23, cited in Roberts, op. cit., vol. 3, p. 224.)

Then Brigham and his associates entered the valley and joined Orson Pratt's group. He assured Elder Pratt that he had selected the right spot on which to locate the people and build the city. In fact, no man has been more convinced that God led the Saints to the Rocky Mountains than was Brigham Young. On July 28, only four days after his arrival, he wrote:

Some of the brethren talk about exploring the country farther for a site for settlement; I replied that I was willing that the country should be explored until all were satisfied, but every time a party went out and returned, I believe firmly, they would agree this is the spot for us to locate. (Journal History, July 28, 1847, ms.)

Sometime later he said:

I do not want the people to understand that I had anything to do with our being moved here; that was the providence of the Almighty; it was the power of God that wrought out salvation to his people. I never could have devised such a plan. (Journal of Discourses, vol. 4, p. 41.)

At the time of the gold rush in 1849, some of the Mormons were anxious to leave the barren desert region of Utah and migrate to California. Brigham Young again made a public announcement that God had led the Saints to this place. To quote:

We have been kicked out of the frying-pan into the fire, out of the fire into the middle of the floor, and here we are and here we will stay. God has shown me that this is the spot to locate his people, and here is where they will prosper. . . .

As the Saints gather here and get strong enough to possess the land, God will temper the climate, and we shall build a city and a temple to the Most High God in this place. We will extend our settlements to the east and west, to the north and to the south, and we will build towns and cities by the hundreds, and thousands of the Saints will gather in from the nations of the earth. This will become the great highway of nations. . . .

Take courage, brethren. . . . Plow your land and sow wheat, plant potatoes. . . . It is our duty to preach the gospel, gather Israel, pay our tithing and build temples. (James Brown, Autobiography, pp. 121, 122.)

THE VINDICATION OF A HUNDRED YEARS

Time has vindicated the Prophet Joseph Smith and his successor, Brigham Young, in their declarations that the Salt Lake valley and the surrounding intermountain region was the right place in which to establish God's chosen people and to build up Zion. A hundred years have passed, and Mormons have left a history literally filled with noble deeds and Herculean accomplishments made by a devout, God-fearing people. Credit and great honor have been brought to the intermountain west as the result of the contributions made by our pioneer forefathers in the building of this American frontier. Truly "This is the Place!"

In conclusion I want to bear testimony that I know that Jesus is the Christ and that I know that God lives. I am also thoroughly convinced that the Mormon pioneers were brought to this land under the direction of our Lord. May we, the descendants of the pioneers, ever honor that great heritage that is ours and live true to the ideals and high spiritual standards that they left for us. I humbly pray, in the name of Jesus Christ. Amen.

President George Albert Smith:

I am going to ask the people who are in this room this morning who are descendants of the first company of Pioneers that came into the valley on the 24th of July, 1847, to please stand up.

[A large number arose.]

I was satisfied they would be well represented in this group. When I think of the way we have been multiplied in this country and that those whom I have just referred to are the descendants of the first company of 143 men, 3 women and 2 children who came into these valleys, I marvel at what the Lord has done.

ELDER THOMAS E. MCKAY

Assistant to the Council of the Twelve Apostles

President Smith, counselors, my brethren and sisters, I was impressed by the opening prayer of this session and especially by the inspirational music furnished by the Brigham Young University chorus, and also by the two very timely and appropriate sermons to which we have listened.

I have missed at this conference my brother and colleague, Elder Alma Sonne, now president of the European Mission, and I hope, brethren and sisters, that you will not forget him, that you will pray for him and those presidents who are working with him. He needs our prayers. He is a great leader and is the right man in the right place.

AN OUTSTANDING STAKE CONFERENCE

Last Saturday and Sunday, March 29 and 30, I had the privilege of attending the Los Angeles Stake quarterly conference. In some respects it was outstanding. They had 47½ percent of the priesthood at their nine o'clock session. Fifty-nine percent of the ward teachers were there. It had been previously announced that a roll would be called of the wards at one of the general sessions; the night session, when the roll was called, showed the largest attendance ever held in the evening—twenty-five percent of the entire membership was there. They have had larger numbers in their 10:30 a.m. sessions. One of the wards had forty-eight percent of its membership at that evening session. I asked one bishop how he did it. He said the ward teachers deserved most of the credit. He has them organized, not more than five families to each pair of teachers. During the month of March in their visits, the junior member who is, as a rule, a priest or an ordained teacher, extended a special invitation from the bishop for all to attend this conference. He took the names of those who needed transportation and furnished these names to the chairman of the adult Aaronic Priesthood transportation committee. This junior member also checked at the conference to see who of their members were there, and those who were not, and at the next visit he will have something to talk about, praising those who were there and telling those who were not what they had missed. This procedure, I understand, is followed also at the ward conferences and the sacrament and the priesthood meetings. The teachers keep track of the members of the families under their supervision who are absent, especially those in the service of their country. They know those who are unemployed and are having other difficulties and report them to the bishop. I recommend this method to all bishops. I am sure that many of your problems would be simplified and you would not be so overworked as many of you are now, if you would use your ward teachers as the Lord intended that they should be used, to watch over the Church always.

CONVERSION OF PARENTS BY MISSIONARIES

Another feature of this conference that appealed to me very much was the large number of nonmembers, friends and investigators of the stake missionaries in attendance. After the two general sessions, some of the missionaries brought quite a number of these nonmembers to the front, and I had the privilege of shaking hands and talking with them. One young man was especially interested in missionary work. He had traveled quite extensively. Two of the members of the presidency especially are very close friends of mine, and they had been a little extravagant in telling these nonmembers of the number of missions that I have spent in Europe, and this young man said, "You certainly have devoted quite a number of years of your life to the Church, and I am sure it has cost a tidy sum of money." I said, "Yes, but when I think of the wonderful home life in these beautiful valleys of the mountains, and contrast conditions here with conditions in Europe, I am still in debt, yes, very much in debt to the Lord." I told him of the missionary system of our Church, how from the beginning we have sent missionaries into all the world as the Savior did when he was here in person; how two of these missionaries away up in the highlands of Scotland found my father as a young man and his parents; how two others in Wales called at the home of my mother, then a small girl, and her parents; how both families joined the Church about the same time, crossed the ocean, the same year, but in different vessels; how they spent a few months in the East preparing for their thousand mile trek across the plains with oxen and covered wagons; how they crossed these plains the same year but in different companies; how they arrived in the Salt Lake valley and counseled with some of the leaders and decided to go north, perhaps as far as Cache valley, but when they arrived in Ogden at the junction of the Weber and Ogden rivers and saw those large cottonwood trees that looked so beautiful and inviting, both families decided to make their new homes in Ogden; and there it was that my father saw my mother for the first time, sitting on the tongue of her covered wagon, and his face would always beam when he would add, "and I never forgot her."

HIS FATHER'S CALL AS A MISSIONARY

They waited until she was in her seventeenth year before they married. They went up through scenic Ogden canyon, settled in Ogden valley, one of the beauty spots of the world, and built together their new home in Huntsville. It was here that ten children were born to that beautiful black-eyed, stately, now angel mother. When they had five children, that dread disease, diphtheria, spread through the valley and the surrounding towns. In those days these contagious diseases were real plagues. More than twenty young people died in Huntsville alone that winter; among them our two eldest sisters, Margaret, eleven, and Lena, nine. They died within a few days of each other and were buried in the same grave. They had been such a comfort and help to Mother, that Father, who was always so considerate of her well-being, grieved over their loss even more than Mother; he found it difficult to adjust himself. It was just a few weeks after this tragedy that he received his call to go on a mission. He would go, of course. No other thought entered his mind, but to go now and leave my mother in her delicate condition with three small children, seven, five, and three years old, seemed impossible. He decided after worrying about this matter for a few days to ask for a year's postponement. When he told Mother what he intended to do, she appreciated of course that it was out of consideration for her that he didn't want to leave home then. But her black eyes sparkled as she said kindly, but firmly, "David" the Lord wants you now, not a year from now, and he can take care of me just as well when you're in Scotland as he can if you are at my bedside. You go now."

They had excavated in the fall preparatory to building an addition to their home in the spring. That, of course, would have to wait. My father remembered too, that he had not paid his tithing on his wheat. He generally paid his tithing on his grain when he threshed, but for some reason, a shortage of sacks, I think, he had not paid his tithing on his wheat, so he decided to go to the granary and arrange for it. With the first bucketful of wheat that he dipped, he struck the floor of the bin. He was shocked! He thought, "If I pay my tithing, my family will not have sufficient wheat for spring seeding and for flour until the next harvest." The thought started to enter his mind, "I'll wait and have them pay my tithing in the fall for both years." He recognized where that thought came from, so he poured that wheat into the sacks in a hurry and paid a little more than he was owing.

He left on April 19 for his mission. On the twenty-ninth my sister Anne was born. You understand now why it was so difficult for him to leave just at that time. While he was on this mission, we were blessed, and Mother had managed very well. When he returned, she very gently, and I think proudly, placed a beautiful baby in his arms, a baby now over two years old, which he had never seen. The addition to the house as previously planned had also been erected without letting him know anything about it. It was a wonderful home-coming.

THE VALUE OF MISSIONARY EXPERIENCE

Many other incidents which I could relate if I had the time would illustrate that a missionary in the field is a good investment. Moreover, to the missionary the experience is invaluable: travel is itself educational; the missionary has the opportunity to meet all kinds of people, at times the opportunity presents itself to visit other churches, cathedrals, museums, art galleries, and oftentimes to attend operas and theaters. Add to these broadening influences the educational background found in all "Mormon" communities, we soon learn the reason why two leading educators were able, in a recently published book, to classify Utah as highest in all-around educational performance among all the states. They divided the states into five classifications: highest, high, medium, low, and lowest. Among the ten highest Utah ranked first.

Yes, this is a missionary Church, brothers and sisters. We have always had missionaries. We kept out about two thousand until the war and then, of course, our missionaries were called home. Six hundred ninety-nine of them were evacuated from the European missions alone; but our servicemen and women—God bless them—more than compensated for that return. Nearly all of them have been missionaries, preaching the gospel by their example of clean living, and then since the war, the First Presidency have called on an average of about three hundred a month. Now, as we were told yesterday by Brother Anderson in the statistical report, we have over three thousand two hundred missionaries in the field, a thousand more than the Church has ever had before. And then, too, we have about that same number of stake missionaries, and also hundreds of local missionaries called in the missions themselves. Yes, we are all missionaries. I wish we would adopt the motto that we had in the mission field, "Every member a missionary." We can't all go into the mission field, but oh, brethren and sisters, we can all preach the gospel by our example.

May the Lord help us and bless us with faith and sufficient will power that we may live so that it will be said of us, not only that we believe in being honest, true, chaste, benevolent, virtuous, but also that we are honest, we are true, we are chaste, we are benevolent, we are virtuous, and that we do love our neighbor as ourselves, I pray in the name of Jesus Christ. Amen.

The Brigham Young University Mixed Chorus and the congregation sang: "Praise to the Man Who Communed with Jehovah," by Phelps; Hymn Book No. 282, L.D.S. Hymns No. 167.

ELDER JOHN A. WIDTSOE

Of the Council of the Twelve Apostles

My brethren and sisters, this vast congregation, crowding and overcrowding the capacity of the Tabernacle, seems to me to be a sufficient answer to the query of the ancient prophet. There is faith in Israel.

NATURAL ENDOWMENTS OF THE PIONEERS

Almost every speaker during this conference has mentioned the pioneers, the heroic men and women who, a hundred years ago and up to the coming of the railroad, trailed across the plains and made possible, not only Utah but also the arid and semi-arid wastes of the United States, for the use of mankind. It is a great story, beautifully told here this morning.

These pioneers were uncommon people. They were not of the common run. It took more than brawn, muscle, to redeem the desert, and to teach the whole world how the great arid wastes of the world might be reclaimed. The work of these men has been heralded far and wide, and all the world has profited by their labors. They were uncommon people.

I knew David McKay [President David O. McKay's father]. It was a great privilege. He was not a common man. There were notable, fine qualities in him, inborn qualities, such as were characteristic of the great body of pioneers which made possible that which they accomplished. They were not men and women of great education though they had as much education as was ordinarily possessed by the people of that day, both in America and in Europe. There was a good porportion of school-trained men among them, but remember that a school can only polish and develop that which a man possesses. Schools do not create the powers of men. These pioneer people had natural endowments so great as to make it difficult to understand, how so many such capable people could be gathered together in the making of this intermountain empire.

PRESIDENT YOUNG'S DEFINITION OF MORMONISM

I have chosen to try to say something about the qualities and endowments of these men in the words of the foremost of them, their appointed leader, Brigham Young. He was not greater than the others. He was of the same blood, spiritually and physically, and, fortunately, he left behind him nearly four hundred discourses taken down in shorthand and published. I grew up as other young men in Zion, looking upon Brigham Young as a great leader, great colonizer, but only after I undertook to read his discourses did the character of the man really stand out boldly before me. He was a great character. Those who labored with him in their respective fields were equally great.

A stranger came to him one day and said:

President Young, will you define Mormonism for me? I heard you preach in the Tabernacle the other day. I did not quite understand all that you said, and I wish you would be kind enough to analyze what you said and simplify it.

Then this leader of the pioneers, of great endowments, brushed aside all the old opinions, the old methods of defining things, in the realm of religion, all the secondary or derivative doctrines and answered:

Our religion is simply the truth. It is all said in this one expression: It embraces all truth wherever found in all the works of God and man, visible or invisible to mortal eyes.

An ordinary man of lesser mental and spiritual stature would have found refuge in some other kind of definition. This man dug down to the bottom of the thing. Truth is the foundation of the gospel of the Lord Jesus Christ. He added:

It is more rational for an intelligent being to embrace truth than it is to mix up a little truth with a great deal of error or to embrace all error and undertake to follow a phantom.

THE FAITH OF A GREAT LEADER

But, he understood that truth must have a source, a teacher to human beings. No man in all the world has ever expressed a finer and a greater, more fervent belief in God than did Brigham Young.

Our faith is concentrated in the Son of God and through him in the Father, and the Holy Ghost is a minister to bring truths to our remembrance, to reveal new truths to us and teach, guide, direct the course of every mind. . . . Jesus is our captain and leader, Jesus, Savior of the World, the Christ that we believe in.

Out of that faith came the truth that he held so dear. If we had time, I could read some eloquent statements about his faith in God and Jesus Christ, never surpassed in the writings of mankind.

This man was a symbol of all the pioneers, for when I speak of Brigham Young, I speak of every pioneer. It took and takes strong men, men of capacity, to accept the gospel of the Lord Jesus. In that respect, we of this age who have accepted the gospel are also uncommon.

But Brigham Young warned the people:

Now we have the truth. We know whence it comes, from God himself, and that brings a tremendous responsibility to rest upon every one of us. . . . Our mortal existence is a school of experience. The Lord does not compel any person to embrace the gospel, and I do not think he will compel them to live it after they have embraced it. The volition of the creature is free. This is a law of their existence, and the Lord cannot violate his own law. Were he to do that he would cease to be exalted. He has placed life and death before his children, and it is for them to choose. If they choose life, they receive a blessing of life. If they choose death, they must abide the penalty. This is the law which has always existed from all eternity and will continue to exist throughout all the eternities to come. Every intelligent being must have the power of choice.

Simple words! But what a tremendous burden, if burden it be, they place upon us, the necessity to live in accordance with the eternal law of God.

THE RELIGION OF THE LATTER-DAY SAINTS A PRACTICAL ONE

Having said all of this (I have picked just a few things out of the record), he emphasized the fact that the truth which comes from God, and possessed by us, must be used by us properly. There was no hesitation in that. Truth is not an ornament to be hung on the wall or placed on the shelf to look at. It must be of daily use for he said:

We need a present, everyday religion. My religion must be with me from one Monday morning to the next, the year around or it will not answer me. I am decidedly in favor of a practical religion, of everyday useful life, and if I today attend to what devolves upon me to do, then do that which presents itself tomorrow, and so on, when eternity comes I will be prepared to enter on the things of eternity, but I would not be prepared for that sphere of action unless I could manage the things that are now within my reach. We must all learn to do this. There is no life more precious than the present life which we enjoy. There is no life that is worth any more to us than this life is. It may be said that an eternal life is worth more. We are in eternity, and all that we have to do is to take the road that leads into the eternal lives.

And in his application of truth to useful ends, he said many things. For example, concerning education:

Knowledge is to be sought. It was originally embraced by the Latter-day Saints, if only slightly understood, and they were counseled to search diligently after knowledge. There is no other people in existence more eager to see, to hear, to learn and understand truth. . . . Every accomplishment, every polished grace, every useful attainment in mathematics, music, and all the sciences and arts belong to the Saints, and they should avail themselves as expeditiously as possible of the wealth of knowledge that science has offered to every diligent and persevering scholar.

There is no narrow conception in such a statement, no fence is built around knowledge, no limitation placed upon it. All truth is ours.

BRIGHAM YOUNG'S VIEWS ON CAPITAL AND LABOR

He entered into the field of economics and became known as a great economic leader. He said in what might be written in huge letters for the wise men of the earth to read:

Capital and labor, all the capital there is upon this earth, is the bone and sinew of working men and women. Were it not for that, the gold and the silver and precious stones would remain in the mountains, upon the plains, and in the valleys and never would be gathered or brought into use. The timber would continue to grow, but none of it would be brought into service, and the earth would remain as it is. It is the activity and labor of the inhabitants of the earth that bringeth forth wealth.

This simple definition of wealth, is fit for colleges and all the nations to ponder. Time and the ability to labor are the capital stock of the whole world.

EXPRESSIONS AS TO GOVERNMENT

He spoke of political government:

The Constitution and laws of the United States resemble a theocracy more closely than any government now on earth. We will cling to the Constitution of our country and to the government that reveres that sacred charter of free men's rights and if necessary pour out our best blood for the defense of every good and righteous principle.

He laid down the principle which should be the foundation of every government:

Individual self-government lies at the root of all true and effective government whether in heaven or on earth.

He even spoke of the women and their duties in the world of action—woman suffrage:

Now, sisters, I want you to vote also, because women are the characters that rule the ballot box.

I wish they did rule it today. I am not certain they have lived up to the commendation of the pioneer leader.

HUMILITY A SIGN OF GREATNESS

Great men are humble. No great man takes power and honor unto himself, and so Brigham Young said:

I have never professed to be Brother Joseph, but only Brother Brigham, trying to do good to this people. I am no better nor any more important than any other man who is trying to do good. If I am, I do not know it. If I improve upon what the Lord has given me and continue to improve, I shall become like those who have gone before me.

I shall be exalted in the Celestial Kingdom and be filled to overflowing with all the power I can wield, and all the keys and knowledge I can manage will be committed unto me.

Then he quoted what President Hunter just quoted, the first part being:

I do not wish anyone to understand that I had anything to do with our being moved here. That was the providence of the Almighty.

LOYALTY TO JOSEPH SMITH

Great men are loyal. There is nothing finer in the life of Brigham Young than his loyalty to Joseph Smith. He spoke of him and said:

A Prophet of God! I honor and revere the name of Joseph Smith. I delight to hear it. I love it. I love his doctrine. . . .

What is the nature and beauty of Joseph's mission? When I first heard him preach, he had brought heaven and earth together, and all the priests of the day could not tell me anything correct about heaven, hell, God, angels, the devils, . . . and there was blindness, . . . darkness. When I saw Joseph Smith, he took heaven, of which he was speaking, and brought it down to earth. Then he took the earth and brought it up and opened up in plainness and simplicity the things of God, and that is the beauty of his mission.

At the last, on his deathbed, the attending physician as he leaned over the bedside heard him whisper:

"Joseph, Joseph!"

Of such timber were our pioneers hewn. Of such timber are we or should be. God bless us and be with us, help us to be like the pioneers we honor. I pray, for the deserts of the world, in other fields, are formidable today as the deserts of the West were yesterday, in the name of the Lord, Jesus Christ. Amen.

PRESIDENT J. REUBEN CLARK, JR.

First Counselor in the First Presidency

My brothers and sisters, I trust that the sweet influence of the Spirit of the Lord which has been with us thus far in this conference and in this session will continue with us while I stand before you.

TRIBUTE TO CHARLES A. CALLIS AND MARVIN O. ASHTON

We miss this morning from our presence two great men, Apostle Callis, whose greatest love was his fellow men and his desire and purpose to spread among them the truths of the revealed gospel of this last dispensation; the other, Bishop Ashton, who loved men as much as did Apostle Callis, whose troubles, the troubles of men and women, appealed to him, and always he did all that he could do, that lay within his power to do, to alleviate those troubles. They were great men. They have gone to a great reward that will take them to a place in the celestial kingdom of God.

THE SAVIOR'S MOURNING OVER JERUSALEM

When the Savior was just leaving Trans-Jordan to come into Jerusalem to be crucified, the Pharisees came to him and told him that Herod was seeking to kill him. And speaking of Herod as "that fox" the Savior said: Tell him that the sick are healed and that the blind see. Tell him that I must travel today, tomorrow, and the next day, "for it cannot be that a prophet perish out of Jerusalem." (Luke 13:33.)

And the mention of Jerusalem seemed to have awakened in his mind all that had gone before since the world was, particularly since Jerusalem was built, and he said:

O Jerusalem, Jerusalem, which killest the prophets, and stonest them that are sent unto thee; how often would I have gathered thy children together, as a hen doth gather her brood under her wings, and ye would not! (Luke 13:34.)

When he came to Jerusalem on that last mission and while preaching in the temple, he uttered that fierce denunciation against the Pharisees and the Scribes, the fiercest that I know of in all history, called attention to the fact that they had persecuted and martyred the righteous, and then again broke forth in the same lament:

O Jerusalem, Jerusalem, thou that killest the prophets, and stonest them which are sent unto thee, how often would I have gathered thy children together, even as a hen gathereth her chickens under her wings, and ye would not! (Matthew 23:37.)

That is the motif of all of God's dealings with mankind, always forgiving, always ready to accept us if we will but put ourselves where we may be accepted. His expression was an expression of divine love, and it is not without interest that in making his comparison he spoke of the love of the mother hen, mother love, the nearest thing we know to divine love.

LOVE AND FORGIVENESS MANIFESTED BY JESUS

Ever since the world was, he has offered us opportunities to serve him. He has tried to have us live righteously. He has forgiven, over and over again. He has tried to bring us back to him. Enoch, Noah, Moses—think of how patient he was with Israel, the destruction of the first-born of Egypt, the crossing of the Red Sea, the providing of the manna, the striking of the rock in the wilderness.

When it came to the time of the Savior himself, think how he tried to lead them to repentance, forgiving wherever he found people worthy of forgiveness. All through the history of Israel there has run that one sentiment:

How often would I have gathered thee but thou wouldst not.

In our day the same thing is true. Time and time and time again he has called us to serve him, and has given us mighty promises as to what he would do if we would but do our part. The Church had scarcely organized when he gave the great law of temporal and spiritual salvation, the United Order. And remember, that the Lord very early said that to him all things were spiritual, that he never had given a law which was temporal. He tried to get us to live the commandments that he had given in the matter of the United Order that none might suffer, that all who needed might be provided for, that all might be his people, happy, one with another, because of no jealousies of excess in one and deficiency in another. But the people could not live it. After three years and four months he was forced to take it away, suspend it, and if you want to know why it was suspended I refer you to the fifty-sixth section of the Doctrine and Covenants, beginning with the fourteenth verse. There is crystallized his denunciation of selfishness and greed against us of this dispensation. We tried other measures when we came here to the valleys, but they were no more successful. Here in the last few years we have set up another plan, temporal yet spiritual. He is again trying us. "How often would I have gathered thee together as a hen gathers her chickens under her wings"—that is the issue, my brothers and sisters.

TIMELY ADVICE

I do not need to belabor the need we have or that we are likely to see grow greater, particularly in this country with unemployment coming on. We shall all need help, even those, perhaps, with the most. Yesterday's sermons told of the needs of our brothers and sisters who are in foreign lands. Are we going to meet this challenge and provide for those who are in need of help or are we going to let matters go and take up our time complaining?

I want to repeat the suggestion I have made before, the thought was inspired by the reports that came that some of the brethren were counting out what a terrible load they had in dollars and cents. Their computations surely made it big enough. If I remember rightly, the Lord commanded Israel that she should not take a census, should not count her men. I do not know why the command was given, but I suspect it was because if they counted and saw how few they were, they would lose all heart to fight the battle which they had to fight. And the record is that when they did not count, God blessed them. If I were you presidents of stakes, chairmen of regions, I do not believe I would spend too much time figuring out how much money I had to raise but go to work and raise it.

I repeat, as I see it, we are again on trial. The Lord is giving us a continuing opportunity to serve him, to work out his plan, the plan which he gave certainly as far back as Sinai.

May the Lord bless us, give us the power to hold fast to the eternal truths he has revealed. May he open our vision that we may see our duty to our fellow citizens, to our fellow members of the Church wherever they are. May he take out of our hearts all feelings of hate and leave there only love for those who belong to us and to our Heavenly Father, I humbly pray in the name of Jesus. Amen.

President George Albert Smith:

President J. Reuben Clark, Jr. of the First Presidency has just spoken to us.

We are now approaching the time when it is customary to adjourn this meeting. After the Conference is adjourned, and it will be adjourned until 2 o'clock this afternoon, the proceedings of the afternoon session will be broadcast over KSL of Salt Lake City, KSUB at Cedar City, and KDYY at Pocatello.

This afternoon the audience should be in their seats not later than ten minutes before the hour of beginning, if possible, so that we may all be comfortable.

The singing for this session of the Conference has been by the Brigham Young University mixed chorus, with Elder Franklin Madsen conducting and Elder Alexander Schreiner at the organ.

The Brigham Young University mixed chorus will now sing, "Lamb of God," by Biset, soloist, Sister Iris Taylor.

The closing prayer will be offered by President Abel S. Rich of the South Box Elder Stake.

Singing by the Brigham Young University Mixed Chorus: "Lamb of God."

President Abel S. Rich, of the South Box Elder Stake, offered the closing prayer.

Conference adjourned until 2:00 p.m.

SECOND DAY AFTERNOON MEETING

Conference reconvened Saturday afternoon, April 5, at 2:00 p.m.

President George Albert Smith:

This is the fourth session of the 117th Annual Conference of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints. We are convened in the Tabernacle on Temple Square at Salt Lake City. There are present on the stand this afternoon all of the General Authorities of the Church except Elder Alma Sonne who is presiding over the European Mission.

The proceedings of this session will be broadcast over KSL at Salt Lake City, KSUB at Cedar City, and KDYY at Pocatello.

The house is packed to the doors and hundreds of people are standing who have not seats. I would like to take occasion at this time to suggest that those who have more room than they need on these seats move over and make room for some others.

The music for this session will be furnished by the Brigham Young University mixed chorus, Franklin Madsen, director, Alexander Schreiner, organist.

We will begin this service by the Brigham Young University mixed chorus singing, "The Voice in the Wilderness," by Scott, with Sister Alene Peterson as soloist.

The opening prayer will be offered by President John P. Lillywhite of the North Box Elder Stake.

Singing by the Brigham Young University Mixed Chorus: "The Voice in the Wilderness."

Elder John P. Lillywhite, President of the North Box Elder Stake, offered the opening prayer.

The Chorus sang: "My Soul Is Athirst For God," by Florence Jepperson Madsen, with Elder Bert Morley as soloist.

ELDER JOSEPH L. WIRTHLIN

First Counselor in the Presiding Bishopric

I sincerely trust, my brethren and sisters, that I may enjoy the Spirit of the Lord and have an interest in your faith and prayers during the few moments that I shall stand before you.

SOURCES OF THOUGHT

The ancient one declared:

For as he thinketh in his heart, so is he . . . (Prov. 23:7.)

This ancient writer fully understood the relationship between our minds and our hearts and the deeds that would come from our thinking as expressed in the emotions and passions that we find in our hearts. "First the thought and then the deed." "Noble thoughts, noble deeds." Shelley declared: "Strange thoughts beget strange deeds."

For a moment or two I would like to consider with you the sources of our thoughts. I think they fall in four categories: what one sees, and what one hears, what one reads, and then that great source of thought that comes to us through the inspiration of the Lord's Holy Spirit, provided that we are so clean and sweet in our thinking and in our deeds that we might enjoy the association of the Holy Ghost. Time does not permit to discuss these four sources of thoughts, hence I should like to speak about the third one, what one reads.

PRESENT-DAY LITERATURE

Sometime ago I stood in a railroad station waiting for a train. Having some little time on my hands, I was attracted to the magazine rack, and there I counted forty-seven magazines that had to do with crime and sex problems, all of them procurable at a price from ten to twenty-five cents each. I have observed as I have traveled over the country during the period of the war, the material that our boys in the armed forces have been reading. In many instances I found them reading the same kind of material that I noticed on the magazine rack in the depot.

Of recent date there are certain writers in our country who are using biblical characters around which they build stories, and unfortunately, they are not portraying to the reading public of America the fine qualities of these great characters but rather their weaknesses. Recently there came into my hands a story about David of old. Some four or five chapters were devoted to his relationship with the wife of Uriah, and described in such minute detail as to be disgusting and vulgar.

There are sensational newspapers which play up the morbid side of life. There are some newspapers which have comic strips, so-called, and which strips I am sure are inculcating into the minds and hearts of our boys and girls that read them, thoughts that, if they are expressed in deeds, will get them into serious difficulty.

There are books now on birth control, books on common law marriage, and many other books that are not conducive to the morals or the best thinking of those who read them. In a recent poll taken of 7,600 middle class average homes, the startling fact was revealed that forty percent of these homes did not own a Bible.

CAUSES OF YOUTHFUL DELINQUENCY

Dr. Walter Athren conducted a survey which covered the entire country. This survey showed that seventy percent of the youth of America grow from infancy to maturity without any constructive, systematic instruction and training either in morals or religion, and from sixty-five to seventy out of every one hundred children are brought up in utter ignorance of the Bible. In addition to all of these, we must not forget the fact that we are spending, in the United States, more money for intoxicating beverages than is being spent in the interests of education.
